

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in PACIFIC REPORTER

98 P.—101 P.

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER

Thus:
98 P. 21

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1956

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 98, Nos. 1-3.

COPYRIGHT, 1909, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.
Pacific Reporter, Vol. 98, Nos. 4-8; Vol. 99, Nos. 1-7;
Vol. 100, Nos. 1-6; Vol. 101, Nos. 1-8.

COPYRIGHT, 1956, BY WEST PUBLISHING Co.

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 98-101 P.

	P.
	Vol.	Page
Abrahamson; Miller v., App.	99	534
Agnew; Butler v., App.	99	395
Alameda County v. Dalton, App.	98	85
Albertson; Ruddick v., Sup.	98	1045
Aldis v. Schleicher, App.	99	526
Allen v. Bryant, Sup.	100	704
Allen; Powell v., Sup.	99	865
All Persons Claiming, etc.; Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v., Sup.	101	12
American Amusement Co.; Eddy v., App.	99	1115
Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, Sup.	98	267
Antonian v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	100	877
Arakelian; Gagossian v., App.	99	1113
Ardizzone; Brooks v., App.	98	393
Armstrong; King v., App.	99	527
Aronson v. Frankfurt Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., App.	99	537
Arroyo Ditch & Water Co. v. Baldwin, Sup.	100	874
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Vance v., App.	98	41
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Viera v., App.	101	690
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co.; Waechter v., App.	101	41
Athearn v. Ryan, Sup.	98	390
Atlas Assur. Co.; Brickell v., App.	101	16
Auzerais v. Coffey, Sup.	99	1134
Bacon v. Davis, App.	98	71
Bailey, Ex parte, Sup.	101	441
Baird v. Loescher, App.	98	49
Baker v. Baker, App.	100	892
Baker; Roche v., App.	100	712
Baldocchi; People v., App.	101	28
Baldwin; Arroyo Ditch & Water Co. v., Sup.	100	874
Bank of Willows v. Glenn County, Sup.	101	13
Barbee v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	99	541
Barman; Grosse v., App.	100	348
Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas, App.	99	856
Barton v. Riverside Water Co., Sup.	101	790
Bauer; Wehner v., App.	101	417
Baumgarten v. Mitchell, App.	101	43
Behmer; Farmer v., App.	100	901
Benner's Estate, In re, Sup.	99	715
Bentel; Merchants' Trust Co. v., App.	101	31
Berger v. Horlock, App.	101	918
Beyerle v. Beyerle, Sup.	100	702
Big Casino Gold Min. Co.; O'Brien v., App.	99	209
Black v. Harrison Home Co., Sup.	99	494
Blake; H. C. Capwell Co. v., App.	98	51
Blanchard v. Blanchard, App.	101	536
Blood v. Munn, Sup.	100	694
Bollinger v. Bollinger, Sup.	99	196

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Bone v. Hayes, Sup.	99	172
Booker v. Castillo, Sup.	98	1067
Botkin; People v., App.	98	861
Bottle Min. & Mill. Co. v. Kern, App.	99	994
Boyd; Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v., Sup.	100	239
Boyd; Shopbell v., App.	98	69
Brainerd; Otis Elevator Co. v., App.	101	691
Braly v. Fresno City Ry. Co., App.	99	400
Breuner Co. v. King, App.	98	1077
Brewer; Town of Selma v., App.	98	61
Brickell v. Atlas Assur. Co., App.	101	16
Brooks v. Ardizzone, App.	98	393
Broome; Warden v., App.	98	252
Brown v. Mason, Sup.	99	867
Bryan v. Grosse, Sup.	99	499
Bryant; Allen v., Sup.	100	704
Buchner v. Malloy, Sup.	100	687
Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County; J. F. Parkinson Co. v., Sup.	98	1027
Burbridge; Stewart v., App.	101	419
Burke v. Maguire, Sup.	98	21
Burke v. Maze, App.	101	438
Burke v. Maze, Sup.	101	440
Burr v. Maclay Rancho Water Co., Sup.	98	260
Burrell v. Collins, App.	99	211
Butler v. Agnew, App.	99	395
Butler; Davis v., Sup.	98	1047
California Casket Co. v. McGinn, App.	100	1077
California Casket Co. v. McGinn, Sup.	100	1079
California Club; Cuzner v., Sup.	100	868
California Domestic Water Co. v. Los Angeles County, App.	101	547
California Navigation & Improvement Co.; Stockton Lumber Co. v., App.	101	541
California & O. S. S. Co.; Mitchell v., Sup.	99	202
Camarillo; Del Campo v., Sup.	98	1049
Capwell Co. v. Blake, App.	98	51
Carlson v. Carlson, App.	101	923
Carson; People v., Sup.	99	970
Casey; Reclamation Dist. No. 535 v., Sup.	100	1094
Casey v. Richards, App.	101	36
Cass v. Hutton, Sup.	99	493
Casselmann; People v., App.	101	693
Cassin v. Nicholson, Sup.	98	190
Castillo; Booker v., Sup.	98	1067
Chambers; Great Western Gold Co. v., Sup.	101	6
Charles; People v., App.	99	383
Charters v. Stansbury, App.	101	418
Chase v. Superior Court, Sup.	99	355
Chittenden; Schmidt v., App.	98	48
Churchill; More v., Sup.	101	9
Cipolla; People v., Sup.	100	252
City of Paris Dry Goods Co. v. Spring Valley Water Co., App.	101	678
City of Richmond; Ostrander v., Sup.	101	452
City of San Diego; Dadmun v., App.	99	983
City of Sonoma; Steiger Terra Cotta & Pottery Works v., App.	100	714
City Street Improvement Co. v. Marysville, Sup.	101	308
City & County of San Francisco; Rudolph Herman Co. v., Sup.	99	169
Clapp v. Vatcher, App.	99	549

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Clark; Reclamation Dist. No. 535 v., Sup.	100	1091
Cleland; Noble v., Sup.	100	254
Clute v. Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	99	362
Coffey; Auzerai v., Sup.	99	1134
Coffey; De Forrest v., Sup.	98	27
Collins; Burrell v., App.	99	211
Collins; People v., App.	99	1109
Compressed Air Machinery Co. v. West San Pablo Land & Water Co., App.	99	531
Coombs; People v., App.	98	686
Corona City Water Co.; Nordstrom v., Sup.	100	242
Corrigan; McPhee v., App.	101	530
Cowell v. Linforth, App.	100	1071
Crabtree v. Fretwell, Sup.	98	1058
Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., Sup.	98	1063
Cramer Meat & Packing Co.; Long v., Sup.	101	297
Crane Co. v. Dryer, App.	98	1072
Cribb; Huene v., App.	98	78
Crites' Estate, In re, Sup.	101	316
Crocker v. Hall, Sup.	98	269
Cronise; Middlecoff v., Sup.	100	232
Crowley Launch & Tugboat Co. v. Superior Court, App.	101	935
Crozer v. White, App.	100	130
Cummings v. Roeth, App.	101	434
Curtin v. Ingle, App.	98	868
Curtin v. Ingle, Sup.	99	480
Cuzner v. California Club, Sup.	100	868
Dadmun v. City of San Diego, App.	99	983
Dahler; Wilson v., App.	99	723
Dakan; Johnston v., App.	99	729
Dalton; Alameda County v., App.	98	85
Dane v. Layne, App.	101	1067
Davidson v. Ellis, App.	98	254
Davis; Bacon v., App.	98	71
Davis v. Butler, Sup.	98	1047
Davis v. Le Mesnager, Sup.	101	910
De Alvarez; Glowner v., App.	101	432
Dean v. Dunn, App.	99	380
De Forrest v. Coffey, Sup.	98	27
De Gottardi v. Donati, Sup.	99	492
De Lamar; Utah-Nevada Co. v., App.	100	884
Del Campo v. Camarillo, Sup.	98	1049
Del Cerro; People v., App.	100	887
Del Vecchio v. Savelli, App.	101	32
De Merritt v. Weldon, Sup.	98	537
De Merritt v. Weldon, Sup.	98	671
Denike v. Santa Clara Valley Agr. Soc., App.	98	687
De Pauli; Mono County v., App.	100	717
Devoto; Varni v., App.	101	934
D. H. McEwen Lumber Co.; Muzzy v., Sup.	98	1062
D. I. Nofziger Lumber Co. v. Waters, App.	101	38
Dollar v. International Banking Corporation, App.	101	34
Donati; De Gottardi v., Sup.	99	492
Dorr; Jensen v., App.	98	45
Douglass; Stewart v., App.	100	711
Dryer; Crane Co. v., App.	98	1072
Duffy Lumber Co. v. Stanton, App.	98	38

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Dunn; Dean v., App.	99	380
Dunn v. Stegemann, App.	101	25
Eddy v. American Amusement Co., App.	99	1115
Eichelberger v. Mills Land & Water Co., App.	100	117
Electric Laundry Co.; Quinn v., Sup.	101	794
Ellis; Davidson v., App.	98	254
Embree; Tanner v., App.	99	547
Evans v. Evans, Sup.	98	1044
Evans; Wilcox-Rose Const. Co. v., App.	98	83
Everett; People v., App.	101	528
Fallon; People v., Sup.	99	202
Fannen; Galvin v., Sup.	99	183
Farmer v. Behmer, App.	100	901
Fatjo; Las Animas & San Joaquin Land Co. v., App.	99	393
Ferrea; Gish v., App.	101	27
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Laventhal v., App.	98	1075
Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Tibbets v., Sup.	99	501
Field; Anglo-Californian Bank v., Sup.	98	267
Finch; O'Rourke v., App.	99	392
Fox; Hanson v., Sup.	99	489
Fox; Peck v., Sup.	99	189
Fox v. Workman, Sup.	100	246
Frank v. State, Sup.	99	189
Frankfurt Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co.; Aronson v., App.	99	537
Fresno City Ry. Co.; Braly v., App.	99	400
Fretwell; Crabtree v., Sup.	98	1058
Fretwell's Estate, In re, Sup.	98	1058
Gagossian v. Arakelian, App.	99	1113
Galvin v. Fannen, Sup.	99	183
Garnett; People v., App.	98	247
Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, Sup.	99	359
Gavin; Green v., App.	101	931
Gerety v. O'Sheehan, App.	99	545
German Savings & Loan Society v. McLellan, Sup.	99	194
Gibson; Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v., App.	98	37
Gillelen; Shattuck & Desmond Warehouse Co. v., Sup.	99	348
Gish v. Ferrea, App.	101	27
Gisske v. Sanders, App.	98	43
Glas; Barrett-Hicks Co. v., App.	99	856
Glass; People v., App.	99	553
Glenn County; Bank of Willows v., Sup.	101	13
Glowner v. De Alvarez, App.	101	432
Goldy Mach. Co.; Tilden v., App.	98	39
Gonella v. Simmons, App.	101	685
Gonzalez; Niles v., Sup.	100	1080
Gorham; People v., App.	99	391
Graciosa Oil Co. v. Santa Barbara County, Sup.	99	483
Graham; Kane v., Sup.	101	316
Granger v. Richards, Sup.	98	528
Gray; Joshua Hendy Mach. Works v., App.	99	1110
Great Western Gold Co. v. Chambers, Sup.	101	6
Green v. Gavin, App.	101	931
Gregory Fruit Co.; Scudders-Gale Grocery Co. v., App.	99	978
Grinnell; People v., App.	98	681
Gross; Grove v., Sup.	101	443
Grosse v. Barman, App.	100	348

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Grosse; Bryan v., Sup.	99	499
Grove v. Gross, Sup.	101	443
Gruendike's Estate, In re, Sup.	98	1057
Grumbach v. Lelande, Sup.	98	1059
Hall; Crocker v., Sup.	98	269
Hallawell, Ex parte, Sup.	99	490
Hall's Estate, In re, Sup.	98	269
Hannon v. Harper, App.	98	685
Hannon v. Lelande, App.	98	685
Hanson v. Fox, Sup.	99	489
Happ; Schroeder v., Sup.	99	715
Harkness; Pitcairn v., App.	101	809
Harlan v. Harlan, Sup.	98	32
Harper; Hannon v., App.	98	685
Harrison Home Co.; Black v., Sup.	99	494
Hart v. Walton, App.	99	719
Hatch, In re, App.	99	398
Hatch v. Raney, App.	100	886
Hayes; Bone v., Sup.	99	172
Hayes; People v., App.	99	386
H. C. Capwell Co. v. Blake, App.	98	51
Henderson v. Perrott, App.	99	543
Hendry v. Irvine, App.	99	408
Hendy Mach. Works v. Gray, App.	99	1110
Herman Co. v. San Francisco, Sup.	99	169
Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Boyd, Sup.	100	239
Hickman-Coleman Co. v. Leggett, App.	100	1072
Higgins; People v., App.	98	683
Hill; McKenzie v., App.	98	55
Hill; Quist v., Sup.	99	204
Hite v. Mercantile Trust Co., Sup.	101	8
Hite's Estate, In re, Sup.	101	8
Hite's Estate, In re, Sup.	101	443
Hite's Estate, In re, Sup.	101	448
Hobbs v. Hobbs, App.	101	22
Hoffman, Ex parte, Sup.	99	517
Hollywood Lumber Co. v. Love, Sup.	100	698
Holt v. James, App.	101	1065
Holton; Myers v., App.	98	197
Homan v. Wayer, App.	98	80
Horlock; Berger v., App.	101	918
House v. McMullen, App.	100	344
Hubbard v. Superior Court in and for Santa Clara County, App.	98	394
Huene v. Cribb, App.	98	78
Hunkins-Willis Lime & Cement Co. v. Los Angeles Warehouse Co., Sup.	99	369
Hutton; Cass v., Sup.	99	493
Independence League v. Taylor, Sup.	100	860
Ingle; Curtin v., App.	98	868
Ingle; Curtin v., Sup.	99	480
International Banking Corporation; Dollar v., App.	101	34
Irrgang v. Ott, App.	99	528
Irvine; Hendry v., App.	99	408
Irvine v. Rapp, App.	99	409
James; Holt v., App.	101	1065
James; Jameson v., Sup.	100	700
James Canal Co.; Turner v., Sup.	99	520
Jameson v. James, Sup.	100	700

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Jensen v. Dorr, App.	98	45
J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County, Sup.	98	1027
John Breuner Co. v. King, App.	98	1077
Johnson; People v., App.	98	682
Johnson v. Withers, App.	98	42
Johnston v. Dakan, App.	99	729
Johnston; Wetherbee v., App.	101	802
Jolliffe v. Steele, App.	98	544
Jones v. Leonardt, App.	101	811
Joplin; Keech v., App.	101	417
Jordan; Kinard v., App.	101	696
Jordan; Wegerer v., App.	101	1066
Joshua Hendy Mach. Works v. Gray, App.	99	1110
Joutsen, Ex parte, Sup.	98	391
Joyce; Keegin v., App.	98	396
Ju Buck Ning; People v., App.	100	887
Kane v. Graham, Sup.	101	316
Keech v. Joplin, App.	101	417
Keegin v. Joyce, App.	98	396
Keir v. Keir, Sup.	99	487
Keith v. Recorder's Court of City of Santa Ana, App.	99	416
Kelly, Ex parte, Sup.	99	368
Kennedy; Kenny v., App.	99	384
Kenny v. Kennedy, App.	99	384
Kern; Bottle Min. & Mill. Co. v., App.	99	994
Kern County Land Co.; Miller & Lux v., Sup.	99	179
Kiger v. McCarthy Co., App.	101	928
Killian v. Killian, App.	101	806
Kinard v. Jordan, App.	101	696
King, Ex parte, App.	101	810
King v. Armstrong, App.	99	527
King; John Breuner Co. v., App.	98	1077
Kingsbury v. Nye, App.	99	985
Knapp & Co. v. San Joaquin Cigar Co., App.	101	929
Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., App.	101	914
Kuhn; Seebach v., App.	99	723
Lane v. Storke, App.	101	937
Lanterman; People v., App.	100	720
Lapique; People v., App.	98	46
Lapique; People v., App.	98	256
Lapique; People v., Sup.	98	257
La Pique; People v., App.	98	868
Las Animas & San Joaquin Land Co. v. Fatjo, App.	99	393
Laventhal v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, App.	98	1075
Laverty; People v., App.	100	899
Layne; Dane v., App.	101	1067
Leake; Scott Stamp & Coin Co. v., App.	99	731
Lee; People v., App.	99	1110
Leggett; Hickman-Coleman Co. v., App.	100	1072
Leland; Grumbach v., Sup.	98	1059
Leland; Hannon v., App.	98	685
Le Mesnager; Davis v., Sup.	101	910
Leonardino, Ex parte, App.	100	708
Leonardt; Jones v., App.	101	811
Leverone v. Weakley, Sup.	101	304
Lewis; People v., App.	98	1078
Lillis v. Urrutia, App.	99	992

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Linforth; Cowell v., App.	100	1071
Linforth v. San Francisco Gas & Electric Co., App.	99	716
Lintott v. San Francisco Const. Co., App.	101	1064
Liver v. Mills, Sup.	101	299
Loescher; Baird v., App.	98	49
Long v. Cramer Meat & Packing Co., Sup.	101	297
Long's Estate, In re, App.	100	892
Los Angeles County; California Domestic Water Co. v., App.	101	547
Los Angeles Interurban Ry. Co.; United Inv. Co. v., App.	101	543
Los Angeles Nat. Bank v. Vance, App.	98	58
Los Angeles Trust Co.; Cragg v., Sup.	98	1063
Los Angeles Warehouse Co.; Hunkins-Willis Lime & Cement Co. v., Sup.	99	369
Love; Hollywood Lumber Co. v., Sup.	100	698
Lowe v. San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co., Sup.	98	678
Lucas v. Rea, App.	101	537
Lucas; Souza v., App.	100	115
Lyden v. Spohn-Patrick Co., Sup.	100	236
Lynch; Tarpey v., Sup.	101	10
McCarthy Co.; Kiger v., App.	101	928
McCarty, Ex parte, Sup.	98	543
McCarty, In re, Sup.	98	540
Maclay Rancho Water Co.; Burr v., Sup.	98	260
McCormick-Ormand Co. v. Nofziger Bros. Lumber Co., App.	101	688
McCowen; Taylor v., Sup.	99	351
McCoy, Ex parte, App.	101	419
McDonell v. McDonell, App.	101	40
McDougald v. Southern Pac. R. Co., App.	98	685
McEwen Lumber Co.; Muzzy v., Sup.	98	1062
MacFarland; Nelles v., App.	99	980
McGinn; California Casket Co. v., App.	100	1077
McGinn; California Casket Co. v., Sup.	100	1079
McKenney, Ex parte, App.	101	927
McKenzie v. Hill, App.	98	55
McLellan; German Savings & Loan Society v., Sup.	99	194
McMordie; Somers v., Sup.	99	482
McMullen; House v., App.	100	344
McNeil's Estate, In re, Sup.	100	1086
McPhee v. Corrigan, App.	101	530
McPhee's Estate, In re, App.	101	530
Madera Canal & Irrigation Co.; Miller & Lux v., Sup.	99	502
Madison v. Octave Oil Co., Sup.	99	176
Maestretti; Nerio v., Sup.	98	860
Magee v. Superior Court of Solano County, App.	101	532
Maguire; Burke v., Sup.	98	21
Maguire; Petitpierre v., Sup.	100	690
Malloy; Buchner v., Sup.	100	687
Manson; Taylor v., App.	99	410
Marysville; City Street Improvement Co. v., Sup.	101	308
Mason; Brown v., Sup.	99	867
Maze; Burke v., App.	101	438
Maze; Burke v., Sup.	101	440
Meeker v. Simmons, App.	101	683
Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands Electric Light & Power Co., Sup.	100	1082
Mercantile Trust Co.; Hite v., Sup.	101	8
Merced Bank v. Price, Sup.	98	383
Merchants' Trust Co. v. Bentel, App.	101	31
Meskel; People v., Sup.	98	860

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Meyers; Poheim v., App.	98	65
Middlecoff v. Cronise, Sup.	100	232
Miles; People v., App.	101	525
Miller v. Abrahamson, App.	99	534
Miller & Lux v. Kern County Land Co., Sup.	99	179
Miller & Lux v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., Sup.	99	502
Mills; Liver v., Sup.	101	299
Mills Land & Water Co.; Eichelberger v., App.	100	117
Mitchell; Baumgarten v., App.	101	43
Mitchell v. California & O. S. S. Co., Sup.	99	202
M. M. Potter Co.; Pearson v., App.	101	681
Mono County v. De Pauli, App.	100	717
Montano; People v., App.	98	871
Moore; People v., Sup.	100	688
More v. Churchill, Sup.	101	9
More; United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v., Sup.	101	302
Moultrie v. Wright, Sup.	98	257
Mullarky v. Young, App.	100	709
Munn; Blood v., Sup.	100	694
Murphy, Ex parte, Sup.	100	1134
Murphy; O'Donnell v., App.	100	1071
Murphy; Watts v., App.	99	1104
Muzzy v. D. H. McEwen Lumber Co., Sup.	98	1062
Myers v. Holton, App.	98	197
Myers' Estate, In re, App.	100	712
National Cycle Mfg. Co. v. San Diego Cycle Co., App.	98	64
Nelles v. MacFarland, App.	99	980
Nerio v. Maestretti, Sup.	98	860
Neuval; Payne v., Sup.	99	476
Nevada County; Sierra County v., Sup.	99	371
'Ng Gee Duck; People v., App.	100	1134
Nicholson; Cassin v., Sup.	98	190
Nickel; People v., App.	100	1075
Niles v. Gonzalez, Sup.	100	1080
Nilson v. Oakland Traction Co., App.	101	413
Noble v. Cleland, Sup.	100	254
Nofziger Bros. Lumber Co.; McCormick-Ormand Co. v., App.	101	688
Nofziger Lumber Co. v. Waters, App.	101	38
Nolan v. Nolan, Sup.	101	520
Nordstrom v. Corona City Water Co., Sup.	100	242
Northern Assur. Co. of London; Whitney Estate Co. v., Sup.	101	911
Noyes v. Schlegel, App.	99	726
Nye; Kingsbury v., App.	99	985
Nye; People v., App.	98	241
Oakland Traction Co.; Nilson v., App.	101	413
O'Brien v. Big Casino Gold Min. Co., App.	99	209
Octave Oil Co.; Madison v., Sup.	99	176
O'Donnell v. Murphy, App.	100	1071
Olivas; People v., App.	101	434
O'Rourke v. Finch, App.	99	392
O'Sheehan; Gerety v., App.	99	545
Ostrander v. City of Richmond, Sup.	101	452
Otis Elevator Co. v. Brainerd, App.	101	691
Ots v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	101	431
Ott; Irrgang v., App.	99	528
Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County, Sup.	98	1027
Pashgian v. Stephenson, App.	100	1075

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Patino; People v., App.	98	199
Patten & Davies Lumber Co. v. Gibson, App.	98	37
Patterson; Young v., App.	99	552
Payne v. Neuval, Sup.	99	476
Pearson v. M. M. Potter Co., App.	101	681
Peck v. Fox, Sup.	99	189
Pedley v. Werdin, Sup.	99	9
People v. Baldocchi, App.	101	28
People v. Botkin, App.	98	861
People v. Carson, Sup.	99	970
People v. Casselman, App.	101	693
People v. Charles, App.	99	383
People v. Cipolla, Sup.	100	252
People v. Collins, App.	99	1109
People v. Coombs, App.	98	686
People v. Del Cerro, App.	100	887
People v. Everett, App.	101	528
People v. Fallon, Sup.	99	202
People v. Garnett, App.	98	247
People v. Glass, App.	99	553
People v. Gorham, App.	99	391
People v. Grinnell, App.	98	681
People v. Hayes, App.	99	386
People v. Higgins, App.	98	683
People v. Johnson, App.	98	682
People v. Ju Buck Ning, App.	100	887
People v. Lanterman, App.	100	720
People v. Lapique, App.	98	46
People v. Lapique, App.	98	256
People v. Lapique, Sup.	98	257
People v. La Pique, App.	98	868
People v. Laverty, App.	100	899
People v. Lee, App.	99	1110
People v. Lewis, App.	98	1078
People v. Meskel, Sup.	98	860
People v. Miles, App.	101	525
People v. Montano, App.	98	871
People v. Moore, Sup.	100	688
People v. 'Ng Gee Duck, App.	100	1134
People v. Nickel, App.	100	1075
People v. Nye, App.	98	241
People v. Olivas, App.	101	434
People v. Patino, App.	98	199
People v. Perez, App.	98	870
People v. Price, App.	98	547
People v. Sheffield, App.	98	67
People v. Sidelinger, App.	99	390
People v. Silver, Sup.	98	543
People v. Smith, App.	98	546
People v. Smith, App.	99	1111
People v. Sykes, App.	101	20
People v. Vasquez, App.	99	982
People v. Wetzel, App.	98	549
People v. Whalen, Sup.	98	194
Perez; People v., App.	98	870
Perrott; Henderson v., App.	99	543
Petitpierre v. Maguire, Sup.	100	690

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Pitcairn v. Harkness, App.	101	809
Poheim v. Meyers, App.	98	65
Poindexter; Stansbury v., Sup.	99	182
Potrero Nuevo Land Co. v. All Persons Claiming, etc., Sup.	101	12
Potter Co.; Pearson v., App.	101	681
Powell v. Allen, Sup.	99	865
Pre v. Standard Portland Cement Co., App.	100	122
Prefumo v. Russell, App.	101	24
Prewett; Risdon v., App.	99	379
Price; Merced Bank v., Sup.	98	383
Price; People v., App.	98	547
Quinn v. Electric Laundry Co., Sup.	101	794
Quist v. Hill, Sup.	99	204
Raney; Hatch v., App.	100	886
Rapp; Irvine v., App.	99	409
Rea; Lucas v., App.	101	537
Reclamation Dist. No. 535 v. Casey, Sup.	100	1094
Reclamation Dist. No. 535 v. Clark, Sup.	100	1091
Recorder's Court of City of Santa Ana; Keith v., App.	99	416
Redlands Electric Light & Power Co.; Mentone Irr. Co. v., Sup.	100	1082
Reed v. Reed, App.	100	897
Rialto Irr. Dist.; Stowell v., Sup.	100	248
Richards; Casey v., App.	101	36
Richards; Granger v., Sup.	98	528
Richards' Estate, In re, Sup.	98	528
Richmond v. Superior Court of California, App.	98	57
Richmond's Estate, In re, App.	99	554
Richmond's Estate, In re, App.	99	558
Risdon v. Prewett, App.	99	379
Risdon v. Steyner, App.	99	377
Riverside Water Co.; Barton v., Sup.	101	790
Riviere's Estate, In re, App.	98	46
Roche v. Baker, App.	100	712
Roeth; Cummings v., App.	101	434
Rogers; Weldon v., Sup.	98	1070
Rooker v. Samuels, App.	101	689
Root; Sievers v., App.	101	925
Ruddick v. Albertson, Sup.	98	1045
Rudolph Herman Co. v. City & County of San Francisco, Sup.	99	169
Ruppel v. United Railroads of San Francisco, App.	101	803
Russell; Prefumo v., App.	101	24
Ryan; Athearn v., Sup.	98	390
Samuels; Rooker v., App.	101	689
Sanders; Gisske v., App.	98	43
San Diego Cycle Co.; National Cycle Mfg. Co. v., App.	98	64
San Francisco Const. Co.; Lintott v., App.	101	1064
San Francisco Gas & Electric Co.; Linforth v., App.	99	716
San Francisco Stock & Exchange Board, In re, App.	98	55
San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co.; Lowe v., Sup.	98	678
San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co.; Still v., Sup.	98	672
San Joaquin Cigar Co.; Wm. Knapp & Co. v., App.	101	929
San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Co. v. Stanislaus County, Sup.	99	365
Santa Barbara County; Graciosa Oil Co. v., Sup.	99	483
Santa Clara Valley Agr. Soc.; Denike v., App.	98	687
Savelli; Del Vecchio v., App.	101	32
Schack v. Supreme Lodge of the Fraternal Brotherhood, App.	99	989

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Schlegel; Noyes v., App.	99	726
Schleicher; Aldis v., App.	99	526
Schmidt v. Chittenden, App.	98	48
Schroeder v. Happ, Sup.	99	715
Schuler; Stockton Lumber Co. v., Sup.	101	307
Scott Stamp & Coin Co. v. Leake, App.	99	731
Scudders-Gale Grocery Co. v. Gregory Fruit Co., App.	99	978
Seebach v. Kuhn, App.	99	723
Sharp's Estate, In re, App.	100	1071
Shattuck & Desmond Warehouse Co. v. Gillelen, Sup.	99	348
Shedoudy v. Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co., App.	99	535
Sheffield; People v., App.	98	67
Sherman; Ward v., Sup.	100	864
Sherwood v. Wallin, Sup.	99	191
Shopbell v. Boyd, App.	98	69
Sidelinger; People v., App.	99	390
Sierra County v. Nevada County, Sup.	99	371
Sievers v. Root, App.	101	925
Silver; People v., Sup.	98	543
Simmons; Gonella v., App.	101	685
Simmons; Meeker v., App.	101	683
Smith; People v., App.	98	546
Smith; People v., App.	99	1111
Somers v. McMordie, Sup.	99	482
Southern Pac. Co.; Antonian v., App.	100	877
Southern Pac. Co.; Barbee v., App.	99	541
Southern Pac. R. Co.; McDougald v., App.	98	685
Souza v. Lucas, App.	100	115
Spohn-Patrick Co.; Lyden v., Sup.	100	236
Spreckels; White v., App.	101	920
Spreckels Bros. Commercial Co.; Shedoudy v., App.	99	535
Spring Valley Water Co.; City of Paris Dry Goods Co. v., App.	101	678
Standard Portland Cement Co.; Pre v., App.	100	122
Stanislaus County; San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Co. v., Sup.	99	365
Stansbury; Charters v., App.	101	418
Stansbury v. Poindexter, Sup.	99	182
Stanton; Duffy Lumber Co. v., App.	98	38
State; Frank v., Sup.	99	189
State; Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v., Sup.	99	183
State Commission in Lunacy v. Welch, Sup.	99	181
Steele; Jolliffe v., App.	98	544
Stegemann; Dunn v., App.	101	25
Steiger Terra Cotta & Pottery Works v. City of Sonoma, App.	100	714
Stephenson; Pashgian v., App.	100	1075
Stevens v. Superior Court of Placer County, Sup.	99	512
Stewart v. Burbridge, App.	101	419
Stewart v. Douglass, App.	100	711
Stewart v. Torrance, App.	98	396
Steyner; Risdon v., App.	99	377
Still v. San Francisco & N. W. Ry. Co., Sup.	98	672
Stockton Electric R. Co.; Kramm v., App.	101	914
Stockton Lumber Co. v. California Navigation & Improvement Co. v., App.	101	541
Stockton Lumber Co. v. Schuler, Sup.	101	307
Storke; Lane v., App.	101	937
Stowell v. Rialto Irr. Dist., Sup.	100	248
Streeton; Valentine v., App.	99	1107

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Superior Court; Chase v., Sup.	99	355
Superior Court; Crowley Launch & Tugboat Co. v., App.	101	935
Superior Court; Tattenham v., Sup.	100	248
Superior Court in and for Santa Clara County; Hubbard v., App.	98	394
Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco; Clute v., Sup.	99	362
Superior Court in and for Ventura County; White v., App.	100	348
Superior Court of California; Richmond v., App.	98	57
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Gas & Electric Co. v., Sup.	99	359
Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco; Ots v., App.	101	431
Superior Court of Placer County; Stevens v., Sup.	99	512
Superior Court of Sacramento County; Western Meat Co. v., App.	99	976
Superior Court of Solano County; Magee v., App.	101	532
Supreme Lodge of the Fraternal Brotherhood; Schack v., App.	99	989
Sykes; People v., App.	101	20
Tanner v. Embree, App.	99	547
Tarpey v. Lynch, Sup.	101	10
Tattenham v. Superior Court, Sup.	100	248
Taylor; Independence League v., Sup.	100	860
Taylor v. McCowen, Sup.	99	351
Taylor v. Manson, App.	99	410
Tebbets v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, Sup.	99	501
Thomas' Estate, In re, Sup.	101	798
Tilden v. Goldy Mach. Co., App.	98	39
Torrance; Stewart v., App.	98	396
Town of Selma v. Brewer, App.	98	61
Turner v. James Canal Co., Sup.	99	520
Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v. State, Sup.	99	183
United Inv. Co. v. Los Angeles Interurban Ry. Co., App.	101	543
United Railroads of San Francisco; Ruppel v., App.	101	803
United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v., More, Sup.	101	302
Urrutia; Lillis v., App.	99	992
Utah-Nevada Co. v. De Lamar, App.	100	884
Valentine v. Streeton, App.	99	1107
Vance v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., App.	98	41
Vance; Los Angeles Nat. Bank v., App.	98	58
Varney & Green v. Williams, Sup.	100	867
Varni v. Devoto, App.	101	934
Vasquez; People v., App.	99	982
Vatcher; Clapp v., App.	99	549
Viera v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., App.	101	690
Vogt's Estate, In re, Sup.	98	265
Waechter v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., App.	101	41
Wagner; Young v., App.	99	552
Wallin; Sherwood v., Sup.	99	191
Walton; Hart v., App.	99	719
Ward v. Sherman, Sup.	100	864
Warden v. Broome, App.	98	252
Waters; D. I. Nofziger Lumber Co. v., App.	101	38
Watts, Ex parte, App.	101	419
Watts v. Murphy, App.	99	1104
Wayer; Homan v., App.	98	80
Weakley; Leverone v., Sup.	101	304
Wegerer v. Jordan, App.	101	1066
Wehner v. Bauer, App.	101	417
Welch; State Commission in Lunacy v., Sup.	99	181

CASES REPORTED

P.

	Vol.	Page
Weldon; De Merritt v., Sup.	98	537
Weldon; De Merritt v., Sup.	98	671
Weldon v. Rogers, Sup.	98	1070
Werdin; Pedley v., Sup.	99	975
Western Meat Co. v. Superior Court of Sacramento County, App.	99	976
West San Pablo Land & Water Co.; Compressed Air Machinery Co. v., App.	99	531
Wetherbee v. Johnston, App.	101	802
Wetzel; People v., App.	98	549
Whalen; People v., Sup.	98	194
White; Crozer v., App.	100	130
White v. Spreckels, App.	101	920
White v. Superior Court in and for Ventura County, App.	100	348
Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern Assur. Co. of London, Sup.	101	911
Wilcox-Rose Const. Co. v. Evans, App.	98	83
Wm. Knapp & Co. v. San Joaquin Cigar Co., App.	101	929
Williams; Varney & Green v., Sup.	100	867
Wilson v. Dahler, App.	99	723
Withers; Johnson v., App.	98	42
Workman; Fox v., Sup.	100	246
Wright; Moultrie v., Sup.	98	257
Young; Mullarky v., App.	100	709
Young v. Patterson, App.	99	552
Young v. Wagner, App.	99	552

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

98 PACIFIC REPORTER

154 Cal. 456

BURKE v. MAGUIRE. (S. F. 4,668.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 17, 1908.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 371*)—MANAGEMENT OF TRUST ESTATE—BREACH OF TRUST—ACTIONS—COM-PLAINT.

One seeking to charge a trustee with a breach of trust must state a clear case, and acts of a trustee which may, or may not, be breaches of trust, must be so alleged that they appear to be breaches, and thereby rebut the presumption in favor of performance of duty by the trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 592; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 371*)—MANAGEMENT OF TRUST
ESTATE—BREACH OF TRUST—ACTIONS—COM-PLAINT.

A complaint in an action by legatees against the administrator of the executrix, which alleges that at the distribution of the estate the executrix had on hand a specified sum which she was directed to pay over to trustees on their executing a bond conditioned on their keeping the sum and paying the income to executrix for life, and at her death to pay the fund to the legatees, that the trustees did not qualify, and that the executrix retained possession of the fund as executrix until her death about eight years afterward, and which fails to show that the fund was mingled with her own property, or converted to her own use, does not state a cause of action in equity to have the fund declared a lien, and to have it or its equivalent paid over to the legatees.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes
Cal.Rep. 98-101 P.—1

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 128*)—REPRESENTATIVE OF DECEASED EXECUTOR—COLLECTION OF ASSETS.

A complaint in an action by legatees against the administrator of the executrix which fails to show that the fund held by the executrix or chose in action representing the same, or any property into which it had been converted came into the possession of the administrator, does not state a cause of action against the administrator personally; for under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1353, it was not the duty of the administrator to take possession of the fund as administrator, and he could not perform the duties imposed on the executrix.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 532; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

4. REPLEVIN (§ 11*)—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—DEMAND—ALLEGATION—NECESSITY.

One lawfully in possession of property which he does not claim, and which he has not converted to his own use, but is holding for the rightful owner with the intent to deliver it to him on demand, is entitled to an opportunity to comply with his duty before being subjected to a suit to recover it, and a demand for the delivery of the property must be alleged and proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Replevin, Cent. Dig. §§ 85-97; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 854*)—REVIEW—SCOPE—REASONS FOR DECISION.

Where a demurrer is sustained in the lower court, the party demurring is entitled on appeal to a decision on all questions presented by the demurrer and necessary to the decision made, and, if the complaint is insufficient on any ground properly specified in the demurrer, the order must be sustained, though the lower court considered the complaint sufficient in that respect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3403-3412; Dec. Dig. § 854.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 314*)—DISTRIBUTION—PROCEEDINGS FOR PAYMENT—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1493, requiring demands against an estate, founded upon contract, to be presented for allowance, and section 1500, providing that no action shall be maintained on any claim against an estate unless the claim is first presented, except in the case of an action brought to enforce a mortgage, a complaint against an estate sounding in contract, and not within the exception, which does not aver that the claim has been presented to the administrator fails to state a cause of action, and, where a testator willed a certain sum to certain beneficiaries of whom plaintiff was one, but there were not sufficient funds to pay the legacies in full, and on final accounting, B., the executrix, was directed to pay the sum in her hands to trustees upon their giving bonds, etc., but the trustees never qualified, and B. held the funds until her death, a complaint in an action against her administrator for a share of the legacy under the distribution is founded on contract, and within the rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 314.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 201*)—GENERAL DEMURRER—SPECIFICATION OF GROUNDS—NECESSITY—EXCEPTIONS.

A general demurrer need not state the grounds of objection, except where the benefit of a personal privilege such as the statute of limitations is claimed. Hence, in an action against an administrator on a money claim against the estate, the defense that no claim therefor was presented to defendant for allowance is raised by general demurrer, even though not specified as a ground therein, for failure to allege the presentation of a claim does not come within the reason of the exception, since the administrator acts in a representative capacity, and it is not his personal privilege to waive the requirement of presentation, which is intended to protect estates from unnecessary litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 475; Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 907*)—QUESTIONS PRESENTED IN LOWER COURT—PRESUMPTIONS—MATTERS NOT SHOWN BY RECORD.

The fact that an order sustaining a general demurrer does not mention a certain ground urged on appeal is no proof that the ground was not presented in the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

9. COURTS (§ 122*)—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY—DEMAND BASED ON MORE THAN ONE COUNT.

Under Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that the superior court shall have jurisdiction in all cases where the demand exclusive of interest, amounts to $300, where a complaint in two counts claims less than $300 on each of the respective counts, but the amount demanded is fixed to include both counts so that the sum exceeds $300, a demurrer on the ground of lack of jurisdiction will not lie.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 427; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

10. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 192*)—PLEADING—FRAUD—RELiance ON FRAUDULENT STATEMENTS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, providing that an action for relief on the ground of fraud must be brought within three years after the cause of action accrues, where a beneficiary under a will sues the administrator of the estate of the executrix of the will 14 years after the testator's death, for a balance of a bequest due out of property alleged to have been omitted from the executrix' inventory, and alleges that she concealed certain assets from the court and plaintiff and the other legatees, and falsely represented to them that the testator owned no property other than that listed, and that plaintiff did not know or discover that the testator was the owner of said concealed property, or that the executrix came into possession of it on his death, etc., until after her death, when plaintiff was informed of the facts through the administration proceedings on her estate, but the complaint fails to allege that plaintiff believed the allegations, or that the fourteen years were suffered to elapse in reliance thereon, the complaint is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

11. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 314*)—ACTIONS FOR LEGACY—COMPLAINT—PROPERTY OMITTED FROM INVENTORY—SUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION.

Where a complaint against the estate of an executrix for the balance of a legacy merely alleged that there came into the possession of the executrix the sum of $40,000 in money and $10,000 in notes and mortgages belonging to the testator's estate, and that plaintiff did not know of or discover that the testator was the owner of such property, or that the executrix had come into possession of it, until after her death, and does not otherwise state conditions excusing a timely discovery of the facts, it is defective and uncertain as to the description of the property alleged to have been concealed, especially the notes and mortgages and is subject to demurrer on that ground.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 314.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Annie Burke against James Maguire, administrator of Bridget McDermott. From a judgment for defendant sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of SHAW, J., in department No. 1, with whom ANGELLOTTI and SLOSS, JJ., concurred:

This is one of nine appeals taken in nine actions against the defendant, each by a different plaintiff. The several plaintiffs are legatees under the will of Hugh McDermott, deceased, and distributees under the final distribution of his estate. Bridget McDermott was the executrix of his estate, and each plaintiff is herein suing the administrator of her estate to recover the share of the legacy to which he is entitled under the distribution. The lower court in each case sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and gave judgment for the defendant, from which plaintiff appeals. The allegations are the same in each case, and by order of this court, upon the stipulation of the parties, the nine appeals have been consolidated and are presented to this court for decision upon the transcript of the record in the case wherein Annie Burke is the plaintiff.

Hugh McDermott died on January 9, 1890. His will bequeathed to these plaintiffs each a separate money legacy, amounting in all to the sum of $16,700. This sum was to be delivered to two persons named as trustees to be kept by them during the life of his wife Bridget McDermott, the interest and income therefrom to be paid to her during her lifetime, and, upon her death, the fund to be by them distributed to the legatees thereof. The trustees were to qualify by giving bonds. The will was duly probated, Bridget McDermott qualified as executrix, the usual proceedings in administration were had, and a final distribution was ordered in accordance with the will. According to the final account, as settled, the amount applicable to the payment of all these legacies, after paying debts and preferred legacies, was only $1,593.66. This sum the executrix was directed by the decree to pay to the trustees upon their giving the bonds as required. The trustees did not qualify by giving the required bonds. The decree of distribution was made on April 7, 1894. Bridget McDermott died December 30, 1902. These actions were begun June 27, 1904.

1. The second count of the complaint alleges the facts aforesaid, avers that the money distributed to the trustees was never paid to them, but that Bridget McDermott, until her death, retained possession thereof as executrix of Hugh McDermott's estate, and that plaintiff is entitled to a part of the fund of $1,593.66 applicable to the legacies, and asks judgment against the estate of Bridget for the share due plaintiff. The order sustaining the demurrer states that "the same is hereby sustained upon the grounds as heretofore stated in the opinion on file herein." It is claimed that the order cannot be affirmed unless this court agrees with the lower court in the opinion referred to in the order. We do not so understand the law. If the complaint is insufficient upon any ground properly specified in the demurrer, the order must be sustained, although the lower court may have considered it sufficient in that respect, and may in its order have declared it defective only in some particular in which we hold it to be good. The defendant is entitled to the decision of this court on all questions presented by the demurrer and necessary to the decision made. Wilson v. Carter, 117 Cal. 53, 48 Pac. 983; Wakeham v. Barker, 82 Cal. 50, 22 Pac. 1131; White v. Merrill, 82 Cal. 14, 22 Pac. 1129.

The second count does not aver that any claim for the demand sued on therein was ever presented for allowance against the estate of Bridget McDermott. A money judgment only is demanded. No attempt is made to follow specific trust property. The demand is clearly founded upon contract. The Code of Civil Procedure requires that such demands be presented to the administrator of the estate for allowance (section 1493), and provides that no action can be maintained thereon, unless a claim therefor has been so presented before the action is begun (section 1500). A complaint against an estate, stating a cause of action sounding in contract, which does not aver that a claim for the cause of action sued on has been thus presented to the administrator, fails to state a cause of action against the estate. Morse v. Steele, 149 Cal. 304, 86 Pac. 693; Morrow v. Barker, 119 Cal. 67, 51 Pac. 12; Humboldt Soc. v. Burnham, 111 Cal. 345, 43 Pac. 971; McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 42 Pac. 466; Lichtenberg v. McGlynn, 105 Cal. 45, 38 Pac. 541; Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393. This count is therefore fatally deficient for this reason.

It is urged that this point cannot be considered in this court on appeal because it is in the nature of matter in abatement, and the general demurrer merely states that this count "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendant," without specifying this omission as the particular point in which it was claimed to be lacking. It was decided in this state very soon after the adoption of the practice act, which in this respect is the same as the present Code of Civil Procedure, that a general demurrer need not specify the particulars wherein the complaint failed to state facts constituting a cause of action, but that, if couched in the language above quoted, it would search the entire complaint, or the count thereof to which it was directed, for any and every failure to state a material fact. Ellissen v. Halleck, 6 Cal. 393; Williamson v. Blattan, 9 Cal. 501. Afterwards, in Brown v. Martin, 25 Cal. 91, an exception to this rule was made in cases where the bar of the statute of limitations appeared on the face of the complaint. Apparently, though not expressly, applying the familiar common-law rule that the benefit of this statute is a personal privilege which is waived unless specially pleaded, the court in that case held that a general demurrer which did not specify the bar of the statute as the defect relied on was insufficient to present that objection. This precedent has been uniformly followed ever since, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned. The opinion in the case also attempted to establish and recommended the future observance of a rule to the effect that a general demurrer must always specify the particular facts which it is claimed are not alleged, else it will be disregarded. This attempt proved futile, and in Kent v. Snyder, 30 Cal. 666, the rule suggested was repudiated, and it was declared that no specifications were necessary in a general demurrer, except where the benefit of a personal privilege, such as the statute of limitations, was claimed. Thenceforward this has been the accepted rule of pleading, and, so far as we are aware, the statute of limitations is the only personal privilege which has been declared to fall within the exception.

The failure to allege the presentation of a claim does not come within the reason of the exception. The presentation is required in order to protect the estate against unnecessary litigation, the administrator acts in a trust capacity, and it is his duty to insist upon a compliance with the plain provisions of section 1500. Its benefits are not personal to him, and it is not his personal privilege to waive them. It has been for many years uniformly considered that this objection was properly presented by a general demurrer not specifying any particulars. See Morse v. Steele, supra, and the other cases cited. In some cases, where no demurrer was filed, it has been held that the objection could not be raised on appeal, but must be first presented in some manner in the trial court. Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555; Peterson v. Hornblower, 33 Cal. 278. It is difficult to sustain the distinction attempted to be made in these cases, but they have not been questioned. In other cases cited by appellant there was either a defective allegation of the presentation of a claim, which this court held to be sufficient in the absence of a demurrer for uncertainty (Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 353; Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 184, 19 Pac. 183; Guerian v. Joyce, 133 Cal. 405, 65 Pac. 972), or a presentation made after the action was begun and which was duly alleged and no demurrer was filed (Bemmerly v. Woodward, 124 Cal. 574, 57 Pac. 561), or the defendant had died after the suit was begun and before trial, and the court held that the objection that there was a failure on the trial to prove presentation of a claim to the defendant's estate, as required by section 1502 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in such cases is waived, if not made in the court below (Coleman v. Woodworth, 28 Cal. 568; Bank v. Howland, 42 Cal. 134; Drake v. Foster, 52 Cal. 227; Preston v. Knapp, 85 Cal. 559, 24 Pac. 811). None of these cases is in point here.

The appellant argues that the record shows that this point was not presented in the court below because it is not mentioned in the opinion of that court referred to in the order sustaining the demurrer. This does not prove the proposition. The opinion does not purport to state what points were presented in argument. The share of the $1,593.66 due the respective plaintiffs is less than $100, except in two of the cases in which it amounts to $477.14. The demurrer on the ground that the court has no jurisdiction would be well taken but for the circumstance that the amount demanded was fixed to include both counts, and exceeds $300 in each of the nine cases. Const. art. 6, § 5.

2. The first count of the complaint alleges that upon the death of Hugh McDermott there came into the possession of his widow, Bridget McDermott, some $40,000 in money and $10,000 in notes and mortgages, belonging to his estate, and which belonged to him in his lifetime; that she did not list this property in the inventory of the estate filed by her as his executrix and did not mention it in her accounts filed, nor account for it in any way, but concealed it from the court and from the plaintiff and other legatees, and falsely represented to the court and to said parties that Hugh McDermott at his death did not own any property, and none had come to her possession or knowledge except that listed in the inventory and mentioned in her accounts; that the plaintiff, the trustees named, and the other legatees, did not know or discover that Hugh McDermott was the owner of said concealed property, or that Bridget had come into possession of it upon his death, or had concealed its existence from them, or that her statements that the inventory and accounts described all his property and that none other had come to her possession or knowledge were false until after her death; that plaintiff was then, for the first time, informed of these facts, "by reason of the administration proceedings," upon her estate "wherein it appeared" that she came into possession of said concealed property belonging to said Hugh McDermott, upon his death, and retained possession thereof until her death. This count alleges that the trustees failed to qualify, but it does not aver that the $1,593.66, ordered distributed to said trustees, was not in fact paid to them, or that the plaintiff has not received her share thereof. In this count a recovery is sought only for so much of the concealed property as will be sufficient to pay the balance of plaintiff's legacy, after deducting her share of the $1,593.66, distributed to the trustees. It alleges the due presentation of a claim for this balance.

The inventory containing the alleged false list was filed on October 18, 1890, nearly 14 years before these actions were begun. It is not alleged that the plaintiff did not know the contents of the inventory. It was a statement of record that the property therein described comprised the entire estate of Hugh McDermott. The several accounts and the petition for distribution were reiterations of the same statement. It is not averred that Bridget McDermott made the alleged false statements to the plaintiff in any other manner, or at any other time or place, than in these documents. Concerning such belated discoveries, this court has said: "After the lapse of so much time, and after the death of the original parties, equity, for the peace of society, scrutinizes with great particularity such bills as this, and it is not satisfied to retain one unless the fullest possible credible showing is made by the applicants for relief. It is not sufficient, therefore, to allege ignorance at one time and discovery at another. The facts and circumstances must themselves be pleaded in order that the court may determine whether the sources of knowledge at last availed of were not at all times open to plaintiffs, whether they were negligently overlooked, whether other circumstances should not earlier have put plaintiffs upon discovery, what was the nature of the concealment practiced, whether it consisted in mere silence, or was accompanied by active misrepresentation and fraudulent deception. * * * All are questions, which, upon the demand of the demurrer, should be answered by the bill in order that the chancellor, to whose conscience, in the first instance, the equity of the bill is addressed, should satisfy himself that plaintiffs have not neglected or slept upon their rights." Robertson v. Burrell, 110 Cal. 578, 42 Pac. 1086.

The complaints in these cases leave the court uninformed upon some of the points as to which disclosure is declared to be necessary. They do not state where the plaintiffs lived, nor whether or not they were acquainted with Hugh McDermott, in his lifetime, or were familiar with his property and possessions, or were so situated that they had no knowledge thereof. The will, which is annexed to and made part of the complaint, indicates by its terms that Hugh McDermott was not acquainted with some of the plaintiffs, and that some of them at the time it was made lived out of the state. But these are mere inferences, and they cannot take the place of the positive allegations of fact which the law requires the plaintiff to make in order to show that his discovery or imputed knowledge of the fraud was within the period of three years before the action was begun. It is not stated that plaintiffs did not know of the actual existence of the $40,000 in money and $10,000 in mortgages. The latter, it may be presumed, were of record. It does not so appear in the complaints, nor do they state in what county the mortgaged property was situated, or explain why the plaintiffs still remain entirely ignorant of everything concerning them, excepting their aggregate amount. By the provisions of the will other legacies were preferred, and the plaintiff's legacies could not have been paid in full unless Hugh McDermott had possessed an estate worth more than $80,000. His will was made December 7, 1889, a month and two days before his death. The petition for its probate, alleging that his entire estate consisted of certain notes and mortgages worth $12,000 and certain real estate worth $6,000, was filed March 15, 1890, some two months later, and the inventory and appraisal showing its value to be only $18,728.58 was filed in the following October. We must assume that plaintiffs knew of these facts. They were at least sufficient to suggest some inquiry concerning the reasons for the great disparity between the bountiful provisions of the will and the meager ability of the testator to respond to its demands. No inquiry whatever was made.

It is not stated that plaintiffs believed the alleged false representations concerning the estate, nor that it was in reliance thereon that they suffered 14 years to elapse without the least diligence to learn the reason for the insufficiency of the estate to pay the liberal legacies provided in a will made so shortly before the death of the testator. It is the general rule that one who claims that his conduct has been influenced to his prejudice by alleged false statements of another must allege that he believed the false statements to be true and relied on them in his subsequent action relating to the subject thereof. 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 106, 111; 8 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 906; 20 Cyc. 39; Estep v. Armstrong, 69 Cal. 536, 11 Pac. 132; Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 378, 383, 23 Pac. 16, 16 Am. St. Rep. 137. The first count shows on its face that the action is barred by the provisions of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless brought within the exception of subdivision 4 thereof. We are of the opinion that it does not aver sufficient diligence to excuse the failure to discover the alleged fraud within three years after it was perpetrated, or before the death of Bridget McDermott; that it does not sufficiently disclose the facts and circumstances surrounding the parties at the time the concealment is alleged to have taken place; and that it is insufficient because it does not aver that they believed the alleged false statement, and were thereby led to forego further inquiry. It is also defective in that it is uncertain as to the description of the property alleged to have been concealed, particularly of the notes and mortgages. A special demurrer presents this objection. No reasonable excuse is given for the alleged inability to give a more particular description of property of this character "discovered" in the manner alleged. The demurrer was properly sustained.

In each of the appeals the judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for appellant. John J. Barrett, George C. Ross, and Ross & Ross, for respondent.

SHAW, J. A rehearing was granted in order to consider more fully the question whether or not the second count of the complaint, although insufficient as a complaint on a debt against the estate of Bridget McDermott, could be held good as a complaint in equity to follow a trust fund and obtain an order upon Maguire, either personally, or as administrator, to pay over to plaintiff the fund claimed by her, or her share of it, as money belonging to her which has come into his possession or control.

The complaint is clearly insufficient for that purpose. The general rule as to charging trustees is thus stated: "The general rule is that a plaintiff who seeks to charge a trustee with a breach of trust is bound to state a clear case upon his bill. Therefore acts of a trustee which may, or may not, be breaches of trust, must be so alleged that they necessarily appear to be breaches, or a demurrer will be sustained. The presumption is in favor of the performance of his duty by the trustee. The plaintiff must therefore allege and prove affirmatively a breach of the trust." 2 Perry on Trusts, § 890. "All the facts necessary to rebut these presumptions must be specifically averred." 2 Beach on Trusts, § 756. No breach of trust either by Bridget McDermott in her lifetime or by her administrator is shown. At the time of the distribution of the estate of her husband, Hugh McDermott, she had on hand the sum of $1,593.66 which she was directed by the decree to pay to Byrnes and Maloney as trustees, upon the execution by them of a sufficient bond, the said sum to be by them kept during her lifetime and the income thereof paid to her, and at her death the principal to be paid to the several plaintiffs in these actions, as provided in Hugh McDermott's will. Byrnes and Maloney never qualified as such, nor did other trustees in their stead, and hence Bridget McDermott could not pay the money to them, but was obliged to keep it herself. It is alleged that until the date of her death, some eight years afterwards, she "retained possession thereof as executrix" of her said husband's will. Under the circumstances this was her duty. It is not alleged that it was mingled with her own property, or converted to her own use. Neither of these facts can be presumed. Being entitled to the income from it, she had the right to invest it so that it would produce an income, using due care to invest safely. It is presumed that she did her duty as trustee of the fund, and hence we must assume that she kept it separate from her own property, and that, if she invested it, she did so in such manner as to show on its face that it was not her own but belonged to others and was held by her in trust for them. If the trustees mentioned in the will had qualified and upon their demand she had refused to pay over the fund to them, they could under the provisions of section 1666 of the Code of Civil Procedure have maintained an action against her to recover it as a debt. Perhaps, after her death, the beneficiaries could claim the same right under that section and could demand the sum of her administrator and sue for the same as a debt of her estate, although it had been converted by her to her own use. It seems perfectly clear that the complaint was framed on this theory, and that the omission in the second count to aver a presentation of the claim to the administrator was accidental. But, however this may be, it is certain that, without a showing that the trust fund is mingled with some part of her estate into which it can be traced, no action in equity can be maintained to have it declared a lien thereon, and to have it or its equivalent paid over to the beneficiaries, and that without averments of a conversion, or some other breach of trust by her, no action at law can be sustained against her estate without averring a presentation of a claim therefor.

With respect to the liability of the administrator personally, the complaint is equally defective. It is not averred that the fund, or any note, mortgage, or chose in action representing it, or any property into which it had been converted, ever came into his possession. It was no part of her estate, and, being segregated from the estate, as we must assume, it was not his duty to take possession of it as administrator of her estate. It was held by her as executrix of the estate of Hugh McDermott he did not succeed to her rights or duties as executrix of that estate, and he had no authority to act in that behalf. Our law so provides. Code Civ. Proc. § 1353; Chevassus v. Burr, 134 Cal. 434, 66 Pac. 568; Bush v. Lindsey, 44 Cal. 124. Upon her death the trust ceased to be active, and nothing remained to be done under it except for the beneficiaries to take possession of the fund. Under these circumstances, if the administrator of her estate took possession of it, he would have no title or right in it, but would be a mere custodian or depository, to keep it until the persons entitled applied for it and thereupon to deliver it to them. His duty with respect to it in that case would be the same as with respect to any other property of another which might come lawfully into his possession without title or right to keep it against the rightful owner. If there is any presumption that he did take possession of it, which we do not say, it would be a presumption of fact, not of law, and if the plaintiff desired to rely upon it as a fact necessary to complete the statement of a cause of action against the administrator personally, the rules of pleading require that she should aver the fact. Furthermore, one lawfully in possession of property which he does not claim and which he has not converted to his own use, but is holding for the rightful owner with the intent to deliver it to him on demand, is entitled to an opportunity to comply with his duty before being subjected to a suit to recover it; that is, to a demand for its delivery. Such demand in such a case is a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action to follow the specific property, or recover it, and it must be alleged and proven. 13 Cyc. 806; 1 Cyc. 408, 694; Bushnell v. McCauley, 7 Cal. 421; Campbell v. Jones, 38 Cal. 507.

The case of Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, 89 Am. Dec. 141, is almost parallel. The complaint there did not allege the presentation of a claim, and hence was held insufficient as a complaint on a debt against the estate. A rehearing was granted to consider again whether or not it could be upheld as a complaint to enforce a trust. The court then said: "The defendant cannot be charged and held to account as trustee, except upon the averment that he has come into possession of the trust fund, or its substitute. If, at the time of his death, the defendant's testator was in possession of the trust fund, or other property into which he may have converted it, and such fund or other property had come into the possession of the defendant, he would have held it upon the same terms as his testator held it. * * * Such fund would have constituted no part of the testator's assets, and the defendant would not have held it in his capacity as executor, but in his capacity as succeeding trustee to the plaintiff's ward, and might have been compelled to account as such." (Italics ours.) See, also, Rowland v. Madden, 72 Cal. 17, 12 Pac. 226, 870.

It is suggested in the petition for rehearing that the case of Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137

Cal. 634, 66 Pac. 369, 70 Pac. 861, is authority for the claim that the complaint herein states a cause of action in equity to enforce a trust. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present case by the material fact, there distinctly alleged, proven, and found, that the trust fund in controversy had been by the testator mingled with money of his own which, including the trust fund, had come into the possession of the executor, facts which are entirely wanting here. The opinion cites Lathrop v. Bampton with approval, and it does not hold or intimate that it was not necessary in a suit in equity to aver that the administrator had come into possession of the trust fund which he was to be required to pay over. James Maguire is not made defendant in his personal capacity, but solely in his capacity as administrator. The prayer of the complaint is applicable jointly to both counts, and it does not ask for the enforcement of any trust, but does ask specifically for judgment "against said defendant" for a stated sum covering the demands set forth in both counts, "all to be made payable in due course of administration," which is the appropriate prayer in an action to recover a debt from an estate. These formal indications of intent to plead a mere debt might be disregarded and the complaint held good upon a different theory, in the interests of justice, if the facts alleged would warrant it. But the facts do not authorize it, and these forms of expression serve to emphasize what is reasonably apparent from the complaint as a whole, including both counts, that plaintiff's counsel believed that some advantage, possibly a jury trial, could be obtained by drafting the complaint as for a debt, instead of as a bill in equity, and that, with that end in view, the averments which might make it possible to hold it good as a cause of action to enforce a trust were purposely omitted.

We adhere to the opinion heretofore rendered in department, and adopt it as the opinion of the court in bank.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J; SLOSS, J; HENSHAW, J; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 444

DE FORREST v. COFFEY, Judge. (S. F. 5,030.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 21, 1908.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 38*)—MINISTERIAL DUTY.

If a judge had no discretion, in a receivership proceeding against an insolvent trust company, to refuse a petition for leave to file an independent suit, petitioner is entitled to a writ of mandate to compel the judge to grant the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

2. RECEIVERS (§ 174*)—LEAVE TO SUE—JUDICIAL DISCRETION—INTERVENTION OR INDEPENDENT SUIT.

It was within the discretion of the superior court, in a receivership proceeding against an insolvent trust company, to require a petitioner to litigate his claim to recover money fraudulently received by the company for deposit after it became insolvent and suspended payments, by intervening in the receivership proceedings, and hence it was not an abuse of discretion to deny leave to sue the receiver on the claim in an independent suit; the court having ample legal and equitable jurisdiction to grant petitioner any relief which the facts alleged in his petition may entitle him to.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 168*)—PROCEEDINGS—LEAVE TO SUE RECEIVER—PRESUMPTIONS.

On petition for a writ of mandate to require the superior court, in a receivership proceeding against an insolvent trust company, to grant leave to sue the receiver in an independent suit for money fraudulently received by the company for deposit after it became insolvent, it must be assumed that the money claimed came into the receiver's possession and is held by him under claim that it is part of the assets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Dec. Dig. § 168.*]

4. RECEIVERS (§ 174*)—LEAVE TO SUE—JUDICIAL DISCRETION—INTERVENTION OR INDEPENDENT SUIT.

While the court in a special proceeding to liquidate the affairs of an insolvent bank holds the assets through the receiver, it only does so to conserve the interests of those properly entitled to share in them; and while the court will not permit interference with the property without its leave, it will not withhold it from one showing himself entitled to it, but whether it will permit an independent suit relative to property in the receiver's hands or will compel intervention is a matter within its discretion, when the rights involved can be as fairly determined in one way as in the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

5. RECEIVERS (§ 166*)—ACTIONS—INTERVENTION—SCOPE OF PROCEEDING.

On a claim by an intervener in a suit to liquidate the affairs of an insolvent bank, trial of the issues formed on the petition of intervention proceeds as in any ordinary action, and the proceeding is substantially an independent action from the judgment in which any party aggrieved may appeal; the court being empowered to call a jury, findings of fact and conclusions of law being made and filed, and judgment being entered allowing or denying the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Application by J. De Forrest for a writ of mandate to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and to J. V. Coffey, judge thereof. Alternative writ discharged, and petition dismissed.

Milton T. U'Ren, for petitioner. J. V. De Laveaga and E. De Los Magee, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as judge of the superior court, to make an order granting leave to the petitioner to bring an action against E. J. Le Breton, as receiver of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, a banking corporation, to recover from said receiver the sum of $2,100 alleged to be in his possession but belonging to the petitioner.

The petition for the writ sets forth, referring to its recitals in a general way, that for a long time prior to the 30th day of October, 1907, the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company was a corporation organized under the laws of this state and engaged in a general banking business in the city and county of San Francisco; that on the last-mentioned date, about the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., said bank, being insolvent, suspended payments and ceased to do business; that, notwithstanding this, the officials of the bank permitted and allowed its receiving teller to remain at the receiving window of said bank and accept deposits; that on said 30th day of October, 1907, about the hour aforesaid, the petitioner, having no knowledge of the insolvency of the bank or that it had ceased to do business, deposited with said bank, and there was accepted by said receiving teller, with the full knowledge of the insolvency of the bank, the sum of $2,100, which consisted of a check drawn upon the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, by the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, payable to the petitioner and duly indorsed by him and delivered to the receiving teller; that the said California Safe Deposit & Trust Company immediately upon acquiring possession of said check caused it to be carried by special messenger to the Anglo-Californian Bank, where it was cashed by said bank and the $2,100 carried back to the office of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, which took control and possession of the money and retained possession thereof until said money was taken possession and control of by the Bank Commissioners of the state of California, and thereafter delivered into the possession of said E. J. Le Breton as a receiver; that after the bank commissioners had so taken possession of this money, together with the property and effects of said California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, an action was commenced on December 9, 1907, in the department of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, of which the respondent is presiding judge, in the name of the people of the state, by the attorney general thereof, against the said California Safe Deposit & Trust Company and its directors and trustees, to have it decreed that said corporation was insolvent, and to have a receiver appointed for the purpose of winding and closing up the affairs of said corporation; that thereafter on a hearing duly had a decree was entered by said superior court adjudging said corporation insolvent, prohibiting its directors and trustees from transacting any further business, and appointing E. J. Le Breton receiver of said bank for the purposes of liquidation under the direction of said court, and ordering said bank commissioners to surrender the property of said corporation then in their possession to said E. J. Le Breton as receiver of said bank; that said E. J. Le Breton qualified as such receiver, and the bank commissioners delivered to him the property and assets of said bank, and in particular delivered to him said sum of $2,100, of which the said receiver is now in possession; that on April 15, 1908, petitioner filed a verified petition setting forth the above facts, and asking for an order of court allowing and permitting him to file an independent action against the said E. J. Le Breton as receiver to compel him to deliver and pay over to the petitioner the said sum of $2,100 deposited in said bank as aforesaid, which petition coming on for hearing, after notice to the receiver, was by the respondent denied.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Petitioner now applies to this court in this original proceeding in mandamus to compel the respondent to grant said order permitting him to sue said receiver.

The answer to the petition here avers that the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, respondent presiding therein, had duly made it a rule of practice and procedure that all matters, things, causes of action, or petitions affecting in any way the possession of any property whatsoever in the hands of E. J. Le Breton, as receiver of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, or in any way affecting the assets thereof, in the hands of said receiver or the distribution thereof, shall be tried by a petition in the nature of an intervention filed by the person claiming any rights with reference thereto, in the action wherein said receiver was appointed, "and that upon the filing of said petition said superior court shall thereupon and ex parte make and give its order directing * * * such receiver to show cause upon a day fixed * * * why the relief prayed in the petition in intervention shall not be granted, and that upon such hearing the said superior court shall proceed to try such issue of fact or law as the said receiver may raise to said petition in the manner of the trial of an ordinary action at law, and that, upon a final hearing of such issues * * * the said superior court shall make its decision and judgment and shall file its findings of fact in the manner of an ordinary action."

While other matters are stated both in the petition and answer, those which we have mentioned are the material ones and form the basis upon which the legal proposition involved is to be determined.

The original proceeding in which the receiver was appointed is still pending in the superior court, but the petitioner did not file any petition in the nature of an intervention in that proceeding itself, as required by the rule of practice and procedure set forth in the answer. In fact, the position he assumes on the application for this writ of mandate is that he was not required to do so, but had an absolute right, on his application therefor, to have an order of court made granting him leave to maintain a separate and independent suit in another tribunal against the receiver for the recovery of the property, and that it was the clear duty of respondent to have granted him such leave. It must, of course, be conceded that if, upon the showing made upon the application for leave to sue, no discretion was left to respondent but to grant the petition, then petitioner is entitled to the issuance of this writ of mandate to compel respondent to act as the law required him to do.

This brings us to the real question in issue, namely, whether upon that showing any discretion was vested in the court to grant or refuse the application.

It is claimed by the petitioner upon the facts set forth in his petition that, the bank having received his deposit after it had become insolvent, the title to the deposit never passed from him, and that, notwithstanding it went into the hands of the receiver as an apparent asset of the insolvent corporation, petitioner had a right to maintain an action at law against the receiver to recover the full amount of said deposit.

The position of the respondent is that, conceding the receipt of the money by the bank while insolvent, still the title to the property passed to the bank subject to a right on the part of petitioner to rescind the contract of deposit for fraud and to recover the money as a trust fund if he is able to trace it, and, hence a suit against the receiver is purely of an equitable nature. We do not discuss these different theories as to the nature of the action the petitioner might maintain, because it is of no moment to the question here. The only proposition with which we are concerned is, did the court have the discretion to require the petitioner to litigate his claim, whether legal or equitable, by intervening in the proceeding in which the receiver was appointed? and that it had, we think is well settled by the authorities.

Independent of the fact that but one form of action is permitted in this state, whether the action is of a legal or equitable nature, it is to be observed that the same tribunal which has jurisdiction in a special proceeding involving the liquidation of an insolvent banking corporation has also ample legal and equitable jurisdiction to grant the petitioner any relief which the facts alleged in his petition may entitle him to. There is nothing in the procedure with reference to special proceedings involving the liquidation of insolvent banking corporations which limits or constrains the exercise of the ample legal and equitable powers of the superior court, so that one making such a claim as the petitioner does here, against the receiver, as to the assets of the corporation, cannot have his claim as fully and fairly determined by intervention therein as by bringing an independent action. For the purposes of present consideration it must be assumed that the money to which the petitioner asserts his right came into the possession of the receiver and is held by him under claim that it is a part of the assets of the insolvent corporation. While the court in the special proceeding for liquidation takes charge of the assets of an insolvent bank and holds them through its officer, the receiver, it only does so to conserve the interests of those who are properly entitled to share in them. It assumes the administration of the entire estate; controls the conduct of the receiver, who is its officer, and whose possession of the assets is the possession of the court; it holds the property and administers the insolvent estate through the receiver in the interest and for the benefit of those who it may ultimately determine are entitled to it. The receiver is under the control of the court, as is the property of which he is the custodian, and while the court will not permit any interference with such property without its leave, neither will it withhold such property from one who shows he is entitled to it. But whether the court will permit, upon application, an independent suit to be brought relative to the property in the hands of the receiver, or will compel intervention in the proceeding in which the receiver is appointed, is a matter for its discretion. It is not required to assume jurisdiction of all controversies to which the receiver may become a party, but may upon application permit them to be determined in some other competent tribunal. It is not, however, in all cases required to do so, but may reserve to itself the determination of these matters in the original proceedings in which the receiver was appointed, when such rights can be as fairly determined by intervention as if an independent action were brought. When the court cannot afford the same relief in intervention as a claimant would be entitled to in an independent action or where by virtue of some statutory or constitutional provision a particular kind of action must be brought in some jurisdiction other than where the original special proceeding is pending, the court will undoubtedly grant leave to bring it, and it would be an abuse of discretion not to do so. So, too, even in cases where it would be proper for the court to dispose of the controversy under an intervention in the original special proceeding, it may, nevertheless, grant permission to bring an independent suit. It is not, however, required to do so, and when, by virtue of its ample legal and equitable jurisdiction, it can grant full relief in all proper form of law to a party asserting a claim against the receiver by his intervening in the original proceeding, it is no abuse of discretion to refuse him permission to bring an independent suit. This is the rule as uniformly laid down by the authorities.

It is said by High in his work on Receivers (section 254b): "The more common practice, and that which has been generally commended by the courts, is to hear and determine all rights of action and demands against a receiver by petition in the cause in which he was appointed, without remitting the parties to a new and independent suit; and it rests wholly within the discretion of the court to grant leave to bring an independent action against its receiver or to determine the controversy upon petition in the original cause, directing, if necessary, an issue to be tried by a jury as to questions of fact or of damages. * * * So, if an equitable right or title is asserted in property which is in the custody of a receiver, the court will not ordinarily permit an action to be brought against him, but will require the claimant to proceed by petition; and persons having a claim or lien upon a fund in a receiver's hands should assert such claim by petition, rather than by an action against the receiver."

The same rule is stated in Alderson on Receivers (section 523), where the author says: "It rests in the discretion of the court to allow a party claiming rights against its receiver to bring an independent action against him or to compel such party to proceed against him by petition in the action in which he is receiver. * * * If the relief is sought by an intervening petition, the court may direct that issues of fact be tried by a jury, and whether such issues shall be tried by a jury or referred to a master for determination and investigation is a matter in which the court may exercise its discretion. Persons having claims against property in the hands of a receiver are not required to institute a new action to enforce them, but instead of asking leave to bring such action they may intervene in the original suit by petition and have their rights adjudicated, and this is the common practice. * * * If, when leave to sue is asked, it appear that the case is plain and that there is no necessity for instituting a new suit, the court may proceed to a final determination. An order denying an application to sue a receiver will be affirmed unless there has been an abuse of discretion."

Pomeroy, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (volume 5, § 177), says: "While it is in some instances proper to direct the prosecution of an action at law against a receiver to determine the amount of compensation or damages to be paid, the better and more commonly recognized practice is to apply for relief to the court in which the receiver is acting."

See, also, Meeker v. Sprague, 5 Wash. 243, 31 Pac. 628; Mechanics' National Bank, etc., v. Landauer, 68 Wis. 44, 31 N. W. 160; Melendy v. Barbour, 78 Va. 544; Kennedy

v. I. C. & L. R. Co. (C. C.) 3 Fed. 97; Gunning v. Sorg, 113 Ill. App. 332; Barton v. Barber, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 672; and Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 37 L. Ed. 815.

In the latter case, at page 479 of 149 U. S., at page 1010 of 13 Sup. Ct. (37 L. Ed. 815), it is said: "It is for the court, in its discretion, to decide whether it will determine for itself all claims for or against the receiver or will allow them to be litigated elsewhere. It may direct claims in favor of the corporation to be sued on by the receiver in other tribunals, or may leave him to adjust or settle them without suit, as in his judgment may be most beneficial to those interested in the estate. Any claims against the receiver or the corporation, the court may permit to be put in suit in another tribunal against the receiver, or may reserve to itself the determination of; but no suit, unless expressly authorized by statute, can be brought against the receiver without the permission of the court which appointed him."

Aside from these authorities, this court has in Pacific Railway Company v. Wade, 91 Cal. 449, 27 Pac. 768, 13 L. R. A. 754, 25 Am. St. Rep. 201, recognized this as the established rule. In that case the question was whether the court in the original proceeding in which the receiver was appointed had jurisdiction to determine the amount of damages which would be sustained by the insolvent street railway company in having its track intersected and used by another street railway company. It was held that it had; this court, at pages 453 and 455 of 91 Cal., at pages 769, 770 of 27 Pac. (13 L. R. A. 754, 25 Am. St. Rep. 201), saying: "The question to be determined is, simply, whether the court, which, through its receiver, has the custody and control of the insolvent corporation's property, has the power to determine the compensation, * * * or whether the electric company must * * * bring an action therefor against the receiver with the permission of the court. * * * The only question to be determined is, what the amount due the cable company is? It is like any other claim for damages or compensation in favor of a corporation whose property is in the hands of a receiver, and is to be determined in the same way. As to the manner of determining such question, there has been some discordance of opinion among judges, but so far as we have investigated the subject, there had been no conflict of decisions; the cases all hold that while it is, under certain circumstances, proper to direct the prosecution of an action at law against the receiver to determine the amount of compensation or damages to be paid, the better and more commonly recognized practice is to apply for relief to the court by petition, in which the receiver is acting. The rule applies to all cases of damages to person or property, whether occasioned prior or subsequent to the appointment of the receiver."

Certainly, no sound reason can be advanced why, if the court has the right to take jurisdiction of the question of damages in the original proceeding in which the receiver is appointed, it has not equally jurisdiction to determine the simple question of the right of the petitioner to recover personal property in the hands of the receiver, or to have a preferential lien impressed in his favor upon the assets of the insolvent corporation in the hands of the receiver.

Within the rule of these authorities it is therefore apparent that there was no abuse of discretion in denying the application of petitioner for leave to bring an independent suit. Under the procedure established by the superior court the petitioner upon intervening could allege the facts upon which his claim of relief was founded, and upon the answer of the receiver the court would proceed to determine the issues raised. If these were such as required a trial by jury, the superior court, as such, has power to call a jury and have the issues tried before it as in any other action. The trial of the issues proceeds as in any ordinary action, and findings of fact and conclusions of law are made and filed as required in other actions, and judgment entered allowing or denying the claim asserted. The proceeding, while in the nature of an intervention, is treated as substantially an independent action, from the judgment in which any party aggrieved may appeal. Pacific Railway Company v. Wade, 91 Cal. 456, 27 Pac. 768, 13 L. R. A. 754, 25 Am. St. Rep. 201; First National Bank v. Barnum, etc., 58 Mich. 124, 315, 24 N. W. 543, 25 N. W. 202, 55 Am. Rep. 660; Porter v. Kingman, 126 Mass. 141; High on Receivers, § 254c; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Superior Court (Cal.) 96 Pac. 803.

In fact, after the intervention, the court having jurisdiction in the original proceeding in which the receiver is appointed, can do as complete and exact justice as to the claim of petitioner as if he were asserting it in an independent action, at the same time the intervention affording all parties an opportunity for a more simple and expeditious determination of the controversy than an independent action would. In determining the right of the petitioner under the intervention, the court proceeds under the same rules and grants him the same relief as if he were the plaintiff in an independent suit, and the same right of appeal is preserved to him. He is deprived of no right in the intervention which he is guaranteed under the law in an independent action, should he have been permitted to bring one, and, this being so, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing to grant leave to bring such independent suit.

We are not cited by petitioner to any authority which supports his claim that it was the legal duty of the court to allow him by an independent action to assert the character of the claim against the receiver which his petition discloses. None are cited from other jurisdictions, and the cases of Tapscott v. Lyon, 103 Cal. 297, 37 Pac. 225, and Murray v. Etchepare, 132 Cal. 286, 64 Pac. 282, cited from this court, involve no question of the exercise of discretion upon an application for leave to bring an independent action. All they declare is that leave to sue a receiver will never be refused by the court in a proper case, which is, undoubtedly, true. The discretion which is vested in the court on the subject is a discretion which is regulated by fixed rules of law. It is not an absolute or arbitrary discretion. If a petition for leave to bring an independent suit discloses a case where it should be granted, it is the duty of the court to do so, and it doubtless would. If it does not, it will be compelled by mandamus to do it. But the petition here does not disclose such a case. Under the authorities, as we have seen, it was discretionary with the court to either grant or refuse his application, and hence there was no proper case requiring leave to be granted.

The case of Petaluma Bank v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 488, 44 Pac. 177, cited by petitioner, has no bearing on the matter involved here. It appears from that case that in a divorce action a receiver had been appointed to take charge of the property of the husband in order to secure the payment of alimony which had been decreed the wife. Prior to the appointment of the receiver, the Petaluma Bank had obtained judgment against the husband defendant in the divorce suit which became a lien upon the lands owned by him and of which the receiver in the divorce action was directed to take possession. The bank, being about to have said lands sold to enforce the lien of its judgment, applied to the superior court in the divorce suit for an order directing its receiver not to interfere with the officers of the superior court in which its judgment had been obtained in the lawful execution of said judgment. The order was refused. It will be observed that the application was not for permission to sue the receiver; it was simply for permission to the bank to take such steps as the law afforded to enforce the lien of its judgment against property, the possession of which the receiver was ordered to take. On application to this court for mandamus to compel the superior court to make the order the writ was denied, this court holding that the Petaluma Bank had an absolute legal right to enforce its lien against the property without at all applying to the superior court for permission to do so. It is obvious that there is a radical difference in the case cited and the matter at bar. A receiver in a divorce case only conserves the property of the husband for the purpose of securing the wife in her claim to alimony. He has nothing to do with claims of the creditors of the husband. In the case cited no question of permission to sue the receiver was involved. No such application could have been made, as there was no suit to be brought against him, and the enforcement of the lien of the judgment obtained by the bank could not at all physically disturb the possession of the receiver. The bank was enforcing a pure, fixed, legal right, the exercise of which, it was held, the court appointing the receiver could not control. But in an insolvency proceeding the court sequesters the estate of the insolvent, and its receiver holds it for the benefit of all the creditors. It has plenary power over the assets of the estate, and one who asserts a claim against them must not only apply for permission to do so, but under the authorities it is discretionary with the court to reserve to itself the determination of the validity of the claim or to permit it to be litigated in some other competent tribunal, and, as far as the nature of the claim asserted here is concerned, the opinion in the Petaluma Bank Case contains nothing contrary to the general rule as established by the authorities to which we have heretofore referred.

The superior court, therefore, was not guilty of any abuse of discretion in refusing to permit petitioner to bring an independent suit, and was entirely warranted in reserving to itself the determination of the validity of the claim made by petitioner against the receiver.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the petition dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

154 Cal. 341

HARLAN v. HARLAN. (Sac. 1500.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 311*)—ORDER FOR SUPPORT OF CHILDREN—ENFORCEMENT—EXECUTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 685, authorizing the enforcement of a judgment after the lapse of five years by leave of court on motion for that purpose, the court may direct execution for the amount unpaid on a valid order directing a divorced husband to pay a monthly sum for the future support of his children, and the mere fact that 10 years elapsed without making any effort to compel payment does not prevent the court, in its discretion, from ordering execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 311.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 518*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK—VALIDITY.

A motion to set aside an order directing a divorced husband to pay monthly a specified sum for the support of his children is a collateral attack on the order, and the only issue is whether the court in making it exceeded its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 961, 962; Dec. Dig. § 518.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 254*)—PROPERTY RIGHTS OF PARTIES—ORDERS—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

Where the superior court has made a decree of divorce, which has by lapse of time become final, and has not in the decree itself reserved jurisdiction to make a supplementary decree, its only power to make a further order affecting the property rights of the parties is that granted by Civ. Code, §§ 138, 139, relating to orders respecting the support of a divorced wife and her children.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 254.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 309*).

Where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, and the decree, as expressly authorized by Civ. Code, § 139, requires him to provide for the maintenance of the children or the support of the wife, the court may, at any time, modify the order making such provision, but when the decree is silent on the subject, the court cannot, under the section, thereafter enter any order relating thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 803; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

5. DIVORCE (§ 308*).

Civ. Code, § 138, authorizing the court, in an action for divorce, before and after judgment, to give directions for the custody, care, and education of the children, and at any time vacate or modify the same, authorizes such action by the court after judgment, whether or not the decree referred to the subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

6. DIVORCE (§ 308*).

The power to give direction for the custody, care, and education of the children, vested in the court by Civ. Code, § 138, providing that the court in an action for divorce may, before or after judgment, give such directions for the custody, care, and education of the children as may seem proper, involves the right not merely to declare who shall have the custody and what shall be the nature of the care and education of the children, but also, by necessary implication, to require the payment by one of the parties of such sums as may be necessary to carry out the objects contemplated by the statute, and an order for the payment of money for any purpose embraced within the phrase, "custody, care, and education of the children," may be made after a judgment of divorce, whether or not the decree provided therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

7. DIVORCE (§ 308*)—"CARE"—MAINTENANCE.

The word "care" in Civ. Code, § 138, authorizing the court in an action for divorce, before or after judgment, to give such directions for the custody, care, and education of the children as may be proper, etc., is, if not synonymous with "maintenance," a broader term, and, when combined with "custody" and "education," it includes every element of provision for the physical, moral, and mental well-being of the children, and an order for the benefit of the children is within the jurisdiction of the court, whether it uses the term "maintenance and support" or the broader expression "custody, care and education."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 971-973; vol. 8, p. 7596.]

8. DIVORCE (§ 308*).

Civ. Code, § 138, authorizing the court in an action for divorce to give, before or after judgment, such directions for the custody, care, and education of the children as may seem proper, is enacted for the protection of the children, and when the court orders that money be paid by the father for the custody, care, or education of his children, it gives directions for their custody, care, or education, and the court may order money to be thus paid without giving specific directions regarding the manner of such custody, care, or education.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 801; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

9. DIVORCE (§ 308*).

An order entered subsequent to the granting of a divorce awarding the wife the custody of the children and a portion of the community property in lieu of any further provision for her personal support, which requires the husband to make payment for the future "support, education and maintenance" of the children, is within Civ. Code, § 138, authorizing the court, in an action for divorce, to give, before or after judgment, such directions for the custody, care and education of the children as may seem proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 801; Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; E. E. Gaddis, Judge.

Action for divorce by Lena J. Harlan against W. C. Harlan. From an order denying a motion to set aside an order directing the issuance of an execution for the sums due on an order requiring defendant to pay to plaintiff, for the support of their children, a monthly sum and to set aside the order for such support, he appeals. Affirmed.

N. W. Hawkins and Charles W. Thomas, for appellant. Hurst & Hurst (White & Miller, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. In May, 1891, the superior court of Yolo county entered a decree granting to Lena J. Harlan a divorce from W. C. Harlan. The decree awarded to the wife, plaintiff in the action, the custody of the three minor children of the parties, and awarded to her a portion of the community property. It was further decreed that "the property so awarded to plaintiff shall be in lieu of any further provision or alimony for her personal maintenance or support."

In April, 1895, Lena J. Harlan filed in the same action a petition for an order requiring the defendant to pay her the amount theretofore expended by her for the support, maintenance, and education of the children, "and a further periodical amount hereafter for the support and education of his said children." The defendant answered this petition, and, after a hearing, the court, in August, 1895, made an order that the plaintiff retain the custody of the children, and that defendant pay to plaintiff "for their support, education and maintenance" the sum of $16 per month for each child, or $48 for the three, payments to commence on September 1, 1895. On September 11, 1895, the court made a modifying order directing the defendant to pay the plaintiff $32 per month, instead of $48.

Ten years later, in September, 1905, the plaintiff applied for an order directing that execution issue for an amount claimed to be due and unpaid under the order of September, 1895, and, upon an ex parte showing, the court ordered that execution issue against the defendant for $4,096.55. Thereupon the defendant moved to set aside the order of September 11, 1895, and the order directing execution to issue thereon. The court, reducing the amount for which execution was to issue to $4,078.30, denied the defendant's motion, and ordered execution to issue for the last-named sum. From this order the defendant has appealed.

If the order of September, 1895, requiring the defendant to pay $32 monthly to the plaintiff, was valid, there can be no question that the court had power at any time after the entry of the order to direct execution to issue for the amount unpaid. Code Civ. Proc. § 685; Harrier v. Bassford, 145 Cal. 529, 78 Pac. 1038; Doehla v. Phillips, 151 Cal. 488, 91 Pac. 330. And the mere fact that plaintiff had allowed 10 years to elapse without making any effort to compel payment affords no ground for the contention that the court abused its discretion in ordering execution to issue. Doehla v. Phillips, supra.

The appellant must, therefore, succeed, if at all, by showing the invalidity of the order of 1895, which the plaintiff was seeking to enforce by means of an execution. In this proceeding, which is clearly a collateral attack upon that order, the appellant is limited to the single contention that the court, in making the order assailed, exceeded its jurisdiction, and that, in consequence, the order itself is void. In passing upon this contention, the question for decision is whether a court which had, in 1891, made a decree of divorce in favor of a wife, awarding to her the custody of the minor children, but making no provision for their support by the husband, retained power, after the time for appeal from the decree had passed, to make an order requiring the divorced husband to pay for the future "support, education and maintenance" of said children.

The answer to this question must be sought in sections 138 and 139 of the Civil Code. Section 138, at the time the judgment of divorce in this case was made and entered, read as follows: "In an action for divorce the court may, before or after judgment, give such direction for the custody, care and education of the children of the marriage as may seem necessary or proper, and may at any time vacate or modify the same." The provision of section 139 is that, "where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him to provide for the maintenance of the children of the marriage, and to make suitable allowance to the wife for her support, during her life, or for a shorter period, as the court may deem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively, and the court may, from time to time, modify its orders in these respects." The proper construction of these sections has been the subject of consideration by this court in several cases.

Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 Pac. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70, was an action for divorce commenced by the wife. A decree was rendered, granting her a divorce, and awarding her certain community property. There was no provision for alimony. After the judgment had become final, the court, upon the petition of the plaintiff that the defendant be required to pay to her a certain monthly sum "to support herself, and support and educate her said minor children," made an order that defendant pay to plaintiff the sum of $100 upon the 20th day of each month until the further order of the court. Upon appeal from this order it was held that the lower court was without jurisdiction to make the order appealed from. The court quotes the provisions of section 139 to the effect that the court may, under certain circumstances, compel the husband to provide for the maintenance of the children and to make a suitable allowance for the support of the wife, and that "the court may from time to time modify its orders in these respects." "But," it is said, "the latter section clearly contemplates that the right to alimony, as well as other financial and property rights, shall have been presented and litigated in the action for divorce and established by the judgment; and the provision is that where the right to alimony has been thus established, the amount may be changed by a modification of the order. But in the case at bar there is nothing to 'modify.' After the judgment granting the divorce the plaintiff was no longer the wife of the defendant, and he owed her no longer any marital duty. From that time she could enforce against him no obligation not imposed by the court at the time of the judgment." The case had to do with the construction of section 139 alone, and the court was careful to guard against the implication that it was intended to make any declaration regarding the extent of the power conferred by section 138. In this connection the opinion says: "It is not necessary here to determine what order the court might make 'after judgment,' under section 138 of the Civil Code, with respect to the 'custody, care, and education of the children of the marriage.' The order under review is for alimony for the wife, and for her support; and its character is not changed by the mention of the children."

McKay v. Superior Court, 120 Cal. 143, 52 Pac. 147, 40 L. R. A. 585, was an original application to this court for a writ of review.

In 1884, Emma J. McKay, then the wife of the petitioner, had obtained a decree of divorce from her husband. The decree awarded her the care, custody, and control of the minor children of the marriage, but contained no provision for alimony for their maintenance and support. In May, 1898, Emma J. McKay, who had since remarried, filed, in the action in which the decree of divorce had been granted, a petition praying an order to compel the defendant in that action to pay $50 a month for the past support of each of the children and $50 a month for the future support of each of them until the further order of the court. The order was made, and the defendant appealed therefrom, giving a bond to stay execution. Thereupon the wife obtained from the superior court an order directing the defendant to pay the sum of $250 as attorney's fees to enable the minors to properly present their response to the appeal. The defendant applied to this court for a writ of review to annul the order last made. In passing upon his application this court deemed it necessary to consider the validity of the order requiring the payment of money for the support of the minor children, and determined that that order was not beyond the jurisdiction of the superior court. This conclusion was based upon the provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code, which was held to expressly vest in the superior court the power to make, before or after judgment, such order as might seem proper for the maintenance of minor children. Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456, and other cases are cited in support of this view. The court points out the distinction between the case before it and Howell v. Howell, supra, in which case, as was said, "section 138 of the Civil Code and the rights of minor children to maintenance and support under it were not before the court."

The order considered in McKay v. Superior Court was again the subject of consideration in McKay v. McKay, 125 Cal. 65, 57 Pac. 677. That was a direct appeal by the defendant from the order requiring him to pay to the plaintiff a certain sum for the past care, maintenance, education, and support of the children, and a further monthly sum for their future support, education, and maintenance. On such appeal the court was not limited to an examination of the power or jurisdiction of the lower court, but could and did determine whether that power had been rightly or erroneously exercised. It was held that the lower court erred in compelling the defendant to reimburse the plaintiff for expenses incurred in the maintenance, support, and education of the children prior to the time of her application, and the order was reversed with directions to the superior court to make such order as would be consistent with this view. In the opinion reference is made to Howell v. Howell and McKay v. Superior Court, and it is pointed out that the Howell Case decides no more than that where no provision is made in the decree for the maintenance of the wife or the children the court has no authority under section 139 to subsequently make an order for such provision. Reference is again made to the Erkenbrach Case, which held that as the section of the revised statutes of New York, similar in its terms to section 138 of the Civil Code, authorized the court to make an order after judgment for the care, custody, and education of the children of the marriage, "it must be assumed that provision for the expenses reasonably to be incurred for the accomplishment of these objects was within the intention of the Legislature in framing the section."

Shattuck v. Shattuck, 135 Cal. 192, 67 Pac. 45, was an appeal by the defendant from an order made after judgment of divorce against him had become final, requiring him to contribute the sum of $20 per month to the support of the minor child of himself and plaintiff. The decree of divorce had awarded the custody of the child to plaintiff (wife), but contained no provision in reference to the maintenance or support of the child. The opinion is very brief and is based entirely upon the decision in McKay v. McKay, supra. Of that case it is said that "it was there held that if the decree of divorce makes no provision for the maintenance of the children of the marriage, the court is without jurisdiction subsequently to make any order compelling either party to pay to the other for such maintenance; that the provision in section 138 of the Civil Code authorizing the court to vary or modify its decree 'after judgment' is limited to the directions therein for the 'custody, care and education' of the children, and that its power to provide for their 'maintenance' must be exercised at the time the decree of divorce is granted; that if it is not exercised at that time, and the decree is silent upon the subject, it can have no jurisdiction afterwards to make such provision." And upon the authority of McKay v. McKay, so construed, it was held that the superior court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment appealed from, and such judgment was reversed.

An endeavor to show a complete harmony and consistency in these various decisions would be a task of no little difficulty. This much, however, may be said to be the clear and unequivocal result of sections 138 and 139, together with the opinions of this court dealing with those sections. When the superior court has made a decree of divorce, which has, by lapse of time, become final, and has not, in the decree itself reserved jurisdiction to make a supplemental decree, its only power to make further orders affecting the property rights of the parties is that declared in sections 138 and 139 of the Civ-

11 Code. Where the divorce is granted for an offense of the husband and the decree requires him to provide for the maintenance of the children or the support of the wife, the court may at any time, under section 139, modify the order making provision for such maintenance or support. This section (139) does not, however, authorize the making of any order after final judgment where the decree itself contains nothing on the subject of maintenance of children or support of wife. Section 138, permitting the court to give directions for the custody, care, and education of the children, is not so limited. It authorizes action by the court before or after judgment, and where an order is made after judgment, the right to make it exists whether or not the subject of the additional order was touched upon in the decree. Section 138 does not assume to deal with allowances for the support of the wife, and it is clear, therefore, that such allowance cannot be made by order subsequent to the decree of divorce where the decree itself contains no provision regarding the wife's support. The power to give directions for the custody, care, and education of the children of the marriage, vested in the court by section 138, involves the right, not merely to declare who shall have the custody, and what shall be the nature of the care and education of the children, but also, by necessary implication, to require the payment, by one of the parties, of such sums as may be necessary in properly carrying out the objects contemplated by the statute.

There is nothing in any of the cases cited which conflicts with what we have so far said. And it would seem to follow that an order for the payment of money to be applied to any purpose which may fairly be said to be embraced within the phrase "custody, care and education of the children" may be made after a judgment of divorce, whether or not the decree has provided for these objects. But the Shattuck Case holds that an order for the "maintenance" of the children, subsequent to a decree which makes no provision for their maintenance, is not within the power of the court. If this conclusion be sound, it must be because "maintenance" is not included within "care and education." We are unable to see any force in this position. The word "care," as used in the statute, is, if not synonymous with maintenance, a broader term. Kelly v. Jeffers, 3 Del. 286, 50 Atl. 215; Christy v. Pulliam, 17 Ill. 59. Combined with "custody" and "education," it includes every element of provision for the physical, moral, and mental well-being of the child. That the duty of "caring" for a child can be properly discharged without furnishing to it adequate shelter, clothing, and food would hardly be contended. How, then, can it be said that the court, under its power to give directions for the care, custody, and education of the children, has not the power to require money to be paid for their maintenance? If the order in the Shattuck Case had directed the husband to pay $20 per month for the "care and education" of the minor child there would, in view of the rulings in the McKay Cases, have been no ground for contending that the court had exceeded its jurisdiction. In holding the contrary merely because, in seeking to accomplish substantially the same result, the court used the word "support" or "maintenance," we think too much stress was laid on a mere verbal distinction. Furthermore, we can find in McKay v. McKay, which is the sole authority relied on in the Shattuck Case, no warrant for the conclusion that an order for "support" or "maintenance" of minor children may not be made notwithstanding the fact that a preceding decree of divorce is silent on the subject of such support. All that was held in McKay v. McKay was that the court should not, by an order made in such a case, compel the husband to reimburse the wife or a third party for past expenditures incurred for the benefit of the children. The decision, read in connection with McKay v. Superior Court, fully supports the right of the court to make an order for future provision. The order there reviewed required payments for the "support, education and maintenance" of the children. It is not suggested in the opinion in 120 Cal. (52 Pac., 40 L. R. A.) or in that in 125 Cal. (57 Pac.) that the jurisdiction of the court was to be upheld because the order happened to contain the word "education," one of the terms employed in section 138. The reasoning of the decision is that all of the purposes declared in the order were within the scope of this section.

The order here in question directs payments for "support, education and maintenance" of the children of the marriage. The language is precisely the same as that used in McKay v. McKay, and, if there be any valid ground of distinction between that case and Shattuck v. Shattuck, the jurisdiction of the trial court in this case may well be sustained on the authority of the McKay Case. We believe, however, that there is no such ground, and that an order for the benefit of the children is equally within the jurisdiction of the court under section 138, whether it uses the terms "maintenance and support" or the broader and more inclusive expression "custody, care and education."

We have already pointed out that the power to give "directions" for the custody, care, and education of children carries with it the power to require payments of money for these purposes. It is contended that, if this be so, the court can order money to be paid only where it has given some separate specific direction regarding the manner of such custody, care, or education, and the payment is necessary to carry out such direction. But we see no reason for giving this, or any, narrow interpretation to section 138. It is a statute enacted for the protection of the children. Whatever may be the effect of a decree of divorce as between husband and wife, it does not destroy the obligation of either parent toward the children. A law intended to make it possible to enforce this obligation should be liberally construed. When the court orders that money be paid by the father for the custody, care, or education of his children, it is, according to the ordinary sense of the words, and certainly within the meaning of the statute, giving "directions" for their custody, care, or education. An order that money be paid for certain purposes implies a direction to the recipient that it be used for those purposes.

For these reasons, it must be held that the order of 1895, requiring the defendant to make payments for the future "support, education and maintenance" of his children, was within the jurisdiction of the court. It may be added that, with respect to decrees of divorce granted after May 2, 1905, the Legislature has, by an amendment to section 138, taking effect on that date, expressly included "maintenance and support" of children among the enumeration of the objects to be provided for by order made at, before, or after the hearing of an action for divorce. It is probable that the decision in Shattuck v. Shattuck was thought to make this change necessary in order to give effect to the real intention of the Legislature. We are satisfied, however, that the same intention had been declared by the prior enactment.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 23

PATTEN & DAVIES LUMBER CO. v. GIBSON et al. (Civ. 508.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 14, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 136*)—NOTICE—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

If the description in a mechanic's lien notice identifies the property by reference to facts, and clearly points to a piece of property and there is no other that will answer the description, it is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 214; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 290*)—NOTICE—DESCRIPTION—IDENTITY—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether the description of property in a mechanic's lien notice is sufficient to enable a party to identify the property is a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 290*)—FORECLOSURE—NOTICE—DESCRIPTION—ISSUES.

Where the description in a mechanic's lien notice was alleged to be sufficient for identification in a suit to foreclose which was not denied and there was no finding that the description was insufficient for identification, there was no issue on such question, and it was error to find as a matter of law that the notice was insufficient because of a misstatement of the block of the tract in which the property lay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the Patten & Davies Lumber Company against Dora May Gibson and others to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. George L. Keefer and Walter L. Bowers, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien by a materialman. The contract was admitted to be void for failure to record.

The court finds that the material was furnished and used for the construction of the building, and the only reason the judgment was given for respondents was on account of an error of description in the notice of lien. It appears from the complaint filed, and is not denied by the answer, that the defendant Dora May Gibson was the owner of lot 4, in block C, of the Pellissier tract, in the city of Los Angeles; that on the 29th day of September, 1905, she, as such owner, entered into a contract for the erection and construction of a dwelling house upon the property above described for an agreed price of $2,000; that this contract was subscribed by the parties thereto and filed for record, but no plans and specifications referred to in said contract as being attached thereto were in fact attached to said contract or filed; that the contractor entered upon the performance of his contract and completed the same according to the terms thereof; that during the progress of the work the contractor purchased of plaintiff material of the value of $477.63, which was in fact used in the construction of said house, and the same has not been paid for; that within due time plaintiff filed its notice of lien, which, among other things, contained "a description of the property sought to be charged with its lien sufficient for identification, to wit, the real property and building hereinbefore described; that said property was erroneously described in said claim of lien as lot 4, blk. 6, of the Pellissier tract, but that there is no block 6 in said Pellissier tract, and said defendant Dora May Gibson does not own any other property in said Pellissier tract," except lot 4 in block C. The court finds that there are buildings other than the building belonging to said Dora May Gibson located on block C of the Pellissier tract, and, further, that the sum of $500 was in the hands of defendant Gibson, due the contractor, at the time of the filing of the complaint in this proceeding, but which subsequent thereto she paid to the contractor.

The only question involved upon the appeal, therefore, is as to the sufficiency of the identification of the property contained in the notice of lien. "If the description (in the notice of lien) identifies the property by reference to the facts, that is, if it points clearly to a piece of property and there is no other one that will answer the description, it is sufficient." Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, 150 Cal. 758, 89 Pac. 1077, 1081. Mr. Phillips, in his work on Liens, lays down a test which is approved by our Supreme Court in Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, supra, namely: "If there appear enough in the description to enable a party familiar with the locality to identify the premises intended to be described with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of others, it will be sufficient." In commenting upon this, rule, our Supreme Court in the case last cited says: "Among the identifying facts which are held competent to be considered for determining its sufficiency are references to adjoining properties, a description of the building which has been constructed, the fact that the land upon which it is erected is the only property of the owner in that locality." The question of ability to identify, then, by reason of the description given, is a question of fact. It will be observed that the plaintiff avers as a fact that the description in the notice of lien was sufficient for identification, and it is not denied by the answer. Had an issue been raised with reference to this fact, it would have been competent for plaintiff to introduce evidence in support thereof. There is no finding that the description was insufficient in fact for identification, and the failure to raise an issue obviated the necessity therefor. The only finding of the court is as to the incorrectness of the description, but nothing therein to indicate that such incorrect description failed to properly identify the property. The finding that there is no block 6 in said tract eliminates the block description therefrom, and the description in the notice of lien stands as "lot 4 of the Pellissier tract." There is nothing in the record from which it can be inferred that any other lot in the tract has a similar numerical designation; in fact, nothing to indicate that the Pellissier tract contains any other block than C. The sufficiency of the description for identification being averred and not denied, we think the court erred in holding that as a matter of law the misstatement of the block was insufficient for the purposes of identification.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to enter a judgment and appropriate decree of foreclosure in plaintiff's favor and against defendant Gibson for the amount found due and unpaid on account of the material so furnished by plaintiff and used in the construction of said building.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 38

DUFFY LUMBER CO. v. STANTON et al.
(Civ. 480.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 14, 1908.)

MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 111*)—RIGHT TO LIEN —ABANDONMENT BY CONTRACTOR.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, providing that, where a contractor abandons the contract, the portion of the contract price applicable to liens shall be fixed by deducting from the value of the work and materials then done and furnished, the payments then made upon the contract, where, at the time the contractor abandoned the contract, the value of the work already done and materials furnished, including that on the ground, was $46 in excess of the amount paid the contractor under the contract, a materialman could only have a lien for that sum, and was not entitled to judgment for 25 per cent. of the estimated value of labor done and materials furnished up to the time of abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 144, 145; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by the Duffy Lumber Company against Crissie M. Stanton and others. From a judgment in part for plaintiff, it appealed. Affirmed.

Schweitzer & Hutton, for appellant. Bernard Potter, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll. The court found that defendant entered into a valid contract in writing with one Cropper, whereby the latter for a specified sum agreed to furnish the labor and materials necessary to build and complete for defendant, as owner, a certain house upon the lot designated in said contract, which contract was duly filed in the office of the recorder of the county wherein said lot was situated; that after receiving from defendant the sum of $1,000, paid pursuant to the terms of the contract, the contractor ceased work upon the building and abandoned his contract; that at the time of abandonment the value of the work already performed upon and materials furnished for said building by the contractor, pursuant to the terms of the contract, including materials upon the ground, estimated by the standard of the whole contract price, was the sum of $46 in excess of that already paid to the contractor in accordance with the terms of the contract. Thereupon the court rendered judgment, decreeing a lien upon the premises for the sum of $46 in favor of plaintiff, who had furnished to the contractor materials of the value of $732.79 for the construction of the building.

Appellant's contention that it is entitled to judgment for 25 per cent. of the estimated value of labor expended upon and materials furnished in the construction of the building up to the time of abandonment is fully answered by the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires et al. (Cal.) 97 Pac. 152, where it is held that in such cases section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure furnishes the rule for determining the extent to which the property shall be liable for liens of persons supplying materials. Measured by this rule, the judgment appealed from is correct.

It is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 9

TILDEN v. GOLDY MACH. CO. (Civ. 505.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Sept. 10, 1908.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 395*)—NONNEGOTIABLE NOTE—BLANK INDORSEMENT—DEMAND—NOTICE.

One who writes his name on the back of a nonnegotiable note to give credit thereto is a guarantor, and is prima facie bound to pay the note on the principal's default, without demand or notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1008; Dec. Dig. § 395.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 414*)—OFFICERS—POWERS—EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Where a corporation's charter and by-laws authorized the appointment of an executive committee by the board of directors with all the powers of the board which might be lawfully delegated in the management of the company's business, and to affix the company's seal to all papers requiring it, a resolution designating certain persons as the executive committee, with authority to exercise all the powers of the board in the current business of the company while the board was not in session, conferred authority on the committee to indorse a note for a loan for the corporation's current business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1640-1646; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 425*)—AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS—DENIAL—ESTOPPEL.

Where a corporation's executive committee indorsed a note for a loan, and the corporation received the money and knowingly used it in its business, it was estopped to thereafter question the committee's authority to make such indorsement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1705; Dec. Dig. § 425.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by B. B. Tilden against the Goldy Machine Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

William A. Bowden, Beasley & Fry, and Elmo Lasleretto, for appellant. Jordan & Rowe, Jordan, Brann & Rowe, and E. M. Rea, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment, from which and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Defendant was sued as guarantor of the following nonnegotiable promissory note: "15,000.00. San Francisco, Cal. March 24, 1905. On demand, for value received, I promise to pay B. B. Tilden, the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000.00) with interest at the rate of three per cent (3%) per annum. William T. Garrett. Witness: H. H. Benedict." Endorsed: "The Goldy Machine Company, per S. N. Goldy, H. F. Emme, Executive Committee." The court found that the defendant is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of New Jersey, doing business at Sunnyvale, Santa Clara county, Cal.; that said Garrett executed and delivered to plaintiff said note, and "that at the time and place of its execution, and as a part of the same transaction, and prior to the delivery thereof," defendant, "by its writing on the back of said note, guaranteed the payment of the same and undertook and promised to pay to said plaintiff the principal sum and interest thereon therein mentioned," and "that said defendant received from plaintiff as a consideration for said indorsement of said note the sum of $10,000, gold coin of the United States, then and there loaned by said plaintiff to said defendant"; that demand for payment had been made upon said Garrett, and refused, and the same is now due and owing from defendant to plaintiff.

The principal point made by defendant is that the evidence fails to show that defendant executed the indorsement on the note, and hence the findings are not supported. A preliminary point is made, to wit, that, as the note is not negotiable, "the mere indorsement of the name of the company on the back thereof was not in any sense a guaranty that the company would pay the same." The Supreme Court has decided otherwise. First National Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 29 Pac. 415, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94, where it was said: "One who writes his name upon the back of a nonnegotiable promissory note to give it credit is a guarantor, and is liable prima facie for the payment of the note upon default of the principal, without any previous demand or notice." Briefly stated, the note in question was executed and delivered under the following circumstances: Defendant had agreed to purchase certain land at Sunnyvale, Santa Clara county, on which to erect a manufacturing plant, the title to the land depending upon the completion of certain buildings and the operation of an engine thereon. S. N. Goldy was a director, vice president, and general manager of the company. He and H. F. Emme had been appointed the executive committee of the company. C. H. Geldert was its secretary and also a director. He was also the attorney in fact of B. B. Tilden, payee of the note. W. T. Garrett, its maker, was the agent of the company for the sale of its stock, and actively engaged in promoting the enterprise chiefly by the sale of stock. The company was pressed for money to pay its employes and to meet its engagements, and its stock did not find ready sale. Under these circumstances Goldy persuaded Geldert to make a loan of $10,000 to the company for Tilden, plaintiff here. It was agreed that Garrett should make a note for $15,000, and that the company would indorse it; the avowed object being to avoid a note by the company which might affect its credit when appearing on the books, and injuriously affect the sale of stock. Garrett accordingly executed the note in this non-negotiable form and the executive committee of the company indorsed it as shown. It was delivered to Geldert as Tilden's attorney in fact, who hypothecated securities belonging to Tilden with the Garden City Bank & Trust Company of San Jose, obtained $10,000 thereon, and paid this money directly to the Goldy Machine Company which used it in its business. At the time of the execution of the note Garrett entered into an agreement with the company by which he subscribed for $15,000 of its stock, the proceeds of the sale of which were to go, first, to pay the $10,000 furnished the company and take up the Tilden note, and $5,000 was to go to Garrett as commissions for the sale of the stock—a hard bargain for the company, but advisedly entered into under stress of circumstances. Some importance is attached to this latter agreement by defendant, and it is claimed that it was part of the transaction for the loan, but the evidence was that neither Tilden nor his attorney in fact was a party to it and never assented to it, but refused to have anything to do with it. The trial court doubtless so considered the fact to be, and so also must we. Demand of payment of the note was made upon Garrett and refused, and hence this suit.

By subdivision 1, § 22, of the company's by-laws, certain powers were conferred upon the board of directors: "(1) To delegate any of the powers of the board in the course of the current business of the company to any standing or special committee, or to any officer or agent, and to appoint any persons to be the agents of the company, with such powers (including the power to subdelegate) and upon such terms as they think fit." It thus appears that the directors were authorized to delegate "any of the powers of the board in the course of the current business of the company." Article 5 of the charter of the company is as follows: "The board of directors are expressly authorized by a resolution passed by a majority vote of the whole board, under suitable provision of the by-laws, to designate two or more of their number to constitute an executive committee, which committee shall for the time being, as provided in said resolution, or in the by-laws, have and exercise all the powers of the board of directors which may be lawfully delegated in the management of the business and affairs of the company, and shall have power to authorize the sale of the company to be affixed to all papers which may require it." Pursuant to the foregoing provisions of the charter and by-laws, the board of directors on January 16, 1905, duly passed the following resolution: "Resolved: That Messrs. S. N. Goldy and H. F. Emme be and hereby are designated as members of the executive committee with authority to exercise all the powers of the board in the current business of the company while the board is not in session." Acting under its appointment, the executive committee on March 24, 1905, passed the following resolution, as appears from its minutes: "Whereas, in order for the said William T. Garrett to secure the said sum of ten thousand dollars for investment in this company it is necessary for him to draw a note for fifteen thousand dollars in favor of B. B. Tilden, the same to be endorsed by the Goldy Machine Company: Therefore, be it resolved; that considering the necessity of securing this investment the Executive Committee endorses said note in the name of the Company. Upon motion the meeting adjourned. [Signed] S. N. Goldy, H. F. Emme, Executive Committee." The execution of the guaranty indorsement by the executive committee is fully proved, and also that the company received the money paid by Tilden. We do not entertain any doubt but that the authority to indorse the note was conferred upon the executive committee. It seems to us that it was entered into in the course of the current business and in reality it was the obligation of the company as fully appears from the evidence, and not Garrett's, who was but an accommodation maker. Besides, if this be not so, still, under the circumstances attending the transaction, showing among other things that the company received the money and knowingly used it in its business, it is not in a position now to question the authority under which it obtained the money. It is estopped to set up such defense. 10 Cyc. 1067, 1068; Lake-street Electrical Railroad Company v. Carmichael, 184 Ill. 348, 56 N. E. 373; Main v. Casserly, 67 Cal. 127, 7 Pac. 426; Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 67, 34 Pac. 527.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

^a Cal. App. 20

VANCE v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO.
(Civ. 488.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 11, 1908. Rehearing Denied Oct.
10, 1908.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 327*)—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—DUTY TO LOOK AND LISTEN.

It is the duty of a driver in approaching a railroad crossing to look and listen before entering a place of danger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 1043-1056; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 327*)—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—DUTY TO LOOK.

It is only where, if a driver approaching a railroad crossing had looked, he could have seen the approaching train, that he can be held to have been negligent in omitting to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1044; Dec. Dig. § 327.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 350*)—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

A driver of a six-horse team who, in approaching a railroad track, where the view was obstructed, stopped and listened, was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law because he did not leave his team unattended and proceed to a point where a view of the track could be had.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1179; Dec. Dig. § 350.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 312*)—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—SIGNALS—"ROAD."

A road intended for use in connection with a limekiln, and used mostly by those having business there, is, nevertheless, a road within Civ. Code, § 486, requiring signals where a railroad crosses any street, road, or highway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 993, 994; Dec. Dig. § 312.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6250-6254.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

Action by A. Vance against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Camp and U. T. Clotfelter, for appellant. W. W. Kaye, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment based upon the verdict of a jury and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to recover damages occasioned by defendant's negligence in the operation of its trains.

The proposition is not, and cannot well be, questioned that there is evidence in the record warranting the implied finding of negligence upon the defendant's part. Appellant, however, contends that the record discloses such contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiff's servant in charge of the property injured as to preclude recovery.

Upon the trial there was evidence offered by plaintiff tending to show that the servant of plaintiff, standing upon the front end of a wagon, was driving a six-horse team by means of a check line. The road upon which he was traveling was intended for use in connection with a limekiln, and was mostly used by those having business at such kiln. It crossed the defendant's main and side tracks, intersecting the main road which paralleled such tracks. The driver was proceeding with his team from the kiln toward the railroad track, the view along which to the east was entirely obstructed between the kiln and side track. When the lead horses were about 20 feet from the nearest side track, upon which a box car was standing, which was one of the obstructions to the view eastwardly, one of the tugs became disarranged, and the driver left his place on the wagon and rearranged the tug. While on the ground he listened for the approach of a train, and heard none. He could not from this point see eastwardly up the track any distance on account of this box car. Hearing no approaching train, the driver resumed his place on the front end of the wagon and started to drive across the track. When he was at a point where he could obtain a view along the track to the east, the leaders were within three or four feet of the main track. At this point he saw the train, and was for the first time in a position where it was possible for him to see an approaching train from the east. The train was then only about 50 feet away, and was running at a high rate of speed. Here, for the first time, the men in charge of the train employed the whistle. Danger being imminent, the driver applied the brakes and jumped from the wagon, but the collision was inevitable.

It cannot be questioned that it was the duty of the driver in approaching the railroad track to look and listen before entering upon a place of danger. The duty of looking, however, is enjoined only when by its exercise he could have discovered the approach of the train. "It is only when, if he had made the observation, he could have seen the coming of the train, that he can be said to have been negligent in omitting to do so." Martin v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 128, 88 Pac. 701. That by reason of obstructions the approach of the train could not be discovered by sight until the lead horses were within three or four feet of the track is in evidence; that he listened carefully before starting to drive across the track, and that he continued so to do, is not disputed; that he made every effort to avoid the collision after discovery of the train is established. "Negligence is a question of fact for the jury, and the law has fixed no exact standard of care other than the general one that it must be such as a reasonably prudent man would exercise in the particular circumstances. Hence in ordinary cases it is peculiarly a question for the jury or court trying the cause to decide as a matter of fact whether or not the person was culpably negligent." Scott et al. v. San Bernardino Val. Tr. Co. (Cal.) 93 Pac. 677.

The jury by its verdict determined that the conduct of the driver was not culpably negligent, and we cannot, considering the circumstances under which he was placed, say that as a matter of law its determination was improper. To say that the driver did not act as a reasonably prudent man would act under like circumstances, and that as a matter of law he was culpably negligent, would be to say that one alone in charge of a team of this character, when approaching a railroad track where the view is obstructed, is negligent, notwithstanding he has stopped and listened, unless he leaves his team unattended upon the road and proceeds on foot to a point where a view of the track could be had. We do not believe that the law enjoins such duty upon one under those circumstances. The road upon which the team was traveling, although used mostly by those having business at the limekiln, is, nevertheless, one of the roads comprehended within the provisions of section 486 of the Civil Code (Orcutt v. Pacific Coast Ry. Co., 85 Cal. 291, 24 Pac. 661), and the precautions required upon the part of those in charge of trains in that section prescribed apply to the crossing of a road so used.

The charge of the court excepted to was not improper, wherein the duty of defendant with respect to public crossings was stated. The uncontradicted evidence appearing in the record was such as to render inapplicable charges offered by the defendant and refused which related to the duty of one approaching the track when the view is unobstructed.

We perceive no error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 52

JOHNSON et al. v. WITHERS et al. (Civ. 525.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. September 16, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 13, 1908.)

1. FRAUD (§ 11*)—REPRESENTATION OF FACT.

A representation by a vendor to a purchaser of the amount of mineral in place in the premises as disclosed by the report of an expert is a representation of fact, and is not an expression of opinion as to the character of the premises or as to the future profits that might be realized from a purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. FRAUD (§ 11*)—REPRESENTATION OF FACT.

An expert opinion cannot be misstated knowingly without incurring legal liability for the fraud, the same as for the willful misstatement of any other fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. FRAUD (§ 11*)—CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS—REPRESENTATION OF FACT—MISTAKE.

Where a representation is a representation of a fact for the purpose of declaring a fraud, it is also a representation of a fact when considered in connection with a mistake, justifying a rescission of a contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 31*)—CONTRACT—CANCELLATION—GROUNDS—MISTAKE.

A vendor of mining property represented to the purchaser that in the opinion of an expert there were 50,000 tons of mineral in place. The report of the expert showed on its face that the amount of mineral was but 5,000 tons. The vendor relied on the express misstatement of the results of expert's examination and of the contents of his report. The purchaser relied on the mistake and contracted to purchase the property. Held, that the mistake was a mutual mistake, and equity would relieve the purchaser from his contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 36; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by L. M. Johnson and another against W. S. Withers and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Conkling & Bretherton, for appellants. Cryer & Tuttle, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Action for return of a $1,000 cash deposit made on a contract to purchase an interest in mining property, and for the rescission of the contract. Judgment for plaintiffs. Appeals from judgment and from order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

The rescission of contract was made and the judgment of the court based upon the ground of a mutual mistake of facts relating to the subject-matter. The complaint states two causes of action: The first alleges the purchase by plaintiffs from defendant Withers of a two-thirds interest in a half section of land in Riverside county for $20,000; $1,000 cash, balance in two deferred payments, and the placing of the deed of the property and the cash payment or deposit in escrow with the defendant corporation to be held until the purchase price should be fully paid up. As an inducement to plaintiffs to purchase the property, defendant Withers represented it to be of peculiar value by reason of the presence of "magnesite"; that at a particular point on the property there was a large deposit of said mineral; that said deposit had been uncovered and disclosed by means of certain discovery shafts, and that defendant Withers had caused said property to be carefully examined and inspected by a competent engineer and mineralogist, and the quantity of magnesite so discovered and in place in said portion of the property amounted to 50,000 tons. That plaintiffs were ignorant of mines and minerals and the methods of measuring and estimating the quantity of mineral in place, and relied wholly and entirely upon the representations made by Withers and the estimates of the expert as represented to them by Withers, and were induced thereby to enter into the contract of purchase. Subsequent to the making of the contract and the deposit of the $1,000 in the bank, plaintiffs procured a copy of the report of the expert, from which they discovered that the expert had made a mathematical error in his computation, and that instead of there being 50,000 tons of magnesite in the portion of the property experted there were only 5,000 tons. Plaintiffs immediately served notice of rescission, released the deed in escrow, and demanded the return of the cash payment, which return was refused. The second cause of action is for money had and received.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The court finds the allegations of the complaint in the above respects to be true, and that the representation that in the opinion of the expert there were 50,000 tons of magnesite in place in the cone of a certain hill on said property was a material inducement to plaintiffs to enter into said contract, and that such representation was made by said defendant Withers, but that he made the same in good faith and in reliance upon the report which was actually made by Dr. Koebig, the expert.

There is no merit in appellants' contention that the complaint does not state a cause of action. No demurrer to the complaint was interposed, and, if it be conceded that the objections made to the statement of the first cause of action are good, the second cause of action stated is sufficient to support the judgment and decision of the court.

There is evidence to support the findings attacked. The representation of the amount of mineral in place, as disclosed by the expert's report, was a matter of fact. It was a statement of what had been discovered by the expert's examination. It is clearly distinguishable from the representations under consideration in the cases cited by appellants. It was not the opinion of the seller of a thing as to its value or quality (Taylor v. Ford, 131 Cal. 440, 445, 63 Pac. 770), or an expression of opinion by the vendor of lands as to the character of the lands or the future profits that might be realized from the investment (Lee v. McClelland, 120 Cal. 147, 52 Pac. 300; Rendell v. Scott, 70 Cal. 514, 11 Pac. 779; Nounnan v. Sutter Co., 81 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219).

The mistaken representation consisted in a misstatement of the real estimate of the expert. An expert opinion cannot be misstated knowingly without incurring legal liability for the fraud or deceit, the same as by the willful misstatement of any other fact. Conlan v. Roemer, 52 N. J. Law, 53, 18 Atl. 858; Kost v. Bender, 25 Mich. 515. If such opinion be a fact for the purpose of declaring a fraud, it must also be a fact when considered in connection with a mistake. The mistake here is not in relation to the elements upon which the expert opinion was based. When the report was found it showed upon its face that the amount of mineral disclosed by the examination of the premises was 5,000 and not 50,000 tons. The difference between the two amounts was not referable to any question of speculative opinion as to the value of the mines, and therefore the authorities cited upon this theory have no application here. Defendants' reliance upon the expert's misstatement of the result of the examination and of the contents, or the effect of the contents of the report, does not change the character of the transaction. This showing amounts to simply an explanation of how the mistake occurred, and relieves defendant from a charge of intentional misrepresentation or deceit.

The expert was mistaken, the defendant was mistaken, and the plaintiffs were mistaken. The matter about which they were mistaken was the quantity of mineral disclosed by the expert's report of his examination. Plaintiffs dealt with defendants upon the truth of this statement, and it was incorrect. It was the one estimate of quantity, the one concrete fact, upon which they relied in making the purchase. It was such a mutual mistake as courts of equity will relieve from. We see no error in the trial court's conclusions.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 13

GISSKE v. SANDERS. (Civ. 484.)
(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 10, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 9, 1908.)

1. ARREST (§ 71*) — SEARCH FOR CONCEALED WEAPONS.

Where a police officer went to a place where a crime had been committed and found plaintiff there on the street late at night, upon plaintiff's refusal to answer questions as to his name and business, the officer could search him for concealed weapons prior to taking him to the police station, whether plaintiff was then under arrest or not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arrest, Cent. Dig. § 174; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

2. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 7*)—CIVIL LIABILITY—ILLEGALITY OF ARREST.

It is a citizen's duty, when requested by a proper officer, to give information of a personal nature when the circumstances warrant the request, and where a police officer found plaintiff late at night, in a locality where a crime had been committed, and requested plaintiff's name and his business in the locality, which plaintiff refused to give, the officer was justified in taking him to the police station for examination without rendering himself liable for false imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Cent. Dig. §§ 30, 31; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 8*)—ILLEGALITY OF DETENTION AFTER ARREST.

A police officer having no authority over a prisoner after taking him to the police station, the regulations requiring the sergeant then to take charge of the prisoner and examine him, the arresting officer is not liable for false imprisonment for the detention of the prisoner after delivering him to the police station.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by W. P. Gisske against Erastus Sanders. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed. Reversed and remanded.

Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., and John W. Shenk, Deputy City Atty., for appellant. Wm. T. Blakely, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action for false imprisonment. Trial by the court without a jury. Findings and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial.

The primary question for determination upon this appeal is whether or not there is any evidence in the record to support the finding that plaintiff was in fact unlawfully restrained of his liberty by defendant. The uncontradicted evidence is that, shortly before September 24, 1906, both a burglary and a highway robbery had been committed in the vicinity of Figueroa street and Sunset boulevard in the city of Los Angeles; that on that date, about 11 o'clock p. m., defendant, a regular police officer, was notified that a suspicious character was in that vicinity, and was directed to repair to that point and investigate, which he did, and there found plaintiff, who was quietly walking along the street on his way home from a public entertainment. Defendant, who was in uniform and known by the plaintiff to be an officer, accosted plaintiff with an inquiry as to where he was going and where he lived, which questions plaintiff answered, and, in addition, questioned the right of the officer to make such inquiry. The officer then asked him: "Why are you hanging around here? What is your business anyway?" The plaintiff replied: "I don't know if you got a right to question me that way for walking on the street—for walking home." The officer replied: "If you don't want to answer I will take you down to the station." The plaintiff then said: "All right; just go down there; I like to find out down there if you got a right to talk to me this way." The officer again asked him: "Don't you want to answer me any more?" Plaintiff said: "No; let's go down to the station"; and thereupon plaintiff and defendant walked to the police station. On the way down defendant searched plaintiff to see if he had any concealed weapons on his person. The conversation heretofore given is that narrated by plaintiff. Defendant, however, testified, and it is not denied, that the officer asked plaintiff to give his name, which he refused to do, and plaintiff, when asked by the court to state why he did not tell the officer who he was, evaded the question; and, further, that defendant offered to walk with plaintiff to the place given as his residence, which offer he declined, saying that he could go home alone. Upon the arrival at the station defendant said to the sergeant in charge of the station: "Here is a man I took on Sunset boulevard. He refuses to answer me." The sergeant thereupon took plaintiff's name and searched his person; took from him his money and personal property, and confined him in jail with other prisoners until the following morning, when he was released. The sergeant refused plaintiff's request that his wife be notified, and the jailer refused a like request and threatened him if he did not keep quiet.

One of the regulations of the police department, adopted by authority of the city charter, and which was in evidence, provides:

"When a prisoner is brought to the station the officer in charge will inquire into the particulars of the case, and if, after consultation with the officer making the arrest, he is satisfied there is not sufficient cause for arrest, he may allow the prisoner to go, and shall report the same, with the facts in the case, to his captain."

"Sec. 4. When a prisoner is brought to the station and the officer in charge is satisfied there is sufficient cause to hold him, the desk sergeant shall make the proper entry on the blotter, search the prisoner, take charge of any money or valuables found on his person, together with any weapons or dangerous instruments, carefully marking such property with the prisoner's name and the date," etc.

While it is evident that the officer intended to arrest and deprive plaintiff of his liberty in the event that his answers proved unsatisfactory, still the action and requests of the plaintiff obviated the necessity of a formal arrest. He urged the officer to accompany him to the station, and the officer did nothing which the plaintiff did not desire, except the examination of his person to see if he carried concealed weapons. This, however, was a precaution which the officer might well take under the circumstances of the meeting and the conduct of the plaintiff, whether plaintiff was under arrest or not. In addition to this, were a formal arrest established, yet its unlawful character is not disclosed. If it be the law that a police officer acting upon reasonable grounds in making an arrest, even without a warrant, is liable should the arrest be subsequently shown to be improper, it were idle to maintain a police force in the large cities. The duty of every good citizen is, when called upon, to give all information in his power to the proper officers of the law as to persons connected with crime (Miller v. Fano, 134 Cal. 106, 66 Pac. 183); and this should be held to require that all proper information be given upon request of a personal nature, as affecting the one of whom inquiry is made, when the circumstances are such as to warrant an officer in making inquiry. A police officer has a right to make inquiry in a proper manner of any one upon the public streets at a late hour as to his identity and the occasion of his presence, if the surroundings are such as to indicate to a reasonable man that the public safety demands such identification. The fact that crimes had recently been committed in that neighborhood, that plaintiff at a late hour was found in the locality, that he refused to answer proper questions establishing his identity, were circumstances which should lead a reasonable officer to require his presence at the station, where the sergeant in charge might make more minute and careful inquiry. The plaintiff having volunteered to accompany the officer to the station, the subsequent acts of that officer's superior in and about the incarceration of plaintiff were matters over which the defendant had no control. Under the regulations, when an officer presents a prisoner at the station his authority and control of such prisoner there ends. The officer can neither incarcerate him nor discharge him, and the mere fact of his bringing a person to the station is not of itself sufficient excuse for incarceration. The regulation requires the sergeant then to assume the responsibility and to make an independent investigation, and to determine whether or not the person so presented should be confined or released. The rule as to the responsibility of the arresting officer is otherwise where he has authority to and does direct the confinement of the prisoner, or where confinement is the direct result of the arrest. We are of opinion, therefore, that the uncontradicted evidence in this case shows that defendant did not unlawfully deprive plaintiff of his liberty, but, on the contrary, all that he did was in the lawful exercise of the authority conferred upon him as such officer; and that there is no evidence in the record to support the finding referred to. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 18

JENSEN v. DORR et al. (Civ. 493.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 10, 1908.)

1. VENUE (§ 67*) — CHANGE — AFFIDAVIT FOR CHANGE—SUFFICIENCY.

A statement in the affidavit by defendant on a motion for a change of venue to the county of his residence that on a designated date, "being the day of the beginning of these proceedings, the affiant had his place of residence in" such county, is a sufficient averment of the fact that at the time of the commencement of the action he resided in such county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 115; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

2. VENUE (§ 66*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL —AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS.

An affidavit of merits on a motion for a change of venue which avers that affiant has "stated all the facts to his counsel of record herein" is insufficient for failing to aver that the facts of the case were stated to counsel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 113; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

3. VENUE (§ 66*)—CHANGE OF PLACE OF TRIAL —AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS.

An affidavit of merits on a motion for a change of venue which avers that affiant has stated all the facts to his "counsel of record herein, and is advised and believes" that he has a valid defense, is insufficient for failing to aver that he is advised by such counsel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 113; Dec. Dig. § 66.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Lawrence Jensen against Fred Dorr and others. From an order granting the demand of defendant Fred Dorr for a change of place of trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Patterson Sprigg, for appellant. Lynn Helm and Wilbur Bassett, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order granting defendants' demand for a change of place of trial.

At the time of the commencement of the action in the superior court of San Diego county, the respondent Fred Dorr was a resident of Los Angeles county. With his demurrer to the complaint he filed what purported to be an affidavit of merits, together with a demand in writing that a trial be had in the county wherein he resided. Whereupon the court made an order transferring the case for trial to Los Angeles county. Plaintiff appeals from this order, the ground therefor being the insufficiency of the affidavit made by respondent Dorr.

The statement in the affidavit that on "the 2d day of December, 1907, being the day of the beginning of these proceedings, the affiant had his place of residence in Los Angeles county," is a sufficient averment of the fact that at the time of the commencement of the action he resided in Los Angeles county.

The averment constituting the affidavit of merits is as follows: "That affiant has filed his demurrer herein, and has fairly and fully stated all the facts to his counsel of record herein, and is advised and believes that he has a good and valid defense to said action and to all of it on the merits." It does not appear from the affidavit that the "facts of the case" were fully and fairly stated, or stated at all, to affiant's counsel. So far as disclosed by the affidavit, the facts stated to counsel might have been wholly foreign to the case, or confined to the facts constituting affiant's defense. People v. Larue, 66 Cal. 235, 5 Pac. 157; Palmer v. Barclay, 92 Cal. 201, 28 Pac. 226; Nickerson v. California Raisin Co., 61 Cal. 268. Assuming, however, that affiant did fully and fairly state all the facts of the case to his counsel, the affidavit is, nevertheless, defective in not stating, in substance at least, that he is advised by such counsel that he has a good and substantial defense upon the merits. State Bank v. Gill, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 406; Ency. of Plead. & Prac. vol. 1, p. 360. As shown by the affidavit, the advice referred to might have been obtained from a nonprofessional source. We cannot assume that, by reason of his stating the facts to his counsel, such counsel advised him that he had a meritorious defense. Non constat counsel, for all that appears in the averment, may have advised him there was no merit in his case, and yet, by reason of other advice, the averment be strictly true.

The order appealed from is reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 56

PEOPLE v. LAPIQUE. (Civ. 576.)†

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 16, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*) — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—MANDAMUS—GROUNDS.

The trial court alone having jurisdiction respecting the matters which should be settled in a bill of exceptions, the appellate court will not by writ of mandate direct the settlement of any particular bill; the trial court not having refused to settle any bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2843; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

Petition by John Lapique for writ of mandate. Writ denied.

J. Lapique, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of mandate. It affirmatively appears from the petition presented herein that a bill of exceptions was presented for allowance by the defendant, that within the time allowed by law and the order of the court the district attorney presented amendments thereto, that the time within which the trial judge may settle and allow a bill of exceptions has not elapsed, and, in fact, no notice for the final settlement of a bill has been given. The petitioner is evidently laboring under the impression that it is the duty of this court to direct the trial court as to the matters and things which should be settled in this bill and in respect of which the trial court alone has jurisdiction. It does not appear that the trial court has refused to settle any bill; but, on the contrary, it has refused to settle the particular bill presented by petitioner. This court has no jurisdiction or authority, under this statement of facts, to interfere with the settlement and allowance of the bill. The writ is denied.

8 Cal. App. 773

In re RIVIERE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 489.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 10, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 9, 1908.)

1. MOTIONS (§ 42*)—RENEWAL—DENIAL OF ATTORNEY'S FEE.

An order denying an attorney an allowance for services to an executor rendered before probate of the will, made before contestants moved for a new trial and perfected an appeal, was an order made in a pending action, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 182, liberty to renew having been granted when the application was denied, the order did not preclude a subsequent application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Motions, Dec. Dig. § 42.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 920*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—MOTIONS.

The granting of a motion after it has been once denied is within a court's discretion, which will be presumed to have been properly exercised, if renewal of the motion is permitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 920.*]

3. WILLS (§ 211*)—EXECUTOR'S DUTIES—PROBATE OF WILL.

It was as much an executor's duty to follow testator's implied direction to take all necessary steps to procure probate of the will as to perform any other direction thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 518; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 97*)—COUNSEL—RIGHT TO EMPLOY.

An executor's right to employ counsel depends upon the right to litigate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 411½; Dec. Dig. § 97.*]

5. WILLS (§ 448*)—TESTACY—FAVOR.

The law favors testacy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 964; Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 485*)—ALLOWANCES TO ATTORNEYS—SERVICES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, authorizing allowances for legal services to an executor, comprehends services in performing any duty devolving upon him under the will, including the duty to prosecute necessary and proper proceedings to establish the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Louis Riviere, deceased. Appeal from an order allowing an attorney's fee for services to the executor. Affirmed.

Edgar E. Lefebvre, McNutt & Hannon, Edward G. Kuster, and Edward L. Hutchinson, for appellants. Charles H. Mattingly, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from an order allowing respondent an attorney's fee for certain services rendered the executor before and after appointment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

†For opinions on motions to prove exceptions, see 98 Pac. 256, 257, 863.

One Louis Riviere died in 1905, leaving an estate exceeding $50,000 in value, before which time he had executed a paper writing purporting to be his last will and testament, in which one Bachmann was named as executor. This will was offered for probate by the executor, who employed respondent, an attorney, for that purpose. A contest was filed by parties interested in the estate, and upon a hearing the will was admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to Bachmann. Thereupon respondent, upon an affidavit and showing as to services rendered in the proceedings connected with the probate of the will and their value, moved the court in which such proceedings were pending for an order under section 1616, Code Civ. Proc., as amended, and section 1619, Code Civ. Proc., for an allowance to himself of a just and reasonable compensation for extraordinary services rendered as attorney to said executor in the defense of the contests so instituted. This application, on June 5, 1906, the court denied, giving respondent, however, the privilege of renewing the same. Thereafter the contestants served upon respondent, as counsel for the executor, a notice of intention to move for a new trial, and likewise served a statement of the case, to which statement respondent, as such counsel, submitted amendments, which were in part adopted by the court, and the statement, with its amendments, was settled. Upon hearing of the motion for a new trial the same was denied, and contestants took an appeal from the judgment and order. Respondent, after such appeal was perfected, made preparation for argument and hearing in the Supreme Court, but before final submission the contestants dismissed the appeal. After the judgment so admitting the will to probate had become final, respondent renewed his motion for an allowance for services set forth in the original motion, as well as for services thereafter rendered the executor upon the appeal; and the court, upon the hearing thereof, made its order allowing him for services before the admission of the will to probate the sum of $1,000, and for services upon the appeal $500, and ordered the executor to pay such sums to respondent. From this last order the contestants to the probate of the will and those otherwise interested in the estate take the appeal now under consideration.

The first point made by appellants is, that the order of the court made in 1906, denying the application of respondent for an allowance for services rendered before the will was admitted to probate, was a complete adjudication of his rights in relation thereto, and no appeal being had therefrom he is concluded thereby, and the court was consequently without jurisdiction to hear and determine the subsequent motion upon which the order appealed from is based. The record disclosing, as it does, that the order of 1906 was made before the motion for a new trial and the perfecting of the appeal, it was therefore an order made in a pending action, and under section 182, Code Civ. Proc., a second application could be made when liberty to renew the same was granted at the time of the denial. The granting of a motion after the same has once been denied is a matter addressed to the discretion of the court, and it will be presumed to have properly exercised this discretion if it permits the motion to be presented the second time. Johnston v. Brown, 115 Cal. 696, 47 Pac. 686.

As to the sum of $500 allowed for services upon the appeal, the subject thereof was not included within the original motion, and under no circumstances could it be said that there was any prior adjudication with reference to such subsequent services, even though the appeal was from a judgment rendered before letters issued.

The second and principal point raised by appellants is that, under the laws of this state, no attorney's fee can be allowed against an estate for services rendered before the will is admitted to probate, and this upon the authority of Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340, 40 Pac. 485, which declares that "counsel fees are not recoverable by a successful party in an action either at law or equity, except in the enumerated instances where they are expressly allowed by statute"; and this principle is applied to matters in probate. Estate of Olmstead, 120 Cal. 454, 52 Pac. 804. The case last cited does not, in our opinion, determine the question here involved. In that case the contestants were successful, and the will was not admitted to probate because it had been revoked. Consequently, there was no executor for whom services could be rendered, and section 1616 does not warrant payment except for services rendered an executor or administrator. In this case, the will which appointed Bachmann executor was admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to him. The acts of the executor named in procuring the probate of the will are comprehended within the general services rendered the estate, and it was as much Bachmann's duty to present the will for probate and take all necessary steps looking thereto as it was to perform any other directions thereunder. When one executes a will and appoints an executor, there is an implied direction by the testator that such person shall take all steps necessary to carry into effect the intent and object of the testator. The confidence reposed in such executor by the testator would be abused and he would prove recreant to his trust did he not, even in the face of contests, diligently endeavor to establish the will and in all respects to carry out the wishes of the testator. The right to employ counsel depends upon the right to litigate. Estate of Jessup, 80 Cal. 626, 22 Pac. 260. Having, as we believe, the right to litigate, and for the successful conduct of which the employment of counsel became necessary, the expenses of such counsel were a proper charge against the estate. Assuming that no power to charge the estate by a contract reposed in the executor until his due appointment, nevertheless when such appointment is made the liability of the estate to the executor would relate to the initiatory act necessarily performed in effecting the purposes of the testator by the due probate of his will. The law favors testacy, and section 1616, which provides: "Any attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator may, at any time during the administration, * * * apply to the court for an allowance to himself of compensation therefor"—should receive such construction as would include services rendered the executor in the performance of any duty devolving upon him by the terms of the will, including that duty of prosecuting necessary and proper proceedings toward the establishment of such will.

We find no error in the judgment and order appealed from, and the same are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 50

SCHMIDT v. CHITTENDEN et al.
(Civ. 521.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 16, 1903.)

BROKERS (§ 14*)—AUTHORITY TO SELL—CONSTRUCTION.

A broker, authorized to sell $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres for \$15,300, had no authority to sell at \$1,800 per acre according to measurement, which would result in a substantial diminution of the aggregate amount of the price the owner would receive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Frederick Schmidt against A. B. Chittenden and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying motion of defendant Fox for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin R. Fox, in pro. per. W. C. Batcheller, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to quiet title. Defendant Fox filed a cross-complaint, alleging purchase of the property, which purchase was evidenced by a written contract signed by defendant Chittenden as the agent of plaintiff, and asked for damages in the sum of $10,000 for breach of this contract by refusal of plaintiff to convey the premises in accordance therewith. Judgment was for plaintiff on both complaint and cross-complaint, and defendant Fox appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff, who was the owner of a tract of land in Vernon, Los Angeles county, containing about $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres, on February 7, 1906, signed a writing constituting the defendant Chittenden "sole and exclusive agent" for the sale of certain property situated "in city of and county of Los Angeles, state of California, described as follows, to wit: $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres fronting on Santa Fé ave. part of Chipley & Baker rancho, the said agency to continue for five days from date hereof." The terms fixed were: "Price, \$15,300. Terms, $\frac{1}{3}$ cash—bal. 1 & 2 yrs., 6% int., or upon such other terms as may be hereafter agreed upon in writing, between the said agent and myself." Authority is given to sign necessary contracts in accordance with above terms and to receipt for deposits of purchase money made. On February 10, 1906, Chittenden reported the receipt of \$300 cash from defendant Fox as deposit on purchase of the property. On the same day, the plaintiff and defendants coming together for negotiations, the defendants Chittenden and Fox withdrew from the negotiations, and defendant Fox refused to purchase said property, owing to a disagreement as to terms. Thereafter, and on the same day, the defendants Chittenden and Fox, the former assuming to act for plaintiff under the authorization mentioned, entered into a contract in writing wherein and whereby plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant agreed to purchase certain property situated in the county of Los Angeles (without mention of either Vernon or Los Angeles city), described by metes and bounds, "said to contain $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres, at the rate of \$1,800 per acre, which amounts to \$15,300." "The party of the second part agrees to purchase the said $8\frac{1}{2}$ acres at the said rate of \$1,800 per acre." The terms named were \$300 cash, \$5,000 on transfer of deed, and mortgage to secure the balance, one-half due one year, the other in two years, interest 6 per cent., payable semi-annually. Defendant to have right to cancel mortgage at any time.

The court finds the facts substantially as above stated, and also that defendant Fox is not damaged in any sum by the refusal of plaintiff to convey. There is sufficient evidence in the record to support the findings made. It clearly appears from the testimony, at the interview between plaintiff and Fox, that Fox maintained the right to purchase the lands mentioned at $1,800 per acre according to measurement, and that plaintiff declined to sell in this way, and that after the negotiations between them failed Fox procured the writing to be executed by Chittenden as plaintiff's agent. The grant of agency from plaintiff to Chittenden does not authorize the making of a contract such as the one executed by him in the name of plaintiff, and no change was made in the terms upon which Chittenden was authorized to sell. The testimony shows that purchase by measurement would result in a substantial diminution of the aggregate amount of the purchase price that plaintiff would receive. An authorization to sell for a gross sum is not authority to sell at a price per acre. It is apparent that the defendant Fox sought to obtain through this contract with the agent that to which the principal refused to agree and that which the plaintiff had never given Chittenden authority to do.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is not necessary to consider the other objections as to variance in, or failure of description, etc., urged by plaintiff against defendant Fox's claim for damages. There is testimony as to value of the property which supports the finding of damages by the court. We do not pass upon the ruling reserved by the trial court upon the question whether or not a cross-complaint for damages is proper in an action of this character. We see nothing in either appeal to justify us in disturbing the judgment.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 65

BAIRD v. LOESCHER. (Civ. 463.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 21, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. BROKERS (§ 7*)—EMPLOYMENT—WRITTEN MEMORANDUM—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, requiring only that a broker's authorization to sell shall be in writing, a memorandum of authority is not fatally defective because it did not recite the terms of sale and amount of payments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 7*)—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—PERFORMANCE.

A broker wrote his client for written authority to sell, inclosing a proposed authorization giving authority for a specified time, with specifications as to price and commission. The owner did not sign the proposed authorization but wrote the broker that the letter was received, and that he might sell to any one he could except to an Armenian; that perhaps he might sell to an Armenian for all cash. Held, that as between the owner and the broker such correspondence established the broker's written authority to sell, especially where the broker procured a purchaser, not an Armenian, able, ready, and willing to pay the agreed price on any terms the owner might dictate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

3. BROKERS (§ 7*)—CONTRACT—OFFER AND ACCEPTANCE—ASSENT.

Defendant, having employed a broker to sell certain land, on being applied to for written authority, wrote plaintiff that he could sell to any one he pleased, except to an Armenian. Held, that the provision that plaintiff could not sell to an Armenian did not constitute a new offer which needed an express written acceptance, but was sufficiently complied with by plaintiff making a sale in fact, to a purchaser not an Armenian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

4. BROKERS (§ 7*)—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—ACCEPTANCE.

A broker mailed to his client a blank contract of employment for his signature containing the price, terms of sale, and a stipulation for 5 per cent. commission. The owner did not sign the contract, but wrote that the broker might sell to any person but an Armenian. Held, that the owner's reply was an express acceptance of each of the terms of the contract submitted, including the rate of commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by J. R. Baird against Otto Loescher. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. M. Drew and J. R. Webb, for appellant. G. W. Cartwright, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action is brought on an express contract to recover commissions alleged to be due plaintiff from defendant for the sale of certain real property in Fresno county. The plaintiff recovered judgment. This appeal is from that judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

At the trial certain letters and an unsigned agreement, inclosed in and referred to in one of the letters, were admitted in evidence, over the objection and exception of defendant. The sufficiency of these letters and of the unsigned agreement to constitute a contract is the subject of this controversy. The letters and agreement (unsigned) in question are as follows: "May 19, '06. Mr. Loescher, Fowler, Cal.—My dear Sir: The land matter seems to be progressing, but rather slowly. * * *

In order to be properly prepared to handle them promptly and securely, by being ready to take a deposit at once, if a favorable decision is made, I would request that you properly authorize me by filling out the little card agreement herewith inclosed, and send back by this evening's mail on the train coming north about 7:15 at Fowler. Very truly yours, J. R. Baird, for Fresno Land Company." The card agreement, inclosed and referred to in the above letter, reads as follows: "Fresno, Cal., May 19, 1906. Fresno Land Co. I hereby authorize you to sell for me, and to receive any deposit for the sale of, the following described property: * * * This authorization is exclusive, and is to remain in force, irrevocable, one month (10) days from date, and thereafter until ten days after receipt of notice in writing to cancel. Price of land to be $10,000, or any less sum hereafter agreed to by me, on the following terms: $4,500 cash on date of sale, and $——, in —— equal annual payments, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum, for which I agree to pay five per cent. commission, and in event of a sale I bind myself to execute and deliver the necessary conveyances of title, and to furnish abstract showing good title to said property to date of sale. ———. [Seal.]” In reply to the foregoing communications Mr. Loescher sent the following letter: “Fowler, May 19, 1906. Mr. J. R. Baird, Fresno—Dear Sir: Your letter received, and will say in regards to it that you can sell the place to any one you can, but not to an Armenian, as my wife says she will not sign a deed to an Armenian. If I can get all cash from them, I may sell, but not otherwise, as I have had dealings with them, and I don’t care to have any more. Yours truly, Otto Loescher.” After the receipt of this letter from the defendant plaintiff proceeded to effect a sale of the property, and thus to perform his part of the contract, with the result that by June 21st, and within the life of the contract, he had found a purchaser, and wrote the defendant as follows: “June 21, 1906. Mr. Otto Loescher, Fowler, Cal.—Dear Sir: Following the instructions contained in your letter of May 19, 1906, I have sold your 40-acre vineyard for $10,000, and have a deposit of $250 awaiting on an abstract. Please come to Fresno Monday, the 25th instant, and arrange details. Very truly yours, J. R. Baird, Agent, 1823 Tulare street.” The same day, June 21st, defendant by letter refused to sell the land, saying that he had changed his mind, and that the property was off the market. The uncontradicted testimony of the proposed buyer, one Droge, is that he was ready, able, and willing to pay the defendant the stipulated price for the property on any terms of payment which he (defendant) would insist upon; that he so informed defendant, who, making no objection to the offer, refused to consider the proposition, and rejected it.

Appellant’s (defendant’s) first proposition is that the contract sued upon is insufficient under the statute of frauds, because of the blank spaces therein with reference to the terms and amounts of payments. If this were an action between the owner and the buyer to compel a conveyance, it might be contended successfully that, the blank spaces not being filled in, it did not, as a memorandum, contain all the terms of the contract, and hence was void under the statute of frauds. But in this case, it being an action by the broker against the owner, and the statute of frauds requiring only that the authorization to sell shall be in writing (Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 642, 25 Pac. 130; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6), and as the proposed buyer was able and willing to pay the agreed price, and offered to do so on any terms the owner might dictate, under these circumstances it seems plain to us that the contention of appellant is wholly without merit.

If we understand him correctly, appellant next asserts that the letter of appellant of May 19th, stating that respondent might sell the property to any one except to an Armenian, introduced a new term into the negotiations, which amounted to a rejection of respondent’s offer, and a counter proposition which required acceptance by the respondent in order to result in a binding contract between the parties. He further asserts that there was no acceptance of the counter offer, and that therefore no contract resulted. In this he is wrong. There was not, it is true, an acceptance in writing, nor was it necessary that there should have been. It might have been indicated by acts, as indeed it was in this case, for the respondent not only showed his assent to the new term by conduct, but actually complied with it by producing a purchaser not an Armenian. The rule controlling here is thus laid down in 9 Cyc. 270: “There is a radical distinction in regard to communication between offers which ask that the offeree shall do something, and offers which ask that the offeree shall promise something. In offers of the former kind communication of acceptance is ordinarily not required, * * * where the offer is to do something if the offeree will not merely promise to do, but do something, compliance with the condition of the offer by defendant by doing the act in the way prescribed is ordinarily sufficient evidence of the acceptor’s assent, and it is not necessary to show that he notified the offerer that he accepted the offer and would perform the conditions.” In Veale v. Green, 105 Mo. App. 182, 79 S. W. 731, it is said: “Evidence that P. continued, from time to time, to make efforts to sell defendant’s land after defendant offered him a commission for making the sale was sufficient to sustain a finding that he accepted the offer.”

There remains one other point to be considered. Appellant concedes that the letters constitute a sufficient statement of the facts of employment to satisfy the statute of frauds; and he also concedes that, if this were an action on an implied contract, respondent would have been entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services (Toomy v. Dunphy, supra), but he insists that the letters relied upon do not state the compensation to be paid the broker, and that therefore this action, being on express contract, no recovery can be had. Appellant had read and knew the terms of the proposed contract and the contents of the letter with which the contract was inclosed. In reply, referring to them, and having, of course, their contents in mind, he in effect said: “Proceed, but don’t sell to an Armenian.” With the exception just noted (not to sell to an Armenian) the reply of the defendant was, we think, tantamount to an express acceptance of each of the terms of the contract, including the rate of commission. “A contract is to be construed as a whole, [and] terms which can be inferred from a consideration of the entire instrument are as much a part of the contract as if expressly set forth there." 2 Page on Contracts, § 1118, p. 1740.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 101

H. C. CAPWELL CO. v. BLAKE. (Civ. 489.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Sept. 23, 1908.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 169*)—INJURIES FROM DEFECTIVE CONDITION—ACTIONS.

Evidence in an action by a tenant of a ground floor for damages caused by the stoppage of a drain pipe leading from a skylight roof placed over a part of the premises, at the bottom of a light well, resulting in the flooding of the premises, considered, and held to show that the landlord had control of the skylight roof, and was liable for the damages caused by negligently allowing the drain pipe to become clogged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

Errors by the trial court in admitting and excluding testimony not being argued, and no reasons being given to support the objections, will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4256, 4259; Dec. Dig. § 1078.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry A. Melvin, Judge.

Action by the H. C. Capwell Company against M. K. Blake. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hill & Ryker, for appellant. Snook & Church, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action for damages brought by plaintiff as tenant against defendant as landlord on account of damage to plaintiff's merchandise caused by flooding from a defective roof of the demised premises and from alleged negligent drainage of rainwater therefrom. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and plaintiff had judgment, from which, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The building in question is known as the "Blake Block," and is situated on the corner of Twelfth and Washington streets, Oakland, and consists of three stories and basement. Originally the ground floor space was divided into eight rooms used for stores, of which plaintiff occupied all, except one room at the south end of the building, under a lease for seven years and four months, made on May 4, 1903, executed by defendant through her attorney in fact, Mrs. E. H. Havens. The second and third stories were let to various persons for various purposes. Mrs. Havens had an office in the building and its janitor, in defendant's employment, resided there with his family. There was a light well extending from the basement up, open at the top, occupying a space 18 by 44 feet between the walls down to the ceiling of the first story, and thence down to the basement it was about half that size. The roof of the building drained into this space, and the water was carried down to the basement and thence into the sewer by a pipe which also served as a drain pipe for the toilets. It was proposed by the parties to convert the entire space occupied by plaintiff into one large store, which involved the removal of partitions, and the walls of the light well which extended across the rear of one of the stores. These changes also required some readjustment of drain pipes, remodeling of the roof in the light well and placing therein a skylight for the accommodation of the enlarged storeroom. The skylight, of dimensions 11 by 17 feet, rested on the subroof, 18 by 44 feet, which extended over the area of the light well, about level with the floor of the second story. A photographer's gallery and the toilet of the second story floor projected somewhat over this area, but not to interfere with the skylight. The only means of access to the subroof of this area were through windows in the second-story hall or of the abutting rooms occupied by tenants or the toilet. To reach this subroof by the hall windows it was necessary to crawl under the photographer's room, the floor of which was about two feet above the tin roof of this area. Originally the main roof was drained to a pipe, and thence down the light well to the basement and sewer; this pipe also being connected with the toilets. In the remodeling of the consolidated stores it became necessary to shift the location of this pipe, where it passed through the store, a few feet to a hollow column, supporting the roof, through which the drain pipe was carried, and the column was inclosed by woodwork. This pipe leading from the upper roof was cut at the subroof and an elbow placed on it, so that it discharged the rainwater falling on the main roof directly on this tinued subroof at a point eight or ten feet from the opening in the pipe that ran through this column and on down to the basement and sewer. At this opening in the subroof a screen or perforated hood was placed over the pipe to admit water, but exclude rubbish which might run into the pipe and stop the flow of water through it. The store below extended in all directions from a point under the skylight, and the goods and merchandise of plaintiff were displayed throughout the entire floor area and also in the basement under this skylight. The work of changing over these stores was completed some time in March, 1904, and, so far as appears, was done in a workmanlike manner and to the satisfaction of plaintiff. There seems to be no question but that the rearrangement of the drainage system of the building was adequate had nothing happened to change it. But from some unknown cause the screen over the exit pipe of this subroof had been removed and obstructions had been allowed to accumulate in the pipe thus causing the water coming from the main roof and falling directly on this subroof to rise to the depth of several inches, and to escape over the top of the flashings of the tin roof built into the side walls and around the skylight, and thence down into the store below, causing the damage complained of. All the work done in remodeling the building was undertaken by defendant and at her expense and under the direction of her agents, and agreeably to plans satisfactory to plaintiff, except certain improvements to the store front which plaintiff agreed to make.

The court found, among other facts, that this subroof on which water accumulated, and from which it ran down into plaintiff's store, "was then and there in the possession and under the control of said defendant; and said defendant then and there carelessly and negligently allowed and permitted and caused said rainwater to accumulate in such large quantities upon said roof that by reason thereof said rainwater thereupon overflowed a certain skylight situated upon said roof, leaked through certain tin flashings next to the brick walls and said buildings surrounding said roof, and ran into, upon, and flooded said personal property so located in said store and basements aforesaid, and thereby and in consequence thereof damaged and injured said personal property of said plaintiff in the sum of $3,673.25."

Appellant states in her brief that "the most important question to be considered here, in fact the only question, is who, under the terms of the lease, had control of the skylight roof." We quite agree with appellant that the question of defendant's liability hinges entirely upon the assumption that it was her duty, and not that of plaintiff, not only to provide adequate escape for rainwater falling upon the roofs of the building, but also to see that the means thus provided were kept free from obstruction. There is no provision of the lease in terms placing this duty upon either party. It purports to "let and demise" certain "stores," giving their numbers on the street, "including basements thereof under said stores, and all room or space available or that may be made available for use under the sidewalks in front of said stores, with the appurtenances." Other covenants relate to subletting and such as are usually found in leases, but nothing touching the care of the premises. The lease was entered into before the changes in the building were made, but in accordance with an agreement previously entered into or option given plaintiff to lease the premises by which, in the event that plaintiff exercised the option, defendant agreed "to remove walls and partitions between said stores as desired by the party of the second part, so far as the same may be done without endangering the buildings; to provide proper and acceptable toilets (and to renew and place in good condition so far as may be required, all the premises included in this agreement)." The changes made were for the mutual benefit of the parties, and, so far as concerned plaintiff, related only to the several stores which he was given the option of leasing in consideration of which, if accepted, the changes were to be made.

Appellant refers to certain principles as established by the decisions of appellate courts, and to certain facts in the case from which it is argued that respondent had and took control of the skylight under its lease of the storeroom below. It is claimed that the rule is almost universal that a lease of a part of a building passes with it everything necessarily used with or necessary to the enjoyment of the demised premises (Kitchen Bros. Hotel Co. v. Philipin, 2 Neb. [Unof.] 340, 96 N. W. 487); that a description of premises by the street number includes so much of the lot upon which the building rests as is necessary to the enjoyment of the building (Hosher v. Hestermann, 58 Ill. App. 265); that a lease of the "first floor" in a building includes the use of the outside walls thereof in the absence of anything to the contrary in the lease (Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 1, 12 N. E. 401, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422); that in the lease of a building there is no implied warranty that it is safe, suitable for habitation, or properly adapted to the uses to which it is to be applied, nor that it shall continue fit for the purposes for which it was demised (Davidson v. Fischer, 11 Colo. 583, 19 Pac. 652, 7 Am. St. Rep. 269). It is hence argued that the skylight was a necessary part of the premises for the complete enjoyment of the part demised, that no reservation of this skylight was made by the lessor, and that under the terms of the lease and the option agreement the skylight necessarily became a part of the demised premises and its care and control passed to the lessee. Turning to the facts proven, it is claimed that they confirm this view. Attention is invited to the testimony showing that the alterations were made to the satisfaction of plaintiff and in accordance with plans agreed upon by it; that the skylight roof was tinned and cleaned and placed in a condition satisfactory to plaintiff; that plaintiff knew that the water coming from the upper roof had to be drained through a pipe coming from the skylight area, and was therefore fully apprised of the conditions and retained possession of the premises with this knowledge. Defendant's janitor, Albro, testified that after the completion of the work Mr. Capwell, president of plaintiff company, requested him to look after the skylight area, and that he would pay him for his services. Mr. Capwell denied this, and the learned trial judge, in referring to this testimony, recited facts and circumstances which led him to conclude that Albro was mistaken and that Capwell did not make any such promise.

It appeared that the leak in the roof was first discovered during a rainstorm about 9 o'clock of the night of September 22, 1904. Plaintiff's watchman, Bostwick, notified defendant's janitor, Albro, and also called up by telephone plaintiff's bookkeeper, Furth, who came to the store and notified Capwell. Steps were taken to protect the goods from injury so far as presently possible and the three men went up to the roof through a second-story toilet window. Water was then standing on the subroof to some depth. Observing a break in the drain pipe on or near the upper roof from which water was flowing, Furth tied a cloth around this opening, forcing the water back into the pipe. He asked Albro where the opening was at the subroof, but was told that he did not know. Having no light, the party made no search at that time for this opening, but went below into the store and continued their efforts to protect the merchandise. The leak seemed to abate somewhat, and Furth went home. The next morning about 7 o'clock the water began coming down worse than before, and Furth was again called and promptly responded, and went about protecting the goods in every possible way. Bostwick testified that he notified the janitor, Albro, several times during the night; "that, when the main flood occurred about seven in the morning, he went upstairs and woke the janitor again, and then went out on the roof and found the outlet, and was standing in water ankle deep on the roof where the skylight was and he got some pieces of glass and shavings and pieces of gunny rope or bale rope out of the outlet. He notified the janitor three times that night; and that the janitor of the Blake Block telephoned for the plumber to come." Witness Maddern, a plumber, responded, as also did witness Rankin, another plumber. Maddern pulled some rubbish out of the pipe below the opening, and, finding no relief, went below to examine the sewer, and while he was gone witness Rankin succeeded in relieving the pipe of its obstructions with a force pump or plunger obtained from janitor Albro, "who was out there working it when he appeared." Albro testified that he had been on the skylight area 50 times or more and had always cleaned it before a rain, that he had charge of the rooms of the upper stories for defendant, and that it was his duty to keep the roofs clean. It is true that he testified that Capwell had requested this of him, suggesting the inference that this duty was put upon him by plaintiff, and not by defendant. But the court held otherwise upon the evidence. Albro was, however, reminded by Capwell several times to keep the area roof clean, and Albro told Capwell he had been told to do so, but "had been too busy to come to it." Capwell also testified that he saw Mrs. Havens, defendant's agent, the morning of this occurrence, and was assured that the difficulty would be removed, "so that we would not sustain a flood in case it should rain again." Capwell also testified that plaintiff had nothing to do with the work above the ceiling of the store or with the care or control of the skylight area or light well. It appeared that this light well was built to give light and air to the upper stories as well as to the ground floor and basement. The area roof was in part built before the remodeling of the stores was begun and extended under the photograph gallery. The changes made required the closing of the light well at the floor of the second story, but the skylight became necessary, as a part of this subroof, to give light to the store below. Defendant, however, retained the use of the drainage system down through this well and through plaintiff's store, and this use was necessary to the drainage of the roof over the main building with no part of which latter plaintiff had anything to do or any control except the store and basement. Speaking of the situation as disclosed by the evidence, the court in its oral opinion at the close of the evidence said: "It seems that this pipe coming from the top of the building, down over the roof of the photographer's room, was an old pipe that had been in use for a long time. Originally it was conducted down through the light well to the sewer, and taken care of in that way. Now, of course, when these alterations were made, two things were necessary. One was that Mr. Capwell's store should be protected from the elements, and another was that there should be some provision still for carrying off the water from the top of the building. That was undertaken by Mr. Spence, employed by the owner of the building. And the largest function of this roof in the way of carrying water was to carry water from the upper roof, because there was a very much larger area of drainage there than there was on this lower roof. I think under all of the evidence in the case I am bound to hold that the owner of the building had appropriated that roof, or at least a portion of it, as if it were a pipe for the purpose of carrying off the water from the upper part of the building, as well as the small amount of water that might fall upon that roof."

If plaintiff had leased the entire building, the principle relied upon by defendant would have some application. But this is not such a case. In Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295, speaking of the general rule that there is no implied warranty of the safety and adaptation of the building to the uses of the tenant, it was said: "A lease does not imply any particular state of the property let, or that it shall continue fit for the purpose for which it is let, nevertheless its application is limited to premises which by the terms of the lease pass out of the control of the landlord into the exclusive possession of the tenant." The cases relating to patent and latent defects have no application here for the court found on sufficient evidence that the responsibility for draining the upper roof was upon defendant who negligently performed this duty. In such case defendant became liable to plaintiff for damage thereby suffered. Edwards v. N. Y. & H. R. Co., 98 N. Y. 245, 50 Am. Rep. 659. There were many tenants of the upper stories. The main roof of the building sheltered the rooms occupied by them quite as much as the store below. It would be unreasonable to presume that plaintiff impliedly assumed the care of this roof or undertook to provide means for the escape of water from it. The damage resulted, not from rain-water falling upon the skylight nor upon the subroof, but rather from the volume of water poured upon the latter from the upper roof which was provided with no means of escape except to run across the subroof to the pipe which had originally carried the water directly from the main roof. Had this pipe remained as first constructed, it is not likely that the damage would have followed. Nor does the fact that this change was for the better accommodation of plaintiff in rearranging the stores affect the question or relieve defendant from the duty of caring for the water that was to fall upon the roof. We think the trial court correctly interpreted this subroof as being in effect a continuation of the pipe from the main roof which could safely perform the function marked out for it only by keeping the pipe running down through the store free and open for the unobstructed passage of water coming to it across the subroof. As it was the duty of defendant to see to this, it is immaterial whence the obstruction came—whether by accident or design dropped or thrown upon the subroof by tenants of the upper stories, suggested by defendant as a possible cause for the stoppage of the pipe. The fact that plaintiff and its servants promptly endeavored to ascertain the cause of the trouble and to find a remedy is mentioned as a circumstance tending to show an acknowledgment of plaintiff's duty to care for this roof. To our mind it has no such significance. They would have been guilty of contributory negligence had they supinely sat down and allowed the work of destruction to go on, making no effort to avert it.

Much stress is placed by defendant upon the fact that Capwell took especial interest in the plans for the remodeling of the store-rooms, made suggestions as to changes, and was cognizant of the manner by which the water from the main as well as the subroof was to be cared for; and finally approved the work when completed. These circumstances are not necessarily inconsistent with the assumption by defendant of the care and control of the roofs of the building, nor do they impliedly or presumptively tend to charge plaintiff with such care and control. Plaintiff's interest in the building was in the rearrangement of the stores. Incidental to this arose the necessity for a skylight and to provide different means for conveying the water from the roofs to the sewer. Naturally plaintiff was concerned in knowing that these means were adequate and so they were had they been properly looked after; and here again we are confronted with the sole question of fact—upon whom rested the duty to care for the system of drainage adopted? With the exception of the testimony given by janitor Albro and his wife, which the court disbelieved and which was in conflict with the testimony of Capwell, there is no direct evidence that plaintiff ever assumed any control whatever of the skylight area. On the contrary, there was evidence that such control was assumed by defendant; and the conduct of the parties shows that from the time the work was commenced by the defendant, during its progress, after it was completed, and up to the time of the damage and in repairing the pipes after the disaster, the responsibility was assumed by defendant.

It was held in Priest v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 401, that, where a tenant occupying a portion of a building is damaged by the escape of water from pipes used by and under the control of the landlord who occupies the remainder of the building, the landlord will be held liable. The case of Toole v. Beckett, 67 Me. 544, 24 Am. Rep. 54, is cited by respondent, and we think states the law correctly in a similar case to the one here. The court said: "The plaintiff hired the lower portion of a building for a store, the upper portion remaining in the possession of the defendant and under his care and control. A rainstorm poured a great volume of water between the roof and the chimney down upon the plaintiff's goods, causing some injury. The charge is that defendant was guilty of negligence, either on account of the original construction of the roof or in the way and manner of maintaining it. The case both of law and fact is referred to the court. It is well settled that in a lease of real estate no covenant is implied that the lessor shall keep the premises in repair or otherwise fit for occupation. But that is not this case. Here the plaintiff had no care or control of the roof, and had no right to intermeddle with it. The defendant had such care and control for the benefit of himself and all his tenants. By implication he undertakes so to exercise his control as to inflict no injury upon his tenants. If he does not exercise common care and prudence in the management and oversight of that portion of the building which belongs to his especial supervision and care, and damages are sustained by a tenant on that account, he becomes liable to him. He is responsible for his negligence"—citing cases. See Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal.

563, 40 Pac. 950, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156, for a somewhat analogous case.

Some errors are claimed to have been made by the court in admitting and excluding testimony, but, as they are not argued and no reasons given in support of these specifications, we have not noticed them. We have addressed ourselves to what appellant stated in her brief as the only question in the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 78

McKENZIE v. HILL.

In re SAN FRANCISCO STOCK & EXCHANGE BOARD et al. (Civ. 529.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Sept. 22, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 414*)—"ADVERSE PARTY"—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

The "adverse party" on whom a notice of appeal must be served is the party who appears by the record of the proceedings in which the appeal is taken to be adverse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2138; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 224-227; vol. 8, pp. 7567, 7568.]

2. EXECUTION (§ 385*)—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—NATURE AND REQUISITE.

Supplementary proceedings so far as the garnishee is concerned are original proceedings, not against the debtor, but against his creditor, and are a substitute for a creditors' bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 385.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 414*)—NOTICE OF APPEAL—SERVICE—ADVERSE PARTY.

Where, after final judgment on which an execution had been issued, supplementary proceedings were instituted against garnishees in which the judgment debtor was not served, and did not participate, he was not an adverse party on whom a notice of appeal by the garnishees from an order requiring payment by them of a specified sum on the judgment should be served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2138; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

4. EXECUTION (§ 358*)—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

Proceedings supplementary to execution are not a mere incident to the original action, but constitute a new proceeding involving new parties and issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 358.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by James A. McKenzie against J. B. Hill. From an order in supplementary proceedings directing the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board and A. B. Ruggles to pay certain money on a judgment recovered by plaintiff against Hill, the garnishees appeal. On motion to dismiss. Denied.

Aitken & Aitken, for appellants. Edmund Tauszky and W. P. Hubbard, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The appeal is from an order made in proceedings supplementary to execution, directing appellants, as garnishees, to apply $876 toward the satisfaction of a judgment recovered by plaintiff McKenzie against defendant Hill. The ground of the motion to dismiss is that no notice of such appeal was served upon the defendant Hill.

The undisputed facts in the case are as follows: On the 17th day of January, 1907, respondent, McKenzie, recovered judgment against defendant, Hill, for the sum of $3,805, and assigned the same to C. M. Craig. Craig prepared an affidavit as the basis for an order for the examination of appellants, the San Francisco Stock and Exchange Board and A. B. Ruggles, its president. Upon this affidavit the Honorable James M. Troutt, one of the judges of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, made an order, requiring the presence of said appellants before said judge to be examined concerning the possession of the sum of $876, money belonging to defendant Hill not exempt from execution, and which money was subject to be applied toward the satisfaction of said judgment. After the examination of the president of said Stock and Exchange Board, the court ordered the application of the said $876 toward the payment of said judgment. No notice of appeal was served upon defendant Hill. Under these circumstances appellants contend that defendant Hill would be affected by a reversal of the order appealed from, and hence is an adverse party as contemplated by section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and, as no notice of appeal was served upon him, the appeal should be dismissed.

It is not at all clear to us in what manner Hill could be injuriously affected by a reversal or modification of the judgment appealed from; but in any event we are convinced that he was not a party to the proceeding, and therefore was not entitled to notice. "The adverse party upon whom the notice of appeal is to be served is the party who appears by the record to be adverse, and the record to be considered for that purpose is the record of the proceedings in which the appeal is taken." In re Ryer, 110 Cal. 560, 42 Pac. 1082. An examination of the record here shows that in an action against Hill a judgment had been obtained, which is now final and in full force and effect, and upon which judgment an execution had been issued; that in proceedings supplementary to execution the garnishees were examined, and the order appealed from was made. In that proceeding Hill was not served, nor did he in any way participate therein. It thus appears, to reiterate, that Hill was not before the court, and was not a party to that proceeding. Proceedings supplementary to execution, while collateral to an original action, are still quite independent of it. Indeed, they embrace all the elements of an independent civil action. It has its own record, and only parties thereto need be served with notice of appeal. In Wells v. Torrance, 119 Cal. 441, 51 Pac. 626, these proceedings are called, so far as a garnishee is concerned, original proceedings. In Coffee v. Haynes, 124 Cal. 565, 57 Pac. 482, 71 Am. St. Rep. 99, they are said to be proceedings not against the judgment debtor, but against his creditor. They are a substitute for a creditors' bill. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 201; Pacific Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. 522, 40 Am. Rep. 120; Herrlich v. Kauffman, 99 Cal. 275, 33 Pac. 857, 37 Am. St. Rep. 50. "This [proceeding supplementary to execution] cannot be regarded as a mere incident to the original action. * * * In this proceeding, the merits of the original action are in no way involved. New issues are presented, new parties are brought in, and new rights are determined, the adjudication of which in no way alters the face of the original judgment." Harper v. Behagg, 14 Ind. App. 428, 42 N. E. 1115.

Our conclusion that Hill was not a party to the record, and consequently not entitled to notice of appeal, is supported by the cases in this state. In Re Ryer, supra, an heir interested in the estate of Ryer filed his petition for partial distribution. To this petition certain of the heirs and legatees of the deceased filed their answers. Others interested did not appear or object to the petition. On the issues framed the petition was denied. A motion for a new trial was refused, and, from the order denying this motion, an appeal was taken. A motion was made to dismiss the appeal, on the ground that the parties interested who did not appear at the hearing had not been served with notice of appeal. In denying the motion the court said: "Upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial, the parties to the motion in the court below are the only proper parties to the appeal; and the appellant is not required to give notice of appeal to others than those to whom the original motion was directed. The 'adverse party' upon whom a notice of appeal is to be served is the party who appears by the record to be adverse; and the record which is to be considered for that purpose is the record of the proceedings in which the appeal is taken. The rule that the notice of appeal must be served upon all parties that would be affected by a reversal of the order and judgment appealed from is to be construed with the other rule that only the record can be examined for the purpose of determining who are such adverse parties. * * * The proceeding instituted in the superior court by the appellant herein is in the nature of a collateral inquiry, or episode, interjected into the proceedings for the administration of the estate, in which there are pleadings, process, trial, findings, and a judgment, thus presenting all the elements of a civil action instituted in an independent suit for the purpose of determining the right of the appellant to a share of the estate, and, in matters of procedure upon appeal, should receive the same consideration as upon an appeal in a civil action." In Re Bullard, 114 Cal. 462, 46 Pac. 297, the administrator of the estate rendered an account for settlement, and in connection therewith reported that he had allowed a claim in favor of the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society. One of the heirs of the decedent contested the allowance of this claim, and excepted to the account in this respect. From an order settling the account he appealed, and served notice thereof on the administrator alone, and not on the claimant, and for this failure a motion was made to dismiss the appeal. The Hibernia Savings & Loan Society did not in any way participate in the proceeding, and yet, notwithstanding that it was vitally interested in the matter, the court held that it did not appear from the record that it was in any respect a party to the proceedings, and that it was unnecessary to serve it with notice of appeal.

A late case on the subject is Estate of McDougald, 143 Cal. 476, 77 Pac. 443, where the cases just referred to are quoted from with approval, and the matter is fully discussed. There the administrator filed an account, to which a judgment creditor filed written objections. Upon the issues thus presented the account was surcharged $5,500 and settled accordingly. In connection with the account the administratrix reported that she had allowed the claims of 16 creditors. In addition to the settlement of the account, the court ordered that a dividend be declared upon the claims reported, and paid out of the funds adjudged to be in the hands of the administratrix. From these orders the administratrix appealed, and served her notices of appeal on the contesting creditor, and on two others who appeared at the contest, but not upon any of the other creditors. The contesting creditor moved to dismiss the appeals for failure to serve the notices on the persons who did not appear at the hearing. There it was contended that the creditors who did not appear nor make any objection to the account were directly interested in the result of the appeal; that the dividend accruing to them under the order would be diminished if the appeal was successful; and, therefore, that they were adverse parties who must be served with notice of appeal to give the court jurisdiction. In denying the motion the court said: That a person interested in an estate, although his name and his interest are disclosed on the face of the record, is not necessarily a party to the cause or proceeding is manifest from a consideration of the different cases where persons interested may or may not appear, at their option. In a proceeding to probate a will any person interested, whether as devisee, legatee, or heir, may appear and contest the probate. The petition for probate must show the names of the heirs and devisees, and hence their interest must always appear in the record. Yet it would not be contended that an heir, devisee, or legatee who fails to appear at the time of the hearing of the petition is in any sense a party to such proceeding. So with the petitioner for administration there may be many persons who are entitled to letters and who are interested in the matter of the appointment. But, if they fail to appear or contest the right of the petitioner, it is manifest that they cannot be considered parties. Upon the settlement of an account, every creditor, heir, legatee, or devisee is a person interested, and as such has a right to enter an appearance and become a party. The names of these persons generally appear upon the face of the account or upon some of the documents referred to therein, but the giving of the notice and the statement of their rights or claims does not ipso facto make them parties to the proceeding. See, also, Niles v. Gonzales (Cal.) 92 Pac. 74; O'Rourke v. Finch et al. (Cal. App.) 96 Pac. 784.

The motion is denied.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 62

RICHMOND et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT
OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 567.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 19, 1908.)

1. CERTIORARI (§ 10*)—PRIOR REVIEW—EFFECT OF DECISION.

Where a prior writ of certiorari was denied by the Supreme Court because the proceeding was directed to the judge of the superior court instead of the tribunal itself, language in the opinion inadvertently used, appearing to determine petitioner's right to the writ on the merits, did not foreclose them from presenting the question anew, or preclude the court from determining it without reference to the former decision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Certiorari, Cent. Dig. § 17; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—POSSESSION—RELATION—COMPLAINT.

Where complaint by a landlord against a tenant to recover possession alleged a verbal lease, 30 days' notice to terminate the tenancy, and thereafter 3 days' notice to quit, claiming rent for one month and damages, it sufficiently showed the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1239; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 36*)—TITLE TO REALTY—EVIDENCE.

While justices' courts are prohibited from receiving evidence on any question involving the title or possession of real property, or to try any issue presenting such question, Code Civ. Proc. § 838, also declares that in forcible entry and detainer of which justices' courts have jurisdiction, any evidence, otherwise competent, may be given, and any question properly involved therein may be determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

4. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER (§ 2*)—STATUTES.

The statutory provisions relating to proceedings in forcible entry and detainer are to be construed to include proceedings in unlawful detainer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 291*)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—EVIDENCE.

Proceedings in unlawful detainer, in which the rules of evidence relating to forcible entry and detainer are made applicable, are limited to those cases where the relation of landlord and tenant exists, and in which such defenses only can be recognized as are available to the tenant against the landlord.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT (§ 290*)—UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

To sustain an action for unlawful detainer, proof of a mere quasi tenancy is not sufficient, but there must be either an express letting or proof showing, by implication, defendant's occupancy of the land as plaintiff's tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 1208; Dec. Dig. § 290.*]

7. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 36*)—JURISDICTION—ACTION FOR POSSESSION—UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

A complaint in unlawful detainer before a justice alleged a verbal lease, 30 days' notice to terminate the tenancy, and 3 days' notice to quit, 1 month's rent in arrear, and damages. Defendant's verified answer denied that they ever had been plaintiff's tenants, denied plaintiff's ownership and right of possession, and averred that defendants held possession under a contract of sale, the conditions of which had not yet been performed. Held, that the decisive question was whether the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties, which was within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and that the action was therefore not transferable to the superior court as involving title to realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

Action by Emma Agnes Richmond. Application for writ of certiorari by Emma Agnes Richmond and others against the Superior Court for Los Angeles County and Frederick W. Houser, Judge, etc. Writ dismissed, and application denied.

Wm. T. Blakely, for petitioners. Tipton & Cailor, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Application for writ of certiorari to review order of superior court remanding to justice court a case of unlawful detainer which had been certified up by the justice court on the ground that title to real property was involved in the issues to be tried.

A former application was denied by this court because the proceeding was directed to the judge of the superior court, instead of to the tribunal itself. It was not intended by the opinion then filed to determine anything but who were the proper parties to the proceeding, but in assuming the position of the petitioners for the purpose of deciding this matter language was used which appears to determine the right to the writ upon the merits. The language thus inadvertently used cannot prejudice the parties not then before the court, and cannot foreclose them from presenting the question anew, or preclude this court from determining it as if the former opinion had not been rendered. The complaint in the action before the justice court alleges facts showing the relation of landlord and tenant to exist between the plaintiff and defendants (petitioners here), a verbal lease, 30 days' notice to terminate the tenancy, and thereafter 3 days' notice to quit and surrender up possession of the premises. Rent for one month at $20 and damages in the sum of $100 are claimed. The verified answer denies that defendants are, or ever have been, tenants of plaintiff, denies the latter's ownership and right to possession of the premises, and avers that defendants hold possession under a contract of sale, the conditions of which have not yet been performed. While justices' courts are prohibited from receiving evidence upon any question which involves the title or possession of real property, or to try any issue presenting such a question, and, upon a verified showing being made that such a question is necessarily involved in the determination of the action, are required to certify the case to the superior court, the same section of the Code which requires this to be done contains a proviso "that in cases of forcible entry and detainer, of which justices' courts have jurisdiction, any evidence, otherwise competent, may be given, and any question properly involved therein may be determined." Section 838, Code Civ. Proc. Statutory provisions relating to proceedings in forcible entry and detainer in this state are to be construed to include proceedings in "unlawful detainer." Ivory v. Brown, 137 Cal. 603, 70 Pac. 657. The proceedings in unlawful detainer, in which the rules of evidence relating to forcible entry and detainer are made applicable, are, and of necessity, must be, limited to those cases where the conventional relation of landlord and tenant subsists and in which such defenses only can be recognized as are available to a tenant against his landlord; in other words, to those cases in which the tenant is estopped to deny his landlord's title. To sustain the proceeding the facts must show an express letting of the lands, or show impliedly, at least, that the defendant occupies as a tenant of the plaintiff, and this must be something more than a mere quasi tenancy. Jones on Landlord and Tenant, § 563; Taylor's Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) § 720.

The ascertainment of what are "questions properly involved" in the action of unlawful detainer, what defenses may be interposed in such actions, and when a "tenant can dispute his landlord's title depends upon a variety of circumstances." Tewksbury v. Magraff, 33 Cal. 244. Many instances are considered in the cases of Knowles v. Murphy, 107 Cal. 107, 40 Pac. 111, and Teich v. Arms, 5 Cal. App. 475, 90 Pac. 962, which it is not necessary for us to review. Where the action is for unlawfully holding over after the lease has determined, the title may become involved in some cases, and where this is the case removal may be required, but each case is to be considered with relation to the issues necessarily involved in its determination. Henderson v. Allen, 23 Cal. 519. The decisive question in the case before the justice court here was: "Were the parties to the action landlord and tenant respectively?" Whatever the character of petitioners' holding, if it were not that of tenants of plaintiff, the action must fail. If the defendants prove their defense in this respect, it will defeat the action in the justice's court, because plaintiff can recover only by establishing such a relation. Johnson v. Chely, 43 Cal. 299, 306. If the justice court were without jurisdiction to determine whether or not the relation of landlord and tenant existed between the parties to an action in unlawful detainer, no summary proceeding of this character could ever be heard by that court, since this is the essential thing to the support of such an action. This being the issue raised, the justice court had jurisdiction to try it, and as that issue was determinative of the cause the question of title to the property will not necessarily arise on the trial. Menomonee River Lumber Co. v. Philbrook, 78 Wis. 142, 47 N. W. 188; Johnson v. Chely, 43 Cal. 306.

The justice court having jurisdiction, the case was improperly certified to the superior court, and the order of the latter court remanding it must be sustained.

Writ dismissed and application denied.

9 Cal. App. 57

LOS ANGELES NAT. BANK v. VANCE.
(Civ. 486.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 18, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 280*)—JOINT AND SEVERAL OBLIGATION—PERFORMANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1474, performance of an obligation by one of several persons who are jointly liable extinguishes the liability of all.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1250; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

2. CONTRIBUTION (§ 6*)—JOINT OBLIGORS—STATUTES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1432, a party to a joint, or joint and several obligation, who satisfies more than his share of the claim against all, may require a proportionate contribution from all the parties joined with him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contribution, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. SUBSCRIPTIONS (§ 12*)—NATURE OF LIABILITY.

A subscription, reciting that the signers, in consideration of the benefits resulting from the location of a federal building on certain property, agreed to pay the sum set opposite their respective names to a certain bank on the acceptance by the United States government of the property in question, on which a federal building was to be erected, obligated each signer individually, and did not constitute a joint, or joint and several obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subscriptions, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

4. SUBSCRIPTIONS (§ 10*)—EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

Where it was sought to raise $205,000 to purchase certain real estate to be conveyed to the government for the erection of a federal building, and each subscriber agreed to pay, on demand, the amount set opposite his name, etc., the liability of each subscriber could not exceed the amount of his subscription; but, the total sum subscribed being in excess of that required, each subscription was correspondingly reduced to a sum sufficient to make the required amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Subscriptions, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

5. CONTRIBUTION (§ 6*)—SUBSCRIBERS' LIABILITY.

Where each subscriber's liability on a subscription contract was several, payment of the sum subscribed by others did not constitute payment of the amount subscribed by testator, under Civ. Code, § 1473, so that testator's subscription was not extinguished so as to make it enforceable by other subscribers in an action for contribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contribution, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

6. PARTIES (§ 7*)—PLAINTIFFS—TRUSTEE OF EXPRESS TRUST.

A subscription contract provided that the signers agreed to pay the sum set opposite their names to a bank on the acceptance by the proper officers of the United States of an offer to convey to the United States certain land to be purchased with the subscription for federal use. Held, that the bank was thereby made a trustee of an express trust to collect from each subscriber the amount of his subscription, and was therefore the only person entitled to sue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 9-11; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles National Bank against Marie H. Vance, as executrix of the will of Silas A. Vance, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Taylor & Forgy, for appellant. Barker & Bowen and Gray, Barker & Bowen, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal on the judgment roll from a judgment rendered against defendant upon a stipulation of the facts; defendant's sole contention being that the facts stipulated do not support the judgment. For the purpose of securing the location of a federal building upon certain lots of land in the city of Los Angeles, bounded by Main, Temple, and New High streets, and consisting of 293 feet frontage on Main street, extending through to New High street, Silas A. Vance, defendant's testator, with others, signed an agreement, which, after reciting that they would be mutually benefited by the location of such building upon said lands, and that Frank P. Flint, Joseph Mesmer, and A. C. Harper had undertaken to procure the conveyance of said property to the United States government free of all incumbrances, in consideration of the sum of $1 and the construction thereon by said United States government of a federal building, and also reciting that the sum of $205,000 would be required to purchase said property, they contracted as follows: "We, the undersigned, in consideration of the benefits resulting from the location of a federal building upon said property, and for value received, hereby subscribe, undertake, and agree to pay, upon demand, the sum set opposite our respective names, in lawful money of the United States government, to the Los Angeles National Bank, at its banking house in the city of Los Angeles, state of California, upon the acceptance by the proper officers of the United States government of the hereinbefore referred to offer, to be made by said Frank P. Flint, Joseph Mesmer, and A. C. Harper; it being understood that, when the full amount of the purchase price of all of said real property has been paid by the subscribers hereto unto said bank, the same shall be paid on the order of Frank P. Flint, Joseph Mesmer, and A. C. Harper to the owners of said real property in consideration of deeds thereto to the United States government." The amount set opposite the name, and for which Vance subscribed the document, was the sum of $1,480. The total amount subscribed toward securing the location was in excess of that required. The amount collected from subscribers, other than said Vance, was approximately 90 per cent. of each subscription, which sum, if paid by all the subscribers, left in the hands of the plaintiff, after payment of the purchase price of the property and the incidental expenses connected therewith, a sum equal to 9 per cent. of each subscription to be refunded to the subscriber. In other words, the object stated, namely, the location of a federal building, was accomplished by the expenditure of 81 per cent. of the amount subscribed. A claim duly verified for the full amount of the subscription was presented to the executrix of the deceased, who refused to allow all or any part thereof, but wholly disallowed the entire claim. Whereupon plaintiff instituted this action, wherein judgment was rendered, upon the facts stipulated, for plaintiff, for the sum of 90 per cent. of the subscription of $1,480, further reduced by rebate of 9 per cent., representing the sum in excess of that required by the collection of 90 per cent. on all the subscriptions.

Appellant contends that, inasmuch as the sum required to purchase the land had been secured by collecting from other subscribers sums in excess of their proportional part of the contribution and the location of the building thereby secured, the estate of testator was therefore absolved from liability to pay anything to plaintiff, conceding, however, that an action for contribution might lie on behalf of the subscribers who had voluntarily paid. This contention is based upon the claim made by appellant that the action is joint and several. There is no question but that "performance of an obligation, by one of several persons who are jointly liable under it, extinguishes the liability of all" (Civ. Code, § 1474), and it is likewise statutory law that "a party to a joint, or joint and several obligation, who satisfies more than his share of the claim against all, may require a proportionate contribution from all the parties joined with him" (Civ. Code, § 1432). To apply this law, however, we must first determine that the obligation of Vance was joint, or joint and several. The contract in question contained by way of recital a statement to the effect that to secure such location of a federal building would require $205,000. The contract of Vance did not depend for its validity, however, upon securing subscriptions for this or any other sum. His contract was distinct and separate, whereby, "in consideration of the benefits resulting from the location of a federal building upon said property," he obligated himself individually and alone to pay to plaintiff the sum of $1,480. No other subscriber was in any way liable for the payment of this particular sum. The subscribers did not, as contended by appellant, agree to pay $205,000, but, each for himself alone, agreed to pay the amount set opposite his name and for which no other subscriber was liable. Failure of any one to pay could not enlarge the liability incurred by another. There can be no doubt that the contract of Vance was several. See Landwerlen v. Wheeler, 106 Ind. 523, 5 N. E. 888, where it is said: "There can be no doubt but that the contract is several where the obligation is: 'We, the undersigned, promise to pay the following subscriptions set opposite our names.'" In Thomas v. Anderson, 58 Cal. 99, the contract was: "We, the undersigned, promise and agree to pay the sum set opposite our names." And the court held that the obligations were separate and distinct. See, also, Moss v. Wilson, 40 Cal. 159. While the liability of Vance could not exceed the amount of his subscription, it might be less, for, if the total sum subscribed in such cases is in excess of that required, then the amount collected from each subscriber should be proportionately less. Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 27, p. 285; Hodges v. Nalty, 104 Wis.

464, 80 N. W. 726; Miller v. Ballard, 46 Ill. 377. The total sum subscribed being in excess of that required, it follows that each subscription was correspondingly reduced in amount.

Appellant next contends that, conceding the existence of the liability, it could only be enforced by other subscribers in an action for contribution. This position is likewise untenable. As we have seen, the contract being several, no other subscriber owed the duty of performing it, and the payment of the sums subscribed by the others could not be regarded as a payment of the amount subscribed by Vance (Civ. Code, § 1473), and hence his obligation was not extinguished, a prerequisite absolutely necessary to entitle any one to maintain a suit for contribution. Had the subscribers agreed jointly to pay to plaintiff, for the common benefit resulting from the location of a federal building upon said property, the sum required to secure such location, and the payments made by all except Vance had equaled the required sum, then the subscribers so paying would have, to the extent of paying his pro rata part, performed a duty devolving upon him for which, in case of his default, they were jointly liable and suit for contribution would lie. Grand Lodge v. Farnham, 70 Cal. 158, 11 Pac. 592. By the terms of the contract plaintiff was made trustee of an express trust to collect from each subscriber the amount of his subscription and pay it over for the purpose and in accordance with the terms of the contract. There was no privity between the appellant's testator and the owners of the real estate. Under the provisions of the agreement, plaintiff was the only party authorized to make the collection. As said in Swain v. Hill, 30 Mo. App. 436, plaintiff "became a trustee or agent for the entire body of subscribers to carry out the object of the subscription." In Miller v. Ballard, supra, it is said: "The persons named in the subscription paper as payees are, in such cases, considered merely as a committee, or as trustees, to whom the promise is made for the benefit of any one who may act upon its faith, and a suit may be maintained in their name." See, also, Christian College v. Hendley, 49 Cal. 347, where it was held: "The promise to pay being to the finance committee, the plaintiff could not sue, in the absence of a proper allegation showing the right of action had passed, by operation of law, to the plaintiff." To the same effect, see Lasar v. Johnson, 125 Cal. 549, 58 Pac. 161.

Upon every principle of right and justice, as well as upon authority, the judgment should be, and is, affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 70

TOWN OF SELMA v. BREWER. (Civ. 485.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Sept. 21, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 10*)—REGULATIONS—POLICE POWER.

Under Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing any city to make and enforce police regulations not in conflict with general laws, a city, in the exercise of police power, may suppress the retail sale of intoxicating liquors, as beverages, within its limits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 7-12; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 10*)—PROHIBITION—POLICE ORDINANCE—VALIDITY.

A town ordinance, in its title and provisions, indicated a purpose to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors of any kind within the town, except where they were used at private residences, or were required for medicinal, mechanical, or scientific purposes. One section prohibited any person, etc., to have, keep, possess, provide, or store liquors in the town, and other sections prohibited the sale thereof, except by pharmacists duly licensed to sell the same, and declared that for violation thereof a penalty of $40 should be imposed, recoverable in a civil action by the town, and that each day's violation should be a separate offense. Held, that the ordinance was not a revenue measure, but was a valid exercise of the city's police power.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-12; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 139*)—PROHIBITION—ORDINANCES—CONSTRUCTION.

A town ordinance prohibited any person to keep, possess, or store spirituous liquors in the town, except that a duly registered pharmacist, having an established pharmacy business in the town, and holding a druggist's permit, might "sell" any of such liquors, for certain specified purposes only, in accordance with specified conditions. Held that, since a registered pharmacist was permitted to sell liquors, he was necessarily authorized to possess the same, so that no action could be maintained against him for keeping or storing liquors in his possession, in violation of such ordinance, unless it was alleged and proved that he sold, or was engaged in the business of selling, such liquors in violation of the ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 139*)—SALE BY DRUGGIST—"DRUGS."

Intoxicating liquors, kept for medicinal purposes, being within the general term "drugs," a druggist or pharmacist, legitimately engaged in that business, has a right, without express authority of law, to have, keep, possess, and store intoxicating liquors as a part of his necessary drug stock to be sold by him, subject to the conditions, limitations, and restrictions prescribed by an ordinance regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes, and could only be subjected to the penalties prescribed therein, on proof that the liquors were dispensed in violation of the prescribed conditions, restrictions, and limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 139.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2205, 2206; vol. 8, p. 7643.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the town of Selma against T. R. Brewer. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Joel H. Smith and Graham & Wallace, for appellant. Everts & Ewing, for respondent.

HART, J. The object of this action is to recover from the defendant penalties aggregating the sum of $3,360 for the alleged violations of the provisions of ordinance No. 98 of the town of Selma, entitled "An ordinance for police regulation, relating to and making unlawful the keeping of places where intoxicating liquors are sold; the sale of intoxicating liquors, the storing, providing and having intoxicating liquors to be sold or at all, except in certain cases, in the town of Selma, county of Fresno, state of California, and within the corporate limits of said town; providing penalties for breaches thereof and for the recovery of said penalties," etc. A general and special demurrer was sustained to the complaint, without leave to amend, and judgment thereupon entered in favor of defendant. From said judgment this appeal is taken.

The purpose of the ordinance upon which this action is founded is, as is obvious from its title, to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors of any kind or character within the corporate limits of the town of Selma, except in cases where the same may be used at private residences or required for "medicinal, mechanical or scientific" purposes. Section 4 of said ordinance provides: "From and after the passage, publication and taking effect of this ordinance as hereinbefore provided, it shall be and hereby is declared to be unlawful for any person, firm, corporation, company, club, or association to have, keep, possess, provide or store any spirituous, malt, vinous, mixed, fermented, distilled, alcoholic or intoxicating liquors in the town of Selma," etc. Section 6 reads: "Any pharmacist, duly registered as such under the laws of the state of California, and having an established business as a pharmacist or druggist in the town of Selma, and holding a druggist's permit obtained from the board of trustees of said town of Selma, as hereinafter provided, may sell any of the liquors enumerated in the foregoing section of this ordinance for the following purposes only and subject to the provisions, restrictions and limitations hereinafter in this ordinance provided"—and thence follows a specification of the "restrictions and limitations" upon which a pharmacist may dispense intoxicating liquors. Section 8 provides in detail in what manner a pharmacist or druggist may proceed to obtain a permit to sell alcoholic and intoxicating liquors. By this section an application in writing for such permit, sworn to by the applicant, and setting forth certain facts, is required. Section 12 provides that any person, firm, corporation, club, or association who violates any of the provisions of the ordinance shall be subject to and liable for a penalty in the sum of $40, "which said penalty, together with costs, shall be recoverable in a civil action by the town of Selma." Section 14 provides, among other things, that, if the judgment in any such action "direct that the defendant therein be arrested, execution may issue against the person of such judgment debtor, after the return of execution against his property unsatisfied in whole or in part, and require the officer to whom the same is directed to arrest such judgment debtor and commit him to the county jail of Fresno county until he pay such judgment, according to the terms hereof, or be discharged by law." It is provided by section 15 that "every breach of this ordinance or of any of the terms, conditions, provisions, requirements, restrictions or limitations thereof, as the same are hereinbefore established, created, declared, defined and set forth shall, separately, or for each day of its continuance, be deemed to be and be a separate breach thereof. * * *

It is alleged by plaintiff that the defendant was at all the times mentioned in the complaint a pharmacist and druggist, and that from and including the 20th day of September, 1905, and on each and every day successively thereafter until and including the 12th day of December, 1905, in the building in which he conducted his business as pharmacist and druggist, within the corporate limits of plaintiff, and without any legal license or permit to do so, "have, keep, and store intoxicating liquors, and thereby became and is indebted to and liable to pay to plaintiff the sum of $40 for each and every of said unlawful acts, in having, keeping, and storing intoxicating liquors, as aforesaid, for the days aforesaid, and for each and every of said days, amounting to the total sum of $3,660." The complaint was, obviously, drafted under the provisions of section 4 of the ordinance, which, as seen, makes it unlawful for any person, firm, association, etc., "to have, keep, possess, or store any spirituous, malt, vinous, mixed, fermented, distilled, alcoholic or intoxicating liquors in the town of Selma." Under said section, it will be observed, the mere having, keeping, possessing, or storing such liquors, without reference to the disposition which may be made of them by the keeper or possessor, is made unlawful.

The language of the section is quite sweeping, and even those having the lawful right to keep and store such liquors—for instance, manufacturers thereof—might be said to come within the purview of the prohibition but for the fact that it may clearly be gathered from the other provisions of the ordinance and from the general purpose the measure is manifestly designed to accomplish, that section 4 of the ordinance has reference and application only to such persons, associations, etc., as might violate its provisions with a view of engaging in the retail traffic in the liquors mentioned in said ordinance. We are of the opinion, however, that the complaint does not state a cause of action against the defendant, even under the theory upon which the case is argued in the briefs. There is no doubt that the plaintiff has, in the exercise of the power of police, the right and power to suppress the retail sale of alcoholic and intoxicating liquors, as beverages, within its limits. It is not necessary to specifically refer to the many cases affirming this proposition, for it is so well settled and understood as a part of American law that the citation of authorities is not required. And we are further of the opinion that the ordinance here, taken as a whole, is consistent with the provisions of the Constitution and represents only a proper exercise of the power expressly vested by that instrument in the cities, counties, towns, and townships of the state. Const. art. 11, § 11. The case of Merced County v. Helm, 102 Cal. 161 et seq., 36 Pac. 399, involved an ordinance adopted by the county supervisors, the purpose of which was altogether different from that designed to be achieved by the present ordinance. The ordinance in that case was unquestionably, as plainly indicated by its provisions, a revenue measure. The action was inaugurated for the purpose of recovering the sum of $3,000 claimed to be a debt due to the county from the defendants by virtue of their having sold intoxicating liquors within the county without having first paid the license tax required by said ordinance "for the quarter commencing March 1, 1903." The Supreme Court, in its analysis of said ordinance and the suit thereunder, says: "By its very terms the ordinance is a revenue measure, and this suit is simply a civil action to recover a liability alleged to have been incurred by the defendants by virtue of the provisions of the ordinance, and the collection of a tax does not come within the exercise of police power as a prohibitory measure. That power is exercised in the enforcement of a penalty prescribed for a noncompliance with the law, or for the doing of some prohibited act. San Luis Obispo County v. Hendricks, 71 Cal. 245, 11 Pac. 682. As the county has chosen by this ordinance to require a license tax for engaging in certain kinds of business, and that this tax shall be collected by a suit, and has fixed no penalty for engaging in the business, the ordinance is not to be regarded as the exercise of its police power, but rather as its desire to regulate the business and derive a revenue therefrom."

Upon the slightest reflection it is at once apparent that the ordinance involved here is not a revenue measure, but is the result, as we have declared, of the exercise of the police power. Its object is, in other words, to entirely suppress the retail sale of intoxicating liquors, to be used as beverages, within the corporate limits of Selma, and for the violation of its provisions a certain penalty is attached. The suit in the Merced Case was for an alleged debt, in an action indebitatus assumpsit in form. Here the action is to enforce the payment of a penalty for non-compliance with the terms of the ordinance. But, as before stated, we nevertheless think the general demurrer was properly sustained, even if it could be held that the provision as to the keeping, possessing, and storing of alcoholic and intoxicating liquors applies to regularly registered druggists and pharmacists. The complaint charges the defendant with having, keeping, possessing, and storing the contraband liquors, "without any legal license or permit so to do." Section 6 of said ordinance provides, as observed, that certain pharmacists or druggists may sell the interdicted liquors upon and under certain specified conditions, limitations, and restrictions, among which is, as a prerequisite to so engaging in such sale, the procuring of a permit from the board of trustees of plaintiff. We think that, in order to have stated a cause of action against the defendant, the complaint should contain a direct averment that he sold or was engaged in the business of selling such liquors contrary to the provisions of the ordinance or without having first obtained the permit so to do from the governing body of plaintiff. It does not necessarily follow from the averment that he has and possesses and stores such liquors that he is selling or intends to sell them. There is no permit required for the mere keeping and storing the liquors. In fact, such a permit would be inconsistent, except in the case of those expressly excepted from the operation of the ordinance, with the provisions and the general purpose thereof; but necessarily the defendant, as a pharmacist within the description of the ordinance, would be entitled to keep, possess, and store the prohibited liquors. The very fact that the ordinance declares that he may sell such liquors invests him, ex necessitate, with the indispensable right to have and possess the same. His offense, if any at all, would be in dispensing or selling the same contrary to the conditions imposed by the ordinance or without the required permit, or for both reasons, assuming for the present that a permit to sell such liquors by a pharmacist or druggist may be required. This is neither an ultra-technical nor a metaphysical analysis of the complaint, for the very first and cardinal rules of pleading demand that the averments of the gist or gravamen of a complaint shall be clear and direct. Particularly should this be true where, as here, the recovery sought is upon a liability in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, the right to sue for which is purely of statutory origin. The complaint here, in undertaking to state a case against the defendant under the ordinance under consideration, is obviously lacking in those elements of good pleading. In our opinion, as observed, it states nothing that the defendant has not the right to do even under the terms of the ordinance, and therefore cannot resist the force of the general demurrer; but, as already intimated, we do not hesitate to take a step farther.

We are familiar with no principle of law from which authority may be deduced for prohibiting a pharmacist or druggist, regularly engaged in the business of compounding prescriptions and selling drugs, from having and possessing and selling intoxicating liquors for the legitimate purposes of his business, and from storing or keeping in stock such quantities of the same as the exigencies of his trade may require. It is, we think, a matter of common knowledge, as much so as are the uses to which quinine is medicinally put, that many, if not all, of the liquors mentioned in this ordinance are often deemed to be necessary to be used for medicinal purposes. Of course, as in the case of certain poisons ordinarily sold at drug stores, the sale of liquors for medicinal purposes by pharmacists or druggists may be, by the public authorities, confined to such purposes and otherwise subjected to proper and reasonable regulation, or to the imposition of such conditions and restrictions as will safeguard, protect, and preserve the rights of the public. It is well known that the fundamental property of nearly all bitters, a legitimate subject of traffic by all druggists, is alcohol, and that the excessive use of them by an individual will produce intoxication, and there is no doubt that many prescriptions contain as an essential element, according to the judgment of physicians, some character of intoxicating liquors, and no doubt there are cases of physical illness which require liquor of some kind in its unmixed and unadulterated form. The medical doctor's prescription for spiritus frumenti (whisky) or aqua vitæ (brandy), when given for a legitimate medicinal purpose, is not uncommon, and certainly cannot be unlawful per se, and surely it could make no difference whether the whisky or the brandy were dispensed by the pharmacist and used by the purchaser, in Latin or in plain English, if the purpose of such sale and use were purely medicinal. The sale of opiates and other more drastic poisons by regularly licensed druggists is hedged about by restrictions which, as a protection to the public, the law has an unchallengeable right to impose; but it has never been supposed for an instant that the sale of such "drugs" could be entirely prevented, any more than that the sale of the thousands of different kinds of specifics and patent medicines and nostrums could be stopped, where it could not be established that, even when used for the particular medicinal purpose which it is claimed and advertised they will subserve, they would produce positive harm to such as might so use them.

The Legislature may and does (section 307, Pen. Code) prohibit the sale of opium for certain designated purposes, and under certain indicated circumstances; but it would not be contended that that narcotic may not be kept and sold by a druggist as one of the essential elements of his business, for it is, as we know, as a matter of common knowledge, a substance necessary to be used in the compounding by a pharmacist of medicines and prescriptions. So, as to liquors. It is known, as before observed, that they are frequently found necessary to be used in the compounding of physician's prescriptions, and often found absolutely necessary in cases where the particular disease to be treated peculiarly affects the heart action. Liquors therefore, when kept for medicinal purposes, come as clearly within the generic term "drugs" as any other animal, vegetable, or mineral substance comprising the elements of which medicines and prescriptions are ordinarily compounded.

Our conclusion is, as must be obvious from the foregoing views, that a druggist or pharmacist, engaged legitimately in that business, has the right, without express authority of law, to have, keep, possess, and store certain of the liquors mentioned in the ordinance under review, as a part of the necessary "drugs" or stock in trade of his business, to be sold by him, subject to the conditions, limitations, and restrictions prescribed by said ordinance, for medicinal purposes; that the defendant can therefore be subjected to the penalty or penalties therein prescribed only where it may be shown that he has dispensed or is dispensing such liquors in violation of said conditions, restrictions and limitations.

We do not deem it necessary, in view of the conclusion here reached, to notice the point raised by the special demurrer that several causes of action have been improperly united.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 111

NATIONAL CYCLE MFG. CO. v. SAN DIEGO CYCLE CO. et al. (Civ. 515.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 25, 1908.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 27*)—ACCOUNTS.

An action on an account for goods sold and delivered in 1894, in the absence of an acknowledgment of the indebtedness in writing, was barred in 1896 by the two-year limitations. Code Civ. Proc. § 339.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 133; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 151*) — ACKNOWLEDGMENT—EFFECT.

An acknowledgment in writing of a debt by the debtor before it is barred raises an implied promise to pay within the statutory period from the time of acknowledgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 617; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 151*) — ACKNOWLEDGMENT—EFFECT—REVERSAL OF ACTION.

Goods were sold to defendant in 1894, and prior to 1896 it acknowledged the indebtedness in writing as required by Code, § 360, and an action was brought on account for the goods in April, 1899. Held, that the acknowledgment only extended defendant's liability for the period of limitations after the acknowledgment, so that the action was barred by the two-year limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 617; Dec. Dig. § 151.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by the National Cycle Manufacturing Company against the San Diego Cycle Company and others. From a judgment for part of defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appealed. Affirmed.

Cassius Carter and Fred O'Farrell, for appellant. Wright, Schoonover & Winnek, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants other than Easton, and from an order denying a new trial.

This appeal presents various interesting questions, all of which are ably presented and insisted upon by counsel for appellant. An examination of the record, however, discloses that, were the correctness of appellant's position conceded as to all of the questions involved other than that of the statute of limitations, nevertheless the finding of the court in relation to such bar of the statute is sufficient to defeat plaintiff's recovery, if the finding in relation thereto has support from the evidence. With this in view no good result would follow a detailed investigation into and determination of the other questions presented.

The action is based upon an account for goods sold and delivered during the year 1894. Assuming, as before stated, that appellant is warranted in its contention that a partnership existed between the defendants and the liability for the price and value of the goods sold attached jointly to all the defendants, nevertheless the two-year bar of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in the absence of any acknowledgment in writing of the indebtedness, attached in the year 1896. There is, however, in the record certain letters signed by the San Diego Cycle Company, claimed by plaintiff to be the co-partnership, which may fairly be construed as acknowledgments upon the part of the San Diego Cycle Company of its liability. All of these written acknowledgments, however, are of date preceding January 1, 1896. This action was commenced in April, 1899. The court finds all of the accounts barred by the provisions of section 339, and the question presented is as to the effect of such acknowledgment in writing so made by the debtor as affecting his continuing liability on account of the indebtedness. It is established that from such an acknowledgment an implied promise to pay arises. Section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "No acknowledgment or promise is sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, by which to take the case out of the operation of this title, unless the same is contained in some writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby." In McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 95 Am. Dec. 170, our Supreme Court, in construing this section, says: "The acknowledgment or promise made while the contract is a subsisting liability establishes a continuing contract; and, when made after the bar of the statute, a new contract"—while in Southern Pacific Co. v. Prosser, 122 Cal. 417, 52 Pac. 836, 55 Pac. 145, Mr. Chief Justice Beatty, in speaking for the court, says: "When a debtor makes a new promise before an action is barred upon the original contract, he does not make himself liable a second time for the same debt, and the old promise is not merged in the new. He merely continues his original liability for a longer term. In other words, he merely waives so much of the period of limitations as has run in his favor." In our opinion these cases determine that the effect of the acknowledgments upon the part of the San Diego Cycle Company was but to continue their liability from the date of the last acknowledgment until the expiration of two years therefrom; and, it affirmatively appearing that such period expired before the commencement of the action, all of the causes of action set out in the complaint were barred, and the trial court did not err in so finding.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 31

POHEIM v. MEYERS. (Civ. 501.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Sept. 14, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 123*)—CONTRACT OF SALE—RESCISSION BY VENDEE—FAILURE OF TITLE—PLEADINGS.

Where a contract for the sale of land provided for an examination of title by a title insurance company, and that the issuance of a policy by the company without objection should be conclusive of the validity of the title, a complaint in an action by the purchaser to rescind the contract, and to recover the deposit for failure of title, which did not allege that the company examined the title or objected thereto, or that the title was such that the company would not issue a policy thereon without objection, was defective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 224; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 46*)—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1875, providing that courts take judicial notice of public and private official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state, courts take judicial notice of the existence and effect of holidays declared by the Governor following the earthquake and conflagration of April 18, 1906.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 346*)—WAIVER—PLEADINGS AND PROOF.

A plaintiff relying on a waiver of conditions of his contract must both plead and prove such waiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1732; Dec. Dig. § 346.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 123*)—CONTRACT OF SALE—RESCISSION BY VENDEE.

A vendee in default in the performance of the conditions of a contract for the sale of land, whereof time is of the essence, and who has not tendered the balance of the money payable under the contract, cannot on the ground of failure of title recover a payment made thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Joseph F. Poheim against R. C. Meyers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Maddox & Loessel, for appellant. Charles W. Slack and Perry Evans, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $500, paid by his assignor to defendant, as a deposit or first payment on a contract to buy a certain piece of land for the total sum of $14,625. Judgment went for defendant, and this appeal is by plaintiff from such judgment, and was taken within 60 days from the entry thereof.

The complaint is in two counts, each of which was demurred to as not stating a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained as to the second count, and appellant claims that the court erred in so doing.

The second count of the complaint is framed upon the theory that the plaintiff, as the assignee of the vendee, had rescinded the contract because of a failure of consideration, in that the title of plaintiff was not a merchantable title, in that it was not ascertainable from the public records of the city and county of San Francisco. Attached to the complaint, and made a part of the second count thereof, is the written contract entered into between plaintiff's assignor and defendant. This contract provides that "thirty days from date are allowed to examine title to said property, which examination is to be made by the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, and the issuing of a policy by the said company without objection shall be conclusive of the validity of the title. If such policy be issued without objection, the balance of the said purchase price shall thereupon be paid to the said owner, who shall deliver to the purchaser a sufficient grant, bargain and sale deed for the said property, at the sole cost and expense of the purchaser." Other provisions relate to the removal of objections if any should be reported, but from the foregoing provisions of the contract it is apparent that the title agreed to be conveyed was such as the designated company would be willing to insure without objection. It is nowhere alleged in the second count of the complaint that said company ever examined said title, or was ever requested so to do, or made any report thereon, or any objection thereto, or that the title was in fact such that said company would not issue a policy thereon without objection. The parties have a right to contract for such title as they see fit, and, when they have made such a contract, the vendee may not rescind for failure of title without alleging a failure of such title as he contracted for. His attempt in the case at bar by certain allegations which he has made as to the meaning of the contract as it concerns the title cannot strengthen his case. The contract is a part of his complaint, and is plain and unambiguous. It speaks for itself. He has not alleged that the title was not such as is called for by the contract. The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the second count of the complaint.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

By the first count plaintiff seeks to recover the same $500, and makes the contract a part also of this count. The contract is dated April 4, 1906, and besides the provision allowing 30 days for examination of title, and making the action of the designated company thereon conclusive as to the validity of the title, hereinbefore set forth, it provides: "If any objections are reported, said owner shall remove the same within thirty days thereafter, and, when so removed, the balance of the said purchase price shall be paid to said owner and said deed delivered as aforesaid. If such objections be removable and are not so removed within said last-mentioned time, said deposit shall at the option of the purchaser be returned to said purchaser, and all rights and obligations hereunder shall be at an end. If such objections be of a character that cannot be removed within 30 days, this agreement shall be at an end, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding. If said purchaser shall fail to comply with any condition at the time and in the manner herein provided for, said owner shall be released from all obligations hereunder and all rights hereunder, legal and equitable, of said purchaser, shall be forfeited as liquidated and agreed damages and not as a penalty for such default. Time is of the essence of this contract."

Plaintiff does not in his complaint allege that he or his assignor complied with the requirements of the contract as to searching title and reporting any objection thereto within the time allowed by the contract, but alleges that by reason of the act of God it was impossible for the vendee (Katherine D.

Poheim) to procure an examination of said title, and to report the result thereof to defendant, at any time prior to July 3, 1906, but that on said day she did procure from the California Title Insurance & Trust Company a report of their examination of said title, and forthwith reported to defendant a valid objection thereto, and demanded that he remove the same within 30 days. She further alleged that he did not remove said objection within 30 days. The only excuse pleaded by plaintiff for not making objection to the title within the time allowed by the contract is prevention of performance by reason of the act of God. The court, however, found that it was not impossible by the act of God, or for any cause, for said Katherine D. Poheim to procure from said California Title Insurance & Trust Company an examination of said title, or to report the result of such examination to the defendant, within the time specified in the contract, and that her failure to obtain such report and to report the result of such examination to defendant within the required time was the result of her own neglect. The court further found that the vendee reported the objection to the title to defendant on July 7, 1906, and that he removed the same on July 11, 1906. Appellant challenges both of these findings as not supported by the evidence, but we think that both are fully supported by evidence in the record. By the terms of the contract 30 days from April 4, 1906, were allowed for examination of title. By the successive holidays declared by the Governor of the state, following the earthquake and conflagration of April 18, 1906, her time for the examination of and report on the title was extended to and included the 4th day of June, 1906, under the terms of the contract. Of the existence and effect of these holidays the court must take judicial notice. Code Civ. Proc. § 1875; Mullan v. State, 114 Cal. 578, 46 Pac. 670, 34 L. R. A. 262; French v. Senate, 146 Cal. 604, 80 Pac. 1031, 69 L. R. A. 556. Plaintiff, acting for his mother, the vendee, made application to the California Title Insurance & Trust Company for an examination of and policy on the title to the property, according to his own testimony on April 6, 1906, though his written application bears date April 11, 1906. While the evidence shows that the said company ceased business for a while after April 18, 1906, it also shows that it resumed business on May 28, 1906, and that it had completed its examination of said title and had its report completed and ready for delivery on June 4, 1906. But neither the vendee nor plaintiff applied to said company for a report thereon until July following. It is thus clear that the vendee was not prevented by any act of God from getting her report on June 4, 1906. It was then ready and in the hands of her own agent, the California Title Insurance & Trust Company, employed by her to make such examination and report. Further, though there is evidence that said company ceased doing business for a time after April 18, 1906, there is not one word of evidence in the record that it was compelled to do so, or that its plant was in any way injured or disturbed by any act of God, or by any earthquake or fire. If plaintiff relied on the earthquake as the act of God, he has not shown that such earthquake interfered with the work of the Title Insurance Company in examining this title. For aught that appears in the record, the examination may in fact have been made before April 18th. But, however this may be, the Title Insurance & Trust Company was itself employed by the vendee, and was her agent for the purpose of examining and reporting on the title. That it was not prevented by any act of God from making such examination and report on or before the 4th day of June, 1906, which was the last day for making such report, is conclusively shown by the fact that the examination had been made and the report was prepared and ready on that day.

As to the finding to the effect that the objection was removed within 30 days from notice thereof, the evidence shows that the objection was that no "city deed" had ever been given for the property. Notice of the objection was given July 7, 1906, and on the 11th day of the same month defendant deposited with the California Title Insurance & Trust Company $100 to remove such objection. The representative of the California Title Insurance & Trust Company testified to the effect that on the payment of this $100 the company would itself get the deed from the city, and would issue the policy without objection. As we understand the evidence of this witness, it was to the effect that immediately on the payment of the $100 the company was willing to issue its policy on the title to the property without exception or objection for want of the city deed. On this point defendant testified that, when he made the deposit of the $100 with the company, "they" stated that "they" were then willing to issue the policy without an exception on account of the city deed. This removed the only objection made to the title. Of this, of course, the California Title Insurance & Trust Company had notice. It was employed by the vendee to examine and report on the title, and was her agent for that purpose, and its knowledge was her knowledge. All uncertainty as to the effect of the clause in the contract, "the issuing of a policy by the said company without objection shall be conclusive of the validity of the title," was removed by a stipulation that it meant "the willingness of the company to issue a policy without objection upon the receipt of an appropriate deed from the seller shall be conclusive of the validity of the title."

Appellant further urges that the finding as to the removal of the objection to the title is contrary to the admission in the answer. This we think is without merit. The contention is based on the answer as originally filed, but at the trial defendant was permitted to amend his answer by adding at the end of paragraph VI thereof the following: "And the defendant further alleges that, if the said objection had any validity, the said objection was removed by defendant within thirty days after the receipt by him of said alleged objection." Appellant suggests that the evidence shows that defendant waived the default of plaintiff, but no such issue is raised by the pleadings. When a plaintiff relies on a waiver of conditions of his contract, such waiver must be both pleaded and proved. Lanitz v. King, 93 Mo. 513, 6 S. W. 263.

Plaintiff does not claim to have ever tendered the balance of the money payable under the contract, and, being in default in the performance of conditions upon a contract in which time is of the essence of the contract, he cannot recover the payment made to defendant. Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Bradford v. Parkhurst, 96 Cal. 102, 30 Pac. 1106, 31 Am. St. Rep. 189; Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335, 32 Pac. 320; Garberino v. Roberts, 109 Cal. 125, 41 Pac. 857.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 130

PEOPLE v. SHEFFIELD. (Cr. 95.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California: Sept. 28, 1908.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 87*)—TIME OF OFFENSE—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATION.

An information charging rape of a child "on or about" a specified date within the statute of limitations was sufficient, since under Pen. Code, § 955, the precise time of an offense need only be stated, where time is a material ingredient of the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 244-255; Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

2. RAPE (§ 4*)—RAPE OF CHILD—MARRIAGE OF CHILD—MATERIALITY.

In a prosecution for rape upon a child, it is immaterial whether she had been married; it being sufficient that she was under the age of consent, and not accused's wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—INTEREST—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be repelled by any interest, bias, or prejudice, while going beyond Code Civ. Proc. § 1847, providing that the presumption may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies, the character of his testimony or evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives, or by contradictory evidence, and that the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility, was not error, since it merely amounts to instructing that the jury may consider interest and bias in weighing the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1780, 1891; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 782*)—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—RAPE.

It was not error in a trial for rape of a child to instruct that, if the jury believed prosecutrix and was satisfied from all the evidence beyond reasonable doubt of accused's guilt, they should so find.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1877, 1878; Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

5. RAPE (§ 7*)—STATUTES—APPLICABILITY.

Pen. Code, § 263, making sexual penetration, however slight, sufficient to complete rape, is applicable to all the subdivisions of section 261, defining the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 7; Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

6. RAPE (§ 59*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a rape trial, an instruction that proof of any penetration, however slight, was sufficient, was not prejudicial error for omitting the word "sexual" before "penetration."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

7. RAPE (§ 2*)—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—ELEMENTS OF CRIME—KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS.

Pen. Code, § 261, defining "rape," is not unconstitutional in making the act a felony, regardless of whether accused intended a crime or knew of any facts which would constitute his acts a crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

John H. Sheffield was convicted of rape, and he appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

H. H. Appel and J. C. Crouch, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of rape committed upon a female child under the age of 16 years. He appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial.

The information filed, and upon which defendant was tried, charged that the offense was committed "on or about the 12th day of October, 1907." It is insisted that the information is defective because the precise time was not stated. This is not necessary under section 955 of the Penal Code, except where the time is a material ingredient in the offense. That it is not such an ingredient, where rape by means of force is charged, is determined in the case of People v. Dinsmore, 102 Cal. 382, 36 Pac. 661. No convincing reason is suggested why a different rule should apply where the female is by statute rendered incapable of consent. The information charges that at the time of the commission of the act the female was under the age of consent, and it clearly appears that the offense was committed within the three years immediately preceding the filing of the information. This is sufficient. It is unnecessary to allege that the female had never been married to any one before the commission of the act. It is sufficient to aver and prove that she was under the age of consent and not at the time the wife of the one having sexual intercourse with her. The offense is complete under the statute, even though the female may have been at the time the wife of another.

The charge of the court "that the presumption that a witness speaks the truth may be repelled by his interest in the case, if any, or his bias or prejudice, if any," while it goes beyond section 1847, Code Civ. Proc., is not therefore error. "It amounts only to telling them [the jury] that interest and bias may be considered by them in weighing the testimony, as undoubtedly may be done." People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 540, 66 Pac. 794.

We see no error in the charge which instructed, "if you believe the prosecutrix, and are satisfied from all of the evidence in the case, beyond a reasonable doubt, of the defendant's guilt, then you should so find"; nor in that other charge, "that proof of any penetration, however slight, is sufficient in a case of rape." With reference to the latter charge, it may be said the crime of rape is defined by section 261 of the Penal Code, and that part of section 263 embodied in the charge last referred to is applicable alike when the crime is committed under any of the circumstances set forth in section 261.

The omission of the word "sexual" as preceding the word "penetration" could not have been prejudicial. As said in People v. Rangod, 112 Cal. 673, 44 Pac. 1071: "We do not regard the omission as material, in view of the other instructions defining the offense, and which, read in connection with the one under consideration, very clearly disclosed to the jury that it was sexual penetration which was referred to in the latter." The proposition advanced, that section 261 of the Penal Code is unconstitutional, in that it makes the act a felony independent of whether or not the accused intended any crime, or had any notice or knowledge of any fact or facts which would constitute his acts a crime, is met and determined adversely to appellant in People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915, and People v. Griffin, 117 Cal. 586, 49 Pac. 712, 59 Am. St. Rep. 216, wherein it is held that in cases like this and of kindred character "the illegal motive is present, and that illegal motive becomes a criminal intent when the facts, at whose peril he acts, are shown to exist." "The protection of society, of the family, and of the infant demand that one who has carnal intercourse under such circumstances shall do so in peril of the fact, and he will not be heard against the evidence to urge his belief that the victim of his outrage had passed the period which would make his act a crime."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

An examination of the record discloses no prejudicial error therein, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 136

SHOPBELL v. BOYD et al. (Civ. 513.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 30, 1908.)

1. PLEADING (§ 214*)—GENERAL DEMURRER—ADMISSION OF FACTS.

In determining the sufficiency of a complaint as against a general demurrer the truth of the facts alleged therein is admitted for the purposes of the demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 525-534; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

2. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 37*)—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

In a suit to compel a rescission of an exchange of real property for fraud, the complaint held not subject to general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-81; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 171*)—ACTS OF AGENT—FRAUD—AFFIRMANCE.

Where a complaint to compel a rescission of an exchange of property alleged that B., in making certain false representations on the faith which plaintiff consented to the exchange, acted as defendant's agent, and defendant accepted and retained the property, conveyed to her in the exchange, the complaint was not objectionable because the false representations were made by B., and not by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 648; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 259*)—RESCISSION—GROUNDS.

Civ. Code, § 1639, provides that a party to a contract may rescind if his consent was obtained through fraud exercised by or with the connivance of the party as to whom he rescinds, or of any other party to the contract jointly interested with him. Held, not to limit the right of rescission to cases where the insolvency of the defendant is alleged, but that, if the party defrauded acts promptly on obtaining knowledge of the fraud, he may, in the absence of a waiver, either rescind or complete the contract and sue for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1160-1167; Dec. Dig. § 259.*]

5. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY (§ 3*)—RESCISSION—FRAUD.

Where defendants misrepresented property conveyed to plaintiff in exchange, as free from incumbrances except as stated, when, in fact, it was subject to other liens to the extent of $100, which defendants fraudulently concealed, such fraud was ground for rescission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Suit by Martha A. Shopbell against Mattie H. Boyd and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Daniel M. Hammack, for appellants. Davis, Kemp & Post, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to rescind a contract for the exchange of real estate and compel a reconveyance of property granted pursuant to the terms of said contract. The defendants appeal upon the judgment roll from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff.

It appears from the complaint that defendant Boyd was the owner of certain property situated in Los Angeles, subject to a deed of trust held by the Continental Building & Loan Association. The defendant Bunch, who was the agent of Boyd in the transaction, represented to plaintiff that Boyd's property was of the value of $4,000, that it was leased to a good responsible tenant for a term of one year at a monthly rental of $25, that her title to said property was free and clear of all incumbrances except the deed of trust, and that plaintiff believed said representations to be true, and relied upon the same, and was by reason thereof induced to enter into an agreement to exchange certain property situated in Chicago, Ill., and then owned by plaintiff, for the real estate of Boyd. The agreement provided that plaintiff and defendant Boyd should execute deeds to their respective properties, which should be delivered to and held by defendant Bunch, as per terms of the agreement. At the request of Bunch, plaintiff executed and left with him her deed to be by him held until the titles to the said properties were examined. Plaintiff then caused an examination of Boyd's title to be made, and thereby learned that the property had been sold for taxes, and also sold under an assessment levied for street improvement. It is also alleged that the property was not leased as represented, and that the only rental obtainable for the property was $15 per month, and that instead of the value of the property being $4,000, as represented to her by Bunch, its value was $2,500. Plaintiff alleges that she depended wholly upon the representations made by Bunch, and, believing them to be true, was thereby induced to enter into said agreement and execute and deliver to Bunch the said deed whereby she conveyed her property to defendant Boyd; that defendants made the representations with the purpose and intent to cheat and defraud her; that, upon the discovery that said representations were false, she tendered to defendants a deed reconveying the property deeded to her by defendant Boyd, together with $15 alleged to be the rental value of the property for the time she had held the same, together with notice of rescission, and demanded a return of her deed placed with defendant Bunch; and that defendants refused to accept such tender and refused to return her deed, but caused the same to be filed for record in the recorder's office of the county wherein the property described is located. The court found the allegation as to the misrepresentation of the value of the property to be true, but also found that plaintiff at the time she placed her executed deed in the hands of Bunch was aware of the true value of said property. For this reason it found, as a conclusion of law, that plaintiff waived the alleged fraud due to false representation as to the value of the property.

Appellants insist that by reason of this finding the allegation of misrepresentation as to the value of the property must be disregarded and the sufficiency of the complaint considered as based upon the allegations with reference to the false statements as to title and lease. Upon this and other grounds hereinafter noticed they urge that their general demurrer interposed should have been sustained. The sufficiency of a complaint tested by a general demurrer must be determined by the alleged facts contained therein, the truth of which, for the purposes of the demurrer, is admitted. Whether an alleged fact be true or false is immaterial in the determination of the question raised by the demurrer. Hence, if it be assumed that the allegations regarding misrepresentation as to the lease and title are, standing alone, insufficient to constitute a good complaint, we must, nevertheless, hold the complaint not obnoxious to a general demurrer, for the reason that it stated a cause of action by reason of the allegation as to false representation as to value of the property.

It is further urged that the demurrer should have been sustained as to defendant Boyd for the reason that it appears from the complaint that the false representations upon which plaintiff relied were made by defendant Bunch, and hence, there was no cause of action stated against the defendant Boyd. It clearly appears from the complaint that Bunch acted in the transaction as the agent of Boyd, and she will not be heard to disclaim responsibility for his acts and at the same time retain the benefits accruing therefrom. It is fundamental law that a principal is bound by the acts of his agent so far as he acts within the scope of the agency.

Boyd's deed of conveyance passed to plaintiff, and it is claimed by reason thereof plaintiff's cause of action was on the deed covenants for damages, unless the insolvency of defendants be alleged; in other words, that by successfully perpetrating the fraud to the extent of delivering a deed to plaintiff she was thereby deprived of maintaining an action for fraud, but must rely upon the covenants contained in the contract fraudulently imposed upon her. Conceding, however, that plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law, such fact does not deprive her of the remedy afforded by rescission. Section 1689 of the Civil Code provides that: "A party to a contract may rescind the same * * * (1) if the consent of the party rescinding * * * was * * * obtained through * * * fraud * * * exercised by or with the connivance of the party as to whom he rescinds, or of any other party to the contract jointly interested with such party." This section does not limit the right to maintain such action to cases where the insolvency of the defendant is alleged. Where the assent of a party to a contract has been procured by means of fraud, such party, acting promptly upon obtaining knowledge thereof, and in the absence of any acts constituting a waiver of such fraud, may either rescind or complete the contract on his part and sue upon the covenants for damages. Fountain v. Semi-Tropic Land & Water Co., 99 Cal. 677, 34 Pac. 497; Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 48 Pac. 54.

It is unnecessary to discuss other points urged in support of appellants' claim that the complaint fails to state a cause of action. Suffice it to say that, while it may be objectionable in form, it is not subject to the general demurrer interposed.

It is contended that the findings do not support the judgment. As to the lease, the court finds the representations were made as alleged, and that they were knowingly false and were intended to deceive plaintiff and induced her to make the exchange and were the procuring causes of the transaction. It is also found that the property was misrepresented as being free and clear of incumbrances, except as stated; whereas, in fact, there were other incumbrances against the property to the extent of $100, which fact was known by defendants, but they fraudulently, with intent to deceive, concealed from plaintiff the fact that said property was subject to an additional incumbrance of $100. Counsel insists that these findings show the breach to be one of minor importance and such as can be readily compensated in damages. In support of this position he cites Fountain v. Semi-Tropic L. & W. Co., supra. That case bears no analogy to this. It was there sought to rescind for failure, in part, of the consideration due to a breach of covenant on the part of the defendant to pipe water to land. There was no element of fraud in the case at all. The action at bar is not one for breach of covenant, but one whereby plaintiff seeks to be freed from the obligation of covenants obtained from her by means of fraud. Counsel's argument is based upon an erroneous theory that the action should be upon the covenants contained in the deed, which plaintiff seeks to have canceled. "The fraud is the essential thing, and while it must be coupled with loss, injury, damage, the precise amount of such damage is of secondary importance." Wainscott v. Occidental, etc., Association, 98 Cal. 253, 33 Pac. 88.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 83

BACON v. DAVIS et al. (Civ. 491.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Sept. 22, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 19, 1908.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF (§ 115*) — CONVEYANCES OF REAL ESTATE—SUFFICIENCY OF INSTRUMENT—"THEREUNTO."

Civ. Code, § 1741, provides that no agreement for the sale of real estate is valid unless in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged, "or his agent thereunto authorized in writing," and validates any agreement for the sale of real estate which is either subscribed by the owner or his agent, authorized in writing; the word "thereunto" being an elliptical form of expression for the phrase "to do that."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 242; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

2. BROKERS (§ 14*) — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

To determine the extent of the authority of an agent employed to procure a purchaser of real estate, the court must look to the terms of the instrument evidencing the employment as they have been employed by the parties thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

3. BROKERS (§ 14*) — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

The fair import of the terms, in a contract employing an agent to procure a purchaser, must clearly reveal the intent of the owner to specifically empower the agent to contract for the sale of the property, in the ordinary acceptance of that term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

4. BROKERS (§ 14*) — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

To reach the intent of the parties to a contract for the employment of a broker to procure a purchaser of real estate, the court must invoke the ordinary rules of interpretation of the contract, as established by Civ. Code, §§ 1638, 1641, 1644.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

5. BROKERS (§ 14*) — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—CONSTRUCTION—"TO SELL."

Though the expression "to sell" is sometimes used in the sense of an executed contract of sale, or an agreement to sell as defined by Civ. Code, § 1727, the expression, when used in a contract giving a real estate broker the exclusive right "to sell" real estate, has acquired a restrictive meaning, and standing alone the word "to sell" are not sufficient to authorize the broker to enter into a contract of sale binding the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6406, 6407.]

6. BROKERS (§ 14*)—EMPLOYMENT—AUTHORITY OF BROKER.

The ordinary authority of a real estate broker deputed to sell real estate is simply to find a purchaser, and he has no power to bind his principal by a contract of sale, unless it was intended to confer such additional authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

7. BROKERS (§ 14*)—EMPLOYMENT—AUTHORITY OF BROKER—"SALE."

Under Code, §§ 1721, 1727, defining a "sale" as a contract by which one engages for a price to transfer to another a certain thing, etc., an instrument executed by an owner employing a broker to procure a purchaser of real estate, which recites that, in consideration of the services of the broker, the owner authorizes him "to sell for me in my name and receipt for deposit thereon," for a specified time, the property described, for a price fixed, and agrees "to sell and convey by a good * * * grant," etc., gives the broker authority to contract for the sale to a purchaser procured by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6291-6306; vol. 8, p. 7793.]

8. BROKERS (§ 14*) — EMPLOYMENT—AUTHORITY.

An agent authorized to sell real estate may enter into a contract, within the terms of his authority, which will bind his principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 14.]

9. BROKERS (§ 106*) — CONTRACTS — ENFORCEMENT.

Where an owner contracted to convey to any purchaser secured by a broker employed to procure a purchaser, the contract was for the benefit of a purchaser procured by the broker, within Civ. Code, § 1559, providing that a contract, made for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 106.]

10. CONTRACTS (§ 187*) — RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

It is not necessary that the parties for whose benefit a contract has been made should be named therein. It must appear by direct terms of the contract that it was made for their benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see *Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 798; Dec. Dig. § 187.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. H. Waste, Judge.

Action by F. P. Bacon against E. B. Davis and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant E. B. Davis appeals. Reversed.

A. A. Sanderson and Reid, Black & Reid (John Garber, of counsel), for appellant Powell & Dow (Snook & Church, of counsel), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The importance of the principle and the value of the property involved justify a somewhat extended consideration of the transaction out of which has grown this litigation. The action was brought to determine the validity of an adverse claim, made by the appellant, defendant Davis, to certain real property on Broadway street, in the city of Oakland. Davis claims to have purchased the property, and in his amended answer and cross-complaint he sets forth the basis of this claim as resting in: First, a contract between plaintiff and the Laymance Real Estate Company, by which the said company was authorized to sell the property; and, secondly, a contract of sale made by said company with the defendant. The prayer is that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and that defendant have a decree of specific performance of said contract, and for general relief. The plaintiff interposed a general demurrer to the amended answer and the amended cross-complaint. Each demurrer was sustained, and thereupon, in due time, a judgment was entered for plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint, quieting his title as against any claim of said defendant. From this judgment the appeal is taken.

The said contract between the plaintiff and the Laymance Real Estate Company, as far as material to the present inquiry, is as follows: "Oakland, Cal., March 31, 1905. In consideration of securing the services of Laymance Real Estate Company, a corporation, and efforts on its part, and at its expense to obtain for me a purchaser for the property hereinbelow described, I hereby authorize said Laymance Real Estate Company exclusive right to sell for me, in my name and receipt for deposit thereon, for a term of sixty days from date hereof and until I give said corporation ten days' notice in writing to cancel this authorization, the following described property,—[describing it] for the sum of $135,000.00 net to me on the following terms, to wit, 20 per cent. cash on the delivery by me of a good and sufficient deed; balance to be paid as follows: one note for $72,000.00 payable in one year after date, with interest at 7% per annum secured by a trust deed to the 151 feet on Broadway by uniform depth of 100 feet; one note for $36,000, payable one year after date with interest at 7% per annum, secured by a trust deed to all the balance of the land in said block 261 above described in the name of the Bacon Land and Loan Company. And I hereby agree to sell and convey by a good and sufficient grant, bargain and sale deed of conveyance and give the usual covenants therein to any purchaser obtained by said Laymance Real Estate Company, a corporation, and if sale is made, 15 days to be allowed to search title to said property. And I hereby agree that said Laymance Real Estate Company, a corporation, may retain all over said net sum for which they may sell said property as its expenses and said commission for services rendered. [Signed] F. P. Bacon. Witnessed by M. J. Laymance." The contract between the Laymance Real Estate Company and defendant Davis provided as follows: "Know all men by these presents: For a valuable consideration the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by the Laymance Real Estate Company, a corporation, the duly accredited agent and on behalf of F. P. Bacon, the owner of the property hereinafter described, Elliott B. Davis hereby buys and the said F. P. Bacon by his duly accredited agent, the said Laymance Real Estate Company, hereby sells to said Davis, the said real property for the sum of $135,000.00, and the said Davis hereby deposits on account of said purchase price the sum of $5,000.00; the said sum of $135,000 to be paid as follows: [The terms here set out are the same as in the said contract between Bacon and the Laymance Real Estate Company.] This agreement of sale is made in accordance with that certain written authorization dated Oakland, California, March 31, 1905, and signed and executed by said F. P. Bacon, authorizing the said Laymance Real Estate Company, a corporation, to sell said land for and in the name of said Bacon and to receipt for a deposit thereon and which said written authorization is recorded this first day of December, 1905, in the office of the county recorder of the county of Alameda, and to which said authorization and the record thereof in said recorder's office reference is hereby made for a more particular statement of the matters and things set forth therein." Then follow the description of the property and the signature of the parties. There is no claim by appellant of ratification of said sale by plaintiff. On the contrary, it is alleged in the answer that, when said plaintiff was informed of said sale, he repudiated it, "and still repudiates the said contract and agreement for the sale and purchase of said property, and has ever declined, and still declines, to perform the covenants and provisions of said contract for the purchase and sale of said property, or any of them."

The whole case, it will be seen, therefore, virtually hinges upon the construction of the terms of the said contract between Bacon and the Laymance Real Estate Company. It is not disputed that the agent had no authority to sell the property so as to bind the owner, unless the authority is found in the terms of said written authorization. Indeed both parties cite and rely upon section 1971, Code Civ. Proc., and section 1741, Civ. Code, to fortify their claims. It is sufficient to quote the latter, which provides that: "No agreement for the sale of real property, or of any interest therein, is valid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or his agent thereunto authorized in writing." Some verbal criticism of the word "thereunto" is indulged by counsel, but its meaning seems altogether free from doubt. In simple language the section provides substantially that any agreement for the sale of real property to be valid and binding must be subscribed, either by the owner of the property, or by his agent who has been authorized in writing by said owner to enter into such an agreement. The word "thereunto" has its ordinary signification of "to that," and is obviously an elliptical form of expression for the phrase "to do that." Hence, as far as the agent is concerned, he must be authorized in writing "to do that," in other words, to execute an agreement of sale, to make it binding and operative. There is no escape from the proposition that, in order to determine the extent of the agent's authority, we must look to the terms of the instrument as they have been employed by the parties thereunto. Unless the Laymance Real Estate Company, by said agreement of March 31, 1905, was expressly authorized to enter into a contract of sale of said property, then the owner had the right to repudiate as unwarranted the contract between said agent and the defendant Davis of December 1, 1905. It is not a question of express or implied authority. The fair import of the terms used, measured according to the established rules of interpretation, must clearly reveal the intention of the owner specifically to empower the agent to enter into a contract of sale of the property, in the ordinary acceptance of that term, or else the case of the defendant must fail. Of course no one could reasonably contend that any particular formula of words is required to convey such authority—that the owner must say, for instance, in hæc verba, "I authorize you as my agent to enter into an executory contract of sale"—but the language used must reach the same measure of potency when tried by the recognized standards, and must positively authorize that very act.

It is not denied that, in our efforts to reach the intention of the parties to said instrument, we must invoke the ordinary rules for the interpretation of contracts. For instance, "The language of a contract is to govern its interpretation if the language is clear and explicit and does not involve an absurdity." Section 1638, Civ. Code. "The whole of a contract is to be taken together so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, each clause helping to interpret the other." Section 1641, Civ. Code. "The words of a contract are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense rather than according to their strict legal meaning, unless used by the parties in a technical sense, or unless a special meaning is given to them by usage, in which case the latter must be followed." Section 1644, Civ. Code. Taking up, then, the contract in question "by the four corners," and viewing it in the light of these familiar rules of interpretation, what authority is conferred upon the Laymance Real Estate Company in relation to the property therein described? In the first place, it must be obvious that, if the words are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, and if effect is to be given to all of them, the said realty company did not exceed its authority in entering into a contract of sale. There can be no doubt what the average man would understand from this language: "I hereby authorize said Laymance Real Estate Company exclusive right to sell for me in my name, * * * and I hereby agree to sell and convey by a good and sufficient grant, bargain and sale deed of conveyance and give the usual covenants therein to any purchaser obtained by said Laymance Real Estate Company." It would be difficult to select more apt words, if their ordinary signification is to be regarded, to clothe the agent with ample authority to do what was done here. This is apparent from the definition in the Civil Code of the term "to sell." Its corresponding noun "sale" is defined in section 1721 as follows: "Sale is a contract by which, for a pecuniary consideration, called a price, one transfers to another an interest in property"—and what is meant by the verb is disclosed in section 1727, wherein it is provided that: "An agreement to sell is a contract by which one engages for a price to transfer to another the title to a certain thing." Therefore, in the code sense, it is clear that Mr. Bacon's language imports this: I hereby authorize said Laymance Real Estate Company exclusive right "to transfer to another the title" to said property. But the expression "to sell" is sometimes used in the sense of an executed contract of sale, or an agreement to sell as defined by the Code. Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Standard Co., 39 App. Div. 617, 58 N. Y. Supp. 408; Rice v. Mayo, 107 Mass. 550. It has also a peculiar and restricted meaning acquired by usage, wherein it signifies to obtain a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy, and it is the contention of respondent that in this last sense the term was used by the parties to said contract of March 31, 1905. It is urged that "the language is that usually found in contracts between owners of property and real estate agents, when the former list property with the latter for sale, and there is nothing to indicate that the parties to the contract in question intended anything further than that the real estate broker was given the exclusive privilege, for a limited period, of finding for plaintiff a purchaser. At the very outset of the authorization it is stated that the broker is to make efforts 'to obtain for me [plaintiff] a purchaser'; that is to say, the service of the broker was to consist in obtaining a purchaser, not in disposing of the property. * * * When the defendant contends that the broker's authority 'to sell' carries with it the power of making a contract of sale enforceable by a proposed purchaser, he overlooks the code provisions of this state, and 'also decisions of the courts of last resort, not only in California, but also in other states.'"

We have already noted the code provisions to which he refers. We proceed to the consideration of some of the cases, as typical of the long list which is cited, illustrating this special and restricted use of the term "sale."

In Brandrup v. Britten, 11 N. D. 376, 92 N. W. 453, the court said: "The trial court held that, as a matter of law, the real estate brokers had not authority to sign the contract of sale, and that the defendant [owner of the property] is not bound thereby. This conclusion is sound, and must be sustained. In this state it is essential to the validity of a written contract for the real of real property signed by an agent that the authority of the agent to sign the same shall be embodied in a writing subscribed by the principal"—citing, as said by respondent, section 3887, Rev. Code, which is the same as subdivision 5, § 1624, Civ. Code, and said section 3960, Rev. Code, which is the same as our said section 1741, Civ. Code. "It is well settled that the agency of such persons is limited to finding purchasers who are acceptable to vendors, * * * and in the absence of express authority does not extend to signing contracts of sale * * * in behalf of the principals. * * * A real estate broker may be given authority to execute contracts for his principal, but it is an additional authority. The instrument under consideration does not confer any such additional authority. It merely grants to the real estate broker 'the sale' or the selling of the land for a limited period, and for the guidance of such brokers it states the total net sum which the principal will accept, and the amount of cash payment which he will exact in case of a sale. As will be seen by an examination of the instrument, the details essential to the consummation of a sale are omitted. It does not provide the length of time the deferred payments are to run, or how they are to be divided, or as to the rate of interest to be charged, or as to whether a deed shall be given to the purchaser and a mortgage to secure the deferred payments, or as to whether any deed shall be executed prior to the full payment of the purchase price. These omissions tend strongly to show that it was the intention of the parties to the instrument that the sale was to be approved, and the contract of sale executed, by the principal, and not by the broker."

A leading case upon the question, cited with approval by many courts, is Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617. It appears that the contract of sale there was executed by one Atkins as agent of Hobson, and in the name of the latter, the owner of the property. The only testimony as to the authority of the agent was his testimony that Hobson had told him to sell the lots for $2,000. He accordingly sold them to plaintiff for that price, and executed in the name of Hobson a contract in writing to convey. The agent then set a telegram to Hobson informing him of what he (the agent) had done. Hobson disavowed the transaction, and suit was brought for specific performance. The court held that the authority of Atkins to sell the property was not sufficient to authorize him to execute the contract of sale to Duffy, but was a mere authority from Hobson to obtain a purchaser at the price of $2,000. At that time the present statute of frauds was not in force, and hence the verbal authority was of equal force to a similar written one now. In the discussion it is said: "This is the settled construction put upon employment of professional brokers 'to sell' or 'to close a bargain' concerning real estate, and we know of no reason why the same language employed to express the authority of any other agent 'to sell' should have a more extended meaning. Besides, a sale of real estate involves the adjustment of many matters in addition to fixing the price at which the property is to be sold. The vendor may be unwilling to deal with a particular proposed purchaser on any terms. He may consider him pecuniarily unable to comply with the contract, even if the title prove satisfactory, and he may decline to bind himself to convey to such purchaser at the end of the time necessary to examine the title, because he might thereby in the meantime lose an opportunity to sell to some other person who might desire to purchase, and in whose good faith and ability to pay he reposed entire confidence. All these and many other like considerations might, and usually do, arise in the mind of the vendor. Now a mere authority to sell can hardly confer power upon the agent to determine all these matters for his principal, so as to bind him by his determination." The court concludes that "while it is true that a power to sign the name of a principal to the contract may be given verbally, we think that the words used for the purpose should be distinct and clear in their meaning and import, and should, with a requisite degree of certainty, manifest the intention of the principal to do something more than merely to employ a broker."

In Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616, 18 Pac. 758, the language used was: "You are hereby authorized to sell my property and receive deposit on same [describing it] for the sum of $200.00 per acre cash. I hereby agree to pay you the sum of 5 per cent. for your services in case you effect a sale, or find a purchaser for same, or will pay you 2½ per cent. of above commission should I sell the same myself, or through any other agent." The court said: "The sole question in this case is whether the real estate brokers whom the defendant employed 'to sell' certain real property had authority to execute a contract to convey. We think that, upon the authority of Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 244, 6 Am. Rep. 617, it must be held that they had not, and that the case of Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 219, is not in point."

In Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237, the authority of the agent was contained in the following entry: "San Francisco, Aug. 3, 1877. Mr. Wheeler Martin: As you stated you could get $30,000.00 for the place you occupy on Market street, if you can, we will sell at that price any time before the first day of September, 1887, and allow you 2½ per cent. on said price, and if no sale is made no expense is made to us. Yours truly, William Ede." Martin sold the property to the plaintiff Grant for the sum of $30,000, and took a deposit from the purchaser of $500. The owner, Ede, refused to make a conveyance, and the action was brought to enforce specific performance. The court decided against plaintiff, and held that Martin was simply authorized to find a purchaser who would pay $30,000, and if he did so, he was entitled to the commission, and that there was nothing in the writing indicating any other intention. It was said that: "The object of the writing, doubtless, was to fix the price which the defendant was willing to take for the land and the compensation he was willing to allow Martin for making the sale." The court calls attention to the fact as significant that there was nothing in the contract specifying the form of deed or time of payment. The question of the sufficiency of the agent's authority was discussed in Delano v. Jacoby, 96 Cal. 273, 31 Pac. 290, 31 Am. St. Rep. 201, and it is there said: "There is an apparent conflict of authority on the question of what is necessary, in a power of attorney for the sale of land, to authorize the attorney to execute and deliver a deed to the purchaser. Each case must be decided upon its own peculiar circumstances." McNeil v. Shirley, 33 Cal. 206; Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 220; Hemstreet v. Burdick, 90 Ill. 444. "As between parties to the transaction, it is proper to consider the situation at the time of the execution of the letter, and their intention is to be gathered from the words of the instrument, by all the circumstances under which it was written and acted upon. * * * So the general rule is that a mere authority 'to sell,' in the absence of any other words or circumstances qualifying the language, would not confer upon the agent the power to determine these matters for his principal."

In Stomler v. Bass (Cal.) 96 Pac. 809, it is said: "The ordinary authority of a real estate agent deputed to sell real estate is simply to find a purchaser, and he has no power to bind his principal by a contract of sale, unless it appears that it was intended to confer such additional authority. * * * Whether or not it was intended to confer such additional authority is to be determined from the language used, regarded in the light of the surrounding circumstances. * * * The case at bar is very different in its facts from Rutenberg v. Main, supra, relied on by plaintiff, where it clearly appeared that it was intended by the owner to clothe the agent with authority to do generally whatever was necessary to make the proposed sale binding upon the principal."

These quotations disclose clearly that by usage the phrase "to sell" has acquired this restricted and conventional meaning—that is, to secure a purchaser—and that, standing alone, it is not sufficient to authorize the agent to enter into a contract of sale binding the principal. They also reveal and illustrate the reason for the rule and the importance, in case additional words are used, of examining with care the whole instrument to determine the intention of the parties. On the other hand, it is appellant's contention: "That the only construction of the contract under discussion which is at all reconcilable with the wording of its various provisions is one in accordance with which the language of the contract is recognized as authorizing, not only 'by fair implication,' but also 'in terms,' the making of a contract of sale 'in the owner's name.'" Thus only, it is claimed, can effect be given to the whole instrument. It is urged that there are three portions of the contract, each indicating, and all together conclusively revealing, the intention of the owner of the property to clothe the agent with this additional authority to enter into an executory contract of sale. These are: (1) The authorization to sell for me in my name; (2) the stipulation to convey to any purchaser obtained by said company; and (3) the elaborate provisions made for the terms of sale. Appellant declares: "Interpret the contract as we advocate, and you find that these stipulations harmonize and form an intelligible combination. You find that every word and phrase is accounted for, and accorded some significance, and that there is no necessity for ignoring any part of the language employed, nor of virtually striking out words inserted by the parties, and substituting for them words of a totally different signification. Interpret the contract as respondent would have it interpreted, and you find it impossible to avoid attributing to the parties a use of language so strange and improbable that you make a new agreement for them, on the theory that they did not mean what they said."

The leading case in this state cited by appellant, and in line with his contention, is Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213. Rutenberg was the owner of property in San Francisco, and through his agent he sold the same to the defendant, but the latter refused to make payment when the deed was tendered. The action was for specific performance. The defense was that the agent was not authorized to sell the premises; the contention being that he had authority simply to find a purchaser. It is said in the opinion that: "It is true that the power of a mere broker is thus limited, although he be employed to sell real estate, because these words are construed with reference to the actual purpose of his employment. But if the language used, regarded in the light of surrounding circumstances, clearly shows that the agency is intended to be more extensive than that of a mere broker, the court will so find. * * * That the plaintiff intended, and clearly expressed his intention, that Meinecke should do more than discharge the functions of a broker is apparent from the evidence." The court then sets out the evidence as follows: "In the month of July the plaintiff, who was at Bremen, wrote to Meinecke, in respect to the property in the controversy: 'If you can get a binding offer of over $50,000, I may conclude to sell at once. In this case, please telegraph. * * * If you have a good offer, I can simply confirm it by telegraph. You have a deposit made, and I will then send power of attorney.' Upon the receipt of this Meinecke placed the lot with Maurice Dore & Co., brokers, for sale at $50,000, and about the 5th of September was informed by them that they had a customer who was willing to pay the price demanded. Subsequently Meinecke received a letter from the plaintiff, dated August 26th, which contained the following passage: 'You valued Market street property at $50,000. Can the price be got, you can close the sale. I should confirm per telegraph, and then send power of attorney as soon as a guaranty deposit would have been made.' September 11th the plaintiff again writes, acknowledging the receipt of a telegraphic dispatch from Meinecke, and adds: 'I at once sent you the following telegram: "At $50,000.00 the lowest, sale confirmed."'"

In the case of Lyon v. Pollock, 99 U. S. 668, 25 L. Ed. 265, the plaintiff authorized his attorney in fact, B., to sell his property in Texas. B. did not make the transfer, but placed the property in charge of C., of which Lyon was notified. Thereupon Lyon wrote C. as follows: "I wish you to manage my property as you would with your own, and, if a good opportunity offers, to sell everything I have. I would be glad to sell," etc. C. made a deed of the property. The court, through Mr. Justice Field, says: "The deed executed by C. in the name of Lyon, though invalid as a conveyance, was good as a contract for the sale of the property described in it, and was sufficient, therefore, to sustain the bill for a decree directing Lyon to make conveyance to the grantee therein." It was held, further, that the letter to Lyon was sufficient to authorize C. to enter into a contract for the sale of the property. The court, moreover, declares that the surrounding circumstances of that case were strongly corroborative of the view taken of the written instrument.

Many other cases and authorities are cited by appellant, but we shall refer to only two or three additional ones, in an examination of the peculiar phraseology of the instrument before us. Indeed, as the intention of the parties is to be determined by the language used and the surrounding circumstances of each particular case, and as no case has been found involving the same language and circumstances as those in controversy here, we are practically without direct precedent in construing the said instrument of March 31st. It does seem, though, as suggested by appellant, that if the plaintiff had intended to authorize the defendant simply to find a purchaser for the property, and not to bind himself to convey to such purchaser, he would have used simpler terms than those found in the instrument before us. Knowing, as it is presumed he did, the meaning which usage has given to the phrase "to sell" when contained in a broker's contract, it is reasonable to suppose that he would have gone no further, except to describe the property, provide, probably, in a general way for the terms of the sale, and to specify the broker's commission. But the first significant departure from such a simple and certain formula is marked by the use of the words "for me, in my name." These words are declared by respondent to be mere surplusage. The sale, if made, and, whether binding upon the owner or not, it is true, would be for his benefit and by his authority. But must they not be considered in determining the intention of the owner? It is not to be supposed that they are idle words, used without purpose, adding nothing to the significance of the instrument; and they are not to be ignored in our effort to ascertain what was in the mind of the owner at the time of its execution. "In my name," conveys the idea, not only of using the name of the principal, but by his authority. State v. Kerr, 3 N. D. 523, 58 N. W. 27. Hence we have the owner declaring: "I authorize the real estate company to sell for me, and by my authority, or representing me"—indicating additional authority to what is committed to a mere broker. It reveals an intention to give the agent a power of attorney to dispose of the land; but, when considered with the other expression to which attention has been called, it harmonizes with the view that an executory contract of sale was contemplated, with the duty imposed upon the owner of consummating the sale by the execution of the conveyance—the final act in the transfer of the title. This is made clear by the provision "and I hereby agree to sell and convey by a good and sufficient grant," etc.

In Farris v. Marten, 29 Tenn. 495, we have an illustration of the significance commonly attached to the words "for me" and "in my name." The written authorization was: "Dear Sir: I have received $72, rents you collected for me, for which I kindly thank you, and wish you to rent it out in the same manner, and upon the same terms, you would your own, or sell. One of the gentlemen wants to buy the land. He offers $3.50 per acre, payable next Christmas. If you are of opinion that it is a fair price for the land, please to confirm the contract for me, take his bond, and give him a bond in my name to make a title when the money is paid." Indeed, as pointed out by appellant in the oral argument, "for me and in my name" are familiar expressions in the literature of the law and in instruments defining confidential relations, and are indicative of authority, in a comprehensive and exacting sense, to represent and bind the principal or owner of property.

In Heywood v. Heywood, 42 Me. 229, 66 Am. Dec. 277, it is said: "It is a general principle that no word in the contract is to be treated as a redundancy if any meaning, reasonable and consistent with its parts, can be given to it."

In Haydock v. Steele, 40 N. Y. 363, the authorization was: "You are authorized and empowered as agents for me to sell my property." It is said by the Chief Justice, speaking for the court: "I consider the instrument to be a plain, direct, unqualified power of attorney to sell the land mentioned in it, nothing more, nothing less." Assuredly the words "to sell for me in my name" are equally as potent. In fact, without the words "in my name" the authorization here would be almost exactly the same as in the Haydock Case, for the word "empowered" is a synonym for "authorized," and the words "as agents" add nothing to the significance of the expression, for they are clearly implied, and with or without them there could be no doubt as to the agency but only as to its extent. The New York Case is simply, this, therefore: "You are authorized for me to sell my property." Here we have the additional confirmation of authority disclosed by the phrase "in my name."

But again the owner meant something by this covenant: "I agree to sell and convey by a good and sufficient grant, bargain and sale deed and give the usual covenants therein to any purchaser obtained by said company." It certainly imposes some obligation upon the owner in reference to a purchaser that might be secured by the agent. As suggested by appellant, it is difficult to distinguish between the significance of these two clauses, taken together, and that of the ordinary phraseology employed in a power of attorney to sell, where the owner authorizes or empowers the agent to sell the property, and then adds the covenant "hereby ratifying and confirming all such sales as he may make." This is illustrated by reference to Tyrell v. O'Connor, 56 N. J. Eq. 448, 41 Atl. 674, where the court said: "Mere authority to sell, without more, does not exhibit such intent that the attorney may bind the principal to convey. But where, however, the design and terms of the power manifest an intent to give the agent authority to effect a sale and conveyance, and the instrument assumes to ratify the 'bargain' he may make. It will be held to give him authority to bind his principal to convey." So here, if the owner had provided: "I authorize the Lymance Real Estate Company for me in my name to sell my property, hereby ratifying and confirming the sale to any purchaser that it may secure"—there would be no kind of doubt as to the authority of the agent to bind the owner to make a conveyance. There is no appreciable difference between such a covenant and the one before us. Can it be said that, when the owner promises to convey to any purchaser secured by the agent, he reserves the right to decline to execute a deed? To so contend is to read into the contract something that the parties have not provided. Indeed it is in direct conflict with the express covenant of the owner. It seems clear, at least, that the ordinary mind, unembarrassed by scholastic refinement, but appreciating the significance of the simple terms employed, and scanning them carefully in view of the surrounding circumstances, would inevitably reach the conclusion, from reading these covenants together, that the owner clearly intended to authorize the agent to bind him by a contract of sale. The explanation by respondent of this agreement to convey is that it is meant to describe the kind of deed which the owner would execute if he accepted the purchaser. But if this had been the purpose, it would seem probable that the description would have followed the expression "on the delivery by me of a good and sufficient deed" in a preceding portion of the contract. Again, it is said to have been incorporated for the benefit of the broker to secure his commission. But it is clear that he would earn his commissions if he secured a purchaser, ready, able, and willing to purchase for any price in excess of $135,000. He would be entitled to that excess.

In Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 Pac. 1111, it is held that "the contract of a broker who undertakes to sell a tract of land is that he will find a purchaser who is ready to buy on the specified terms; and, when he produces such a purchaser, he performs his contract."

In Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237, where the broker was authorized to sell for $30,000, it was held that he was entitled to his commission on finding a purchaser willing to buy at that price.

In Oullahan v. Baldwin, 100 Cal. 648, 35 Pac. 319, the broker was authorized in writing to negotiate the sale of certain lands. The instrument contained the statement: "Our price for said land is $116,666.65 net to us, and, any amount over and above said sum for which our said agents may sell said land we agree to give them for commissions for their services." It is said by the court: "The brokers were simply authorized to negotiate a sale. Their contract was completed, and their commissions earned, when they produced a purchaser within the five days, willing, ready, and able, to purchase upon the terms stated in the contract of employment."

If it is meant to intimate that the Lymance Real Estate Company could compel a sale to protect itself, this authority must be found in the contract, and amounts to the same grant of power as that contended for by appellant. But the answer to the whole contention is that the owner solemnly promised to execute a deed to any purchaser secured by the real estate company. The language is free from doubt, and the duty of the court is plain to give effect to the covenants of the parties, and not to seek to emasculate the contract by groping for some reason to conclude that its meaning is otherwise than the language clearly imports.

Again, the circumstance in reference to the terms of the sale, while not controlling, is of persuasive force in indicating the intention of the parties. The importance of this circumstance is indicated in the case of Brandrup v. Britten, supra, by the language which we have already quoted. The omissions as to the terms of the sale, which, in that case are said to tend strongly to show that the sale was to be approved and the contract of sale executed by the principal, and not by the broker, are supplied in the instrument before us. Hence it is fair to argue that, these details being present, they tend to show that the purpose was to authorize the broker to bind the contract of sale whenever he could find a purchaser willing to pay the price. The particularity and elaboration with which the terms of sale are recited in the instrument here leave nothing to be supplied by the owner, and point strongly to the conclusion that it was designed by the parties to authorize what was afterwards done by the said real estate company.

There are indeed portions of the instrument in question isolated from the context that would support respondent's contention. For instance, the inducement, "in consideration of securing the services of Laymance Real Estate Company, a corporation, and efforts on its part, and at its expense to obtain for me a purchaser," etc., and, if this had been followed simply by the authorization "to sell," appellant could not prevail. But, considering the whole of the instrument, it seems to mean nothing less than "I authorize the Laymance Real Estate Company to enter into an executory contract of sale of the property described and upon the terms set out and I promise to execute to the purchaser a good and sufficient deed to said premises." If this is the right construction of the instrument, then there can be no doubt that defendant in his answer and cross-complaint set out sufficient facts to entitle him to a specific performance of the contract. It cannot be held that the contract was not made for his benefit, and therefore he is not entitled to take advantage of it, because it is a question of the authority of the agent to bind the principal. If it had such authority, its act was the act of the principal. "An agent, authorized to sell either real or personal property, may enter into a contract within the terms of his authority, which will bind his principal. This is of the very essence of the authority given, viz., an authority to sell. That he can bind his principal by a formal contract is the doctrine of the books from the earliest law on the subject." Haydock v. Steele, supra. It would hardly be contended that, if the principal directly entered into such a contract, he could repudiate it and successfully resist an action for specific performance, assuming, as appears here, that the contract was fair and reasonable and the consideration just and adequate. We can see no merit, therefore, in respondent's contention that the contract was not made for the benefit of Davis, and hence that it cannot be enforced by him.

But, even if section 1559 of the Civil Code has any application which provides that "a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person may be enforced by him at any time before the parties rescind it," it would require no argument to show that, when the owner promises to convey to any purchaser who might be secured, the contract was made for the benefit of such purchaser. It is said, in Chung Kee v. Davidson, 73 Cal. 522, 15 Pac. 100: "It is not necessary that the parties for whose benefit the contract has been made should be named in the contract. It must appear, however, by the direct terms of the contract that it was made for the benefit of such parties."

We cannot agree with the conclusion of the learned trial judge, and the judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

9 Cal. App. 141

HUENE v. CRIBB et al. (Civ. 519.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 30, 1908.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 53*)—POWER OF SALE.

Trust deeds, ordinarily, and mortgages may, confer a power of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 123; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 34*)—CONSTRUCTION AGAINST PLEADER.

A complaint, in a suit to set aside a sale under a trust deed on the ground that no power of sale was given, must allege the fact that no power of sale was given, or it will be presumed that the power was contained in the deed; a pleading being most strongly construed against the pleader.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

3. MORTGAGES (§ 345*)—ASSUMPTION OF PAYMENT—CONSIDERATION.

The assumption by a purchaser of property of an incumbrance thereon is a sufficient consideration for the extension of time of payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 345.*]

4. MORTGAGES (§ 280*)—SALES—VALIDITY.

Where a purchaser of property incumbered by a trust deed agreed with the creditor secured thereby to assume the obligation in consideration that the time for payment should be extended until the trustee should deliver to the purchaser an abstract of title, the creditor could not without notice arbitrarily declare a default, and a sale under the trust deed in violation of the agreement was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 745; Dec. Dig. § 280.*]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 369*)—SALES—ACCOUNTING BY TRUSTEE.

A complaint to set aside a sale under a trust deed, which shows that an excess above the amount due was realized from the sale at which the creditor became a purchaser, sufficiently states facts for an accounting as against the trustee, to which suit the creditor is a proper party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1097; Dec. Dig. § 369.*]

6. ACTION (§ 48*)—JOINDER OF CAUSES.

A complaint to set aside a sale under a trust deed, which sets forth facts relied on for such relief, and which shows facts warranting an accounting as against the trustee, is not bad for misjoinder of causes of action, under Code Civ. Proc. § 427, subd. 4, authorizing plaintiff to unite several causes of action where the claims are against trustee by virtue of a contract or by operation of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. § 490; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 193*)—COMPLAINT—SEPARATE CAUSES OF ACTION—FAILURE TO SEPARATELY STATE SEPARATE CAUSES OF ACTION—OBJECTIONS.

An objection that causes of action were not separately stated in the complaint could not be reached by demurrer prior to Laws 1907, p. 706, c. 372, amending Code Civ. Proc. § 430, authorizing a demurrer to the complaint on specified grounds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 428; Dec. Dig. § 193.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Clara A. Huene against J. C. Cribb and others. From a judgment for defendants on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

D. P. Hatch and Ansel Smith, for appellant. Taylor O. Taylor, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment rendered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint.

It is alleged in the complaint: That on September 7, 1904, defendants Cribb and Sinclair conveyed to one Holmes certain described premises, and received, as part of the consideration therefor, the note of Holmes for $1,100, secured by a written instrument on the premises sold, in form a trust deed, but in fact a mortgage, in which instrument said Holmes was party of the first part, the Title Guarantee & Trust Company the party of the second part, and Cribb and Sinclair parties of the third part. That on May 24, 1906, plaintiff acquired said premises subject to said written instrument. That afterwards, on the 10th of July, 1906, when $889.98 of the indebtedness secured by said instrument was unpaid, the Title Guarantee & Trust Company and said Cribb and Sinclair agreed with plaintiff, in consideration of the full payment of the said note and interest due thereon, to extend the time of payment of said note until the Title Guarantee & Trust Company should prepare and deliver to plaintiff an abstract of title for said premises, and on the 18th of October, 1906, on the same consideration, renewed said agreement; but the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, although requested, failed and neglected to deliver to plaintiff such abstract of title and never prepared the same. That plaintiff, relying upon said promise and agreement, provided and had in her possession at all times the money with which to pay off the obligation so secured by said written instrument. That, notwithstanding this agreement, Cribb and Sinclair, on the 17th of November, 1906, caused the Title Guarantee & Trust Company to sell, under notice, the said premises, and Cribb and Sinclair purchased the same for $1,275, claiming that sum to be the amount due under the said instrument. That plaintiff had no knowledge of such sale until the 26th of November, 1906. That on December 7th following she tendered to Cribb and Sinclair and to the trustee the full amount for which such property was sold and all interest due thereon, and demanded a reconveyance of said premises. That the property so sold is of the value of $6,500. Plaintiff prays that the sale be set aside and declared void, that the property be reconveyed to plaintiff, and her title thereto be quieted, and for other appropriate relief. Defendants all joined in a demurrer to the complaint upon the grounds: First, that several causes of action were improperly joined and the causes of action were not separately stated; second, on account of a misjoinder of parties defendant, on account of uncertainties and ambiguities not necessary to notice, and, finally, a general demurrer for insufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action against the defendants or either of them. The court sustained this demurrer, and, no amendment being had, judgment was entered accordingly.

It is insisted by appellant that the sale was void because it affirmatively appears by the complaint that no power of sale was given in the instrument executed to secure the note. The instrument is declared by the complaint to have been in form a trust deed, but in fact a mortgage. Trust deeds in this state ordinarily do, and mortgages may, confer a power of sale. The complaint must be construed most strongly against the pleader. "If a fact necessary to his cause of action is not alleged, it must be taken as having no existence." Hildreth v. Montecito Creek W. Co., 139 Cal. 27, 72 Pac. 395. If as a fact the usual and ordinary power of sale was not conferred by this deed of trust, it was incumbent upon plaintiff to allege that fact; otherwise, it will be presumed that the usual and ordinary powers were therein contained. The complaint, however, stated facts which, if true, were sufficient to defeat the sale so made, under the circumstances. Plaintiff alleges that she purchased the property subject to the incumbrance, from which no personal liability would follow, but that after she acquired the title she entered into an agreement with Cribb and Sinclair by which she assumed the obligation, in consideration that the payment of the note be extended until the defendant corporation should prepare and deliver to plaintiff an abstract of title. This assumption of payment was a sufficient consideration for the extension of time, and until such abstract was furnished the note did not mature, and until its maturity and default in payment no authority reposed in the trustee to sell. This, of course, presupposes good faith upon the part of all concerned, and would not conclude Cribb and Sinclair to the extent of indefinitely postponing payment in the event the corporation should fail for an unreasonable period to provide such abstract; but an unreasonable delay upon the part of the abstract company, or its refusal to carry out its agreement, would be facts of which Cribb and Sinclair might avail themselves under a notice of rescission of the contract of extension, but, having once agreed to extend payment until the abstract company furnished the abstract, they could not, without notice to plaintiff, arbitrarily proceed to declare plaintiff's default. Cribb and Sinclair, having made the agreement through which the time was extended, are estopped now to claim any title acquired by sale made in violation thereof. In addition to this, were it even conceded that under the allegations of the complaint the sale so made was effective, nevertheless it affirmatively appears that a large excess above the amount due upon the note was realized from the sale, which, if not paid to the trustee, is now in the hands of the purchasers, Cribb and Sinclair. All of these parties are affected by the trust undertaken by the corporation, and, if the fact be as alleged in the complaint, that the sale price was in excess of the amount required to satisfy the indebtedness, there is sufficient in the complaint for an accounting as against the trustee, to which proceeding Cribb and Sinclair are proper parties under the circumstances detailed in the complaint. There was no misjoinder of causes of action (subd. 4, § 427, Code Civ. Proc.), and that they were not separately stated was a matter which could not be reached by a demurrer at the time these proceedings were had; the amendment to section 430, Code Civ. Proc. (Laws 1907, p. 706, c. 372), not then being in force.

We think the court erred in sustaining the demurrer, and the judgment is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 123

HOMAN v. WAYER et al. (Civ. 307.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 28, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 27, 1908.)

1. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 36*)—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—NECESSITY FOR CERTIFICATE.

A notary taking an acknowledgment to a deed need not certify to the ownership of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

2. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 8*)—DEEDS—PURPOSE OF CERTIFICATE.

The purpose of a certificate of acknowledgment to a deed is to establish the identity of the grantor and the genuineness of the signature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

3. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 22*)—CERTIFICATE—PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE—BASIS.

Under Civ. Code, § 1185, prohibiting the taking of an acknowledgment unless the officer knows or has satisfactory evidence that the person acknowledging is the person who executed the instrument, and under section 1189, providing that the form of the certificate shall be substantially, "personally appeared —, known to me (or proved to me on the oath of —), to be," etc., a certificate of personal knowledge is not justified by swearing the person who executed the instrument or any other person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 123; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

4. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 22*)—CERTIFICATE—NOTARY'S KNOWLEDGE—REQUIREMENTS.

Under Civ. Code, § 1185, prohibiting the taking of an acknowledgment unless the officer knows or has satisfactory evidence through a credible witness that the person acknowledging is the person who executed the instrument, the witness must be known to the notary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 123; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

5. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 48*)—NOTARIES—DISOBEDIENCE OF STATUTE—LIABILITY.

Under Pol. Code, § 801, making a notary and his sureties liable for his official misconduct to those injured thereby, a notary is liable to one sustaining loss through his violation of Civ. Code, § 1185, prohibiting the taking of acknowledgments unless the acknowledging person is identified to him in a prescribed manner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 243; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

6. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 48*)—NOTARIES—FALSE CERTIFICATE—LIABILITY.

Under Pol. Code, § 801, making a notary liable for official misconduct to those injured thereby, a notary's liability for making a false certificate to an acknowledgment does not depend upon whether the acts of others have contributed to the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 243; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

7. ACKNOWLEDGMENT (§ 55*)—FALSE CERTIFICATE—ASSUMED NAMES—MATERIALITY.

The right of a purchaser of land to rely upon a false certificate to an acknowledgment to a deed to his vendor was not defeated because the title of his vendor stood in an assumed name, since a deed in that name conveyed as good title as if the property had stood in the real name.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Acknowledgment, Cent. Dig. § 314; Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 229*)—MISREPRESENTATIONS—EFFECT.

Misrepresentations of a vendor relating to matters of value did not charge the purchaser to further inquire as to title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 477; Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

9. DEPOSITIONS (§ 92*)—EXCLUSION—GROUNDS—FAIRNESS.

Discretion was not abused in admitting plaintiff's depositions, though he saw the interrogatories when opened by the notary four days before one of the depositions was taken, and received what purported to be a copy of the interrogatories when the originals were received by the notary when the other deposition was taken; such facts not necessarily rendering the taking of the depositions unfair within Code Civ. Proc. § 2033, authorizing the exclusion of depositions in certain cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Depositions, Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by W. R. Homan against John Wayer and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hunsaker & Britt, for appellants. Byron L. Oliver and Grant Jackson, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action brought to recover from the defendant Wayer, as a notary public, and the defendant corporation, as surety on his notarial bond, the sum of $550, damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a false and deceptive certificate of acknowledgment made by said notary. Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

On the 28th day of November, 1903, plaintiff, who was then living in Omaha, Neb., purchased from one J. A. Overholtzer, who was acting under the assumed name of Carl Anderson, five acres of land located in Pasadena, Cal. The transaction took place in Omaha, and Overholtzer as evidence of his title presented an abstract of title made by the Pomona Abstract & Trust Company showing title in the premises vested in Mary E. Griswold and a grant, bargain, and sale deed from Mary E. Griswold to Carl Anderson, dated September 26, 1903. To the latter was attached the certificate of acknowledgment in question, wherein defendant Wayer, as a notary public of Los Angeles county, Cal., certified in the usual form, under date of September 26, 1903, "before me, * * * personally appeared Mrs. Mary E. Griswold, a widow, known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument, and acknowledged to me that she executed the same." Upon this showing the parties entered into a preliminary contract, and conveyances were executed. Plaintiff made inquiry by mail through parties residing near the premises as to the value of the property, its location, and so forth, and, upon receipt of a certificate of title from the Pomona Abstract & Title Company showing the title regular in accordance with the representations made by Anderson, the deeds were recorded, and plaintiff paid to Anderson $550 cash and executed and delivered a note and mortgage for deferred payment of $500 in accordance with the contract.

The person who acknowledged the Griswold-Anderson deed before the defendant Wayer was not Mary E. Griswold, but one Emma W. Allen, who impersonated Mary E. Griswold in the execution and acknowledgment of that deed. Defendant Wayer does not contend that he knew the woman whom he certified to be Mary E. Griswold. His knowledge of her identity was gained by an introduction from Overholtzer, a man whom he did not know, a reassuring remark or two from this man, and an "oath" administered to the woman herself at the time of taking her acknowledgment. If we were permitted to consider the so-called "oath" of the woman as proof or evidence upon which the notary could base his certificate, it did not establish the things which he is required to know and certify. The essential fact to be known by, or proven to, the notary is that the person making the acknowledgment is the person described in and who executed the instrument. The woman who executed the deed was asked if her name was Mary E. Griswold, and if she was the sole owner of the property. Her name might have been Mary E. Griswold, and she not the person described in the deed. The notary is not required to certify to the ownership of the property (Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77, 22 Pac. 979; Barnard v. Schuler, 100 Minn. 289, 110 N. W. 966), and this only indirectly bore upon the matter to be certified. The purpose of the certificate is to establish the identity of the grantor and genuineness of the signature to the deed.

Section 1185 of the Civil Code reads: "The acknowledgment of an instrument must not be taken, unless the officer taking it knows, or has satisfactory evidence, on the oath or affirmation of a credible witness, that the person making such acknowledgment is the individual who is described in and who executed the instrument," etc. Section 1189 provides "substantially" the form of the certificate, which in the respect here important reads: "Personally appeared ———, known to me (or proved to me on the oath of ———) to be the person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument, and acknowledged that he executed the same." A certificate of personal knowledge is not justified by swearing the person who executed the instrument or any other person. The statute draws a distinction between those "known" and those "proven to be" the individual described in the instrument. In the former case no taking of testimony and no "satisfactory evidence" is required. It is sufficient that the officer knows. If the officer does not "know," then the law makes it his duty to inform himself by satisfactory evidence on the oath or affirmation of a credible witness. In this event he is called upon to certify by whose oath it was proven to him that the person whose acknowledgment was taken is the person described in the instrument. The witness by whose oath the execution of the instrument is proven, when the person executing the instrument is not previously known to the officer, must himself be known to the notary. This is implied by the requirement that the officer shall certify that such person is a credible witness. A person who is not sufficiently known to the notary to authorize the latter to certify to his identity without proof is not sufficiently known to him to be a credible witness to prove either his own or some one else's identity. When the person seeking to have his identity certified does not comply with these rules, the notary is expressly prohibited from taking the acknowledgment at all. When the notary does not obey this statute, he should expect to be held liable. Joost v. Craig, 131 Cal. 509, 63 Pac. 840, 82 Am. St. Rep. 374.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

This is not a case where a mistake was made through inadvertence, or one in which due precaution was taken, the statute fully complied with, and still the notary was deceived. It is not within the exception stated in the Joost-Craig Case, but comes clearly within the rule of law declared in the case of State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413, therein cited. The facts in the Missouri case were much less favorable to the plaintiff than those here. The evidence there showed throughout the transaction a singular disregard, upon the part of the persons relying upon the false certificate, of all the precautions which are ordinarily suggested by experience of men of adult years, and yet a judgment against the notary was affirmed. The court says: "Others may have been guilty of contributory negligence; but, if the careless act done by Meyer (the notary) was necessary to the accomplishment of the loss, there can be little doubt that, in a proper form of action, he alone may be made answerable for the resulting damages." With that case and the case of Oakland Bank v. Murfey, 68 Cal. 455, 9 Pac. 843 (relied upon by appellants), before it, the Supreme Court of this state accepted the Missouri case as authority and distinguished the Oakland Bank Case in the opinion in the Joost-Craig Case. It is apparent, then, that the fact that others have aided in the transaction and contributed to bring about the conditions from which the plaintiff's loss arose does not relieve defendants from liability for the loss of the plaintiff, if the latter relied upon the false certificate when paying out his money. In taking an acknowledgment to a deed, a notary's official services are limited. He certifies to the identity of the grantor named in the instrument, but he has no control over the deed to which his certificate is attached. This must be delivered to the grantee by the grantor, or some one on his behalf, in order to become effective. No official act of the notary in certifying an acknowledgment to a deed can alone result in injury to any one. The deed cannot become the means of defrauding any one until used in some transaction entirely outside of the official duties of the notary. For this reason the statutory right of action is not dependent upon a showing that the acts of others have not contributed to the injury, or defeated by a showing that they have so contributed, if it appear that the party defrauded relied upon the notary's false certificate.

The terms "proximate cause," "negligence," and "contributory negligence," as used in appellants' presentation of the case, are somewhat misleading here. No official misconduct or neglect of a notary public in taking or certifying the acknowledgment of a deed could ever be the sole proximate cause of loss or injury to any person, but we cannot for that reason say no recovery can be had for a loss due to a false certificate of acknowledgment under the provisions of section 801 of the Political Code.

The evidence shows, and the court finds, in effect, that plaintiff here did rely upon the false certificate of the defendant. This finding is not affected by the fact that the title of Overholtzer to the land stood in an assumed name. A deed in this name conveyed as good title as if the property had stood in the real name of the party. Wilson v. White, 84 Cal. 239, 24 Pac. 114; Eversdon v. Mayhew, 85 Cal. 1, 21 Pac. 431, 24 Pac. 382. If it be contended that this circumstance put plaintiff upon inquiry, it may be said that, if he had made inquiry as to the identity of the grantee in the Griswold-Anderson deed, he would have discovered that Overholtzer was the man he was dealing with; but he would also have learned that Overholtzer and Anderson were one, and that the title of the land was held in the latter name as was represented to him. Inquiries were made by plaintiff by mail as to the possession, the value, the location, and character of the land. He found the possession to be that of Mrs. Griswold, a widow from Iowa. The misrepresentations made by Anderson relating to matters of value were apparently discounted in the price paid. These did not of themselves suggest anything calling for a further inquiry as to title. The possession of the premises, as disclosed by plaintiff's inquiries, was that of the party in whom the title appeared to be vested by the abstract. This only confirmed the apparent regularity of, and made more effective, the false certificate of the defendant. The evidence sustains the implied finding of the court that plaintiff acted with ordinary business prudence in making inquiry before paying his money to Overholtzer, and justifies the trial court's conclusion that the defendant Wayer's official misconduct was the cause of plaintiff's injury and loss.

Many cases are cited and several quotations from text-writers presented by the appellants to sustain the contention that a public officer is answerable only to the person employing him, or where a certificate is issued to the parties to the instrument which he certifies. It is contended that the obligation of the officer and his sureties to pay damages for loss resulting from official misconduct rests upon a privity corresponding to what is called privity of contract, and that in order that the injured party may recover he must establish relations analogous to these, citing Thompson on Negligence, vol. 5, § 6405; 2 Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) 782, etc. We do not think it necessary to distinguish these authorities or the cases upon which they rest any farther than they have been by declarations of the principles above applied. The rule declared by them is accepted in some jurisdictions, but is not supported by the weight of authority (Lammon v. Feusier, 111 U. S. 21, 4 Sup. Ct. 286, 28 L. Ed. 337; State v. Ryland, 163 Mo. 280, 63 S. W. 819), and is not consistent with that adopted in this state at an early date (Van Pelt v. Littler, 14 Cal. 194), and which still continues to be applied by our Supreme Court (Felonicher v. Stingley, 142 Cal. 630, 632, 76 Pac. 504). No privity between the parties is necessary to recovery. The cause of action arises from the breach of official duty by the officer and the special damage to the injured party. Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 58 Pac. 707, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171.

The right of action here is statutory, and rests upon section 801 of the Political Code, which reads: "For the official misconduct or neglect of a notary public, he and his sureties on his official bond are liable to the parties injured thereby for all the damages sustained." By section 794 it is made the duty of a notary to take acknowledgments and give certificates thereof. This must be done in accordance with law, or there is a breach of official duty. The loss sustained is that which is the result of official misconduct or neglect. Heldt v. Minor, 89 Cal. 118, 26 Pac. 627; Id., 113 Cal. 389, 45 Pac. 700.

There is nothing in the record to show an abuse of discretion on the trial court's part in overruling defendants' objections to the introduction of the depositions of the plaintiff. That the plaintiff should have seen and glanced over the interrogatories when opened by the notary four days before one of the depositions was taken, and received what purported to be a copy of the interrogatories by the same mail as the originals were received by the notary, when the other deposition was taken, did not necessarily render the taking of such depositions or either of them unfair under the provisions of section 2033 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In our opinion, the demurrer to the second amended complaint was properly overruled, and the findings and decision find ample support in the evidence.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 118

WILCOX-ROSE CONST. CO. v. EVANS.
(Civ. 524.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 26, 1908. Rehearing Denied
Nov. 28, 1908.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 152*)—LIABILITY OF THIRD PERSONS—UNAUTHORIZED DEALINGS WITH PRINCIPAL'S PROPERTY.

As a general rule, a principal may recover the value of property from one to whom it has been transferred by an unauthorized act of his agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 567-569; Dec. Dig. § 152.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 148*)—LIABILITY OF THIRD PERSONS—UNAUTHORIZED ACTS—APPARENT AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 3543, providing that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he whose negligence caused the act must suffer, where a principal invests his agent with apparent authority to dispose of property, he may not recover its value from an innocent third person, to whom it was transferred by the agent in violation of his authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 534-552; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 431*)—AGENTS—LIABILITY AS TO THIRD PERSONS—UNDISCLOSED AGENCY—RIGHTS OF UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL.

Defendant employed a contracting firm to build a barn, and thereafter the roof was damaged because of defective construction, and the contractors agreed to repair it, they to pay one-half of the expense and defendant one-half, but, in the meantime, the contractors had become officers and stockholders in plaintiff company, and the work was done with plaintiff's labor and materials, which facts defendant did not know until after completion of the work, but supposed he was dealing with the original contractors who built the barn. Held, that the contract was one made by an agent in his own name for an undisclosed principal, and plaintiff could recover the amount due the contractors under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1742; Dec. Dig. § 431.*]

4. ESTOPPEL (§ 56*)—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—MATTERS PRECLUDED—CONTRACT RIGHTS.

Though plaintiff was entitled to recover on a building contract made with defendant by plaintiff's agent in his own name, in the performance of which plaintiff's materials were used, plaintiff having refused the amount due the agent under the contract, and demanded the entire value of the work and materials, and defendant having paid the amount due under the contract to the assignee of the company, whom he supposed the agent represented, plaintiff was thereafter estopped from asserting any claim to the amount under his agent's contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 142; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by the Wilcox-Rose Construction Company against P. T. Evans. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas T. Porteous, for appellant. Purington & Adair, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action whereby plaintiff seeks to recover from defendant upon an implied contract for repairs made upon a building. Judgment went for defendant, from which, and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, it prosecutes this appeal.

It appears that the Lynn-Lewis Company was a corporation, and J. M. Lynn and J. W. Lewis were officers thereof. The company constructed for defendant a barn, upon the completion of which defendant paid therefor in full, according to the terms of the contract under which it was erected. Shortly thereafter the Lynn-Lewis Company ceased doing business, and Lynn and Lewis became stockholders and officers in a new corporation (plaintiff herein), known as the Wilcox-Rose Construction Company, of which E. H. Rose was president and general manager, J. M. Lewis vice president, and Lynn was superintendent of construction. On July 25th, and after Lynn and Lewis had become connected with plaintiff corporation, the roof of the barn constructed by the Lynn-Lewis Company fell in, damaging the vehicles of defendant's tenant, then occupying the barn. The next day defendant called upon Lynn and Lewis, both of whom, unknown to defendant, were at the time in the employ of plaintiff, with the view of having them make good his loss and damage resulting from the fall of said roof, which loss and damage he claimed was due to faulty construction thereof, for which the Lynn-Lewis Company was responsible. This conference resulted in a contract made between Lynn and Lewis and defendant, whereby it was agreed that the latter should have the vehicles repaired, and that Lynn and Lewis should repair the roof and the cost thereof be divided between the parties; or, using the language of Lynn, with whom the contract was made, and who testified for plaintiff, "the Lynn-Lewis people should stand one half and Evans the other half." In accordance with this arrangement Lynn and Lewis repaired the barn, and in the prosecution of the work, unknown, however, to defendant, used materials thereon belonging to plaintiff, and the labor necessary in making said repairs was performed by men in the employ of and paid by plaintiff. Lynn, as an officer of plaintiff, to wit, superintendent of construction, had charge of these men and control of the material belonging to plaintiff. Lynn and Lewis did not pay plaintiff for the labor done and materials furnished in performing said work, but had the same charged to defendant upon the books of plaintiff. Some time after the completion of the work, plaintiff presented a bill to defendant for the entire cost of making the repairs upon the building, whereupon defendant denied that he had ever made any contract with plaintiff for doing said work, and disclaimed any indebtedness by reason thereof to plaintiff. Defendant, according to the testimony of Mr. Rose, president of plaintiff, stated to him that there was in the neighborhood of $100 unpaid under his contract, and offered to pay plaintiff this balance, due under his contract to Lynn and Lewis; but Mr. Rose refused to accept the same, insisting upon the payment of the full cost of making repairs upon the barn, without reference to the contract made between defendant and Lynn and Lewis. Thereafter defendant paid this sum, constituting the balance due to Lynn and Lewis, to the assignee of the Lynn-Lewis Company. While there is some conflict in the evidence, we think it clear that Evans dealt with Lynn and Lewis as representatives of the company which had erected the barn, and which, he asserted, by reason of its negligent construction thereof, should make the repairs. He did not know plaintiff in the transaction, nor that it had anything to do with the repairs, until some time after the completion of the work.

Appellant's contention is that, not only the material used, but the labor, including that of Lynn himself, belonged to it, and that, as Evans received the benefit of such labor and material, it should recover from him the reasonable value thereof, without regard to the contract under which the repairs were made. The general rule is that a principal may recover the value of his own property from a third person where it has been transferred to such person by an agent in violation of his duty to his principal. Section 543, Clark and Skyles, Law of Agency; Harpending v. Meyer, 55 Cal. 555; Gilmore v. Newton, 9 Allen (Mass.) 171, 85 Am. Dec. 749. Where, however, the agent is invested with apparent authority to dispose of property, and by the principal held out as possessing authority to use materials and labor of his principal, such redress, notwithstanding the agent's wrongful act, will be denied against an innocent third person, for the reason that, "where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." Section 3543, Civ. Code; McNear v. Bourn, 122 Cal. 621, 55 Pac. 596; Schultz v. McLean, 93 Cal. 329, 28 Pac. 1053; Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 355, 60 Am. Dec. 618. Conceding, as shown by the evidence, that Lynn wrongfully, and in violation of the duty imposed upon him as an agent and an officer of appellant, appropriated materials and the labor of employes belonging to appellant, in the performance of a contract made with Evans, the latter was wholly innocent. The wrong perpetrated by Lynn was due entirely to the fact that appellant had placed him in a position, as superintendent of construction, where his orders commanded the obedience of appellant's employes with reference to the work they should do, and his direction as to the delivery of materials to be used in buildings, the construction and repair of which were under his control as such superintendent, received prompt attention. We are not unmindful of the fact that appellant insists that Lynn was without such authority. The fact remains, however, that he did perform the work at the expense of appellant corporation, of which he was the superintendent of construction, and it was undoubtedly by reason of his connection with the company in such capacity that he was enabled to perpetrate the fraud upon appellant.

The case is one of a contract made with a third party, by an agent in his own name, for an undisclosed principal, and notwithstanding the fact that Evans had dealt with Lynn and Lewis as representing the Lynn-Lewis Company, appellant might nevertheless have maintained an action against Evans upon the contract, and recovered from him such sum as might be due and unpaid under the terms of the contract to Lynn and Lewis. It appears that when Mr. Rose, the president of appellant, presented the bill for the work to Evans, and informed him that the work and materials had been furnished by appellant, Evans, although he disclaimed any contract with appellant, did, according to the testimony of Rose, offer to pay to appellant the sum of $99.56, then in the hands of respondent, and due under the contract made with Lynn. Appellant declined to accept this sum, or in any way recognize the contract under which the work was done, and thereafter, the Lynn-Lewis Company having made an assignment, Evans applied the money so disclaimed by appellant to the discharge of other indebtedness of the Lynn-Lewis Company, which disposition received the approval of the assignee of said company. Appellant was therefore estopped from asserting any claim or right to such sum.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 26

ALAMEDA COUNTY v. DALTON et al.
(Civ. 209.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Sept. 14, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 13, 1908.)

1. TAXATION (§ 570*) — COUNTY ASSESSOR — CONTRACT — PERSONAL INTEREST — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, in an action against a county tax assessor, held to justify a finding that he did not let an independent contract for making a certified copy of the assessment roll of the county so far as it pertained to property situated in the city of Oakland for the benefit of such city, but that he was personally interested in such work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 570.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 549*) — ASSESSORS — EXTRA WORK.

County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 504, c. 277), § 160, subd. 7, providing that, when the assessor is required by law to make copies of assessment rolls for cities contained within the county, he shall only receive the actual cost by him incurred in preparing such rolls, contemplated that the assessor should not be required, at his own expense, to do extra work in preparing such rolls.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 549.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 410*) — ASSESSORS — DUTIES — DELEGATION.

Under County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 504, c. 277), § 160, subd. 7, requiring the county assessor to prepare certified copies of assessment rolls for cities within the county, and to file with the county auditor a sworn statement showing the persons paid, and the amounts paid to each for such rolls, and to account forthwith and pay over to the county any difference between such cost and the amount allowed him for the work, the assessor is required to make such rolls as a part of his official duty, which he cannot delegate to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 676; Dec. Dig. § 410.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 570*) — OFFICERS — VIOLATION OF DUTY — ACTION ON BOND.

Where a county assessor, notwithstanding his duty to officially prepare a copy of the assessment roll for a city within the county and certify the actual cost thereof to the county auditor, as required by County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 504, c. 277), § 160, subd. 7, contracted with one of his deputies for the making of the roll, the county in an action against the assessor and his bondsmen for violation of duty, was entitled to prove by the contractor the number of days he was employed in making the copy, and the names of the persons employed in assisting him, and the amounts paid for their services.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 570.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry A. Melvin, Judge.

Action by Alameda County against Henry P. Dalton and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Campbell, Fitzgerald, Abbott & Fowler, for appellants. Attorney General Webb, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover of defendant Henry P. Dalton, the assessor of Alameda county, and the other defendants as sureties on his official bond, the sum of $2,600, being the amount received by said Dalton from the city of Oakland for making a certified copy of the assessment roll of said county of Alameda for the year 1902, so far as it pertains to property situate in the city of Oakland, less the actual cost incurred by said Dalton in preparing said roll. The case was tried before the court without a jury, and findings filed, on which judgment was entered for plaintiff in the sum of $1,999, with costs. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial.

As stated by appellants in their opening brief, the question in the case is as to the proper disposition of the money, received by the assessor from the city of Oakland for making the certified copy of the assessment roll, so far as it pertains to said city of Oakland. This is the main question in the case, and the only one that need be fully discussed. It is made the duty of the assessor to furnish, to incorporated cities or towns, upon request, on or before the third Monday in July of each year, "a complete certified copy of his assessment book so far as such assessment book pertains to property within the limits of said incorporated cities and towns. The assessor may charge incorporated cities and towns five cents per folio of 100 words for each copy of his assessment book furnished such incorporated cities and towns." Pol. Code, § 3653. It is provided, in County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 504, c. 277), as to the classes of counties to which the county of Alameda belongs (section 160, subd. 7), as follows: "* * * Provided however that should the assessor be directed by any law, or by any order of the board of supervisors, or by any municipality within said counties of the third class, to prepare maps, plats, block books for the use of the county, or assessment rolls for the use of any municipality, then said assessor shall only receive the actual cost by him incurred in making or preparing such maps, plats, block books or assessment rolls, and provided further that he shall file with the county auditor a sworn statement, showing the persons to whom, and the amounts paid to each, for such maps, plats, block books or assessment rolls; and he shall account forthwith and pay over to the county any difference between such cost and the amount so allowed him for such work." And section 216 of said county government act provides as follows: "All salaried officers of the several counties of this state shall charge and collect for the use of their respective counties, and pay into the county treasury on the first Monday in each month, the fees now or hereafter allowed by law in all cases, except where such fees or a percentage thereof is allowed such officers, and excepting also such fees as are charged against the county."

Under the above provisions the appellants do not claim that the assessor is allowed to make any personal profit to himself for such certified copies furnished to incorporated cities or towns, but they insist that the evidence in this case shows that the assessor let the contract to one Miller to make the certified copy of the assessment books required by the city of Oakland, at the sum of five cents per folio; that such sum was the reasonable value of making such copy of the assessment roll, and that the assessor actually paid Miller the whole $2,650, receiving no part thereof himself. The trial court found otherwise, and the evidence in our opinion justifies the findings. Miller was a deputy in the assessor's office, receiving a monthly salary of $100 per month, paid by the county of Alameda, and received such salary during the time he was engaged in preparing the certified copy. He was assisted in the work by the other deputies in the office, all of whom were being paid their regular salaries by the county, and none of whom appears to have been paid any extra compensation with the exception of $33.35 paid to one Wilson, and $20 paid to one Stoddard. Nor does it appear that the other deputies demanded or asked for any extra compensation. It is true that Miller testified that he received $2,650 from Dalton for making the copy; but he stated, in other parts of his testimony, that the reason he had not paid any other deputies who assisted in making the copy was because the matter was in litigation, and that he had never specified what he would pay them. It is evident that if Miller was really paid $2,650 by Dalton, and hired his own assistants to make the copy, the litigation between Dalton and the county did not concern him. The testimony of Miller, to the effect that Dalton immediately gave him his promissory note for $2,600, the contract price for doing the work, and that Dalton afterwards gave him a check in payment of the note—which check was produced and marked "Paid"—is, to say the least, peculiar. The usual way would have been for Miller to wait until the county had paid for the work, as the contract was for his benefit, and he was not paying out any money to have the work done. Dalton testified that he received the particular $2,600 from the county, and that no part of that money was paid to Miller. The copy of the assessment so made was made in 27 volumes, a great portion of which was printed matter already printed in the volumes at the time the copying was done. These volumes cost the county $10 to $13 per volume. The amount of printed matter in the volumes is shown to have been 24,468 folios out of the entire 53,000 folios, or nearly one-half, for which the city of Oakland paid the $2,600. It seems at least improbable that Miller received $2,600 from Dalton for 10 days' work by himself and the other deputies in the office, each of whom was receiving a salary from the county for copying into 27 volumes, which volumes were paid for by the county and used in making the copies. The volumes, printed matter, ink, paper, salaries of deputies, and the office in which the work was done were all paid for by the county. We do not find the evidence in the record on which the court based its allowance of $601 to Dalton, but we presume it was upon some basis or calculation by which the court intended to allow the reasonable value of the extra copying done in Dalton's office. The county government act contemplated that the assessor should not be required, at his own expense, to do extra work in preparing copies of the assessment roll for municipalities, for it expressly provides that when the assessor is by law required to make such copies, he "shall only receive the actual cost by him incurred in making or preparing such * * * assessment rolls." It was the official duty of the assessor to make the certified copy of the assessment roll, and not to delegate such official duty to another or third party. This is further shown by the provision in the same section that the assessor "shall file with the county auditor a sworn statement, showing the persons to whom, and the amounts paid to each, for such * * * assessment rolls, and that he shall account forthwith and pay over to the county any difference between such cost and the amount so allowed him for such work." If under the above provision the assessor was compelled to employ extra help, he could make his verified statement, giving the names of the persons employed, and the sum paid to each person, and thus be saved from paying the amounts from his own pocket. To illustrate what the expense would have been to the assessor in this case had he employed the extra help and attended to the matter himself, we find the time, given by Miller, that he was engaged with the deputies in making the copies was 10 days, and that the number of deputies, including himself, was 13. 13 times 10 is 130, which, at $4 per day—being about the wages paid the deputies, who received $100 per month—would amount to $520. The court allowed $601, which indeed appears to be liberal.

The court did not err in allowing questions to be asked by plaintiff's counsel of Miller as to the number of days he was employed in making the copies, the names of the parties employed in assisting him, and the amount of money paid to each for such services.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(154 Cal. 497)

CASSIN v. NICHOLSON et al. (S. F. 3,617.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 4, 1908.)

1. EJECTMENT (§ 26*)—EQUITABLE DEFENSE—FRAUD.

A defendant in ejectment may offer as an equitable defense that, by fraud of the predecessor in title of plaintiff's lessor, from whom he purchased the land in question he received a deed which did not include it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 107, 108; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

2. EJECTMENT (§ 106*)—EQUITABLE DEFENSES—DISPOSITION BY COURT WITHOUT JURY.

Where equitable defenses are interposed in ejectment, the court may dispose of them first and without a jury, and, if their disposition be adverse to defendant, may proceed to hear the legal controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 310; Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

3. EJECTMENT (§ 50*)—PARTIES—BRINGING IN NEW PARTIES—SUBSTITUTION.

In ejectment by a lessee, the action being really brought on behalf of the lessor, the lessor, being bound by the judgment and having had the right to appear originally as plaintiff to protect either her tenant's or her own possession, was properly brought in by the court as a party plaintiff, and, where it appeared before her appearance that another had succeeded to her rights, he was properly substituted for her and allowed to appear in person, especially where the lessee's right of possession had expired, and no judgment for possession could therefore be given the nominal plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 740, providing that in an action to recover realty, where plaintiff, with a right to recover at the commencement of suit, parts with the right during the action, the judgment must be according to the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

4. EJECTMENT (§ 127*)—PROCEEDINGS—DAMAGES—PARTY ENTITLED.

Where a lessee bringing ejectment was never in possession during his term, the presumption is that he did not pay rent to his landlord, and, if the successor of the lessor substituted as a coplaintiff in the lessor's stead recovers in the action, he may recover for the use and occupation of the land while unlawfully detained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

5. EJECTMENT (§ 9*)—PROCEEDINGS—SUBSTITUTED PLAINTIFF—TITLE AND RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

Where the successor of a coplaintiff in ejectment is substituted as a party, he must prevail by virtue of the title to which he succeeded, and not under another title disconnected with that originally asserted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

6. TENANCY IN COMMON (§ 15*)—EJECTMENT BY ONE TENANT—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT.

Where a tenant in common recovers in ejectment against an adverse claimant, the judgment determines the right of possession of the whole premises, and, as the recovery of possession under the judgment relates to the commencement of the action, plaintiff in contemplation of law is in possession of the whole premises as of that time, so as to prevent acquisition of title by adverse possession pending the action, as against co-tenants not suing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tenancy in Common, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

7. JUDGMENT (§ 715*)—NATURE OF CLAIM OF TITLE—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant pleaded adverse possession, he could show that he had acquired possession under a written instrument and had continued to hold possession under claim of right and in hostility to all the world, though the testimony would also tend to show fraud of his grantor, which fraud the court had formerly held did not exist in determining equitable issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 715.*]

8. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 189*) — VENDOR'S TITLE—ESTOPPEL OF VENDEE TO DENY.

While a vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale is estopped to deny the vendor's title, yet when, so far as the vendee is concerned, the contract is executed, he may thereafter assert his adverse possession as against the world, including his vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 381, 382; Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

9. VENUE (§ 56*) — CHANGE OF VENUE — DEMAND—NECESSITY.

The lessor's successor in interest being a proper party plaintiff, his appearance did not so change the action as to necessitate a transfer of the trial to the county in which the land was situated, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 396, providing that an action may be tried in any county, unless defendant demand a trial in the proper county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 86, 87; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by Michael Cassin against Murdock Nicholson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from the refusal of a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

William H. Jordan, for appellants. J. R. Welch, D. M. Delmas, and Garret W. McEnerney, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action in ejectment commenced in the district court of the Twentieth judicial district of California July 11, 1879. It appears from the complaint and the verification thereto, made by Mrs. Winifred C. Tarpey, that plaintiff, Cassin, was her lessee for a term of five years, terminating upon the 1st day of October, 1883, and that the action was prosecuted by the lessee on behalf of Mrs. Tarpey and for the establishment of her title. The defendant answered by denial, and for an equitable defense pleaded certain circumstances of fraud alleged to have been perpetrated upon him by Matthew Tarpey, predecessor in interest to the title of Winifred C. Tarpey. These matters will be found set forth in the three appeals in the case of Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 608, 12 Pac. 778, Id., 89 Cal. 617, 26 Pac. 1101, and Id., 124 Cal. 444, 57 Pac. 457. In substance, these allegations were: That he had entered into a written agreement with Tarpey for the conveyance of about 600 acres of land, a part of the Tarpey ranch, at an agreed price of $1,500; that he fully executed this agreement by the payment of the purchase price, and entered into possession of all the land; that there was delivered to him by Tarpey a deed, represented to embrace all of the land described in the written agreement, and he believed the representation; that he was unable to read; and that he continued so to hold possession of the land adversely to all the world in this belief. He averred that Winifred C. Tarpey and Mary Tarpey, Winifred Tarpey, and Frances Tarpey, her children, were the heirs at law and devisees of Matthew Tarpey, who had died in 1873, and that he had made demand of them for a correction deed and had been refused, and asked that they be brought into court for the complete determination and settlement of the controversy. In connection with these equitable matters defendant also pleaded title by adverse possession. Seemingly, under the mistaken idea that this equitable defense could not be successfully interposed in a legal action of ejectment (Meeker v. Dalton, 75 Cal. 154, 16 Pac. 764; Hyde v. Mangan, 88 Cal. 319, 26 Pac. 180), the defendant Nicholson then commenced his action against Mrs. Tarpey and her children, alleging the fraud of Matthew Tarpey, as above indicated, and praying specific performance of the agreement to convey. This is the case, the three appeals from which will be found reported as above noted. Upon the last appeal the trial court found the fraud substantially as pleaded, but found facts from which this court declared that plaintiff had not commenced his action within the three years after the discovery of the fraud, and was therefore barred from the relief he sought by the statute of limitations. Upon the rendition of this judgment, Nicholson dismissed his action, and the ejectment suit here under consideration was aroused from its long slumber. Since it would have been permissible for defendant to have offered his equitable defense and to have sought equitable relief in the original ejectment suit, this case is no different from the situation which would have resulted had the issues in Nicholson v. Tarpey been here tried. It would have been proper for the court to have disposed of the equitable matters first and without a jury, and upon the final disposition of them, if their disposition were adverse to Nicholson, to proceed to the hearing of the legal controversy. The present action may therefore be regarded as one wherein Nicholson has interposed an equitable cross-complaint seeking affirmative relief upon the ground of fraud, and has been refused relief because of his neglect to commence his action within the time limited by the statute.

In 1901 this action came on for hearing. The trial court called in Winifred C. Tarpey and her children as parties plaintiff, and, it being made to appear that John Tarpey had succeeded to all the right, title, and interest of Winifred C. Tarpey and her children, John Tarpey was ordered to appear as substituted plaintiff for them. He made such appearance and filed a complaint, setting forth the history of the action of Nicholson v. Tarpey and the final dismissal of it by plaintiff, and his own title, and, with the usual allegations appropriate to an action of ejectment, prayed judgment for the possession of the premises and the rental value during the occupancy of defendant. To this complaint Nicholson answered by denials and by pleading title in himself by adverse possession. He also set up all the matters of equitable consideration alleged in his answer to Cassin's complaint and in his own complaint in Nicholson v. Tarpey. The trial court first took evidence upon this equitable defense and found: That Tarpey had committed no fraud; that there was a written agreement between the parties for the conveyance of a piece of land containing 191.14 acres; that on the 29th of October, 1868, the full purchase price was paid by Nicholson for this land; and that Matthew Tarpey executed a deed in full conformity with the written agreement without intending or contriving or designing to mislead, deceive, overreach, swindle, or defraud defendant, and without in fact misleading, deceiving, overreaching, swindling, or defrauding the defendant; and that Tarpey did convey all the property which he had ever agreed to convey or had ever represented that he would convey. Proceeding next to the trial of the legal issues, a jury was impaneled. Plaintiff made proof of the legal title. The court, however, refused to admit most of the evidence offered by the defendant, upon the ground that he was "equitably estopped," and instructed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, which it did, fixing the rental value of the property during the time of its detention at $1,778.12. Judgment followed for plaintiff, and from that judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellants' first complaint is as to the ruling of the court in admitting John Tarpey as plaintiff in the action under an order substituting him as plaintiff for Winifred Tarpey and her children, who, it is asserted, never appeared in the action. Herein various contentions are raised, as: That the original action was by the termor for possession for a limited term of years; that that term had long expired before trial; and that the action was thus one contemplated by section 740, Code Civ. Proc., where, the right of possession in Cassin having terminated, the judgment should so declare, and, at the utmost, the award should have been merely for damages for detention. Again, it is urged that the court after trial of the issues in the Cassin action, and when defendant had moved for a nonsuit, of its own motion first called in Winifred Tarpey and her children, and, upon their failure to appear, allowed John Tarpey to be substituted for them. It is asserted that, if treated as an intervener, it was error to allow him to appear, and that it was error also to allow him to appear as a substitute for Winifred Tarpey and her children, who had never appeared. But, as has been pointed out, Winifred Tarpey by her affidavit had so connected herself with Cassin's claim to possession as to be bound by whatever judgment was rendered, and the action was in strictness one to determine her title. Convenient as was the common-law action of ejectment under the ancient practice for the determination of title to land, in this state where equity and law are administered in the same forum and under a single pleading, where an action to quiet title or to determine conflicting claims to real estate may be brought indifferently by one in or out of possession, the utility of such an action no longer exists, and its legal fictions, admirable as they were under common-law procedure, serve but as matters of embarrassment under our code procedure, where every action should be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. But it may not be said that the court erred in permitting Tarpey to appear as plaintiff. The commencement of Cassin's action interfered with the running of the statute of limitations in favor of Nicholson, and as Mrs. Tarpey would have had the undoubted right to have appeared as plaintiff with Cassin to protect her tenant's possession, or to have appeared alone to have established her own right of possession, so plaintiff John Tarpey, having succeeded, as he pleads, to the right of Mrs. Winifred Tarpey, is himself entitled to appear in person and prosecute the action. Especially is this so where a termor's right of possession has long since expired and no judgment for possession could therefore be given to the nominal plaintiff (Cassin), under section 740, Code Civ. Proc., no matter how completely the right to such possession during the term of his lease might have been established. And, while upon this subject, it may be added that the presumption is, since Cassin was never in possession during the term of his lease, that he did not pay, as he would not have been obliged to pay, rent to his landlord. If John Tarpey shall prevail in the action, the resultant damages for the value of the use and occupation during the period of the unlawful detention are properly awardable to him. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that John Tarpey, as plaintiff, must prevail by virtue of the title to which he succeeded from Mrs. Winifred Tarpey, and not by virtue of any other title disconnected with that which was asserted in the original action. In this connection appellants argue that Matthew Tarpey in his lifetime owned an undivided seven-eighths of the rancho, that upon his death one-half of that seven-eighths was devised, and distributed to his wife, and the other moiety to his children, and that, as the lease was made by Mrs. Tarpey alone, there is in litigation the title only to one-half of seven-eighths; but the Cassin action, with which Mrs. Tarpey connected herself, was an action for the possession of all the property, and when one of several tenants in common recovers judgment in ejectment against an adverse claimant the judgment determines the right of possession of the whole of the premises, and the recovery of possession under the judgment relates to the commencement of the action, so that, in contemplation of law, the plaintiff must be considered in possession of the whole premises as of that date, and the effect of the recovery inures to the benefit of other co-tenants not suing, so as to prevent the acquisition of title, by adverse possession against them pending the action. Newman v. Bank of California, 80 Cal. 368, 22 Pac. 261, 5 L. R. A. 467, 13 Am. St. Rep. 169.

It is to be remembered that defendant Nicholson had pleaded title by adverse possession to Cassin's complaint, alleging such possession to have been continuous from the year 1867. He entered the same plea to the complaint of John Tarpey. All evidence under this plea was ruled out upon trial before the jury, upon the ground, as has been stated, that the defendant was equitably estopped. Upon this the record discloses the following: Objection was made to a question asked of defendant Nicholson. The court requested the defendants' counsel to state the purpose of the testimony. He responded: "It is for the purpose of showing our ownership and title to the land in dispute and of our right to the possession of it. It is for the purpose of giving support to the plea of the statute of limitations and to our title by prescription, and also for the purposes, generally, of showing our title to the land and our right to the possession of the land. Mr. Delmas: Then, I am prepared to argue that question, if your honor please. No evidence of that kind is admissible in this case, and the defendant is estopped from introducing it; estopped by his pleadings and by his own conduct. The Court: I think, gentlemen, that the rule of equitable estoppel will have to apply in this case. The objection will be sustained." Counsel for appellants then, amongst other specific offers, made the following: "Now, I offer to prove that the defendant Murdock Nicholson from the month of June, 1867, to July 11, 1879, was in the actual, continuous, exclusive, hostile, and adverse possession of the lands in dispute, holding and claiming the same against Michael Cassin, the plaintiff, and against the world. I further offer to prove that Murdock Nicholson, the defendant in this case, during this period subjected the premises and lands in dispute to his will and dominion and exercised acts of ownership over the same. I further offer to prove that during this period just named, and the whole of it, he used the premises in dispute for fuel, also for fencing and timber, also for wood, also for pasture, also for the ordinary use of the occupant, and also for the uses that lands contiguous to these lands were used, and in the usual way of land surrounding these lands." To each and all of these offers the plaintiff objected upon the grounds above stated, and the court sustained the objection. Wherein an equitable estoppel had arisen against the defendant so as to prevent him from proving, if he was able to do so, his prescriptive title antedating the commencement of the action, is not made plain. It is true that in the trial of the equitable defense the court found as above indicated, but those findings and that determination could not be used to prevent the defendant from introducing all pertinent evidence upon the subject of the legal title which he claimed. Thus, in his legal defense, defendant was entitled to show before the jury under his plea that he had entered into possession under a written instrument and had continued to hold that possession under claim of right and in hostility to all the world, the facts and circumstances which were at the initiation of his possession. He was entitled to establish the written agreement between himself and Tarpey, that that agreement had been fully executed, and, upon proof of its destruction, he was entitled to show the contents of the agreement. The fact that in making this proof the testimony would go to the asserted fraud of Tarpey, against the existence of which fraud the court, in determining the equitable issues, had found adversely to defendant, could not deprive him of the right to present the same facts and circumstances to the jury, not as seeking at their hands any equitable relief, but as showing, if his evidence was believed, the circumstances of his entry, that it was in good faith, and that it was under a written instrument. Defendant had pleaded adverse possession under section 323, Code Civ. Proc. If he were not permitted to prove, as he had pleaded, that he had entered under a written instrument, he would have to establish an adverse holding under sections 324 and 325, Code Civ. Proc., an occupancy, use, and holding very different from that required of one who claims title founded upon a written instrument. If the court's ruling therefore was based on the belief that, the findings in the equitable defense having been adverse to defendant, he was estopped from offering proof of any of these matters, in support of the legal title which he was seeking to establish before the jury, the answer already made disposes of the proposition. He was not urging an equitable defense before the jury, but he was seeking to show the nature of his adverse possession. In showing this it was pertinent and proper for him to prove how that possession was initiated and upon what it was based, and in doing this it mattered not that the evidence tending to establish his alleged entry under a written instrument went likewise to the alleged fraud of Tarpey. The jury was not called upon to pass upon the issue of fraud, but it was entitled, in considering the claim of adverse possession set up by defendant, to be informed of the character and circumstances of his entry, as well as of the character and circumstances of his continued possession after entry.

The only other foundation for this ruling of equitable estoppel is based upon the doctrine that a vendee is estopped from denying his vendor's title, as a tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title. This doctrine was never applied between vendor and vendee with the strictness which, upon good reason, obtains in the case of landlord and tenant. As early as 1822 its application to the vendee was doubted by Chief Justice Marshall. Blight's Lessee v. Rochester, 7 Wheat. 534, 5 L. Ed. 516. He says: "The propriety of applying the doctrines between lessor and lessee to a vendor and vendee may well be doubted. The vendee acquires the title of the vendor. The rights of the vendor are intended to be extinguished by the sale, and he has no continuing interest in the maintenance of his title, unless he should be called upon in consequence of some covenant or warranty in his deed. The property having become, by the sale, the property of the vendee, he has a right to fortify that title by the purchase of any other which may protect him in the quiet enjoyment of the premises. No principle of morality restrains him from doing this, nor is either the letter or spirit of the contract violated by it. The only controversy which ought to arise between him and the vendor respects the payment of the purchase money. How far he may be bound by this, by law, or by the obligations of good faith, is a question depending on all the circumstances of the case, and in deciding it all these circumstances are examinable. If the vendor has actually made a conveyance, his title is extinguished, in law as well as equity, and it will not be pretended that he can maintain an ejectment. If he has sold, but has not conveyed, the contract of sale binds him to convey, unless it be conditional. If, after such contract, he brings an ejectment for the land, he violates his own contract, unless the condition be broken by the vendee, and, if it be, the vendor ought to show it." Since then, the rule and doctrine which Chief Justice Marshall expressed as being the true one has received universal recognition. It still is true that a vendee in possession under an executory contract of sale is estopped from denying the vendor's title, for the same reasons that would apply in the case of a tenant; but whenever, so far as the vendee is concerned, the contract is executed, from the time of its execution the vendee may assert his adverse possession against the world, including his vendor. "It is a rule of law now uncontroverted that, where the vendee under a contract or agreement to purchase land has executed or performed the agreement on his part, by full payment of the purchase money his possession from that time becomes adverse to that of the vendor, having gone into possession primarily under the agreement." Ambrose v. Huntington, 34 Or. 484, 56 Pac. 513; 2 Woods, Limitations, 260. And so it is said by this court in Fleishman v. Wood, 135 Cal. 256, 67 Pac. 276, speaking of the defendant in possession: "He was the owner and in possession, and, if he had remained in possession for five years from and after the completion of his contract, he would have acquired the legal title by adverse possession." If the case of Farish v. Coon, 40 Cal. 33, shall be deemed to announce a contrary doctrine, it must be considered overruled by the later and better authority.

For the reasons above given, and under section 396, Code Civ. Proc., John Tarpey being a proper party plaintiff, his appearance did not so change the action as to necessitate a transfer of the trial of it to the county in which the land was situated. The action, having been properly commenced in the district court, was properly heard and determined in the superior court of Santa Clara county. Watt v. Wright, 66 Cal. 202, 5 Pac. 91.

No other matters call for special attention.

For the foregoing reason, the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 472

PEOPLE v. WHALEN. (Cr. 1,440.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 4, 1908.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 49*)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, considered, and held sufficient to show an actual payment of money on a check given by the prosecuting witness to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 737*)—INSTRUCTIONS—QUESTIONS OF LAW OR FACT—DEFINITION OF TERMS.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, by representing that the mine of a corporation in which defendant sold the prosecuting witness stock was a fully developed mine, an instruction as to what in general would constitute a fully developed mine was not objectionable as instructing on a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 737.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

3. WORDS AND PHRASES—"FULLY DEVELOPED MINE."

To constitute a "fully developed mine," it is not necessary that the mine shall be in such a condition that the metals or minerals therein contained may be extracted with profit without further waste work, as it would be "fully developed" if the ore was sufficiently exposed and ready for extraction to permit active operations in the regular course of mining, although, owing to the barrenness of the ore, it would be impossible to work it with profit.

4. FALSE PRETENSES (§ 52*)—INSTRUCTIONS—"FULLY DEVELOPED MINE."

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, by representing that the mine of a corporation in which defendant sold the prosecuting witness stock was a fully developed mine, the jury were instructed that "a 'fully developed mine' is a deposit of metals or minerals whose underground works or developments are of such an extent or nature as to permit of the extraction of the metals and minerals therein contained with profit without further waste work." Held, that the instruction, though incorrect as a general proposition, properly defined the meaning of the term "fully developed mine" as used by defendant in his representations to the prosecuting witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

Where requested instructions in a criminal prosecution are included in other instructions given by the court, it is not error to refuse the request.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

6. WITNESSES (§ 269*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

In a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses as to the value of mining stock sold by defendant to the prosecuting witness, a sister of the prosecuting witness, who was present at the time the alleged false representations were made, in giving her testimony, was allowed to state that she had paid a certain sum for stock of the company which she had bought at the same time, and payment for which had been included in the check given by the prosecuting witness. Held, that this evidence did not put in issue whether she had been deceived by defendant's false representations, and hence it was proper to refuse to allow her to be cross-examined as to whether she believed the representations, and to elicit other facts immaterial except on the theory that defendant was on trial for obtaining money from her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, evidence that defendant, prior to the transaction in controversy, had made substantially the same representations to other persons in an endeavor to sell them stock in the same company in which he sold the prosecuting witness stock, is admissible to show that defendant was aware of the falsity of his statements, and that, knowing them to be false, he made them with intent to deceive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 830-832; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 419*)—EVIDENCE—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—PRIVATE WRITINGS—CERTIFICATES OF ASSAYER.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses as to the value of a mine, it was shown by a witness that he had taken ore from the mine, had given it to an assayer to be assayed, and had received from the assayer certain certificates stating the result. The assayer was not produced, and no evidence of the correctness of the certificates was furnished. Held, that the certificates were not admissible in evidence, as they were not of an official character, but mere private statements, of no higher value than other hearsay evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 419*)—EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

In a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses as to the value of a mine, testimony of a witness, that assays of ore taken from the mine were made in his assaying establishment, was not admissible, where the assays were not made by him or under his supervision, and he had no personal knowledge as to their correctness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; E. C. Hart, Judge.

William Whalen was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied in bank; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

Henry C. Ross for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant was tried and convicted upon a charge of having by false pretenses obtained the sum of $1,000 of lawful money from one Urilda M. Martin.

It is claimed that there was no proof that any money was actually obtained by the defendant. It appeared from the testimony of Mrs. Martin, the prosecuting witness, that she and her sister, Mrs. Francis H. Martin, were induced to buy of the defendant 100 shares of stock in the United States Mining & Smelting Company, the sister taking 20 shares of stock at the price of $200, and the prosecuting witness 80 shares at the price of $1,000, and that the prosecuting witness gave him a check on a bank in New York for $1,200, in payment for the 100 shares, $200 of the amount being loaned by her to her sister for that purpose. It may be conceded that, if nothing more had been shown than the giving of the check, it would not prove the charge of having obtained money; but we think the jury were fairly justified in concluding from the entire evidence that the check thus given was cashed by the defendant and the money obtained thereon. The two sisters both testified upon the trial, and both expressly stated, that they paid him $1,200 in money, and that they had "invested" in the stock. The prosecuting witness said: "Up to January, 1906, I fully believed these mines to be worth every dollar I had put into them." The check was given on May 3, 1905. The defendant remained in Sacramento, where this transaction occurred, for several weeks thereafter, and, while there, hired men to go with him to the mines, which were in the state of Nevada, and for more than six months thereafter he was in charge of the affairs of the mining company, either at the mines or in Sacramento. During this time the two sisters resided in Sacramento and were associating with other stockholders in the company to whom the defendant had sold other stock. There was nothing disclosed by the evidence to indicate that the defendant experienced any difficulty or delay in obtaining payment of the check. The facts concerning the payment of the money were all elicited upon the examination in chief of the two witnesses. There was no cross-examination on that subject, nor any attempt, at any stage of the case, to show that the check had not been paid in the usual course of business. Under these circumstances, the jury were justified in construing the testimony of the prosecuting witness and her sister to mean that the money called for by the check had actually been paid.

It is claimed that the following instruction by the court was erroneous: "A 'fully developed mine' is a deposit of metals or minerals whose underground works or developments are of such an extent and nature as to permit of the extraction of the metals and minerals therein contained with profit without further waste work." The claim is that the question whether or not the mines were fully developed is a question of fact to be decided by the jury, and also that, if it is a question of law, the instruction was erroneous in stating that it was necessary, in order for a mine to be fully developed, that it be susceptible of being worked with profit. We think the question as to what in general would constitute a fully developed mine was one upon which the court might well instruct the jury, and that, if the instruction was not otherwise objectionable, it is not so because of its being an instruction upon a question of fact. Upon the other proposition, it may be conceded that if the instruction is taken alone, without reference to the facts of the case or the crime involved, and as an abstract proposition, it would be erroneous. A mine composed of ore containing so little precious metal that it would not pay for the mere crushing of the rock after it was taken out might nevertheless be fully developed in the sense that the ore, such as it was, would be sufficiently exposed and ready for extraction to permit active operations in the regular course of mining to begin, and in such condition it might be said to be fully developed, and yet, owing to the barrenness of the ore, it would be impossible to work it with profit. But an instruction may be incorrect as an abstract or general proposition, and yet not erroneous or injurious when considered in connection with the particular case and the facts to which it relates. The statement that the mines were fully developed was made, as is alleged, to induce the prosecuting witness to buy stock of the company to which the mines belonged, and it is in this connection that the meaning of the expression must be considered. Such a statement, made for such a purpose and in connection with such a proposition, would imply that the ores of the mines referred to were of such value that profitable mining operations could be immediately begun therein without further preparatory work. The instruction therefore merely expresses in language what the representation, in connection with the circumstances under which it is alleged to have been made, necessarily implied. The jury was fully instructed to the effect that it must appear that the money was obtained by means of the representation or representations charged in the information. The charge was that the representations were made to induce the prosecuting witness to buy stock in the corporation owning the mines and pay the sum of a thousand dollars therefor, and that, relying thereon, the prosecuting witness did buy the stock and pay the money. Taken in connection with the transaction in which the representation was made, the instruction properly defines the meaning of the term "fully developed mine" according to the meaning it must have been intended to have when it was made to the prosecuting witness, and, in connection with the other instructions, was a correct exposition of the law.

It is claimed that the court erred in refusing certain instructions asked by the defendant. We have examined the instructions given, and we think that in each case where a proper instruction was refused the proposition covered thereby was included in other instructions given by the court. In such case there could be no error in the refusal complained of.

Mrs. Francis H. Martin, a sister of the prosecuting witness, was present at the time the alleged false misrepresentations were made to the prosecuting witness. In giving her testimony, she was allowed to state that she herself had paid $200 for the stock. This it was necessary for her to do for the reason that the check given by the prosecuting witness included $200 in payment of the stock bought by Mrs. Francis H. Martin, and in order to give an intelligent narrative of what occurred at that time it was necessary for her to state her own purchase. Counsel for defendant appear to have conceived the idea that this put in issue the question whether or not Mrs. Francis H. Martin had been deceived and defrauded by the false representations of the defendant. He sought in his cross-examination to ascertain whether or not she herself believed the representations, and also to elicit other facts immaterial except upon the theory that the defendant was on trial for obtaining money from the witness Mrs. Francis H. Martin. These questions were all immaterial to the case on trial and were properly excluded by the court.

Evidence was given upon the trial that the defendant, prior to the transaction in controversy, had made substantially the same representations to other persons in an endeavor to sell to them stock in the same company. It was proper for the court to admit evidence of this character to show that the representations were not inadvertent, but were deliberately made, with knowledge of the facts, and with intent to deceive. "Evidence of similar offenses involving the making of other false representations is admissible against the prisoner to show that he is aware of the falsity of the statements made by him in the present case, and that, knowing them to be false, he made them with the intent to deceive." State v. Briggs, 74 Kan. 382, 86 Pac. 449, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 278. See, also, People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 275, 5 Pac. 240; People v. Neyce, 86 Cal. 393, 24 Pac. 1091; People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 70, 72 Pac. 600; 7 Ency. of Ev. 627; 12 Cyc. 408, 411; 1 Wigmore, § 320.

In defense it was shown by a witness named Hassett that, after the commission of the crime charged, he had taken ore from these mines, had given it to the assayer to be assayed and had received from the assayer certain certificates stating the result, a copy of which he gave to the defendant. The assayer was not produced, and no evidence of the correctness of the certificates was furnished. For the purpose of proving the value of the ore, the certificates were offered in evidence on this testimony, and were rejected. This ruling was correct. The certificates were not of an official character, but were mere private statements, and in legal contemplation were of no higher value than any other hearsay testimony. The same considerations apply to the refusal of the court to allow the witness Thomas Price to testify to the assays afterwards made in his assaying establishment, but not made by him or under his supervision, and not under such circumstances that he had any personal knowledge whether they were correct or not.

There was no misconduct on the part of the prosecuting attorney in his argument to the jury. His method of arraying the facts in the case, as he claimed them to be, and facts which he claimed to be matter of common knowledge, could not have misled the jury as to the evidence and did not transcend the limits of fair argument.

Numerous other objections to rulings made by the court are contained in the brief of counsel and but slightly argued. They all related to trivial matters not worthy of further comment. In general, the rulings were correct, and, where technically erroneous, they were of trifling importance or related to matters immaterial to the case and which could not have been prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

The judgment of conviction and the orders denying motion for new trial and the motion in arrest of judgment are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

9 Cal. App. 114

MYERS v. HOLTON. (Civ. 535.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Sept. 25, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 103*) — DECISIONS REVIEWABLE.

An order denying defendant's motion to strike from the files an amended complaint, filed by direction of the court after submission of the cause and before the findings and judgment are signed and filed, is not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 704; Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 871*) — REVIEW — QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

Where an exception is preserved to the ruling of the court in denying a motion to strike an amended complaint from the files, the objection may be considered on appeal from the judgment roll, where it is brought up by a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 871.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 237*) — AMENDMENTS — CONFORMITY TO PROOFS.

A trial court is warranted in directing an amendment to the pleading to conform to the proofs after submission, when necessary to prevent a mistrial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 603-619; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

4. PLEADING (§ 248*) — AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

In an action against a purchaser of property by one who had a prior option to purchase for a smaller amount than that given by defendant, plaintiff alleged a promise of defendant to protect him in the matter of his commission, and prayed judgment for the difference between the amount of his option and the sum for which defendant purchased. In an amended complaint, plaintiff alleged the same promise as to his commission, but asked judgment for his commission to be measured by a percentage. Held, that the amended complaint did not state a new cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 686-709; Dec. Dig. § 248.*]

5. WORK AND LABOR (§ 2*)—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

In the absence of an express contract as to compensation, the implied promise is to pay what the service is reasonably worth.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Work and Labor, Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 396*)—TRIAL BY COURT—PLEADINGS TO SUPPORT FINDINGS.

In an action against the purchaser of property by one holding a prior option to purchase to recover commissions, the admission in the answer that defendant believed that plaintiff was getting the ordinary commissions, not exceeding 10 per cent., is not sufficient to support a finding that the reasonable value of the service was $1,200, and it is not material that there was an allegation in an amended complaint that the reasonable value of such services is $1,200, which allegation was not denied, where such allegation was made for the purpose of having the pleading conform to the proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 396.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*) — PRESUMPTIONS—FINDINGS OF COURT.

Where there is an allegation in the complaint and a finding by the trial court in accordance therewith, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the record, the appellate court will assume that the finding was supported by evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3762; Dec. Dig. § 931*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Lee R. Myers against G. L. Holton. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

D. P. Hatch and Myron Westover, for appellant. Andrew G. Park, Theodore G. Park, and T. M. McNamara, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from judgment in favor of plaintiff from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial and from an order denying defendant's motion to strike from the files an amended complaint filed by direction of the court after submission of the cause and before the findings and judgment were signed and filed.

The last order is not an appealable one; but, an exception having been preserved to the ruling of the court, the matter is before us by bill of exceptions on the appeal from the judgment roll. We see no error in denying the motion to strike out. Not only is the trial court warranted in directing an amendment to the pleading to conform to the proofs after submission, but the court should do so when it is necessary to prevent a mistrial. Hancock v. Board, 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 44; Hedstrom v. Union Trust Co., 94 Pac. 386. There is nothing in the bill of exceptions showing that the amended complaint does not conform to the evidence introduced, and the same facts and promise are counted upon in the amended complaint that are alleged in the original complaint. The right to recover rests upon the same breach of the same contract. People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 5 Cal. App. 440, 90 Pac. 556.

In both complaints the plaintiff relies upon the promise of the defendant "to protect him in the matter of his commission," because the defendant purchased the property on which plaintiff held an option. In the first complaint the amount prayed for is $3,500, the difference between the amount of his option and the sum for which defendant purchased the property. In the second, the commission sued for is measured by a percentage. This is not the statement of a new cause of action.

The writings set forth in the complaint satisfy the provisions of the statute of frauds as an acknowledgment of the employment of plaintiff. They show sufficient recognition of his agency under subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code to support an action for commissions. Kennedy v. Merickel (Cal. App.) 97 Pac. 81.

The writing upon which plaintiff relies as a promise to pay his commissions does not specify either an amount or a percentage to be paid. The answer to the original complaint (there was no answer to the amended complaint) avers that defendant believed that plaintiff was getting the ordinary commissions such as are customarily paid in sales of the character then being made by plaintiff, to wit, not in excess of 10 per cent. of the purchase price. In the amended complaint it is alleged that "the defendant understood that he had bound himself and was to pay to the said plaintiff in case of purchase of said property by himself, or his assigns, the sum of 10 per cent. upon the purchase price thereof, to wit, the sum of $1,200. That the said sum * * * is and was a reasonable sum for the services rendered," etc. The findings of the court in this respect are in substantially the same language. The bill of exceptions contains this statement: "There was no evidence introduced as to what the reasonable market value of the services so rendered by plaintiff would be or was at the time the same were rendered. The evidence did show the kind and character of the services so rendered, but no witness or witnesses testified as to what would be the reasonable value of such services." The contract of employment of plaintiff provides for neither a sum certain nor a method by which a certain sum can be arrived at by computation. In the absence of an express contract as to compensation, the implied promise is to pay what the service is reasonably worth. Kennedy v. Merickel, supra. The admission in the answer that defendant believed that the plaintiff was getting the ordinary commissions not exceeding 10 per cent. is not sufficient to support the finding that the reasonable value of the service was $1,200. Neither is it material in this connection that the allegation in the amended complaint that the reasonable value of such services is $1,200 is undenied. This allegation was made for the purpose of having the pleading conform to the proof. Such amendments are not intended to frame issues for trial, but are made upon the supposition that the issues therein have already been tried. Hedstrom v. Union Trust Co., supra; McDougald v. Argonaut, 117 Cal. 95, 48 Pac. 1021.

Respondent contends, however, that, even though there be no evidence to sustain a finding as to the reasonable value of plaintiff's service, the finding above quoted to the effect that defendant, at the time he executed the writing agreeing to protect plaintiff in his commissions, understood (thereby) that he had bound himself and was to pay to the said plaintiff * * * the sum of $1,200, is sufficient to sustain the judgment. This is alleged and found, and, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the record, we must assume it was supported by the evidence. Pacific Pav. Co. v. Mowbray, 127 Cal. 1, 59 Pac. 205. While such words as "the defendant understood" are generally to be regarded as mere deductions or conclusions when they appear in the testimony of a witness, if the trial court finds therefrom that an express contract was made between the parties, such finding will not be disturbed or questioned on appeal. This court will always assume that the trial court made an inference of fact to support the judgment, rather than one which would not, and, if any inference of fact could have been made from the evidence by the trial court that would support the judgment, it will be presumed that it made such inference. Griffin v. Pacific E. Ry. Co., 1 Cal. App. 673, 82 Pac. 1084. The judgment finds sufficient support in this finding.

It is not necessary to consider the objections of respondent to the bill of exceptions that it does not conform to the requirements of section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure. No reason is assigned for this contention and none suggests itself upon an inspection of the record.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J

9 Cal. App. 192

PEOPLE v. PATINO. (Cr. 97.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 6, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.

It was not prejudicial error to refuse to instruct that the jury must, if possible, reconcile the evidence with the presumption of accused's innocence, where the court instructed, in the language of Pen. Code, § 1096, that accused is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and that in a case of reasonable doubt he is entitled to acquittal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011; Dec. Dig. § 829.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Charles Patino was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction, from decisions refusing to vacate the information and disallowing a demurrer, and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Clyde Bishop and A. R. Holston, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Information for grand larceny, with charge of prior conviction of burglary. Four appeals are designated in the notice as follows: From the judgment, from the decision refusing to set aside the information, from the decision disallowing the demurrer, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

But one question is presented: The refusal of the trial court to give, at defendant's request, an instruction in the following language: "The jury are instructed that the defendant must be presumed to be innocent until his guilt is fully established by legal evidence. The presumption of innocence prevails throughout the trial, and it is the duty of the jury, if possible, to reconcile the evidence with this presumption." It is admitted by appellant that the first part of the instruction was substantially covered by the instruction given by the court in relation to reasonable doubt, but he contends that the last clause was not. The defendant was entitled to have the jury instructed that the law was as declared in the last clause, if they were not so informed by the other instructions given by the court. The jury were instructed, in the language of section 1096 of the Penal Code, that "a defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved, and in case of a reasonable doubt whether his guilt is satisfactorily shown, he is entitled to an acquittal." This was said in People v. Jailles, 146 Cal. 301, 79 Pac. 965, to be the equivalent of an instruction that the "presumption of innocence must go with you in all your deliberations as jurors in arriving at your verdict;" the court in that case saying: "There was nowhere in the charge any intimation * * * that this presumption of innocence could be lost sight of at any time prior to arriving at a verdict, and the jury could not have so understood in view of the instructions given." This is true of the charge in the case at bar; and in relation to the instruction here given, it may be said, as it was in People v. Miles, 143 Cal. 640, 77 Pac. 668: "As reasonable men of ordinary intelligence, the jurors must have known that the presumption of defendants' innocence mentioned by the court had reference to the entire trial, and to all the evidence there adduced."

The jury being instructed that the presumption of innocence related to all the evidence introduced during the trial, it was necessarily implied they were to consider each and every portion of the evidence with that presumption in mind. It cannot be said that defendant was prejudiced by the refusal of the trial court to add the further direction that the jury must, "if possible [to], reconcile the evidence with the presumption of innocence."

No other question being presented, the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 148

PEOPLE ex rel. MATTISON v. NYE.
(Civ. 467.)(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Oct. 2, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Nov. 30, 1908.)1. OFFICERS (§ 49*)—VACANCIES—MANNER OF FILLING VACANCIES—STATUTES—"CONSTITUTION AND LAW."

Under Const. art. 5, § 8, providing that, when any office shall become vacant, and no mode is provided "by the Constitution and law" for filling the vacancy, the Governor shall fill it, the Legislature may specify what shall constitute a vacancy in any of the offices for which no provision is made in the Constitution, and may provide how the same shall be filled, though by virtue of article 1, § 22, the provisions of the Constitution are mandatory; the phrase, "Constitution and law" meaning "Constitution or law."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 50*)—LEGISLATIVE POWER.

The declaration in Const. art. 4, § 1, providing that the legislative power shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, comprehends the exercise of all the sovereign authority of the state in matters properly the subject of legislation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 48; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*)—STATUTES—VALIDITY—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption is that an act of the Legislature is within its power, and one asserting its invalidity has the burden of showing it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 46; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

4. OFFICERS (§ 49*)—VACANCIES—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

Pol. Code, §§ 996, 1001, declaring the manner in which an office shall become vacant, and providing that a vacancy in enumerated state officers shall be filled by appointment by the Governor, are valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 70; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

5. STATES (§ 51*)—OFFICERS—VACANCIES—
STATUTES.

Under Pol. Code, § 1001, providing that a vacancy in the office of controller, etc., shall be filled by appointment by the Governor, and that the appointee shall hold office for the balance of the unexpired term, one appointed to the office of controller on the death of the incumbent, after his election to, but before his qualification for, the succeeding term, holds only for the balance of the unexpired term, ending the day before the beginning of the succeeding term, subject to the right to hold over as provided by section 879, until his successor has qualified.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 56; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

6. STATES (§ 51*)—OFFICERS—VACANCIES—
FILLING VACANCY.

Under Pol. Code, § 996, providing that an office becomes vacant on the death of the incumbent, or on his neglect to file his official oath or bond within the time prescribed, the death of the incumbent of the office of controller after his election for the succeeding term, and before his qualification therefor, creates a vacancy at the beginning of the succeeding term, which, under section 1001, the Governor must fill by appointment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 56; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 12*)—CONSTITUTION—
CONSTRUCTION.

Where there is a conflict between a general and special provision in the Constitution, the special provision prevails.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 15*)—CONSTITUTION—
CONSTRUCTION.

The court, in construing a constitutional provision, must have regard to the whole instrument, and must seek to harmonize the various sections, and, if possible, give effect to all of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

9. STATES (§ 51*)—OFFICERS—TERM OF OFFICE—
"FROM AND AFTER."

Under Const. art. 5, §§ 2, 17, providing that the Governor, Secretary of State, Controller, etc., shall be elected and shall hold office for four years "from and after" the first Monday after the first day of January, subsequent to the election, and article 20, § 20, providing that the terms of officers shall commence "on" the first Monday after the first day of January following their election, the official term of the state officers begins "on" the first Monday after the first day of January after the election. The phrase "from and after" does not have any certain meaning that can be accepted as a guide under all circumstances and is equivalent to the words "on and after," though as a general rule, the phrase "from and after" a designated day requires the exclusion of the first day.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 56; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 2986, 2987.]

10. STATES (§ 51*)—OFFICERS—VACANCIES—
APPOINTMENTS.

Where, on the death of the incumbent of the office of controller before the expiration of his term, and after his election in November, 1906, for the succeeding term, beginning on the first Monday in January following, the Governor appointed one to fill the unexpired term, and on Monday after the first day of January following appointed one to fill the term prescribed by law, the appointee was entitled to hold the office for the term beginning on the first Monday after the first day of January.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 56; Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

11. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 20*)—CONSTRUCTION—
CONTEMPORANEOUS CONSTRUCTION.

The fact that, for nearly 30 years since the adoption of the Constitution, the executive officers of the state, with the exception of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, have been installed in office on the first Monday after the first day of January following their election is entitled to great weight in ascertaining the meaning of Const. art. 5, §§ 2, 17, providing that enumerated state officers shall hold office for four years from and after the first Monday in January after their election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 14, 15; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; C. N. Post, Judge.

Action by the People, on the relation of Frank Mattison, against A. B. Nye. From a judgment for defendant, on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (T. J. Lyons, A. M. Seymour, and G. W. McEnerney, of counsel),

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes for appellant. J. A. Ellston, White & Miller, and A. L. Shinn, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The appeal is from the judgment following an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer was sustained on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. From the complaint the following facts appear: At the general state election held in November, 1906, J. N. Gillett was elected Governor of California, and E. P. Colgan was re-elected Controller for the same term. At this time George C. Pardee was the duly elected, qualified, and acting Governor of the state. On the 20th day of November, 1906, and after he was elected to succeed himself, but before he had qualified for the succeeding term, and without having received notification of his election, E. P. Colgan died, and on November 23d thereafter Governor Pardee appointed respondent Nye to fill the unexpired term of the office of controller. Nye immediately qualified, and took possession of the office on said date. On Monday, the 7th of January, 1907, Governor Pardee issued a second commission to said Nye as Controller "for the term prescribed by law, vice self and E. P. Colgan, deceased." On said date Mr. Nye, acting under said commission, again qualified according to law. Governor Gillett was installed the following Wednesday, January 9, 1907, and on April 29th following he issued a commission in due form to the relator, Mattison, to act as Controller for the remainder of the term for which said Colgan, deceased, had been elected in November, 1906. Said Mattison duly qualified for said office, and on said April 29, 1907, demanded of said Nye the possession of the office, and said Nye refused and ever since has refused, to surrender the same. By this action it was sought to have it adjudged that the said A. B. Nye is now, and since the said appointment and qualification of said Mattison has been, usurping and unlawfully holding the said office.

As stated by respondent, these two questions arise upon this appeal: (1) Did a vacancy in the office ever occur after the appointment of respondent, on November 23, 1906? (2) If a vacancy occurred, did the commission issued to respondent on January 7th fill the vacancy? It is his contention: (1) That a vacancy in the office occurred on the death of said Colgan, and as said Nye was admittedly appointed to fill said vacancy, the Controller thus appointed holds office until his successor shall be elected and qualified. Therefore it is insisted that, as no election of controller has taken place since said appointment, no other vacancy has occurred. (2) If the term given respondent by the first commission expired so that a new appointment could thereafter be made, said first commission expired at such time that the second appointment of January 7, 1907, by Governor Pardee entitled respondent to a new term. Appellant maintains (1) That there were two distinct terms for which said Colgan had been elected. (2) That the defendant Nye's appointment covered the first term of Colgan only. (3) That whatever force there might be in the words of Colgan's first term "until his successor is elected and qualified" could only apply to Colgan himself, had he lived until the regular expiration of his term, which would have been January 7, 1907. It could not apply to Nye, as he was not elected under the Constitution. (4) That the second commission to Nye, issued January 7, 1907, was void on two grounds: (a) There was no existing vacancy; (b) there is no power to anticipate a vacancy, but, on the contrary, such a power is negated. Governor Pardee had no right of appointment beyond the legal limits of his own term, which ended at midnight on January 7, 1907. The trial court agreed with the views of respondent, which are epitomized in the foregoing statement of his position as to the scope and effect of each of said commissions.

1. The basis for respondent's contention that under the first commission he is still entitled to the office is the following provisions of the state Constitution: Section 2, art. 5: "The Governor shall be elected by the qualified electors at the time and place of voting for members of the Assembly, and shall hold his office four years from and after the first Monday after the first day of January subsequent to his election and until his successor is elected and qualified." Section 17, art. 5: "A secretary of state, a controller, a treasurer, an attorney general and a surveyor general shall be elected at the same time and places and in the same manner as the governor and lieutenant governor and their terms of office shall be the same as that of the governor." Section 8, art. 5: "When any office shall from any cause become vacant and no mode is provided by the Constitution and law for filling such vacancy the Governor shall have power to fill such vacancy by granting a commission which shall expire at the end of the next session of the Legislature, or at the next election by the people." To appreciate the significance of respondent's attempted application of the foregoing provisions to the present situation, the following conceded facts must be regarded: The controversy involves a constitutional office; a vacancy therein was created by the death of the said Colgan; respondent was regularly appointed to fill said vacancy; the Constitution does not expressly limit said appointment to the term of four years within which the appointment was made; and since said appointment, there has been no election of a successor to said Nye. Then respondent argues that as to county offices, considered in some of the cases hereafter cited, the statutes have fixed a definite term, and have simply provided that the officer must discharge the duties of his office, although his term has expired, until his successor is qualified; but said statutes can have no application here, as the Constitution is supreme, and under its provisions, upon the admitted facts, Mr. Nye has succeeded to all the rights of Mr. Colgan as an incumbent of the office at the time of his death. The case is the same, therefore, it is maintained, as if Mr. Colgan had survived, held over in consequence of the failure of a successor to qualify, and were now contesting the claim of relator to the office.

We proceed to notice some of the cases cited in support of this position.

In People v. Whitman, 10 Cal. 44, as stated by the court: "The defendant was duly elected Controller at the election of 1855, and within the time required by law qualified and entered upon his office, which he has continued to hold ever since. At the election of 1857 the defendant and J. W. Mandeville were candidates for the office, the latter receiving the highest number of votes. * * * The election took place on the 3d of September, and Mandeville never qualified or claimed the office of controller. On the 28th of April, 1858, the Governor, regarding the office as vacant, appointed the relator (Melony), and the appointment was confirmed by the Senate. The relator, having qualified, demanded possession of the office, which demand being refused, he brings this suit." The second proposition discussed by the court, viz., Was there a vacancy in the office at the time of the appointment of the relator? is the only one of interest here. As to that it is said: "The Constitution itself clearly defines the sense of the phrase 'vacancy of the office of governor' as used in the sixteenth section, by specifically enumerating in the succeeding section the instances which devolve the duties of the executive upon the Lieutenant Governor. It will be seen that all the instances mentioned are such as can only occur after the term of the Governor has commenced to run. It is only after the installation of the particular incumbent that any one of these contingencies can happen. * * * When the Constitution clearly enumerates the events that shall constitute a vacancy in a particular office, we must suppose all other causes of vacancy excluded. * * * And by the provisions of section 18 of the same article the manner of electing a controller and the term of his office are the same as are prescribed for the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. If the controller-elect fail to qualify from any cause, the Controller holds over until his successor is elected and qualified. If the failure of the governor-elect to qualify creates no vacancy in the office, but a mere extension of the term of the particular incumbent, neither does such a failure on the part of the controller-elect create a vacancy in that office." The court, therefore, concluded that there was no vacancy in the office at the time of the appointment of the relator, and hence this case was dismissed. The logic of that opinion, no doubt, affords much comfort and no little support to respondent in his first contention. The decision is criticised by appellant. Attention is called to the dissenting views of Justice Field. It is claimed that the corresponding provisions of the present Constitution in point are somewhat different from those in force at that time, and that the case has been virtually overruled by subsequent decisions. We pause now only to note that in the Whitman Case the "hold-over" clause of the Constitution was applied in favor of the party incumbent, who had been elected by the people, whereas here it is invoked in favor of the appointee of the Governor. In other words, the case would be more directly in point if another than Mr. Colgan had been elected Controller in November, 1906, had failed to qualify, and Mr. Colgan had held over, and were now contesting the right of an appointee to the office. Then would be applicable one of the persuasive reasons which induced the court in the Whitman Case to decide in favor of the incumbent of the office; that is, "the executive officers are elected by the people, and under an elective system it is more proper that these officers should hold over than that the duties should devolve upon those in whose selection the people have had no choice." And importance seems to have been attached to the circumstance that the court was called upon to decide between the choice of the people and the appointee of the Governor. What weight it had in the determination of the cause we are, of course, unable to discover.

In People v. Tilton, 37 Cal. 614, the Whitman Case is cited with approval, and it is said that "it was manifestly the intent of the Constitution that the Governor should appoint only when there is no party authorized by law to discharge the duties of the office. When there is a party expressly authorized by law to discharge those duties temporarily, till the power upon whom the duty of election or appointment is devolved can regularly act, there is no occasion for calling into exercise this extraordinary power vested in the Governor to make a merely temporary appointment. There is no good reason for appointing a party to temporarily discharge the duties of an office when there is already a party expressly authorized by the Constitution or laws to temporarily discharge those duties." The decision was in favor of Tilton, a harbor commissioner, who had been elected by the Legislature for the term of four years, "and until his successor is elected, commissioned and qualified as in this act provided." The term of four years expired November 3, 1868. The Legislature met on the first Monday of December, 1867, and adjourned without day, on the 30th of March, 1868, without electing a successor to Tilton. On the first day of December, 1868, and before another session of the Legislature, the Governor, assuming that there was a vacancy in said office, and that there was no other mode provided for filling it, appointed and commissioned the relator, Baird, who qualified, demanded possession of the office, and the demand was refused. He then brought suit against Tilton to determine the right to the office, and, as we have seen, the court held that there was no vacancy, and therefore the appointment was ineffectual.

In People v. Edwards, 93 Cal. 153, 28 Pac. 832, it is held that "where the term of an office is fixed and determinate, a provision requiring the officer to continue to discharge the duties of his office, although his term has expired, until his successor has qualified, adds an additional, contingent, and defeasible term to the original fixed term, and excludes the possibility of a vacancy, within the appointing power of the Governor, except in case of death, resignation, ineligibility, or the like; and the office is held by the same title, or by as high and lawful tenure, after the prescribed term, until the title of a duly elected and qualified successor, at least, as before and during the term."

In People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 16, 70 Pac. 921, it is said: "In the case of an office created by the Legislature * * * it was competent for the Legislature to provide for such additional contingent term, but where the office, as well as its term, is fixed, determinate by the Constitution, the Legislature has no power to extend or diminish the term or to add any contingent term thereto."

Invoking these and other decisions, it is therefore maintained by respondent that sections 996 and 1001 of the Political Code are void, so far as they attempt to affect the tenure of the person who has been legally inducted into the office of controller, or to provide for a vacancy therein, and it is further insisted that no authority can be found for any difference in this respect between an elected and an appointed official. But the fallacy of the position, as we view it, lies in the assumption that the Constitution attempts to prescribe what shall constitute a vacancy in the office of controller, and again, while it is true that no distinction is expressly made between the elected and the appointed "hold-over," the sweeping declarations we have already quoted were made in behalf of those who had been regularly elected.

The Constitution refers expressly to a vacancy only in the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. This is found in section 16, art. 5, which is as follows: "In case of the impeachment of the Governor, or his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of his office, resignation or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the Lieutenant Governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability shall cease, and should the Lieutenant Governor be impeached, displaced, die or become incapable of performing the duties of his office or be absent from the state, the president pro tempore of the Senate shall act as governor until the vacancy in the office of governor shall be filled at the next general election when members of the Legislature shall be chosen, or until such disability of the Lieutenant Governor shall cease." There is no provision of the Constitution that makes this section in reference to vacancy applicable to the Controller. The term of office of the Governor is indeed the same as that of the Controller, but the term of office and a vacancy in that term are manifestly distinct and separate entities. Nor is there any express provision in the Constitution applicable to the case at bar providing for the appointment of a controller in case of a vacancy. It is true that the Constitution provides in section 8, art. 5, as we have seen, for the appointment to fill a vacancy when no mode is provided "by the Constitution and law." But this is inoperative here, for the reason that a mode has been provided by law for filling a vacancy. When the Constitution speaks of a mode provided by "the Constitution and law" it obviously means "the Constitution or law." Of course the law must be in harmony with the Constitution; in other words, not opposed to any of its provisions. But we can see nothing that precludes the Legislature from specifying what shall constitute a vacancy in any of the offices for which no provision is made in the Constitution, and providing how it shall be filled. It is true that the provisions of the Constitution are "mandatory and prohibitory" (article 1, § 22), but it is a familiar principle that the organic law provides simply a limitation upon the power of the Legislature, which otherwise is supreme. There is no mandate nor prohibition, as we view it, in the Constitution that bars the right and authority of the Legislature to provide for the contingencies we have suggested. The people, therefore, through the lawmaking department of the government, have the right to exercise this privilege, which they have not surrendered. "The declaration in article 4, § 1, of the Constitution, 'The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a Senate and Assembly, which shall be designated the Legislature of the state of California,' comprehends the exercise of all the sovereign authority of the state in matters which are properly the subject of legislation; and it is incumbent upon any one who will challenge an act of the Legislature as being invalid to show, either that such act is without the province of legislation, or that the particular subject-matter of that act has been by the Constitution, either by express provision or by necessary implication, withdrawn by the people from the consideration of the Legislature. The presumption which attends every act of the Legislature is that it is within its power; and he who would exempt it from the power must point out the particular provision of the Constitution by which the exception is made, or demonstrate that it is palpably excluded from any consideration whatever by that body." In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 307, 28 Pac. 273, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. The legislation to which we have referred is obviously within the province of the Legislature, and it is not obnoxious to any provision of the Constitution. We, therefore, look to it for guidance in seeking to ascertain the contingencies that shall cause a vacancy in the office of controller, the method for filling said vacancy, and the tenure by which the office shall be subsequently held. Section 1001 of the Political Code provides how a vacancy shall be filled as follows: "A vacancy in the office of either the secretary of state, controller, treasurer, attorney general, surveyor general, or clerk of the Supreme Court, must be filled by a person appointed by the Governor, who shall hold his office for the balance of the unexpired term." And the various circumstances, by virtue of which a vacancy is created, thereby calling for the exercise of this appointing power of the Governor are found enumerated in section 996 of the Political Code which, as far as applicable here, is as follows: "An office becomes vacant on the happening of either of the following events before the expiration of the term: (1) The death of the incumbent. * * * (9) His refusal, or neglect to file his official oath or bond and within the time prescribed." It is elsewhere provided that the oath and bond must be filed within 10 days after the officer has notice of his election or appointment, or before the expiration of 15 days from the commencement of his term of office, when no such notice has been given. Sections 907, 947, Pol. Code.

By the death of Mr. Colgan, then, the duty was imposed upon the Governor to appoint a controller for "the balance of the unexpired term." This was done, the commission so providing. What was the "balance of the unexpired term"? It seems almost too clear for argument that the balance of the unexpired term would end the day before the beginning of the term for which he was elected in November, 1906. Two distinct terms are involved in this controversy. Mr. Colgan was serving one term as Controller when in November, 1906, he was elected for another term. If the first term did not come to an end, there could be no beginning of the second term. It is impossible to conceive of the beginning of one without the ending of the other. But the term for which he was elected in November, 1906, according to the provisions of the Constitution, began either January 7, or 8, 1907, according to the proper construction of the phrase in the Constitution "from and after the first Monday after the first day of January." Therefore, if effect is to be given to the law quoted above, Mr. Nye's right to hold the office under the first commission expired either January 6, or January 7, 1907. It is true that, in the interests of the public service, to prevent an "interregnum" it was his privilege and duty to discharge the functions of the office until it could be regularly filled by appointment or election, but he no longer had any right or title to the office, except that which comes by virtue of his possession of said office under section 879 of the Political Code, providing that "every officer must continue to discharge the duties of his office, although his term has expired, until his successor has qualified." But he did not thereby acquire any right to a new, fixed, and definite term. He became a temporary incumbent, locum tenens, by virtue of public necessity, it has been said, until the place could be regularly filled. This seems to be the reasonable view and in harmony with the later decisions of the Supreme Court. In Adams v. Doyle, 139 Cal. 681, 73 Pac. 582, it is said: "The law divides the right to the office into certain terms, each of four years' duration. When a person who has been elected to hold the office for one of these terms fails to qualify, he, of course, cannot hold the term—he has forfeited his title. There is no other person legally entitled to it, and hence there is a vacancy in that term as soon as it begins. It is that sort of a vacancy to which the statute refers, and not to the actual absence of any person in the office to discharge the duties thereof. The incumbent, in the sense of the statute, is the person declared elected to hold the term, who holds title to it, subject to forfeiture by failing to qualify, although it is not yet begun. The fact that the prior incumbent, in order that the public business may be done, is allowed and directed to continue to discharge the duties in the meantime, and until some person is lawfully invested with the title to the term, does not affect the question of there being a vacancy in the sense intended." See, also, People v. Ward, 107 Cal. 236, 40 Pac. 538.

From the foregoing considerations it clearly follows that at the beginning of the term for which Mr. Colgan was elected in November, 1906, there was in legal contemplation a vacancy in the office of controller. It is suggested by appellant—but we cannot think very seriously—that there was no vacancy until 15 days after the beginning of the term, because Mr. Colgan could not be considered as having forfeited the office until the expiration of 15 days after the beginning of the term, within which time he had the privilege of qualifying. But it is manifest that, if he is to be regarded as an incumbent in the application of said subdivision 9, the same principle must apply in the application of subdivision 1 of said section 996 of the Political Code. But the position is directly opposed to the Doyle Case, supra, and other decisions, and bears upon its face its own condemnation. In People v. Taylor, 57 Cal. 622, it is said: "This provision of the Code (section 996, Pol. Code) regards the person duly elected to an office as the incumbent of that office from the time of the commencement of the term for which he was elected until the expiration thereof whether he qualifies or not." In the Ward Case, supra, it is said: "The death of the incumbent creates a vacancy as a matter of course, and without any expression from the Legislature upon the question." And again: "It [the vacancy] arose when, upon noon of January 7, 1895, Darby by death was not able to take his office." The proposition is rather startling that when the actual incumbent's term has expired, and the one regularly elected for the ensuing term has died, there is no vacancy in the office, for the reason that the statute contemplates that the one regularly elected may, within 15 days, return from the grave to qualify for the position. The fact is, of course, that the relation of the deceased to the office could not be changed after his death; and, while the Legislature may sometimes lack wisdom, it is never so unwise as to attempt to confer a personal privilege upon, or exact a statutory duty from, one who is no longer subject to human laws. There was undoubtedly, then, a vacancy in the office at the beginning of Mr. Colgan's second term, and there can be no doubt, since the acting Governor has the power of appointment—indeed, it is not contested—that if his second term had begun before the second appointment of Mr. Nye, the latter is now entitled to the office. That brings us to the most serious question in the case, which is:

2. When did Mr. Colgan's second term begin? As we have already seen, the Constitution provides that the term of office of the Controller is the same as that of the Governor, and it is provided that the latter shall hold his office four years "from and after the first Monday after the first day of January subsequent to his election." But section 20 of article 20 provides that: "Elections of the officers provided for by this Constitution * * * shall be held in the even-numbered years next before the expiration of their respective terms. The terms of such officers shall commence on the first Monday after the first day of January next following their election." The general rule is, no doubt, that a term "from and after Monday" begins on Tuesday, as the first day is excluded. But the phrase does not have an absolute and invariable sense, and it will receive an inclusive or exclusive construction, according to the intention with which it is used. This intention, of course, we are to ascertain by an examination of the whole instrument in which the expression is found, seeking to harmonize and give effect to all its provisions. Saands v. Lyons, 18 Conn. 18; Oatman v. Walker, 33 Me. 67. "From and after" have no certain or legal meaning that can be accepted as a guide under all circumstances, but it is generally accepted as a rule that they exclude the day from which the reckoning is to be made; and, in order to avoid the application of it as a rule of construction, there must be something in the act, or the result of a literal application of the words to the subject treated by it, to indicate a contrary intent." O'Connor v. City of Fond du Lac, 109 Wis. 253, 85 N. W. 327, 53 L. R. A. 831; Parkinson v. Brandenburg, 35 Minn. 294, 28 N. W. 919, 59 Am. Rep. 326; Leavenworth Coal Co. v. Barber, 47 Kan. 29, 27 Pac. 114. Another rule of construction undoubtedly is, as suggested by appellant, that "where there is a conflict between a general and special provision in a Constitution, the special provision must prevail in respect to the subject-matter of it." Warren v. Shuman, 5 Tex. 442; Martin v. Election Commissioners, 126 Cal. 411, 58 Pac. 932. But, after all, the foregoing are only rules or guides to aid in the determination of the intention of the Constitution makers. The whole instrument must be regarded. We have no right arbitrarily to reject any provision. We should seek to harmonize its various sections and, if possible, give effect to all. French v. Teschemacher, 24 Cal. 539; San Diego v. Grannis, 77 Cal. 511, 19 Pac. 875; Gleason v. Spray, 81 Cal. 217, 22 Pac. 551, 15 Am. St. Rep. 47. Appellant's argument, as seen, proceeds upon the assumption that "from and after" necessarily excludes the first day, and therefore there is a conflict between the special and general provisions. The more reasonable view, in our opinion, is that the phrase was used in the inclusive sense, as equivalent to "on and after," and hence there is no special provision at least, as applied to the Controller and therefore no conflict as to when his term of office begins. The construction of appellant necessarily leads to the rejection of said later section 20 of article 20 as an interloper without any function to perform. The conclusion we have reached gives effect to the whole instrument, and seems to be entirely in harmony with the intention of those who framed it. Objection is made to this view for the reason that the Legislature meets at noon on the first Monday to canvass the returns of the election for Governor, and he is not installed, of course, until after that event, and it is claimed that his term could not begin prior to noon of said day. But it has been held in the decisions already cited that the term may and sometimes does begin before the qualification of the one elected or his actual incumbency of the office, and it would seem competent for the Constitution to provide that the term of the Governor should begin at a date prior to even the formal canvass of the returns, but after his actual election. Even according to the contention of appellant the term of the present Governor began one day before he qualified and took possession of the office. But aside from the foregoing, if, in view of the provision in reference to the canvass of the returns, the expression "from and after" must be held to convey its ordinary signification as applied to the beginning of the term of the Governor, there is no such reason for so construing it in reference to the office of controller.

The Supreme Court has determined—although in a sense obiter—that the term begins on, and not, after, Monday. In re Stuart, 53 Cal. 748, it is said: "Who are the officers provided for in the new Constitution, and whose terms of office are, by the express commands of the Constitution itself, to commence absolutely on the first Monday after the first day of January next following their election? We think that these are not municipal, county, or township officers chosen in 1879, but state officers, such as Governor and the other officers who constitute the executive department of the state government." In Barton v. Kalloch, 56 Cal. 101, it is declared that the terms of these executive state officers "are fixed at four years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, and commence on the first Monday after the first day of January." In Merced Bank v. Rosenthal, 99 Cal. 44, 31 Pac. 850, it is said: "It is contended that the whole term must be after Monday, that the use of either word 'from' or 'after' would exclude Monday, and by using both words an intention is manifested to make this clear.

* * * To sustain this position numerous authorities are cited, and if the question depended upon this language alone, I think the position of respondent would be impregnable; but it is not the only provision in the Constitution affecting the question." The said section 20 of article 20 is then quoted, and the court proceeds: "The only way to reconcile them is to suppose, as no doubt the fact was, that in fixing the length of the term the attention of the convention was, not distinctly called to the exact date of the commencement, but the last section was intended to perform this office, and to provide that all officers of the state should take office on the same day. * * * On the whole, even if it must be concluded that section 6, art. 6, and section 20, art. 20, are repugnant, the latter must control."

It is also true that for nearly 30 years—since the adoption of the Constitution—all these executive officers, except the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, have been installed in office on the first Monday after the first day of January. While this circumstance is not controlling, it is, as held by the authorities, an executive and contemporaneous construction of the Constitution entitled to great weight in the effort to ascertain the meaning of the instrument. Schell v. Fauche, 138 U. S. 562, 11 Sup. Ct. 376, 34 L. Ed. 1040; Heath v. Wallace, 138 U. S. 582, 11 Sup. Ct. 380, 34 L. Ed. 1063; United States v. Alabama R. R., 142 U. S. 615, 12 Sup. Ct. 306, 35 L. Ed. 1134. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

9 Cal. App. 194

PEOPLE v. GARNETT. (Cr. 98.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Oct. 7, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Dec. 3, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1106*)—CONCLUSIVENESS OF DETERMINATION—DESTRUCTION OF TRANSCRIPT—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT SUBSTITUTED TRANSCRIPT.

On appeal in a criminal prosecution, the District Court of Appeal having sustained a motion of the Attorney General to substitute a printed copy of the transcript to supply the place of the original transcript which had been destroyed, such court will not entertain a motion by appellant to strike the substituted copy on the sole ground of deficiencies and defects in the proof of the correctness of the substituted copy and of the destruction of the original transcript, as such objection should have been made at the hearing of the motion for substitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1106.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1106*)—SUPPLYING DESTROYED RECORD—POWER OF COURT.

The District Court of Appeal, to which an appeal in a criminal case has been transferred from the Supreme Court, has jurisdiction to make an order in accordance with the act relating to the restoration of court records, approved June 16, 1906 (St. Extra Sess. 1906, p. 73, c. 55), substituting a printed copy of the transcript in place of the original transcript, which was destroyed by fire before the appeal was transferred from the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1106.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 701*)—TRIAL—CONDUCT—COUNSEL FOR ACCUSED.

Accused was represented at his arraignment by G., an attorney of his own selection. On the calling of the case, G. announced to the court that C., another attorney, was associated as counsel for accused. C. conducted the trial almost exclusively without objection from accused, and, on conviction of accused, perfected an appeal. Held, that accused could not complain that he was not represented on the trial by his attorney of record, since Code Civ. Proc. §§ 284, 235, providing for the substitution of attorneys, has no application to criminal cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1499; Dec. Dig. § 701.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—RIGHT TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Defendant in a criminal prosecution could not complain on appeal that the attorney who represented him at the trial, and who perfected his appeal, was not his attorney of record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3008; Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 547*)—EVIDENCE—EVIDENCE TAKEN AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

The stenographer who took the evidence of a witness at a preliminary examination testified that he transcribed a portion of the notes and dictated a portion to a typewriter, that he compared the transcript with his original notes and that the same was correct, and that all typewriting done by persons other than himself was done under his dictation and in his presence.

Held, that the transcript was admissible in evidence on the trial; the witness being out of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1246; Dec. Dig. § 547.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 547*)—EVIDENCE—EVIDENCE TAKEN AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

The prima facie effect of the certificate to a transcript of evidence taken at a preliminary examination was not impaired by the fact that the stenographer in transcribing his original notes wrote out in longhand above certain of the characters which were obscure and puzzling the translation of such characters, where it is not shown that such translation was not correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1246; Dec. Dig. § 547.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1036*)—APPEAL—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN TRIAL COURT.

A contention on appeal in a criminal case that a transcript of the evidence of a witness given at the preliminary examination was inadmissible on the trial because defendant, prior to the trial, had procured the issuance of a commission to take the depositions of such witness in a foreign country, will not be reviewed where that objection was not made in the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2639; Dec. Dig. § 1036.*]

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1120*)—APPEAL—RECORD—MATTERS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW.

Such contention will not be reviewed where the fact that such commission was issued is not shown by the record, except by a copy of certain minutes of the clerk printed in the transcript, which are not a part of the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2931; Dec. Dig. § 1120.*]

9. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 696*)—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—STRIKING OUT TESTIMONY.

In a prosecution for homicide, the trial court did not err in refusing to strike out an answer in the deposition: "He said: 'I have shot M.' or 'M. is shot.' I don't know which"—since the uncertainty in the testimony affected its weight, and not its admissibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1639; Dec. Dig. § 696.*]

10. HOMICIDE (§ 174*)—EVIDENCE—SUBSEQUENT CONDUCT OF ACCUSED.

In a prosecution for homicide, testimony of a witness who was present at the shooting that defendant disabled the telephone to prevent witness from telephoning for medical assistance for deceased was admissible to rebut defendant's contention that the shooting was accidental.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 359; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—DEPOSITIONS—LAYING FOUNDATION.

To impeach the evidence of a witness contained in a deposition by showing inconsistent statements, a proper foundation must have been laid, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, in the case of witnesses examined in person before the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1233; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

In a prosecution for homicide, defendant claimed that the discharge of the pistol which caused the death was accidental. The court charged that if the jury found that the revolver was discharged, and that defendant was engaged in the commission of an unlawful act at such time, he will not be relieved from responsibility for any result which might follow such discharge, though the revolver was discharged accidentally. Held, that, though the instruction was erroneous, in that it rendered defendant responsible for the accidental discharge of the pistol when engaged in an unlawful act, regardless of whether the unlawful act had any connection with the discharge other than in point of time, it was not ground for reversal, where the evidence clearly negated an accidental shooting, and where the court otherwise gave a correct instruction on the theory of accidental shooting, and fully instructed on the elements applicable to the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1990; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—PRESENCE OF ACCUSED.

Where the record on appeal in a criminal prosecution shows that the court convened at 1:30 p. m., at which time defendant was present, and that the jury retired at 3:40 p. m. and returned into court at 9:45 p. m. for further instructions, it will be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary by the record, that the court remained in session awaiting the return of the jury, and that defendant was present when the further instructions were given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3027; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—SETTLEMENT OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In the absence of an affirmative showing to the contrary in the record on appeal in a criminal prosecution, it will be presumed that defendant received notice of the time for settlement of the bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3037; Dec. Dig. § 1144.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1127*)—APPEAL—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—SETTLEMENT OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY OF MOTION RAISING OBJECTION.

Defendant in a criminal prosecution cannot complain on appeal from the judgment and from the denial of his motion for new trial that he received no notice of the settlement of the bill of exceptions, where such bill was not settled until after the motion for a new trial had been made and denied, and the judgment had been rendered and the appeal taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1127.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Alexander G. Garnett was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. Grady, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HALL, J. Appellant was charged by information filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, by the district attorney of said city and county, with the crime of murder, for the killing of one J. W. McClung on the 25th day of November, 1903. Upon his trial he was convicted of murder in the second degree. He made a motion for an arrest of judgment, and also a motion for a new trial. Both motions were denied, and he thereupon appealed from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial, to the Supreme Court. The appeal was taken on the 18th day of October, 1904, which was before the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution providing for district courts of appeal; but subsequently to the adoption of said amendment, to wit, on the 25th day of May, 1907, the appeal was by order of the Supreme Court transferred to this court.

Before taking up the appeal upon its merits, it is necessary to dispose of a motion made by the appellant to strike from the files of this court the copy of the transcript on appeal filed in this court as a substitute for the original transcript filed in the Supreme Court. This court on the 28th day of October, 1907, made an order for the substitution of the printed copy of the transcript now on file in this court in place of the original transcript which had theretofore, to wit, on the 18th day of April, 1906, been destroyed by fire. This order was made upon motion of the Attorney General, after due notice thereof served on the appellant personally, on his attorney who took the appeal, and upon the attorney who now appears for him. Our records disclose that upon the hearing of the motion to restore the record neither one of the said attorneys appeared, but the appellant was present in person. While there is a suggestion in the brief of appellant of the reason why the attorney who now represents the appellant did not appear upon the hearing of said motion, there is nothing in the record of which we can take notice excusing his nonappearance. Appellant does not, in support of his motion, suggest or claim that the substituted transcript is not a true and correct copy of the original, nor that the original was not in fact destroyed by the conflagration that destroyed the offices, rooms, and chambers of the Supreme Court, of this court, and of the clerks of said courts on the 18th day of April, 1906. He, however, urges as a reason for now striking from the files the substituted transcript what he claims to be deficiencies and defects in the proof of the correctness of the substituted copy, and of the destruction of the original transcript, upon which the court acted in making the order of substitution. These objections, if they have any merit, should have been presented at the hearing of the original motion for restoration of the record. Not having been made then, and no excuse for not then making them being shown, it is now too late to make such objections. If any showing were made that the original transcript had not been destroyed, or that the substituted transcript was not in fact a true copy of the original, this court would be most liberal in entertaining a motion having for its object the presenting for the consideration of the court a correct record of the proceedings to be reviewed on this appeal. But, as before observed, appellant does not suggest that the substituted transcript is not a correct copy of the original, nor that the original was not in fact destroyed. Neither has the defendant, although he is the appellant and the party whose duty it is primarily to present to the court a record of the proceeding to be reviewed on the appeal, taken any steps to cause a restoration of the destroyed record, although more than two years have elapsed since the destruction of the original transcript. It is apparent that the granting of appellant's motion, upon the ground now being considered, will serve no purpose other than a further delay in the final determination of this case.

Appellant also contends that, the transcript having been destroyed before the appeal was transferred to this court, the Supreme Court alone had jurisdiction to order a restoration of the record. No authority is cited to support this contention, and we see no merit in it. After the transfer by the Supreme Court to this court of the appeal, this court had complete jurisdiction thereof, and we have no doubt was the proper court to make orders, under the provisions of the act relating to the restoration of court records, approved June 16, 1906 (St. Extra Sess. 1906, p. 73, c. 55), for the restoration of the record on appeal. The motion of the appellant to strike from the files of this court the substituted transcript is denied.

The first point urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment and order is that George D. Collins, who represented the defendant at the trial, was not the attorney of record for the defendant. The record discloses that at the arraignment of defendant on January 11, 1904, he stated that W. D. Grady was his counsel. On the next day, January 12, 1904, upon the calling of the case, W. D. Grady, in the presence of defendant, announced to the court that G. D. Collins was associated as counsel for defendant. W. D. Grady does not appear to have participated in the actual trial of the case, but, upon the calling of the case for trial, the defendant was present with George D. Collins, who throughout the trial appeared and acted as attorney for defendant without objection, and apparently with his full consent. Collins cross-examined the witnesses of the prosecution and examined witnesses on behalf of defendant, and made objections and reserved exceptions on behalf of defendant. He made the motion for a new trial, and is the only attorney who signed the notice of appeal now relied on by defendant. No formal substitution of attorneys in conformity to sections 284 and 285 of the Code of Civil Procedure appears to have been made, but these sections have no application to a criminal case. Ex parte Clarke, 62 Cal. 490. The entire argument of appellant upon the point is self-destructive; for, if Mr. Collins was not the attorney for defendant, there is no valid appeal before this court. It is perfectly manifest that appellant was represented at the trial by counsel of his own choosing, and cannot now be heard to say that he was in any way deprived of the right to appear and defend in person and with counsel. Const. art. 1, § 13.

It is next urged that the court erred in allowing to be read from the deposition of Dr. Shiels, taken at the preliminary examination of defendant, statements in the nature of "dying declarations," made by J. W. McClung. A careful reading of the record, however, discloses that such portion of the deposition of Dr. Shiels as contained any statement of McClung in the nature of a "dying declaration" or that in any manner referred to the cause of his death, or the circumstances under which he received the wound from which he subsequently died, was not read to the jury. The court permitted to be read to the court, as evidence addressed to the court, certain statements made by McClung to Dr. Shiels that tended to prove whether or not McClung believed that his death was then imminent and had abandoned all hope, but the record does not disclose that any evidence was read from the deposition of any "dying declarations" of McClung, but, on the contrary, it quite clearly appears that no such evidence was read; for, after reading from the deposition of Dr. Shiels, a description of the wounds and condition of McClung, and what he, the witness, stated to McClung as to the fatal character of his wounds, we find the district attorney said: "There I stop; the rest not being brought under the rule of dying declaration, and an objection will be proper." It is not contended that the proper foundation had not been laid for reading the deposition of Dr. Shiels, as an absent witness, and, as shown by the record, there is no merit in the contention that evidence was given of any dying declaration of McClung.

The court did not err in overruling the objection to reading in evidence the deposition of Elizabeth W. Coit, taken at the preliminary examination of defendant before the police judge who held defendant to answer. No contention is made that, the stenographer who took down the evidence and proceedings was not regularly appointed, or that his certificate to the transcript of the evidence and proceedings is not in proper form, nor that it was not sufficiently shown that the witness Mrs. Coit was out of the state at the time of the trial. The certificate of the stenographer in form complies with the requirements of the statute. This seems to be conceded by appellant. The stenographer testified that he personally transcribed a portion of the notes, and dictated a portion to a typewriter, that he had compared all the transcript of the testimony of Mrs. Coit with his original notes, and that all the typewriting that was done by persons other than himself was done under his dictation and in his presence, and the entire transcript of the testimony of Mrs. Coit was compared by him with his original notes of the same, and that it was correct.

The showing in this regard fully complied with the law as laid down in People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169. Neither was the prima facie effect of the certificate that the transcript contained a correct statement of the evidence and proceedings overcome by the evidence that there were certain words and phrases written in longhand on the original notes by the stenographer at the time of the transcription thereof. In this regard the record shows that, before the deposition was read in evidence, the original notes were produced, and the stenographer testified that a large number of words and phrases appearing on said notes were written by him thereon at the time of the transcription (typewriting) thereof, but he further testified that all such words and phrases were also represented in his original notes taken at the time the witness gave her testimony. Among other things that he testified on this matter, he said: "While the typewriter was present, I would read, and then I would write above it anything that was obscure or take me some little time to puzzle out, and I would make a memorandum as shorthand reporters are accustomed to do. In those instances that I put the longhand word down it correctly represented the shorthand notes that I made at the time the witnesses gave their testimony." We think it clear from the evidence of the stenographer that the words written on the original notes by him at the time of the transcription were represented by the original notes, and were so written by him so that he could the more readily make comparison between the transcription and the original notes. We find nothing in this testimony that discredits the correctness of his certificate to his transcript of the evidence read in evidence.

Neither is there anything in the point that the deposition of Mrs. Coit should not have been admitted in evidence because a commission had been theretofore issued, upon application of defendant, to take the deposition of Mrs. Coit, upon interrogatories, at Paris, France. The objection that was made to reading in evidence the deposition of Mrs. Coit did not point to any such ground of objection. The fact that such a commission had issued does not appear from the bill of exceptions, nor was the attention of the court at the trial called to the fact that any such commission had been issued, or that defendant desired to introduce the deposition of Mrs. Coit taken at Paris; but, on the contrary, the bill of exceptions shows that at the calling of the case for trial both parties answered ready. Indeed, the fact that such a commission had issued only appears by a copy of certain minutes of the clerk printed in the transcript, but forming no part of the record of the action (Pen. Code, § 1207), and therefore not properly before us. In what we have just said we do not wish to be understood as conceding that the taking of a subsequent deposition under a commission would render inadmissible a deposition taken at the preliminary examination where the witness is absent from the state at the time of the trial. The point does not properly arise upon the record before us. The court did not err in refusing to strike out the answer in the deposition of Mrs. Coit: "He said, 'I have shot McClung', or 'McClung is shot.' I don't know which." The uncertainty in her testimony affected its weight, but not its admissibility. The court did not err in admitting the testimony of Mrs. Coit that tended to show that defendant disabled the telephone connected with her apartments immediately or very shortly after the shooting of McClung, and after she had attempted to telephone for a doctor, but had been prevented by defendant. This evidence tended to prove that the shooting of McClung by defendant was not accidental, as defendant claimed, but was prompted by malice. It tended to show that after McClung was wounded, and manifestly in great need of immediate medical assistance, defendant did an act which tended to cause delay in getting such assistance. Such conduct was inconsistent with his defense that the shooting of McClung was accidental, and for that reason was pertinent and material. People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 467, 44 Pac. 186.

The court sustained the objection of the district attorney to questions put to the witness George N. Martin for the purpose of showing that Mrs. Coit had made statements to him inconsistent with the evidence read from her deposition. There was no error in this. No foundation had been laid for the impeachment of Mrs. Coit as required by section 2052, Code Civ. Proc. The fact that her testimony was read from her deposition taken at the preliminary examination does not alter the rule. People v. Compton, 132 Cal. 484, 64 Pac. 849; People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 Pac. 177; People v. Pembroke, 6 Cal. App. Rep. 588, 92 Pac. 668.

For the same reason the court properly sustained the objection of the district attorney to the reading in evidence of the testimony given by Mrs. Coit at the coroner's inquest. No foundation had been laid therefore as required by the section of the Code above referred to.

Appellant urges that the evidence "is insufficient to establish the crime of murder in the second degree, inasmuch as there is a total lack of evidence to establish malice aforethought, express or implied." With this contention we cannot agree. It is sufficient to say that, although defendant claimed that the shooting was accidental, the evidence was amply sufficient to justify the conclusion that it was intentional. And, if it was intentional, it certainly was, under the evidence disclosed in the record, without any "considerable provocation." Under such circumstances malice is implied. Pen. Code, § 188.

Appellant in his brief attacks but one instruction, as follows: "If you find to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the revolver introduced in evidence in this case was discharged at the time mentioned, and that the defendant was engaged in the commission of an unlawful act at such time, then as a matter of law he will not be relieved from responsibility for any result which may have followed such discharge, even though such revolver was at such time discharged accidentally." This instruction is not a clear and correct statement of any principle concerning the law of homicide. It ignores the question as to whether or not the discharge of the pistol was caused by an unlawful act of defendant. Under this instruction, defendant would not be relieved of responsibility for results from the accidental discharge of the pistol, if it were accidentally discharged, at the time he was engaged in doing an unlawful act, regardless of whether or not the unlawful act had any connection with the discharge other than in point of time. The instruction should not have been given. It is inaccurate, to say the least, as a statement of any principle of the law of homicide. Yet it does not necessarily follow that any prejudicial error was committed in the giving of this instruction when the entire charge of the court is considered, as well as the status of the evidence. According to all the evidence, including that given by the defendant himself, the pistol was drawn by himself, and was discharged while in his hand and while he was engaged in a struggle with McClung. About these facts there was no dispute, but the defendant testified that he did not intentionally discharge the pistol, but that the same was accidentally discharged while he and McClung were struggling together.

It will be observed that in this instruction the court does not tell the jury that under the circumstances indicated in the instruction any verdict of guilty should be returned. But, on the contrary, the court at the request of the defendant instructed the jury "that, if you believe from the evidence before you that the deceased was killed from the accidental discharge of the revolver in evidence here, your verdict must be that the defendant is not guilty. If you have a reasonable doubt upon the subject, you must give the defendant the benefit of the doubt, and return a verdict that he is not guilty." In the face of this clear and explicit instruction, calling for a verdict of not guilty if deceased was killed by the accidental discharge of the pistol, it is impossible to believe that the jury could have been misled to the prejudice of defendant by the vague and practically meaningless statement of the first instruction. People v. Lee Sare Bo, 72 Cal. 623, 14 Pac. 310. In other parts of its charge the court gave full and complete instructions as to what constitutes murder, both of the first and second degree, and a full and accurate statement of what constitutes manslaughter, both voluntary and involuntary. After giving the definition of murder according to section 187 of the Penal Code, the court fully and correctly stated the requisites for murder of the first degree as given in section 189, Pen. Code, followed by the statement that all other kinds of murder are of the second degree. The court then charged the jury that, in murder of the second degree, "the act of killing must be committed with a felonious purpose and accomplished by felonious means." The instructions as a whole, especially touching the killing by the accidental discharge of the pistol, were quite as favorable to defendant as the law would permit. Under such circumstances, a verdict of guilty should not be set aside because of too general statements contained in a vague and meaningless instruction such as is here attacked. People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 344, 5 Pac. 509; People v. Lee Sare Bo, 72 Cal. 623, 14 Pac. 310; People v. Ah Jake, 91 Cal. 98, 27 Pac. 595; People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 Pac. 617; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 325, 86 Pac. 671.

The attorney for appellant contends that the record shows that the court gave some instructions to the jury in the absence of defendant and his counsel. In this we think counsel, who is not the attorney who represented defendant in the trial court, is in error. The "minutes of the trial," which are a part of the record (Pen. Code, § 1207), show that the court convened on Wednesday, August 31, 1904, and that the judge and other officers of the court, the defendant and counsel for all the parties, were present. After argument by the attorney for defendant, the court took a recess until 1:30 p. m. of the same day. At 1:30 p. m. court convened, and the trial of the cause was resumed; "the defendant and all the parties being present as heretofore." The minutes of the trial under this date further show that after the closing of the arguments the court charged the jury, and they retired to deliberate on their verdict at 3:40 p. m., and subsequently, at 9:45 p. m., returned into court, and desired further instructions, which the court gave and which were taken down at the time by the official reporter, "counsel for the respective parties expressly waiving written instructions." It is these instructions that counsel now claim the record shows were given in the absence of the defendant and his counsel. But we think the "minutes of the trial" show otherwise, for from these minutes it appears that at the convening of the court at 1:30 p. m. of August 31, 1904, all parties were present, and it does not appear that the court took any recess after the jury first retired until they returned at 9:45 p. m. for further instructions. The court apparently remained in session waiting for the return of the jury. The record showing that defendant and his counsel were present at the convening of the court at 1:30 p. m., we cannot assume that they absented themselves thereafter during what on the record appears to have been a continuous session, without an affirmative showing to that effect.

Appellant also urges that notice was not given to counsel of defendant of the time when the judge would settle the bill of exceptions. The record, however, does not affirmatively show that such notice was not given, or that counsel for defendant was not present. In the absence of a showing to the contrary, we must presume that the bill was properly settled. People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 743, 89 Pac. 450. Furthermore, the irregularity complained of is not a ground for a new trial or for reversing the judgment. The bill of exceptions was presented for settlement several months after the motion for a new trial had been made and denied, and the judgment rendered and the appeal taken from both judgment and order. The settlement of the bill of exceptions occurred more than a year after the taking of this appeal. Manifestly any irregularities that occurred in the settlement of such bill could not have been reviewed on the motion for a new trial, and cannot be reviewed on the appeal from the order denying such motion or on the appeal from such judgment.

Some other exceptions concerning the rulings of the court upon the admission of evidence have been called to our attention, but none of them are of sufficient importance to require discussion.

We are satisfied that no error prejudicial to any substantial right of the defendant has been committed by the trial court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 172

WARDEN v. BROOME et al. (Civ. 509.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 4, 1908.)

1. TAXATION (§ 630*)—TAX SALES—VALIDITY—DELINQUENT LIST—PUBLICATION.

The publication of a delinquent list setting forth therein the amount due for taxes, penalties, and costs, as required by Pol. Code, § 3764, is a prerequisite of a valid sale to the state on the day and hour fixed in the notice of sale attached to such delinquent list.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1283; Dec. Dig. § 630.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 630*)—TAX SALES—DELINQUENT LIST—PUBLICATION—ERROR IN AMOUNT.

Pol. Code, § 3764, requires the publication of a delinquent list containing the names of the persons and a description of the property and the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs, and section 3765 requires the collector to publish with the delinquent list a notice that the property will be sold, etc. Held, that where a delinquent list otherwise correct stated that the taxes, penalties, and costs against the property in controversy was $19.90, when the correct amount was $19.40, for which the property was in fact sold to the state, the sale was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1283; Dec. Dig. § 630.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 773*) — TAX DEEDS—CONCLUSIVENESS — JURISDICTIONAL DEFECTS—"ALL OTHER PROCEEDINGS."

Pol. Code, § 3787, makes a tax deed conclusive evidence of the regularity of all other proceedings than those enumerated in section 3786 as to which the deed is prima facie evidence only. The publication of a delinquent list specified in section 3764, together with the notice of sale designated in section 3765, and fixing the day and hour of sale required by section 3767, are not among the matters enumerated in section 3786, as to which the deed is prima facie evidence. Held, that the phrase "all other proceedings" did not include the omission of a jurisdictional prerequisite to a valid sale, and that a tax deed was therefore not conclusive that the delinquent list and published notice stated the correct amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1541; Dec. Dig. § 773.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 338.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by Julia P. Warden against Francis Broome and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George H. Moore, for appellant. F. E. Davis and J. W. Cochran, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff appeals from judgment in an action to quiet title.

Defendants' title to the property was derived from one George P. Badger, who in the year 1894 was the owner thereof. Badger failed to pay the state and county tax levied upon the property for the year 1894, whereupon proceedings were had and taken which on July 6, 1900, resulted in a deed of the property to the state, made by the tax collector pursuant to the provisions of section 3785 of the Political Code. On March 15, 1901, the state conveyed the property to plaintiff's grantor. Plaintiff's title, therefore, depends upon the validity of the tax proceedings under and by virtue of which the state acquired the property. The law (section 3764, Pol. Code) contains a provision requiring the tax collector on or before June 5th to publish a delinquent list, which list "must contain the names of the persons and a description of the property delinquent, and the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due, opposite each name and description"; and section 3765 of said Code provides that "the tax collector must append and publish with the delinquent list a notice that unless the taxes delinquent, together with the costs and penalties, are paid, the real property upon which such taxes are a lien will be sold," which "publication (Pol. Code, § 3767) must designate the day and hour when the property will, by operation of law, be sold to the state," etc. The notice under which the property was sold to the state was in full compliance with the provisions of the three sections of the Political Code above referred to, except that there was an erroneous statement contained in the delinquent list in that the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs set opposite the name of said George P. Badger as being due on account of said taxes, penalties, and costs was $19.90, instead of the correct amount of $19.40, and for which the property was in fact sold to the state. The trial court held the deed to the state under which plaintiff deraigned title invalid and gave judgment for defendants, from which plaintiff appeals upon a bill of exceptions.

Appellant contends, first, that the deed to the state is conclusive evidence (except as against actual fraud) of the due and regular publication of the delinquent list (section 3787, Pol. Code); and, second, that, if not conclusive, the error of 50 cents in the amount alleged to be due in the delinquent list as published cannot invalidate the deed, inasmuch as the property was in fact sold for the correct amount. The publication of the delinquent list, setting forth therein the amount due for taxes, penalties, and costs, is a prerequisite of a valid sale to the state on the day and hour fixed in the notice of sale attached to such delinquent list. Since it is a statutory requirement, we cannot give less weight to its importance than to other provisions contained in said section which require a description of the property and the name of the owner. Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 59, 91 Pac. 1005; Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 249, 66 Pac. 301; Davis v. Improvement Co., 137 Cal. 245, 70 Pac. 15. The delinquent list as published did not state the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs, but stated a wholly different amount. With reference to an error in the advertisement of 82 cents in excess of the amount actually due, and where the property was sold, as in the case at bar, for the correct sum, the Supreme Court of Massachusetts says: "To comply with the statute the exact amount must be given. A deviation, however small, is fatal, because a rule of law cannot be made to fluctuate according to the degree or extent of its violation." Alexander v. Pitts, 61 Mass. 503. The provisions of said section 3764 as to what the publication of the delinquent list shall contain are a part of the notice of sale. Ellis v. Witmer, supra; Fox v. Wright, supra. It is immaterial that the property was sold to the state for the correct amount. This result might have been accomplished equally well in the absence of any advertisement of the amount due. The effect of the proceeding is to divest the owner of his title by virtue of statutory proceedings. In such proceedings the provisions of the statute should be strictly followed. Washington v. Pratt, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 681, 5 L. Ed. 714; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 Pac. 761; Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 424; 2 Cooley on Taxation, p. 934. A sale of property made for an excess as much as the smallest fractional coin authorized by law is void. Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637. In Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 572, 32 Pac. 599, it is said: "In proceedings where the property of a citizen is to be taken, every requirement of the statute having the least semblance of benefit to the owner must be complied with." The object of the Legislature in enacting the provision under consideration was to give notice of the amount due to those who were delinquent, and who, upon their attention being called to the fact, might respond by payment. The notice was, in fact, a demand for payment of an excessive amount, with the alternative that, unless paid, the land would be sold. Clearly the provision is a beneficial one to the property owner. We perceive no reason why the same rule announced in the Treadwell Case as applicable to sales for an excessive amount should not be likewise applied to a statement of an excessive amount published in the delinquent list. Why should not a strict compliance with this regulation be as essential to the legal transfer of an estate in tax proceedings as compliance with a requirement for the observance of prescribed formalities in the transfer of title between individuals? Conceding that the published notice did not in fact comply with the statute, appellant insists that the deed to the state, which was introduced in evidence, is by its recitals made conclusive evidence of compliance therewith. Section 3787, Pol. Code.

Section 3787 of the Political Code in express terms makes the deed conclusive evidence of the regularity of other proceedings than those enumerated in section 3786 of the Political Code, as to which the deed is made prima facie evidence. The publishing of the delinquent list containing the matters specified in said section 3764, together with the notice of sale designated in section 3765, and fixing the day and hour of sale required by section 3767, are not among the matters enumerated in section 3786, as to the correctness of which the deed is prima facie evidence. According to appellant's contention, these requirements fall within the phrase, "all other proceedings" referred to in section 3787 in proof of the regularity of which the deed is made conclusive evidence. In the recent case of Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 59, 91 Pac. 1005, wherein it was claimed that the notice of sale of the property acquired in the tax proceedings (section 3897, Pol. Code) was defective, in that it did not set forth the name of the delinquent owner, the court says:

"But, upon the other hand, since the owner had received due notice by publication of the fact that his taxes were delinquent and the property had been (would be) sold to the state for such delinquency, it was not necessary to the validity of the proceedings that any notice of the intended sale by the state should be given to him at all." And, again, in discussing another phase of this case, the court says: "The owner of the property who has permitted his taxes to become delinquent receives notice that, unless the taxes be paid by a given date, his land will be sold to the state." The notice published for the reasons heretofore assigned was unauthorized, and therefore constituted no notice. The only notice to the owner which could constitute due process, and under which he could be deprived of his property, is that which the Legislature has designated in sections 3764, 3765 and 3767 of the Political Code. As this is the only notice required as a condition of transferring the owner's title to the state, it follows that the giving of it in the manner prescribed by the Legislature must be regarded as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the making of a valid sale, as to which the deed is not conclusive. As to the performance of non-essentials—those things which the Legislature might in the first instance have dispensed with without affecting the validity of the proceeding—it may make the deed conclusive evidence, but not as to the performance of those acts necessary to confer jurisdiction. "The Legislature cannot deprive one of his property by making his adversary's claim to it, whatever that claim may be, conclusive of its own validity, and it cannot, therefore, make the tax deed conclusive evidence of the holder's title to the land." Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 13 Sup. Ct. 508, 37 L. Ed. 410; Cooley on Taxation, p. 1010; Blackwell on Tax Titles, § 844; Martin v. Cole, 38 Iowa, 141; Dever v. Cornwell, 10 N. D. 123, 86 N. W. 227; Townsend v. Martin, 55 Ark. 192, 17 S. W. 875.

From the foregoing views, it follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 145

DAVIDSON v. ELLIS et al. (Civ. 522.)
(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 2, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 226*) — CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT—FORFEITURES.

Conditions subsequent, when relied on to work a forfeiture, must be created by express terms or clear implication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1033-1037; Dec. Dig. § 226.*]

2. EASEMENTS (§ 61*)—RIGHTS OF WAY—LOCATION.

Where the location of a right of way granted over land retained on a conveyance of adjoining land is contested, the owner of either the dominant or of the servient estate can procure a decree fixing the right affirmatively and specifically, including the width of the way.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 102, 103; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

3. EASEMENTS (§ 36*) — RIGHTS OF WAY — ABANDONMENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

To defeat one's right to a location of a right of way granted on the ground of abandonment, the burden is on the owner of the servient estate to show abandonment, and to show acts performed and expense incurred by him in reliance thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 89; Dec. Dig. § 36.*]

4. EASEMENTS (§ 3*)—RIGHTS OF WAY—APPURTENANCES.

An easement for a right of way granted over land retained on a conveyance of adjoining land to connect with a highway became appurtenant to the land conveyed, following the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

5. EASEMENTS (§ 30*)—NONUSER—EFFECT.

An easement for a right of way granted by deed will not be impaired by mere nonuser, however long.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 30.*]

6. EASEMENTS (§ 61*)—RIGHTS OF WAY—LOCATION—PLEADING.

Plaintiff alleged a conveyance by defendants to his grantors with an easement for a right of way over land retained to connect with a highway, the way to be located by the grantee within a reasonable time, alleges that, no way having been located for three years, defendants refused to join in a definite location; and that before suing he definitely located the right of way on an old road across defendants' land, and sued for confirmation of his location. Held, that the complaint unambiguously stated a cause of action, and that, if through lapse of time plaintiff had lost his right to fix the route, the allegation respecting the route described in the complaint might be taken as an allegation that such route was reasonably convenient for all parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. §§ 102, 103; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

7. EASEMENTS (§ 61*)—RIGHTS OF WAY—LOCATION.

If, under a grant of an easement for a right of way across land retained on a conveyance of adjoining land, to be located by the grantee within a reasonable time, the right to locate it was lost by failure to exercise it within three years, equity can locate it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Easements, Cent. Dig. § 103; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by William Davidson against Mary E. Ellis and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Day & Day, for appellant. W. P. Butcher, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment rendered against him and in defendants' favor, based upon an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint.

The complaint alleged the ownership by defendants in 1901 of certain premises, a part of which at that date were by them conveyed to plaintiff's grantors, together with a perpetual right of way from a fixed point on the exterior boundary of the lands sold across the lands of defendants not so conveyed to a certain county road, which grant specified that the way "so granted to be thereafter and within a reasonable time definitely located by said grantee." Plaintiff's ownership in the dominant tenement is averred. It further appears that when said deed of plaintiff's grantors was executed, and at all times thereafter, there was an old road leading from the fixed terminus of the right of way to said county road; that plaintiff's grantors did not at any time while they owned the premises, nor did plaintiff until after 1904, definitely locate said right of way; that plaintiff has requested defendants to join in such definite location, which they refused to do; that plaintiff, before the filing of the complaint, definitely located said right of way upon the route of such old road, the center line of which is the center line of the right of way, and so located the same having a width of 15 feet upon either side of such center line. The prayer of the complaint is that such location be confirmed and plaintiff's right to such right of way be quieted. The demurrer to the complaint was general, and upon the further ground that it was unintelligible, in that it could not be ascertained therefrom when or where the request was made to join in the location, or that the location had been actually made or could be made under the deed, or of what width the same could be made.

The grant of the right of way by defendants was not one made upon condition, and nothing in the language of the grant indicates that a failure to fix the definite route should work a forfeiture of the right of way. "Conditions subsequent, when relied on to work a forfeiture, must be created by express terms or clear implication." Behlow v. Southern Pac. R. R. Co., 130 Cal. 16, 62 Pac. 295. The right of the arbitrary fixation of the line of location upon the part of the grantor was restricted by the deed to a reasonable time. The theory upon which plaintiff seems to proceed is that, by reason of the lapse of time, the location of the line of the right of way became a matter of joint agreement, and, such agreement not being possible, that a court of equity should hear and determine the question. If the location is the subject of contest, either party may procure a decree fixing the right affirmatively and specifically (Gardner v. Webster, 64 N. H. 520, 15 Atl. 146); and this of necessity would authorize the court to determine the width thereof. There is nothing in the complaint suggesting an abandonment, and, if such fact exists, the onus of showing the same would devolve upon the defendant, and could only be supported by allegations and proof thereof and acts performed and expense incurred by the owner of the servient estate relying thereon. Smith v. Worn, 93 Cal. 207, 28 Pac. 944. The easement was made and became appurtenant to the property owned by plaintiff and follows the estate. Currier v. Howes, 103 Cal. 436, 37 Pac. 521. The easement having been acquired by deed, no length of time of mere nonuser will operate to impair or defeat the right. Gardner v. San Gabriel Valley Bank (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 900. The location determined by plaintiff, if his right to fix the line has not terminated, is given by the deed. If by reason of the lapse of time such right to so fix the route has terminated, the allegation with reference to the route described in the complaint may be taken as an allegation that such route is reasonably convenient for all parties. Whatever may be the effect of the nonlocation for the period shown, as affecting the right of plaintiff to arbitrarily fix the same, the right to have a court of equity definitely locate the right of way exists, if plaintiff's right to fix has lapsed. The complaint states a cause of action therefor, and no uncertainty or ambiguity therein is manifest.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 134

PEOPLE v. LAPIQUE. (Civ. 620.)†

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 29, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—GROUNDS.

Primarily the duty of authenticating the record on an appeal rests with the trial court, and before the appellate court will interfere, it must clearly appear that the trial court refused to embody in the bill of exceptions an objection to a ruling on a matter of law, and that an exception was regularly taken to the decision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2843; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT.

The trial court having settled and allowed one bill of exceptions on an appeal, the appellate court cannot compel it to settle another bill, or do so itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SETTLEMENT—NOTICE—NECESSITY.

Bills of exception can only be settled on notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2834; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—APPEAL—RECORD—EXCEPTIONS—PROCEEDINGS TO COMPEL SETTLEMENT—NECESSITY OF NOTICE.

On an application to the District Court of Appeal to settle a bill of exceptions refused by the trial court in a criminal case, the application could be considered only after notice to the district attorney; the general rules relating to notice of applications made to and motions before the court applying.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

Application by John Lapique, a defendant in a criminal case, to compel the allowance of a bill of exceptions. Application denied.

John Lapique, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. Application to this court to settle a bill of exceptions which it is claimed the trial judge refused to settle. It is, in effect, a renewal of a former application (Civil No. 576) by petitioner, which was treated as a petition for a writ of mandate in order that the court might have jurisdiction to consider the matter. Then, as now, petitioner was seeking to compel the trial judge to settle a particular bill of exceptions presented by himself. People v. Lapique (Cal. App.) 98 Pac. 46. For this reason this petition was at first treated as an application for a writ of mandate, and petitioner was required to pay the clerk's fees necessary to be paid in such a proceeding.

A more careful examination of the petition and papers accompanying it discloses that another bill of exceptions has been settled and allowed by the trial judge since the former application was heard, but it cannot be determined from the record before us whether that bill of exceptions was settled and allowed in accordance with sections 1175 and 1177 of the Penal Code or not. Neither can we determine from the petition whether, by the settlement of the bill which was settled, petitioner was denied the right to prove any exception which he should be permitted to prove in this court. Primarily the duty of authenticating the record on an appeal rests with the trial court, and, in order that this court should interfere, it must clearly appear that the party seeking relief should show that the trial court refused to embody in the bill an objection to a decision of the court on a matter of law and that an exception was regularly taken to such decision. Vance v. Superior Court, 87 Cal. 390, 25 Pac. 500. One bill of exceptions having been settled and allowed on the appeal, the trial court has acted, and this court has no power to compel the trial judge to settle another bill or to itself assume to do so.

The petition was presented by the petitioner in person, and was without notice. If the petition was sufficient in form to sustain a proceeding for the proving of an exception which has been denied and refused by the trial court, we could not act upon an ex parte application. Bills of exception are only settled upon notice, and the bill or statement embodying the exceptions which defendant desired to prove before this court could be considered only after notice given to the district attorney. In the absence of a special provision for applications of this kind, it would have to be governed by the general rule relating to notice of applications made to and motions before the court. The transcript of the evidence has not been produced, and the petition does not allege that the "substitute bill" presented with it was the bill actually settled by the trial judge.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

† For opinion on motion to prove exceptions, see 98 Pac. 868.

The petition is denied without prejudice, and the clerk directed to remit and return to petitioner the fee paid upon filing his petition herein.

(154 Cal. 518)

PEOPLE v. LAPIQUE. (Cr. 1,495.)†

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—APPEAL—EXCEPTIONS—COMPELLING ALLOWANCE—JURISDICTION OF PROCEEDINGS.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, making all statutes regulating appeals to the Supreme Court apply to appeals to the District Courts of Appeal so far as not inconsistent with this article, and Pen. Code, § 1174, providing that, if the trial court refuses to allow an exception, the party aggrieved may apply to the Supreme Court by petition to prove such exception, the District Court of Appeal is the proper court to which to apply to prove exceptions on a criminal appeal to that court, and not to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2841; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—EXCEPTIONS—COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—CERTIFICATION BY JUDGE.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, making the statutes relating to appeals to the Supreme Court applicable to the District Court of Appeal, and Pen. Code, § 1174, providing that exceptions, when proven in proceedings to establish exceptions, shall be certified by the chief justice, where an application to compel the allowance of exceptions is properly addressed to the District Court of Appeal, the bill, when proven, should be certified by the presiding justice of that court, he standing in the same relation to that court as the chief justice does to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2841; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1092*)—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—SETTLEMENT—COMPELLING ALLOWANCE.

Where an application to prove exceptions in a criminal case was properly addressed to the District Court of Appeal, and it has denied the application, petitioner's remedy is exhausted unless he applies to the Supreme Court or the District Court of Appeal for a rehearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2841; Dec. Dig. § 1092.*]

In Banc. Application to the Supreme Court by John Lapique, a defendant in a criminal case, to prove a bill of exceptions. Application dismissed.

John Lapique, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. The defendant applies to this court, under the provisions of section 1174 of the Penal Code, to be allowed to prove certain exceptions, which he alleges the judge of the superior court before whom the case was tried has refused to allow in accordance with the facts.

It appears from his application here that he has made similar applications to the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, which is the court having jurisdiction of any appeal he may take from the judgment against him. He desires to use the bill of exceptions, when settled, in aid of such appeal. The district court refused his applications. The Constitution (article 6, § 4) provides that "All statutes now in force allowing, providing for, or regulating appeals to the Supreme Court shall apply to such appeals to the District Courts of Appeal, so far as such statutes are not inconsistent with this article." The provisions of section 1174 of the Penal Code, so far as it applies to the matter in hand, are provisions regulating appeals. The proper court to act in the matter of proving an exception not allowed by the trial judge is the court to which an appeal must be taken in the case, in this instance the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. The Constitution makes the provisions of section 1174, in respect to such exception, applicable to the District Court of Appeal, and gives that court jurisdiction to entertain and decide an application to prove such exceptions. The functions of the chief justice in that proceeding, as expressed in the statute, will be performed by the presiding justice of the District Court of Appeal, he standing in the same relation to that court as that of the chief justice to the Supreme Court. As the District Court of Appeal has acted in the matter of the proposed exceptions and given its judgment thereon, the matter is adjudicated and the remedy of the defendant is exhausted, unless he should apply to this court or the district court for a rehearing, which he has not done.

The application is dismissed.

(154 Cal. 520)

MOULTRIE, Adm'x, v. WRIGHT et al.

(S. F. 4,761.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 10, 1908.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 79*)—CREATION—RESULTING TRUST.

Where one-half the price of land is paid by one in whose name the title is taken, under an agreement with another, who pays the remainder at the time of the conveyance, a resulting trust arises in favor of the latter for an undivided one-half of the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 111, 112; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 357*)—FOLLOWING TRUST FUNDS—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

If a mortgage is taken with notice that the land is charged with a resulting trust in favor of a contributor to the consideration for the conveyance to the mortgagor, the mortgage lien is subject to the trust, and any title to the contributor's interest, obtained by the mortgagee's administratrix in her representative ca-capacity under foreclosure, will be held in trust for the contributor or his grantee, free from the mortgage lien, although the administratrix herself obtains such a title without notice of the trust; but, if the mortgagee and his administrator have no notice, the latter will hold as an innocent purchaser free from the trust.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 539-552; Dec. Dig. § 357.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 230*)—DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY—ESTOPPEL.

The mortgagor of land charged in his hands with a resulting trust is a competent witness for a party asserting the trust to prove that he informed the mortgagee of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

4. TRUSTS (§ 86*)—CREATION—RESULTING TRUST.

Under the express provision of Civ. Code, § 853, payment of a part of the consideration by a third person for a conveyance to another raises a presumption that a trust in favor of such third person was intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 128; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 882*)—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR—CREATION—RESULTING TRUST.

Where direct evidence to prove a resulting trust in land, based on part payment of the price, is excluded on the objection of a party, he cannot claim that the circumstances rebutted the presumption that a trust was intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3591-3600; Dec. Dig. § 882.*]

6. TRUSTS (§ 87*)—ENFORCEMENT—EVIDENCE.

The insufficiency of the evidence to prove a resulting trust in land based on part payment of the price is not ground for excluding evidence of notice thereof to party dealing with the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

7. TRUSTS (§ 86*)—CREATION—RESULTING TRUST.

The presumption of a resulting trust in favor of a contributor to the consideration for a conveyance to another is not rebutted by the mere fact of such conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 128; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

8. TRUSTS (§ 88*)—CREATION—RESULTING TRUST—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust arising from the payment of the consideration by a third person for a conveyance to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 130-133; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

9. TRUSTS (§ 87*)—ENFORCEMENT—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of a grantee's agreement to hold title to land in trust for a contributor to the consideration, is admissible to prove that a trust was intended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 87.*]

10. TRUSTS (§ 372*)—FOLLOWING TRUST PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of a grantee's agreement to hold the title in trust for a person who paid a part of the purchase price is material on the question of laches in enforcing the trust as against a party dealing with the land, as tending to show a resulting trust if the deed was taken by agreement, rather than a constructive trust if the deed was taken in the name of the grantee alone, without any agreement therefor, there being a possible difference as to what would be laches in the two cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

11. TRUSTS (§ 79*)—CREATION—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.

Where two persons contribute to the purchase price of land, and the title is taken in the name of one of them without the knowledge or consent of the other, a constructive trust arises in favor of the latter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 112; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

12. TRUSTS (§ 365*)—ENFORCEMENT—LACHES.

What may be laches in enforcing a constructive trust as against a party dealing with the land may be of no significance in case of a resulting trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

13. TRUSTS (§ 362*)—ENFORCEMENT—DEFENSES.

The mere existence of a lien of a prior mortgage on land, charged with a resulting trust based on part payment of the price of the land, is not a bar to the enforcement of the trust against parties claiming title to the land free from the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Emelie Moultrie, Administratrix of Handley B. Doane, deceased, against Harry Wright, William C. Hoffmann, and others. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Chas. M. Cassin and Benj. K. Knight, for appellants. Charles B. Younger and Mul-laney, Grant & Cushing, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendants appeal from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The defendants interested are Hoffmann and Louise Wright. It is claimed that the court below erred in excluding important and material evidence for the defendants and for the cross-complainant, Hoffmann. The complaint stated a cause of action against the defendants to quiet title to a tract of land. The defendants jointly answered, alleging that Hoffmann was the owner of an undivided one-half of the land, that the defendant Louise Wright held under him as lessee thereof, and that the deceased, Handley B. Doane, and plaintiff, as his administratrix, held the title to said one-half interest in trust for said defendants. Hoffmann filed a cross-complaint, setting forth the facts upon which the alleged trust arose and existed, and asking that the trust be declared and enforced. The facts alleged in the cross-complaint are as follows: The plaintiff and Hoffmann claim under a common source of title, one Alfred H. Fitch, who was the owner in fee of the land on August 23, 1886. On that day he executed to Felipe Tarpio, whose true name is Tapia, but who is also known as Tarpio, a deed purporting to convey said land to Tarpio. The consideration for this deed consisted of $600 in money paid to Fitch by Tapia, a deed by Tapia to Fitch conveying to Fitch three lots in Santa Cruz, and a deed executed by one Carlotta Amaya, afterwards and now the wife of Tapia, conveying to Fitch a certain parcel of land near Santa Cruz, of the value of $1,200 and equal in value to the lots conveyed and the money paid to Fitch by Tapia. It was at the time, agreed between Tapia and Carlotta Amaya that they were each to own an undivided one-half of the land conveyed by Fitch to Tapia, and that Tapia should hold title to the one-half thereof in trust for Amaya. On September 7, 1887, Handley B. Doane loaned to Tapia $1,000, taking as security a mortgage on the land from Tapia alone. Tapia, at the time, informed Doane that he owned but an undivided one-half thereof, that Carlotta Amaya, who was then his wife, owned the other undivided one-half, and that he held title to her half in trust for her. Afterwards said mortgage was foreclosed by plaintiff as administratrix of Doane's estate, and a deed was executed to plaintiff, as such administratrix, in pursuance of the sale upon said foreclosure decree. Prior to the foreclosure, Tapia and his said wife, Carlotta, mortgaged the land to Christian Hoffmann, who assigned the mortgage to the appellant and cross-complainant, William C. Hoffmann. On May 25, 1897, while said foreclosure suit was pending, Tapia and his said wife conveyed the land to appellant, Hoffmann, in satisfaction of the Hoffmann mortgage. Hoffmann, as successor of Carlotta, claims an equitable title to an undivided one-half thereof, and that his said title is superior and paramount to the Doane mortgage and to the plaintiff's title thereunder.

The claim of Hoffmann depends upon the existence of the alleged trust in favor of Carlotta Amaya, and upon the knowledge of said trust by Doane at the time Tapia executed to him the mortgage under which plaintiff claims. The payment by Carlotta Amaya of one-half of the price of the land conveyed by Fitch to Tapia at once created a resulting trust in favor of Carlotta in an undivided one-half of the land and the title thereto was thereafter held by Tapia, the grantee, in trust for her. Civ. Code, § 853; Thomas v. Jameson, 77 Cal. 93, 19 Pac. 177; Hidden v. Jordan, 21 Cal. 99; Case v. Codding, 38 Cal. 193; Somers v. Overhulser, 67 Cal. 237, 7 Pac. 645; Fulton v. Jansen, 99 Cal. 591, 34 Pac. 331; Murphy v. Clayton, 113 Cal. 157, 45 Pac. 267; Polk v. Boggs, 122 Cal. 114, 54 Pac. 536; Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 92, 68 Pac. 482. And if Doane took his mortgage from Tapia with knowledge of the trust, his mortgage lien was subject thereto, and any title to such one-half interest that might be obtained by him, or by his estate, or by his administratrix in her representative capacity, under a foreclosure of such mortgage, would be held as successor of Tapia in trust for Carlotta Tapia or Hoffmann, her grantee, free from the mortgage lien. Price v. Reeves, 38

Cal. 457; Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 580, 32 Pac. 579, 21 L. R. A. 33, 33 Am. St. Rep. 209; Murphy v. Clayton, supra. If Doane had no notice when he took the mortgage, nor prior to his death, and the administratrix bought for the benefit of the estate, without notice, she would hold as an innocent purchaser free from the trust. Riley v. Martinelli, supra; De Lany v. Knapp, 111 Cal. 169, 43 Pac. 598, 52 Am. St. Rep. 160. But if Doane had notice, the mere purchase for the estate by the administratrix at the foreclosure sale, without knowledge on her part would not make her an innocent purchaser, nor discharge the land of the trust. It was therefore absolutely necessary for Hoffmann to prove, not only that Carlotta Amaya paid a part of the price of the land conveyed by Fitch to Tapia in 1886, but also that Doane had knowledge thereof when he took his mortgage in 1887. He introduced in evidence the deed from Fitch to Tapia and the deeds from Tapia to Fitch and from Carlotta Amaya to Fitch, and proved that all of them were recorded on the same day, August 31, 1886. Fitch then testified that these conveyances to him were made in consideration of the land he deeded to Tapia, that the land he got from Carlotta Amaya was then worth $1,200, that the land obtained from Tapia was then worth $900, and that Tapia paid some money in addition, the amount of which he could not remember. Tapia then testified that he paid Fitch $600 in money as part of the price of the land, and that the lots he deeded to Fitch were then worth $650. He was then asked if, at the time of making the Doane mortgage, he told Doane the facts as to the interest he owned. Objection was made and sustained to the question. Hoffmann thereupon offered to prove by the witness that, at the time witness made that mortgage, he told Doane that Carlotta Amaya had paid one-half of the price of the land to Fitch, that she was the real owner of one-half of the land and he of the other half, and that he held the title, as to one-half, in trust for her, and that Doane said he was satisfied with one-half of the land as security for the money loaned. This was objected to, on the ground that it was irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, that Tapia's mortgage purported to cover the entire estate in the land, and that he could not be a competent witness to explain or vary the terms of his mortgage. The court sustained the objection and excluded the evidence. That this was error there can be no doubt. We have already seen that proof that Doane had notice of the trust was material and essential to the case of Hoffmann. Tapia was a competent witness to prove that he informed Doane of the trust, or of the facts upon which the trust arose. If he himself had been claiming one-half of the land in question free of the mortgage lien, there would be force in the objection that, in the absence of mistake or fraud, he would be estopped to do so. But the person in whose favor the trust was created was not Tapia, but Carlotta Amaya, and Hoffmann was claiming as her successor, and not as the successor of Tapia. Carlotta Amaya was not estopped by Tapia's mortgage, and neither was her successor in interest estopped. Tapia was not a party to this action.

Respondent asserts that the evidence of the trust was not clear or convincing, that the right to enforce the same was lost by laches, that it was a stale claim, and that the creation of such trust was rebutted by the taking of the deed in Tapia's name, and the other circumstances shown, and that it was not proven that a trust in her favor was intended or contemplated, and from these circumstances he argues that the defendant's case was without merit, and that the erroneous ruling was not prejudicial. The payment of a part of the consideration by a third person raises a presumption that a trust in favor of such third person was intended. Civ. Code, § 853. Respondent is not in a position to claim that the circumstances rebutted such presumption of intention, for Tapia was asked to testify as to the agreement between himself and Carlotta Amaya that he should hold in trust for her, and upon respondent's objection the evidence was excluded. If any direct proof of intention was required, defendants were entitled to this evidence, and its exclusion would be prejudicial error. The insufficiency of the admitted evidence to prove the trust alleged would be no ground for the exclusion of evidence of notice thereof to a third party dealing with the land. It might support the proposition that the rejection of evidence of notice caused no substantial injury, and would not justify a reversal of the judgment. But there is no basis for the claim that the evidence of the trust was not clear or convincing. The evidence as to the exact values of the respective tracts of land conveyed to Fitch was conflicting and this perhaps made the exact proportion or interest covered by the trust uncertain until the court should weigh the evidence and determine the values, but it was perfectly clear that Carlotta Amaya contributed substantially to the consideration paid and held a beneficial interest in a substantial proportion of the land bought of Fitch. We see nothing in rebuttal of the trust in the circumstance that the deed was made to Tapia. It was this conveyance which made the trust relation necessary. Such conveyance always attends a resulting trust of this character, and parol evidence is admissible to explain the deed to this extent.

The defense of laches was presented by the answer to the cross-complaint. The court made no finding as to laches, but did find that Tapia and Amaya did not agree that Tapia was to hold title to her interest in trust, that there was no trust in fact, that Tapia did not inform Doane of the trust, and that Doane never had knowledge thereof. As the court had excluded the evidence to prove the agreement of Tapia, and Amaya and Doane's knowledge of the trust, the findings as to these particulars were in accordance with the evidence admitted, but not with that which should have been admitted. The finding that no trust ever existed was contrary to the evidence. The evidence that Carlotta paid part of the price was clear and uncontradicted. Furthermore the evidence of the agreement of Tapia, that he would hold title to one-half the land in trust for Amaya was important and material on the question of laches. If he took the title in his own name, without her knowledge or consent, the law would raise a constructive trust; if by agreement with her, then only a resulting trust would be created. Fulton v. Jansen, supra. What might be deemed laches in case of a constructive trust, might be of no significance if it were a resulting trust. Under these circumstances, the exclusion of the evidence to prove the facts alleged and found to be untrue as aforesaid was plainly prejudicial.

There was evidence that at the time Tapia bought the land it was incumbered by a mortgage to Elmer Dakan for $1,000, that Tapia and Amaya agreed to pay this mortgage, as part of the price of the land, and that the money borrowed on the Doane mortgage was used to pay the prior mortgage to Dakan. The respondent claims that in equity this prior mortgage would be kept alive for her benefit, as administratrix and that the estate of Doane would be subrogated to the rights of Dakan. Whether this is so or not the claim under the Dakan mortgage would be only a lien until it was foreclosed, and as no claim to such lien was alleged or asserted in the Doane foreclosure suit, as the rights of Hoffmann in virtue of the trust, were expressly excepted and reserved by the decree in that suit, and as no lien was set up to be foreclosed in this action, it follows that the claim under the Dakan mortgage does not, in its present condition, constitute a bar to a judgment herein, declaring the alleged trust, nor a defense to the cross-complaint under the pleadings as they stand.

The order denying a new trial is reversed, and the judgment is vacated.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

154 Cal. 428
Burr v. MacLay Rancho Water Co.
(Hille et al., Interveners). (L. A. 1,830.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 16, 1908.
On Rehearing, Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 156*)—ARTESIAN WATER—RIGHTS UNDER DEED.
A reservation in deeds to tracts of land of "all artesian water that may be developed on said land and not used thereon" does not extend to artesian water necessary for use on the land from which it is obtained, nor to any water except artesian water, and reserves no right to enter the land to develop artesian water; the only limitation imposed being that, where different tracts are obtained by separate deeds containing the reservation, it does not in terms give the right to take water from the basin by wells on one of the tracts for use upon another.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 174-183; Dec. Dig. § 156.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 105*)—PERCOLATING WATER—PRIORITY OF RIGHTS—APPROPRIATION FOR DISTANT USE.

The right of a landowner to a quantity of percolating water necessary for use on the tract is paramount to that of an adjoining landowner to take the water to distant land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 113; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 105*)—PERCOLATING WATERS—PRIORITY OF RIGHTS.

An appropriation of water from a common water-bearing strata for use on distant lands not situated over the strata is subject to reasonable use by the owner of other overlying land upon which he has never used water, especially where such owner bought his tracts because of their situation respecting the water, relying upon the supply, and since without the water the land is of little use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 113; Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 105*)—WATER RIGHTS—USE—STATE POLICY.

It is not the law's policy to permit any of the available waters of the county to remain unused, or to allow one having the natural advantage of a situation, which gives him a legal right to use water, to prevent another from using it while he himself does not desire to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 105.*]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—WATER RIGHTS—PRIORITIES—JUDICIAL POWER.

In a suit involving water right priorities, the court can make reasonable regulations for use by the parties, fixing the times when each may take it and the quantity to be taken, provided they be adequate to protect him having the paramount right, and to prevent its destruction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 107*)—PERCOLATING WATER—RIGHTS—ADJUDICATION.

A judgment, fixing the rights of adjoining landowners to take percolating water from a common underlying basin, should be so framed as to prevent a depletion of the basin, limiting the amount taken by all the consumers to a quantity, as near as may be, equal to the average constant supply from the rainfall.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

7. WORDS AND PHRASES—"ARTESIAN."

The word "artesian" is sometimes used in reference to underground water which, by reason of pressure, will rise above its natural level, though not the surface of the ground, when the stratum in which it lies is pierced by a well.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 511.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by John Burr against the Maclay Rancho Water Company, H. R. Hille and others intervening. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Harris & Harris and Stephens & Stephens, for appellant. Williams, Goudge & Chandler and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff sued to enjoin the defendant company from pumping water from its wells on land adjoining that of plaintiff, and transporting such water to distant lands, for irrigation and use on such remote lands. The interveners own some of this remote land, and claim rights to receive the water pumped by the defendant, under contracts made with defendant to furnish them with water for use on their respective tracts of land. The plaintiff has wells on his land, from which he pumps water sufficient for irrigation, and other uses thereon, and the injury he complains of is the lowering of the water underneath the surface, caused by the pumping of the defendant's wells, whereby his wells are drained of water. The court, upon the facts found, concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to pump from his wells, for irrigation of one tract of his land containing 40 acres, designated as "block 191," for six consecutive days of 24 hours each, in each month, a constant flow of 25 inches of water, miners' measure, measured under 4-inch pressure, that during this period the defendant had no right to pump any water, and that, during the intervening time, the defendant has the right to pump water from its wells, and carry the same to distant lands for sale and use thereon, to the amount of 125 miners' inches, constant flow. The interveners claim, and were declared entitled to claim, solely under the defendant. Judgment was given in accordance with these conclusions. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone.

The lands of the plaintiff consists of three tracts, designated, respectively, as "blocks 153, 190, and 191 of the Maclay Rancho Ex-Mission San Fernando," according to the recorded plat thereof, and embracing 90 acres. His wells are situated on block 191, which is practically all set out in fruit trees requiring irrigation. Until shortly before this suit was begun he had not irrigated the other tracts. The main controversy concerns the rights pertaining to block 191, but the plaintiff also claims the right to pump water from his wells on that block to irrigate the lands of the other two blocks if he should find it convenient to do so. He did for a short time irrigate 15 acres of block 190. The plaintiff claims that, upon the facts found, the court erred in limiting at all his right to take water by means of his pumps, and in adjudging to the defendant the right to take water from the adjoining lot by means of pumps, or otherwise than by the natural artesian flow of the wells, or to a greater extent than 30 inches of constant flow. The lands of the plaintiff and a part of block 192 are all situated over the same body of underground percolating water. Concerning this body of water the finding is that underneath all the said lands, and extending to the foot of the mountains, three or four miles northerly thereof, are water-bearing strata of varying depths of sand, boulders, and coarse material, and lying over each stratum is an impervious stratum of clay or cement, extending towards, but not entirely to, said mountains; that across the said strata, and running through the southerly portion of block 192, which lies immediately south of block 191, there is a dyke of material impervious to water; that the subterranean waters in the water-bearing strata are supplied by rains falling on the mountains to the north and east which, descending the surface of the mountain slopes to the base of the mountains, there find their way into the coarse material, and from thence into said water-bearing strata, through which they percolate underneath the overlying strata of clay or cement, and under the lands of plaintiff and the northern portion of block 192, "down to the said dyke, by means of which the movement of the said water is arrested, and the waters impounded, forming a subterranean basin, wherein the said subterranean waters are retained." The seven wells of the defendant are all situated on the part of block 192 north of this dyke, and pierce the said water-bearing strata and subterranean basin. The water pumped therefrom is all taken away to lands lying south of the dyke, a large portion of it being several miles distant therefrom, and none of it overlying the subterranean basin aforesaid. The lands of the interveners lie from two to four miles south of said dyke.

The plaintiff acquired block 191 in 1886, and ever since January, 1887, he and his family have resided thereon. In that year he began planting orchards thereon and gradually increased the area thereof until 1897. In 1896 he bored five wells along the southern line of the block, and put a pumping plant therein, from which, until the defendant began to pump on block 192 in June of the year 1902, he pumped water to the amount of 25 miner's inches for six full days, consecutively, each month, using the same to irrigate said block, and the same being necessary for that purpose. This water was taken into his pumps in the wells at a depth of 24 feet below the surface, and it appears from the findings that his wells and pumps, as constructed, cannot take the water at a lower depth. He has no other water supply, and the water is, of course, necessary to prevent the destruction of his orchards. In June, 1902, the defendant began pumping from its wells on block 192, over the basin aforesaid, about 125 miner's inches of water, and, until the suit was begun, continued to do so, transporting the water to the distant lands above mentioned and there distributing the same for irrigation and other purposes. Prior to this excessive pumping the water in plaintiff's wells had usually stood at a general level of 9 feet below the surface. The consequence of the operation of the defendant's pumps as stated was that, during the remainder of the year 1902, while the pumps were so operating, the level of the water in plaintiff's wells was reduced to 27 feet, and during the year 1903 to 30 feet, below the surface. The trial occurred in May, 1904. At such times as the defendant did not operate its said pumps the water level in plaintiff's wells stood at 14 feet below the surface in the year 1902, and at 16 feet in the year 1903. While the defendant is operating its pumps it is impossible for the plaintiff to obtain any water from his wells by means of his pumps.

It is necessary to consider, briefly, certain contracts mentioned in the findings. All the land affected by this action is included in a tract of 20,000 acres, formerly owned by Charles Maclay, from whom all the parties, and all the owners of lands to which the defendant supplies water from its wells, derive title. On September 9, 1885, Maclay conveyed this tract to five trustees, who were to subdivide and sell it. They were to expend, and did expend, $20,000 in subdividing and marketing the land and in constructing dams, reservoirs, and conduits, and in boring artesian wells. In the fall of 1885 they bored the seven wells aforesaid, and obtained an artesian flow of 30 miner's inches of water therefrom, which, with water from other sources, they thenceforth distributed to some of the lands in the tract. From these wells the defendant is now pumping the 125 inches in controversy. In all the deeds made by the trustees, including those to the plaintiff and the interveners, there was a clause reserving to the grantors "all artesian water that may be developed on said land, and not used thereon." The defendant has succeeded to all the rights of the trustees in the water thus reserved. Some importance seems to have been attached to this reservation in the court below, but we do not think it affects the rights in controversy in the case. It does not extend to the artesian water that may be necessary for use on the land from which it may be obtained, nor to any water except artesian water. It reserved no right to enter on the land to develop artesian water. Conceding that the word "artesian" has the meaning sometimes given to it, and refers to underground water which, by reason of pressure, will rise above its natural level, though not to the surface of the ground, when the stratum in which it lies is pierced by a well, the reservation does not restrict the right of the plaintiff to take such water from the underground strata and use it on his land, situated as it is, over the strata. This is all that the plaintiff claims. The only limitation it would appear to impose is that, where different blocks are obtained by separate deeds, each containing this reservation, it does not, in terms, give the right to take water from the basin by wells situated on one of his blocks and use it upon the other. If the first tract had, and the second had not, underground water of the kind reserved, this would clearly be a substantial violation of the rights reserved. But the plaintiff's respective blocks of land are all situated over the basin in question, and each block is entitled to sufficient water from the basin for the necessary use thereon. The taking of it all by means of wells on one lot, instead of boring wells on each and obtaining for each the necessary water from its own well, would be a mere technical and wholly unsubstantial departure from the terms of the reservation, unless some special injury results from the location of the respective wells. If the pumping by the plaintiff of all the necessary water for his three blocks from the wells on block 191, so near to the defendant's wells, would materially lower the water level in its wells, there might be the substance of an injury to the defendant. But the findings show that the lowering of the water level is caused by the excessive pumping of the defendant, and not by the pumping done by the plaintiff. Even the simultaneous pumping of 25 inches by the plaintiff and a considerable quantity by the defendant, the amount not being stated, but presumably as much as the original 30 inches, which was customary prior to June, 1902, did not materially affect the water level. But at all events the most that the defendant could claim is that the plaintiff be required to take upon each block, separately acquired, the water used thereon, if the other method proves injurious.

So far as the use of the water upon block 191 is concerned, the case seems to be within the rule established in Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 135, 70 Pac. 663, 74 Pac. 766, 64 L. R. A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35. In that case it was decided that two owners of separate tracts of land, situated over common strata of percolating water, may, each upon his own land, take, by means of wells and pumps, from the common strata such quantity of water as may be reasonably necessary for beneficial use upon his land, or his reasonable proportion of such water, if there is not enough for all, but that one cannot, to the injury of the other, take such waters from the strata and conduct the same to distant lands not situated over the same water-bearing strata. The court there said: "In controversies between an appropriator for use on distant land and those who own land overlying the water-bearing strata, there may be two classes of such landowners: those who have used the water on their land before the attempt to appropriate, and those who have not previously used it, but who claim the right afterwards to do so. Under the decision in this case the rights of the first class of landowners are paramount to that of one who takes the water to distant land; but the landowner's right extends only to the quantity of water that is necessary for use on his land, and the appropriator may take the surplus." In the case at bar the defendant, with respect to its injurious pumping of the water, is in the situation of an appropriator for use on distant land. With respect to plaintiff's block 191, it is attempting to begin such appropriation after the plaintiff has been for many years using the water on his land. Under the rule stated, therefore, the right of the plaintiff to the quantity of water necessary for use on block 191 is paramount to that of the defendant to take the water to the distant land of the interveners and others similarly situated. The defendant is entitled only to take of the surplus after block 191 is supplied.

With respect to plaintiff's block 153, and that part of 190 upon which he has not used the water, but upon which he claims the right hereafter to use it, a question is presented which was expressly left undetermined in Katz v. Walkinshaw and which was not therein involved. The plaintiff, with regard to this land, stands in the position of the second class mentioned in the above quotation. The plaintiff, when the defendant began pumping the 125 inches in June, 1902, gave it notice that the pumping was lowering the water level and impairing his rights. The suit was begun in July, 1903, and the facts found by the court show that no estoppel in pais exists in favor of the defendants to prevent the plaintiff from asserting, protecting, and enforcing such rights as he may have to the water for use on blocks 153 and 190. The question is therefore fairly presented whether or not, after an appropriator of water from a common water-bearing strata has begun to take the water therefrom to distant lands not situated over the strata, for use on such distant lands, the owner of other overlying land, upon which he has never used the water, may invoke the aid of a court of equity to protect him in his right to thereafter use such water on his land, and thus prevent the appropriator from defeating such landowner's right, or acquiring a paramount right, by adverse use, or by lapse of time. It appears from the findings that the existence of this underlying water was known before the lands were conveyed to the trustees by Maclay, and that the plaintiff bought his tracts from the trustees because of its situation with respect to that water, and relying upon said natural water supply, and that without this water the land is of little value. Under these circumstances it does not seem reasonable or just to adopt a rule that would deprive the buyer of such land of the principal benefit of his purchase and the land of its chief element of value. The land being so situated that it has the natural advantages afforded by the underlying water, the conditions are analogous to those affecting land riparian to a stream, which, because of its situation with reference to the stream, is given rights to the waters thereof, so far as necessary for use thereon, which are paramount to the right of another riparian owner to divert the water to lands not riparian. The reasonable rule here would be to hold that the defendant's appropriation for distant lands is subject to the reasonable use of the water on lands overlying the supply, particularly in the hands of persons who have acquired it because of these natural advantages, and we therefore hold this to be the law of the case with respect to the lands upon which no water has been used by the plaintiff.

In the case of either class of owners of overlying lands, the appropriator for use on distant land has the right to any surplus that may exist. If the adjoining overlying owner does not use the water, the appropriator may take all the regular supply to distant land until such landowner is prepared to use it and begins to do so. It is not the policy of the law to permit any of the available waters of the country to remain unused, or to allow one having the natural advantage of a situation, which gives him a legal right to water, to prevent another from using it, while he himself does not desire to do so. The established and settled law of riparian rights in running streams, which have become vested rights, may compel a different rule with regard to such waters in some instances, but these rules of law do not, of necessity, control rights in percolating waters. The most that should be allowed in such circumstances is to give a party the aid of the courts to protect his right and prevent the destruction of his source of supply by excessive use or other cause. The court unquestionably has power to make reasonable regulations for the use of such water by the respective parties, fixing the times when each may take it and the quantity to be taken, provided they be adequate to protect the person having the paramount right in the substantial enjoyment of that right, and to prevent its ultimate destruction.

The judgment of the court below, with respect to block 191, was apparently based upon the rule established in Katz v. Walkinshaw, supra, and was made with the design to allow the defendant to take as much of the water, and no more, as should be compatible with the paramount right of the plaintiff. In view of the findings, however, we think the judgment, in its present form, might eventually prove insufficient for the protection of plaintiff's right. The watershed supplying the underground strata is of limited area, and in some years but little water is contributed to the subterranean basin, because of the light rainfall. The effect of the defendant's pumping for a period of a little over 18 months was to lower the permanent water level, as it stood when the pumps were idle, as much as 7 feet. By reason thereof the plaintiff is compelled to lift the water 7 feet higher than before the defendant began its present appropriation. Perhaps, in view of the extreme necessity for water, and the great benefit derived therefrom, this additional burden upon the plaintiff may not be unreasonable. But if the judgment permitting this pumping by the defendant is affirmed without modification, it will be final between the parties, and the defendant will have a perpetual right to continue the drain upon the limited supply. This climate is subject to occasional periods of several successive years of comparative drought. We have recently had a 10-year period of that kind, which was just closing at the time this pumping of defendant began. It is probable that, if another such period, or even a shorter one, should occur, or possibly with a normal rainfall, the continuous pumping of 125 inches of water from this limited supply will continue to lower the permanent water level of the basin until the plaintiff will be unable to reach it with his pumps. It is not impossible that ultimately the basin will thereby be entirely emptied of water. The findings do not show the quantity of water that will be annually supplied to these underground strata by the average annual rainfall upon the watershed from which it comes. They are silent on this point. It is manifest that, if the quantity taken therefrom exceeds the average annual amount contributed thereto, the underground store will be gradually depleted and eventually exhausted. This should not be permitted. The judgment should be so modified as to provide for or permit the prevention of such a catastrophe, and to limit the amount taken by all the consumers to a quantity, as near as may be, equal to the average constant supply from the rainfall. It should also be framed so as to prevent the lowering of the permanent level to such an extent that the plaintiff will be unable to obtain by his pumps sufficient water therefrom for use upon his lands. These observations apply with equal force to the right of the plaintiff to have the supply protected for future use upon the portion of his lands not hitherto supplied with water. The judgment makes no provision whatever for the protection of the right of these lands to share in the water.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the superior court be modified by adding thereto, immediately preceding the date line thereof, the following clauses: "(10) Provided, however, that in no event shall the defendant be allowed to take of the waters in the strata pierced by its wells, a quantity greater than is supplied thereto from the average annual rainfall upon the watershed contributing thereto, and from other sources; nor shall it be allowed to take therefrom a quantity that will reduce the water level in plaintiff's wells, during the periods when the plaintiff is herein given the right to pump therefrom, to such an extent that the plaintiff, with pumps operating at the depth of his present pumps, and with equal capacity, will be unable to obtain therefrom enough water to properly irrigate his said block 191 during such period, not exceeding the quantity hereinbefore stated. It is further adjudged and declared that the plaintiff, as the owner of said blocks 153 and 190, has the right to take and use of the said waters underlying said blocks, respectively, a sufficient quantity for irrigation, and other uses thereon, or his due share, in case there is not enough for all equally entitled therefrom, at such reasonable times as it may be necessary and convenient to do so, and that such right is parcel of said lands; that he may take such water through and by means of wells situated thereon, and that he must, when he desires to use the same, give the defendant 10 days' notice of the time or times when he will begin such use, and the defendant must thereupon at such times cease pumping its wells for a sufficient time to allow plaintiff to obtain enough water for one irrigation of so much of the particular block as may then require irrigation; that the continued pumping of said water in future by said defendant, as herein permitted, shall not be deemed adverse to the rights of plaintiff herein declared, whether such rights are, or are not, used by plaintiff, and that defendant be forever enjoined from asserting or claiming rights in such water paramount to those of plaintiff herein declared."

As thus modified, the judgment shall stand affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing is denied. The modification of the judgment of the superior court herein, as ordered in the decision of this court hereinbefore filed, is amended by adding thereto the following additional clause: "Nothing in this judgment shall be construed to prevent the defendant from pumping from its said wells on block 192, at the times when by this judgment it is allowed to pump therefrom, a quantity of water which, when added to the natural flow, if any, of said wells, will equal a flow of 30 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, and using the same on distant lands."

154 Cal. 503

In re VOGT'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,947.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1908.

Rehearing Denied Dec. 10, 1908.)

1. WILLS (§ 490*)—PRESUMPTION AS TO KNOWLEDGE AND INTENT.

Testator is presumed to have known when he made his will that, without his wife's consent, he could dispose of only one-half of the community property, and also, unless the contrary appears from the terms of the will, that he did not intend to devise or bequeath an interest in the community property which he could not dispose of, but the intention of the testator to dispose of the entire community estate, if clearly appearing from the will, must prevail over these presumptions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 490.*]

2. WILLS (§ 782*)—RIGHTS OF DEVISEES—ELECTION.

Where the intention of a husband in making his will, to dispose of the whole of the community property, and not a moiety thereof, is clearly shown by the terms of the will, and the disposition so made is such that the widow cannot take the moiety given her by law, without to that extent defeating the plain intent of the testator, she will be required to choose between the provisions of the law, and those of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 2031; Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

3. WILLS (§ 782*)—RIGHT OF DEVISEE—ELECTION—CONSTRUCTION—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

Testator in one paragraph of his will bequeathed to his wife certain real property described therein. In a second paragraph he bequeathed the rest and residue of his estate, real, personal, or mixed, wherever situated, to his wife, and four of his children named, giving an undivided one-fifth share to the wife and to each child. In the third paragraph he declared "that all of my estate is my separate property except a portion thereof equal to a value of eight thousand dollars, that is to say, only eight thousand dollars of my estate is community property." The fourth and fifth clauses of the will named the executors and gave them power to dispose of all or any part of "my estate," and there were no other dispositions of property. Held, that it was the intention of the testator to dispose of his separate estate and the whole of the community property; and his widow was put to her election between her share of the community estate and the provision made for her by the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 2031; Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

4. WILLS (§ 458*)—CONSTRUCTION—LANGUAGE.

A word or phrase in a will occurring more than once is presumed always to be used in the same sense unless the context shows a different meaning, and the meaning of an ambiguous part, under Civ. Code, § 1323, "may be explained by a reference thereto or a recital thereof in another part of the will."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 977; Dec. Dig. § 458.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 934*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the will of a husband disposes of the entire community interest, and it does not appear on appeal from an order distributing the estate that the widow chose to take under the statute, all presumptions are in favor of the action of the court below, and, no objection being made that the court disregarded her choice, it will be presumed that, when required to elect, the widow chose the provisions of the will, although the record does not expressly disclose whether she made any election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 934.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Frank C. Vogt, deceased. Appeal by Theresa Vogt from an order making final distribution of the property of said estate. Order affirmed.

A. Morgenthal, for appellant. A. F. St. Sure and Charles C. Boynton, for respondents. Mrs. E. Foley, in pro. per. D. W. Martin, in pro. per.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by Theresa Vogt, widow of Frank C. Vogt, deceased, from an order making final distribution of the property of the estate of said decedent.

The sole question for decision is whether, under the terms of the will of the deceased, the widow was entitled to take the one-half of the community property which devolved upon her by law, and, in addition thereto, her interest in the other moiety thereof, and in the separate property, as given to her by the will, or whether she was put to an election between the provisions of the will and of the law in respect to such property. The court below held that she was required to elect, and distributed to her only the property given to her by the will. The testator is presumed to have known, when he made his will, that by the law he had no power to dispose, by will, of his wife's interest in the community property, an interest existing only in expectancy at the time, and that, without her consent, he could dispose of only one-half of the community property by the will. It is also presumed, unless the contrary appears from the terms of the will, that he did not intend to devise or bequeath that interest in the community property which he did not have power thus to dispose of. Estate of Gilmore, 81 Cal. 242, 22 Pac. 656; King v. Lagrange, 50 Cal. 331; Estate of Silvey, 42 Cal. 212. "A purpose to attempt the disposition, by will, of property which by statute would pass to the wife, as survivor of the matrimonial community upon his death, is not to be readily inferred, especially where the words employed by the testator may have their fair and natural import by applying them to that moiety of which he had, by law, the testamentary disposition." Estate of Silvey, supra. "It is only where there is such a clear manifestation of intent to devise the whole community property as to overcome these presumptions that the wife can be put to her election either to take under the will or to take what she is entitled to by law." Estate of Gilmore, supra. These rules necessarily imply the qualification that where the intention to dispose of the whole of the community property, and not of a moiety thereof only, is clearly shown by the terms of the will, and the disposition so made is such that the widow cannot take the moiety given her by law without, to that extent, defeating the plain intent of the testator, she will be required to choose between the provisions of the law and those of the will and may take either, but not both. The intention of the testator to dispose of the entire community estate, if clearly appearing from the will, must prevail over all these presumptions. Estate of Smith, 108 Cal. 119, 40 Pac. 1037. Upon applying these principles to the will in question, we think it clearly appears that the widow was under the necessity of choosing between the inconsistent provisions of the will and the law.

The parts of the will pertinent to the question are as follows:

"Firstly, I give, devise and bequeath to my wife, Theresa Vogt, the following described real property" (describing a lot in the city of Alameda).

"Secondly. The rest and residue of my estate, real, personal or mixed, wheresoever situated, I give, devise and bequeath the whole thereof to my said wife, Theresa Vogt, and to my children, Frederick August Vogt, Charles John Vogt, Henry Frank Vogt and Emilie Marie Schmitt, wife of Frederick Schmitt, that is to say, an undivided one-fifth (1-5th) share thereof to my said wife, and an undivided one-fifth (1-5th) share thereof to each of my said children.

"Thirdly. I hereby declare that all of my estate is my separate property, except a portion thereof equal to a value of eight thousand dollars, that is to say, only eight thousand dollars of my estate is community property."

The fourth and fifth clauses named the executors and gave them power to sell and dispose of all or any part of "my estate." There were no other dispositions of property. The deceased was 69 years old at the time he made the will, April 17, 1903, and he died on April 5, 1905. The widow was a second wife by whom he had no children, those named in the will being children of his first marriage. The value of the entire estate was $11,460.03. The value of the lot devised to the widow was $2,350. The residue, after paying the debts and expenses of administration, amounted to $8,109.25. The lot aforesaid had been occupied by the testator during his lifetime as a home, and it is admitted by appellant that it was his separate property, a fact which does not appear from the record, except by inference. The expense of administration was $712.82. The language of the will clearly shows that the testator believed that he was thereby disposing of his entire estate, including both his separate estate and the whole of the community property. The intention of the testator in this respect is to be determined by the rules which apply generally to the interpretation of wills; a proper effect being given, of course, to the presumptions aforesaid. A word or phrase occurring more than once therein is presumed always to be used in the same sense, unless the context shows a different meaning. Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 417, 40 Pac. 552. The meaning of an ambiguous part "may be explained by a reference thereto, or a recital thereof in another part of the will." Civ. Code, § 1323. The testator is presumed to have known that his absolute testamentary power extended only to an undivided one-half of the community property. With this knowledge he was careful, when he came to dispose of the property other than the homestead, to describe it as "the rest and residue of my estate, personal or mixed wheresoever situated," and to say that he gave "the whole thereof" to his wife and the four children, in equal parts, one-fifth to each. This, alone, indicates his intention to give the whole of the community property in that manner, and to that extent it is inconsistent with a design to affect or dispose of only a one-half thereof. Next, he shows what was in his mind by declaring, "all of my estate is my separate property, except a portion thereof equal to a value of eight thousand dollars," and then, to make it more certain by a different form of expression, he reiterates the fact by saying: "Only eight thousand dollars of my estate is community property." If he had been referring to only one-half of the community estate, it would not have been true that it would have equaled eight thousand dollars in value. He thus makes it clear that in this part of the will the phrase "my estate" was used to describe and include both moieties of the community property. It would be presumed to have been used for the same purpose in the second clause where he disposes of the residue of "my estate," unless the contrary was indicated. But he puts this beyond doubt by the express statement, as to this residue, that he there disposes of "the whole thereof," thus excluding the idea that he was dealing with one-half only, or with any undivided portion. Manifestly to his mind, as it appears from the will, his estate embraced both his separate property and the entire interest in the community property, and the will must be deemed to have disposed of it accordingly.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

She was not compelled to accept this provision. She might have repudiated the will entirely, and could then have insisted upon the share of the estate which the law allowed her. The court rightly held, however, that she was put to her election. It does not appear that she chose to take under the law. The distribution was made in accordance with the will, as we have interpreted it. All presumptions are in favor of the action of the court below. No objection is made that the court disregarded her choice, and we therefore presume that, when required to elect, she chose the provisions of the will, although the record does not expressly disclose whether she made any election or not.

The order of distribution is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

154 Cal. 513
ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN BANK, Limited, v.
FIELD et al. (S. F. 4,729.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1908.)

1. MORTGAGES (§ 199*)—MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION UNDER DEED OF EQUIT OF REDEMPTION—RIGHT TO RENTS AND PROFITS.

A mortgagee in possession under a deed of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor is not liable as mortgagee in possession to account to junior lien holders for rents and profits received after he took possession under the deed, since by his deed he succeeds to all the rights of his grantor in the land, including the right to possession thereof and the use and profits until legally dispossessed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 523; Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 258*)—TRIAL—AMENDMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

No abuse of discretion in the allowing of an amendment to the answer after the case was closed was shown where the adverse party was fully protected in its right to meet the amendment and the testimony offered in support thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 776; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The erroneous admission of immaterial evidence which does not prejudice a party is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4153; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Action by the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, against T. J. Field, administrator, the Bank of Monterey, and others. There was a judgment, and, from an order denying its motion for a new trial, the Bank of Monterey appeals. Order affirmed.

See, also, 146 Cal. 644, 80 Pac. 1080.

Zabala & Wyatt, for appellant. J. W. Lillenthal and Dougherty & Lacey, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant the Bank of Monterey from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The action was instituted by plaintiff in February, 1898, to foreclose a mortgage, in the form of an absolute deed, executed on March 10, 1894, by George and Elsie Brandt, the owners of the property therein described, and duly recorded March 22, 1897. Defendant Bank of Monterey is the holder of a junior mortgage, also in the form of a deed, covering the same property, executed by the Brandts on April 16, 1897, which it here seeks to foreclose. While this action was pending on January 24, 1899, the cross-defendant, Thomas W. Cowan, purchased from plaintiff its promissory notes and mortgage for $8,000. On February 28, 1899, he purchased the mortgaged property from the Brandts, receiving a deed of that date, conveying the property to him for an expressed consideration of $5, subject to the mortgages held by plaintiff and the Bank of Monterey. This deed was not recorded until January 2, 1902. Immediately upon receiving this deed the grantee Cowan entered into possession of the property, and has ever since been in such possession. George Brandt died on November 20, 1899, and T. J. Field is the administrator of his estate. The action was first tried in the superior court on March 11, 1902, and the lower court held that the lien of the mortgage to plaintiff assigned to Cowan was extinguished and merged in the fee by the conveyance of the mortgaged property by the Brandts to Cowan, the assignee of plaintiff, and that the lien of the mortgage of the Bank of Monterey was therefore superior thereto. Judgment was given accordingly. Upon appeal to this court, it was held that there was no merger; the court saying: "It is true that, under ordinary circumstances, where the holder of a mortgage acquires the estate of the mortgagor, the mortgage interest is merged in the fee and the mortgage is extinguished. This is the ordinary legal effect of the transaction, and ordinarily the intention is presumed to accord with the act accomplished. But this rule is never applied where there is an intervening lien on the property, which it is to the interest of the purchaser to keep on foot, and where there is no evidence, direct or circumstantial, of an express intention to extinguish the first mortgage and hold subject only to the second. In such a case the legal title and first-mortgage lien will be considered as separate interests whenever necessary for the protection of the just rights of the purchaser." See Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field et al., 146 Cal. 644, 653, 80 Pac. 1080, 1083. The judgment was therefore reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

On the retrial in the lower court, the principal claim of defendant Bank of Monterey was that it was entitled to have the value of the use and occupation of the premises during the time that Cowan occupied the same from February 28, 1899, accounted for and applied to the payment of the senior mortgage held by him. The answer and cross-complaint of said bank do not allege that Cowan entered into possession as mortgagee, or otherwise than under his deed from the Brandts conveying the property to him. It was alleged that the consideration for such deed was nominal; that Cowan refrained from recording the deed until January 2, 1902, for the purpose of deceiving said defendant as to the nature of his occupation; and that the rents and profits of the land during all the time Cowan has been in possession were $100 per month. The trial court found that there was a substantial consideration for the execution of the Brandt deed, and under the allegations of such answer and cross-complaint as to the value of the property there can be no claim that any substantial consideration was inadequate or unfair, in view of the amount of incumbrances on the property. The court further found that the delay in recording the deed was not for the purpose of deceiving the Bank of Monterey, and also that the value of the use and occupation of such property was $75 per month. It further expressly found that Cowan entered into and has held possession of said property solely by virtue of the conveyance from the Brandts, and has never occupied the same as a mortgagee. This finding is not attacked. Further finding against the claim of merger, it concluded that the Bank of Monterey was not entitled to have the value of the rents and profits or the value of the use and occupation of the land set off against the Cowan mortgage, and that Cowan was entitled to be paid from the proceeds of the foreclosure sale, before anything was paid to the Bank of Monterey therefrom, the full amount of principal and interest due under the terms of the notes originally held by plaintiff and transferred to Cowan, without deduction or credit on account of rents and profits or value of the use and occupation. Judgment was given accordingly, decreeing the amounts due the respective parties, and directing a sale of the mortgaged property, and the application of the proceeds after payment of costs of sale, etc., first, to the payment of the amount due Cowan on such notes and mortgage; and, second, any surplus then remaining to the payment of the amount due the Bank of Monterey.

The ruling of the trial court to the effect that the rents and profits of the land or the value of the use and occupation thereof could not be charged against Cowan's mortgage was undoubtedly correct. It being established that Cowan never entered into possession under his mortgage, but has been in possession solely under the deed of the mortgagors conveying to him the land subject to the mortgages, no foundation exists for any liability on his part on account of rents and profits or the value of the use and occupation of the land. It is well settled that a mortgagee in possession under a deed of the equity of redemption from the mortgagor is not liable as mortgagee in possession to account to junior lienholders for rents and profits received after the time he took possession under the deed. See Jones on Mortgages, §§ 1118, 1118a; Gaskell v. Viquesney, 122 Ind. 244, 23 N. E. 791, 17 Am. St. Rep. 364; Gault v. Eq. Trust Co., 106

Ky. 578, 38 S. W. 1065; Rogers v. Herron et al., 92 Ill. 583, 588; Gray v. Nelson, 77 Iowa, 63, 41 N. W. 566. This is necessarily true. By virtue of his deed such mortgagee succeeds to all of the rights of his grantor in the land, including the right to remain in possession thereof and enjoy the use and profits until legally dispossessed, occupying the same position in this regard that the grantor would have occupied had he not conveyed, or that any purchaser not holding a senior mortgage would have occupied. He is in possession solely as the owner of the property subject to the existing mortgages, and there is no liability to account to any one for the value of the use and occupation thereof. As owner he is entitled to such possession and the fruits thereof. See Bank of Woodland v. Heron, 120 Cal. 614, 52 Pac. 1006. The reason underlying the rule requiring a mortgagee in possession to account for the rents and profits is that the mortgage does not entitle him to possession, and the profits of the possession are consequently received by him as a trustee for the mortgagor and not for himself. Where, therefore, he has no other right to possession, he must account for the value of such profits. Where, however, he has succeeded to the rights of the mortgagor in the land, and, as such successor, has become entitled to such profits as owner, the whole foundation for the application of the rule is taken away. The right of a junior mortgagee to compel such an accounting does not rest upon any obligation of the senior mortgagee to him, for there is no contract between them, but it rests solely on the fact that the senior mortgagee is under obligation to the mortgagor to account, and, by reason of his junior lien, he has the right in equity to stand in the place of the mortgagor and enforce an accounting to the same extent only that the mortgagor could have enforced it. Gaskell v. Viquesney, supra; Gault v. Eq. Trust Co., supra. Where no such obligation to account exists in favor of the mortgagor, it cannot exist in favor of a junior encumbrancer.

We do not think that there was any abuse of discretion in allowing Cowan to amend his answer after argument commenced by inserting a denial of the allegation that the deed of the Brandts to him was given for a purely nominal consideration, and an averment that there was a substantial consideration therefor, and in allowing testimony to be given thereon. The only objection made thereto was that the case had been closed. The mere fact that the testimony had been closed did not preclude the court from taking this action if it deemed it to be in the interest of justice, and if the defendant bank was fully protected in its right to meet the amendment and the testimony offered in support thereof with such evidence as it desired to present. Such matters are largely within the discretion of the trial court. Defendant bank would undoubtedly have been granted time, if necessary, to contest the matter thus set up by amendment, but expressed no wish in that behalf.

No ground of objection appears to have been specified in the objection to the evidence given by Cowan to the effect that since he entered into possession of the property he has made improvements thereon of the value of $2,000. The objection urged in appellant's brief is simply that it was immaterial. It does not appear to us that the evidence could have prejudiced it in the slightest degree, even if we assume it to have been immaterial.

This disposes of all the points made for reversal.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

(154 Cal. 527)

In re HALL'S ESTATE.
CROCKER et al. v. HALL.
(S. F. 4,992.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 13, 1908.)

1. GIFTS (§ 5*)—INTER VIVOS—REQUISITES.

Where an instrument recited that it was made in consideration of the sum of $5, and of the love and affection of the donor, the recital of a nominal consideration did not prevent the transaction from operating as a gift, within Civ. Code, § 1146, defining a gift as a transfer of personal property without consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3084-3087; vol. 8, p. 7670.]

2. GIFTS (§ 18*)—INTER VIVOS—DELIVERY—NECESSITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1147, requiring a delivery to the donor in case of a verbal gift, where a gift inter vivos is evidenced by writing, there need be no actual delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 32; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. GIFTS (§ 15*)—INTER VIVOS—INTENT—NECESSITY.

No gift of personal property, whether verbal or evidenced by writing, except a gift causa mortis, is effectual unless the owner intends to completely divest himself of dominion over the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 14; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

4. GIFTS (§ 50*)—INTENT—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether a donor intended to divest himself of dominion over personal property is a question of fact to be determined upon all the evidence by the trial court or jury like other questions of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 101; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

5. GIFTS (§ 48*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In determining whether the owner intended to make a gift of property, declarations of the donor, both before and after the transaction, are admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 91; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1099*)—LAW OF THE CASE—FORMER DECISIONS—SCOPE.

A former decision holding that an instrument was not a will, but a deed, which transferred to the grantee the property described, did not decide the question of the grantor's intent to make a completed gift of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4370, 4373; Dec. Dig. § 1099.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

The finding of the trial court that there was no valid gift of the property will not be disturbed on appeal if based on substantial evidence warranting the inference that the owner did not intend to immediately divest his dominion over the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979-3982; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

8. GIFTS (§ 49*)—INTER VIVOS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The evidence held sufficient to support a finding of the trial court that an alleged donor did not intend that title and dominion over the property should pass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. §§ 95-100; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

9. TRUSTS (§ 34*)—EXPRESS TRUSTS—DEPOSIT OF MONEY IN BANK—INTENT OF DONOR.

Where the evidence was insufficient to establish a gift inter vivos of money deposited in bank, in order that the depositor or the bank might be declared a trustee thereof, the money must have been deposited with intent to create a trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 44; Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

10. TRUSTS (§ 44*)—CREATION—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH TRUSTS—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held insufficient to require a finding that money was deposited in a bank with the intention of making the bank or the depositor a trustee for another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 66-68; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

11. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 465*)—SETTLEMENT—JURISDICTION.

The superior court had jurisdiction, in settling the accounts of an administrator, to determine the amount of money or property of the estate which had come into his hands, and to charge him therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 1990; Dec. Dig. § 465.*]

12. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 510*)—SETTLEMENT—REVIEW—NATURE OF REMEDY.

If an administrator is improperly charged with funds as belonging to the estate, his remedy is by appeal from the decree settling his final account.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 510.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Action by Helena Crocker and others against Louisa Hall, administratrix of the estate of George D. Hall, deceased. From an order charging defendant with a certain sum as administratrix, and denying a motion for a new trial, the administratrix appealed. Affirmed.

See, also, 149 Cal. 143, 84 Pac. 839.

Nowlin & Fassett and Wm. H. H. Hart (Aylett R. Cotton, of counsel), for appellant. S. C. Denson, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. George D. Hall died on March 15, 1904, survived by his widow Louisa Hall, Helena Crocker, his sister, and Henry A. Hall, his brother. He left no other heirs. The widow applied for letters of administration upon the estate, and such letters were issued to her on April 4, 1904. On November 2, 1904, she filed, in the matter of said estate, a paper claimed by her to be the will of George D. Hall, together with a petition that it be admitted to probate, and that letters of administration with the will annexed be issued to her. A contest was filed by the brother and sister of the decedent, respondents herein, and the court rendered judgment denying probate. An appeal to this court by the proponent resulted in an affirmance of the judgment refusing to admit the alleged will to probate. Estate of Hall, 149 Cal. 143, 84 Pac. 839. This paper is quoted in full in the opinion of this court on that appeal. It will be sufficient at this time to state that it is an instrument in the form, generally speaking, of a deed, executed by George D. Hall in his lifetime, and purporting to convey to Louisa Hall, his wife, all personal property which he possessed at the date of the instrument, or might thereafter own or possess, with the proviso, however, that the conveyance was to remain null and void during his lifetime, but to become effective upon his death, the party of the second part being authorized at that time to take full possession. At the time of Hall's death, there was on deposit in his name, in a San Francisco bank, the sum of $13,822.72, and that amount, or more, had so stood to his credit at all times after the execution of the paper just referred to. On April 2, 1904, the administratrix had filed an inventory, in which she included the money in bank as assets of the estate. After the decision determining that the paper offered by her for probate was not a will, she asked and obtained from the court leave to amend her inventory by excluding all of said money therefrom. Subsequently she filed in the superior court her final account, in which she stated that "no property, either personal or real, has been discovered or found by the above administratrix belonging to the estate of George D. Hall, deceased, and no money or other personal property is now or has been in the possession of this administratrix belonging to said estate." Objections to the account were filed by Henry A. Hall and Mrs. Crocker, and upon a hearing it was determined by the court below that the administratrix should be charged with the sum of $13,822.72 in money belonging to the decedent at the time of his death, and an order was made that she be so charged, and that the account be settled accordingly. From this order, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial the administratrix appeals.

The main point in controversy between the parties turns upon the legal effect of the instrument offered for probate as the will of the deceased. On the part of the respondents it is contended that the paper evidences on its face an intent to dispose of property only upon the death of the signer, and that it is accordingly testamentary in character. On the other hand, the appellant urges that the proper construction of the document is that it is a present conveyance of the grantor's interest in the property described, with a postponement of the right of actual enjoyment. On the appeal from the order denying probate, the respective parties took positions directly opposed to those now assumed. The widow insisted that the paper was testamentary; the other heirs that it was not. In affirming the order there under review, this court said: "The * * * instrument is certainly not in form a will. It does not contain any of the usual words of devise or bequest, nor any words equivalent thereto. It is in form and substance a deed between two parties by which one grants and transfers to the other certain property. * * * The instrument in question here is clearly a deed granting and transferring in present to the grantee named therein the property described, but reserving its enjoyment until the happening of a future contingency, and this was clearly the purpose of the grantor." Defeated in her effort to secure probate of the paper as a will, the widow is now, naturally and properly enough, seeking to establish its effectiveness as an immediate transfer of title. To this end she relies upon the above-quoted declarations in the opinion in 149 Cal. as the "law of the case." The matter then before the court was an appeal from an order denying probate. The record of the proceeding in the superior court (a part of which was offered in evidence on the hearing of the account) shows that the refusal to admit the alleged will to probate was based upon a finding that the paper had not been published as a will. This want of one of the statutory requisites to the making of a will is also referred to in the opinion of this court, and might well be treated as the true basis of the ruling there made. We may assume, however, for the purposes of this case, that the ground, or at least one of the grounds, of the earlier decision, was that the paper was on its face a present transfer, rather than a testamentary disposition. It may also be assumed, though we do not decide, that after an appeal from an order denying probate, an appeal from an order settling an administrator's account is so far a second appeal in the same case that the doctrine of the law of the case may be deemed applicable.

Taking it as established, for the purposes of this appeal, that the paper in question purports to effect a present transfer, subject to a postponement of enjoyment, of the grantor's interest in certain property, the question whether or not it was so executed and delivered as to accomplish this purpose, still remains. The former opinion did not undertake to dispose of this issue. Indeed the court expressly declined to dispose of it by saying, at the close of the opinion, "whether or not the instrument is effective for the purpose intended is not in question here. If it should be held to be inoperative for that purpose, that fact would not turn the deed into a will." The paper recites that it is made in consideration of the sum of $5, "as also for and in consideration of the love and affection, and for the better maintenance of Louisa Hall." It is not pretended that any money or other thing of value actually passed between the parties, and the recital of a nominal consideration does not conflict with the obvious conclusion that the transaction, if valid at all, was intended to operate as a gift. "A gift is a transfer of personal property, made voluntarily, and without consideration." Civ. Code, § 1146. Where a gift inter vivos is evidenced by a writing duly executed by the donor, the property need not be actually delivered. The requirement of delivery has application only to verbal gifts. Civ. Code, § 1147; Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 496, 45 Pac. 867; Driscoll v. Driscoll, 143 Cal. 523, 77 Pac. 471. But no gift of personal property (except a donatio mortis causa) is complete and effectual unless there exists an intent, on the part of the owner, to completely divest himself of dominion over the property. Denigan v. Hib. S. & L. Soc., 127 Cal. 137, 59 Pac. 389; Robinson v. Mutual Sav. Bank (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 533. In this respect there is no distinction between verbal gifts and those evidenced by a writing. "To constitute such a gift [i. e., one inter vivos]," as is said in Zeller v. Jordan, 105 Cal. 143, 38 Pac. 640, "there must be an immediate transfer of the title, and the donor must relinquish all present right to or control over the thing given." If such right or control be immediately surrendered, the gift may be complete, although possession is not taken, or intended to be taken, by the donee until some future time. Ruiz v. Dow, supra; Driscoll v. Driscoll, supra. But in every case, although the writing may by its terms purport to presently pass the title, the validity of the attempted gift will depend upon the intention of the alleged donor. Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 674, 54 Pac. 267. If he intended to and did divest himself of all control over the property, the gift is complete. What the intent was is a question of fact, to be determined, like other questions of fact, by the trial court or the jury, upon all the evidence in the case. In determining it, declarations of the donor, made before or after the transaction, are admissible. Ruiz v. Dow, supra.

It is clear that, on the appeal from the order denying probate, this court did not assume to decide whether or not Hall in fact intended to make a complete gift of the property to his wife. What was there said regarding the "purpose of the grantor" had reference to the construction of the writing itself. We are therefore here confronted, for the first time, with the question of intent, in so far as such intent is a factor in the validity of the alleged gift. The evidence contained in the record shows that Hall did not do any act whatsoever to transfer his said bank account to his wife except to execute and deliver said document. He did not give or make any assignment, check, or order to his wife, and never at any time gave her any possession, delivery, or control of the said deposit. On the contrary, he at all times retained in his own possession the passbook, and retained and exercised the absolute and exclusive management and control of his said bank account, depositing to and drawing from the same from time to time. It appears that the instrument was drawn by an attorney under instruction from Mr. Hall; that at the time of its execution and delivery Hall said that he wanted his wife to have what was left of his property at the time of his death. There can be no question that on these facts the court was fully justified in concluding, as it did, that the money on deposit did not pass to Mrs. Hall, but that it was a part of Hall's estate. The intent of the alleged donor being a question of fact, the determination of the lower court must stand on appeal, if based upon any substantial evidence warranting the inference that an immediate divesting of ownership and dominion over the property was not intended. The declaration of Hall that he wanted Mrs. Hall to have all that might remain at his death was certainly consistent with an intent on his part to retain the absolute ownership during his lifetime and to have title pass only upon his death. This interpretation of the circumstances attending the execution of the paper is supported by his subsequent conduct. While a contrary conclusion would probably have been justified by the evidence, the one that was reached was in no degree unreasonable or contrary to the showing made. It might be suggested that Mrs. Hall's title could be upheld on the theory that the transaction had the effect of making Hall or the bank a trustee for her benefit. Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Pac. 370. But to accomplish this result it is essential that there be an intent to create a trust, and the evidence above recited certainly did not require a finding of such intent. Noble v. Learned (Cal.) 94 Pac. 1047.

Some doubt is suggested by the appellant as to the power of the court, in a proceeding of this kind, to adjudicate, as between the estate and the administratrix, the title to property claimed by the latter adversely to the estate. Whether or not the order here appealed from could be regarded as conclusively determining this question of title, there can be no doubt that the superior court has jurisdiction, in settling the accounts of an administrator, to determine the amount of money or property of the estate that has come into his hands, and to charge him therewith. "If he is improperly charged, his remedy is to appeal from the decree settling his final account. I know of no other way in which it can be reached." In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

9 Cal. App. 177

MERCED BANK v. PRICE et al.

(S. F. 4796.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 3, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—NEW TRIAL—DENIAL—SCOPE OF APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT—FINDINGS.

The sufficiency of the complaint, or of the findings to support the judgment cannot be reviewed on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3480; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REVIEW—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

On appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, the court may examine the bill of exceptions to determine whether the evidence sustains the findings and whether any prejudicial errors of law were committed at the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3480; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 231*)—OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—SUFFICIENCY—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

A mere objection to evidence offered and allowed, unaccompanied by any ground or reason, is insufficient to present reviewable error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1299; Dec. Dig. § 231;* Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 194-210, 223-227.]

4. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 74*).

In an action, by the pledgee from a bank of a note and mortgage, to foreclose the mortgage, evidence held to show that an absolute assignment of the pledge by the bank to the pledgee, made in settlement of the bank's debt to the pledgee, and while the bank was in liquidation under the bank commissioners, was not fraudulent as against the bank's creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

5. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 74*)—LIQUIDATION—ASSIGNMENT OF ASSETS—ACTION BY ASSIGNEE—OBJECTION BY CREDITORS.

Where a note and mortgage pledged by a bank were assigned to the pledgee while the bank was in liquidation, the mortgagor, even if a general creditor of the bank, could not attack the assignment in an action to foreclose the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

6. PLEDGES (§ 25*)—REDELIVERY OF PROPERTY—LIEN—EXTINGUISHMENT—THINGS IN ACTION.

Civ. Code, § 2913, provides that the voluntary restoration of property to its owner by the holder of a lien thereon, dependent on possession, extinguishes the lien, etc. Held, that, a note and mortgage pledged by a bank being things in action, and therefore subjects of a lien without change of possession, their redelivery by the pledgee to the bank for collection did not extinguish the pledgee's lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. §§ 55-57; Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

7. PLEDGES (§ 58*) — PLEDGOR'S RIGHTS TO SUE.

Where a bank pledged a note and mortgage, it was still the owner, subject to the pledgee's lien, under Civ. Code, § 2888, providing that a lien, or contract for a lien, transfers no title to the property subject thereto, notwithstanding an agreement to the contrary, and was therefore entitled to sue thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 191; Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

8. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 73*)—LIQUIDATION—PLEDGED SECURITIES.

Where a note and mortgage, payable to a bank as a corporation, was pledged by the bank, it was entitled to sue thereon in its corporate name, though it was in course of liquidation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

9. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 73*) — LIQUIDATION—ACTIONS—ASSIGNED SECURITIES—COMPLAINT.

Where a bank in process of liquidation, sued on securities, payable to it as a corporation, which it had pledged, and which had been reassigned to it by the pledgee "for collection," allegations of intermediate assignments, or that the bank was in liquidation, were unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

10. BANKS AND BANKING (§ 73*)—LIQUIDATION—TRANSFER OF ASSETS—STATUTES.

St. 1895, p. 172, c. 167, creates a bank commission, and section 11 (page 175) requires the commissioners to control a bank in liquidation until the court shall order the commissioners to surrender the property in their possession to the corporation for liquidation, and that the directors or trustees shall be permitted to manage the bank's affairs during liquidation. The corporation is also required to report its affairs to the commissioners, and with amounts realized for property sold since any previous report. Held, that the officers of a bank in process of liquidation had power, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the bank commissioners, to make an absolute assignment of pledged securities to the pledgee, in a final settlement of the bank's transactions with such pledgee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

11. PARTIES (§ 59*)—NEW PARTIES—SUBSTITUTION—ASSIGNEES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, provides that the court may allow a party to amend any pleading or proceeding by adding to or striking out the name of any party, etc. Held that, where an action to enforce pledged securities was properly brought by the pledgor, and during its pendency the securities were absolutely assigned to the pledgee, the court properly permitted an amendment, substituting the pledgee as plaintiff: the action not being thereby changed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 90-94, 165; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

12. PARTIES (§ 59*) — CAUSE OF ACTION — ASSIGNMENT — EFFECT.

Where an action on pledged securities was properly brought by the pledgor, and pending suit the securities were absolutely assigned to the pledgee, the action might have been continued in the name of the original plaintiff for the assignee's benefit, or she might have been substituted as sole plaintiff, as expressly provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 385.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. §§ 90-94, 165; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

13. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 125*)—SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES.

Where an action to enforce pledged securities was properly brought by the pledgor before limitations had run, and pending suit, the securities were absolutely assigned to the pledgee, who was thereupon substituted as plaintiff by an amendment of the complaint after the limitation period had expired, the amendment did not constitute a new action, and the action was therefore not barred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 542; Dec. Dig. § 125.*]

14. PLEADING (§ 237*) — AMENDMENT — CONFORMITY TO PROOF.

Where, pending suit on pledged securities by the pledgor, the securities were absolutely assigned to the pledgee, it was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to permit the filing of a supplemental complaint to conform to the proof, merely alleging such assignment, and the agreement by which the pledgee held the securities, and how and why she came to redeliver them to the pledgor in addition to the matters already pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 603-619; Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

15. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 959*) — REVIEW — DISCRETION—SUPPLEMENTAL PLEADINGS.

An order permitting plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint will be reversed only on a showing that the trial court's discretion was abused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3825-3833; Dec. Dig. § 959.*]

On Motion for Rehearing.

16. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—MATERIAL ISSUES—FAILURE TO FIND.

Failure of the trial court to find on a material issue renders the decision one against law, which is therefore reviewable on appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3486; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Merced Bank, a corporation, and Sophie A. Ivett, substituted plaintiff, against James D. Price and others. A judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the appellate court, and appellants applied for a rehearing in the Supreme Court. Application denied.

The following is the opinion (filed October 5, 1908) of CHIPMAN, P. J., in the District Court of Appeal, with whom concurred BURNETT and HART, JJ.

"Action to foreclose a mortgage. Plaintiff had judgment. Defendants appeal from the order denying their motion for a new trial. There is no appeal from the judgment. Neither the sufficiency of the complaint nor the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment can be reviewed on this appeal. Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 586, 596, 89 Am. Dec. 134; Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 72; Roberts v. Eldred, 73 Cal. 394, 398, 15 Pac. 16. It was said in Moore v. Douglas, 132 Cal. 399, 64 Pac. 705: "The appeal from the judgment, not having been taken in time, cannot be considered; and the appellant's contention that the complaint failed to state a cause of action, and that the demurrer to the same should have been sustained, also that the judgment is not supported by the findings, and that the findings are contradictory and inconsistent with the pleadings, cannot therefore be considered, there being no appeal from the judgment,"—citing cases. We may, however, look into the bill of exceptions to determine whether the evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings, and also to determine whether any prejudicial errors of law were committed at the trial. Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 355, 59 Pac. 791.

"The promissory note in question was executed by defendants the Prices, and was secured by mortgage executed by them, and also by defendant Mary Wilson, the husband of Mrs. Wilson being joined in the action. The note was executed January 31, 1894, and matured October 1, 1894, and was made payable to the Merced Bank or order. The action was commenced by the Merced Bank on September 30, 1898. It appeared that on January 31, 1895, the plaintiff bank and Sophie A. Ivett, as administratrix of the estate of John L. Ivett, deceased, entered into an agreement, which recited that the bank is indebted to Mrs. Ivett as administratrix, certain sums aggregating $20,198.45, and also to the Bank of British Columbia, which holds certain notes and securities of said Merced Bank; that the Merced Bank was desirous of releasing said securities, and to that end agreed to transfer and assign the same to Mrs. Ivett upon her advancing and paying to said Bank of British Columbia the sum of $4,000; that upon said payment by her she was to release to Merced Bank all securities held by her in excess of $15,148.84 'in face value of the principal thereof'; that the Merced Bank was to issue to her a certificate of deposit for $15,148.84 and another certificate for $6,049.61, 'now due her as aforesaid; said certificates to show on their face that they are issued for moneys due before liquidation, and its promissory note for said sum of $4,000.' To secure this note the directors of the bank were to guarantee its payment, and to secure the said sum of $15,148.84, Mrs. Ivett was to retain the securities turned over by the Bank of British Columbia, in face value of that sum, 'if sufficient thereof are satisfactory to her,' and if not, 'then a sufficient amount of other securities to make up said sum.' Mrs. Ivett made the payment to the Bank of British Columbia, and received from plaintiff bank certain securities, among which were the note and mortgage sued on in this action. It was testified that plaintiff bank failed to deliver to Mrs. Ivett all the securities agreed to be delivered to her, but that they were retained by the bank and collected, and the proceeds were not paid to her, and that the $4,000 advanced by her was to be repaid out of the assets of the bank other than said securities, which was thereafter done. This payment, together with $450 and $600, collected from securities held by her, was all she had received from said securities up to October 2, 1900. On September 10, 1898, Mrs. Ivett addressed a letter to plaintiff bank, in which she said: 'As the $6,500 Price note dated January 31, 1894, which I hold as collateral security will outlaw Oct. 1, 1898, and I do not care to be put to the trouble of collecting the same, or be held responsible for not collecting the same, I hereby authorize you to proceed to collect the said note and mortgage, and for that purpose herewith send you note indorsed "For collection." Sophie A. Ivett.' Thereafter, on September 30, 1898, the present action was commenced by the plaintiff bank, in the usual form of complaint on foreclosure, duly verified. On September 27, 1899, defendants answered, alleging the transfer of said note and mortgage to Mrs. Ivett, and that she, and not the plaintiff, is the owner and holder thereof, praying judgment that plaintiff is not the owner and holder of said note and mortgage. The execution of the note and mortgage was admitted by failure to deny, as also was nonpayment. An amended complaint, correcting the description of the land, was, by leave of court, filed on July 18, 1901. On October 2, 1900, plaintiff bank and Mrs. Ivett entered into an agreement of final settlement of their transactions, and mutually released each other from further liability each to the other, in consideration of which plaintiff bank assigned and transferred 'absolutely all those securities still uncollected which said Sophie A. Ivett has heretofore held as collateral under agreement, * * * dated January 31, 1895, together with all notes, mortgages, trust deeds, relating to the same, judgments recovered upon the same, rights of action pending or existing on the same, and every right, title and interest of said Merced Bank in and to the same.' This assignment included the present cause of action. On July 28, 1901, defendants served their notice to dismiss the action on the ground of want of prosecution, and on August 7, 1901, the plaintiff bank served and on August 10, 1901, filed in court notice of motion 'for an order permitting said action to be continued in the name of the original plaintiff, or that said Sophie A. Ivett may be substituted as plaintiff in said action.' This motion was based upon the said agreement of October 2, 1900. On October 1 and 2, 1901, said motion to dismiss was heard by the court and granted. Thereafter an appeal from the order was taken to the Supreme Court, and the order was reversed. Merced Bank v. Price et al., 145 Cal. 436, 78 Pac. 949. On April 13, 1905, the court made an order substituting Sophie A. Ivett as plaintiff in said action. At the beginning of the trial of the action, to wit, on June 19, 1905, defendants filed their first amended answer, alleging the transfer of the cause of action to Mrs. Ivett; the distribution to her of all the estate of J. L. Ivett, deceased, on September 16, 1895; denying indebtedness to plaintiff bank, and pleading the statute of limitations (section 337, Code Civ. Proc.); that the action was not commenced by any person or corporation having the right to maintain the same within four years after the date of said note. Defendants also thereafter moved to dismiss the action 'on the ground that no allegation of assignment from Merced Bank to Sophie A. Ivett is made by said amended complaint,' and said motion was denied, defendants excepting. Thereupon, and on June 19, 1905, defendants filed a second amended answer, alleging, in addition to what had been previously alleged, that when the original complaint was filed the Merced Bank was not a corporation existing and doing business, etc., but 'had ceased to do business as a corporation, prior to the filing of said original complaint,' and 'had no power or authority to maintain this action'; denied the alleged assignment of the cause of action to Mrs. Ivett 'at any time subsequent to the commencement of the action'; denied the power of the bank to make any assignment thereof, or that it had any assignable interest in said cause of action in the month of October, 1901. It further appears that at the trial the said note and mortgage 'were proved and admitted in evidence * * * over defendants' objections and exceptions,' but no grounds of objection are stated. The letter of Mrs. Ivett of September 10, 1898, to plaintiff bank was admitted in evidence, and there was testimony that at that time Mrs. Ivett held the note and mortgage as collateral security, and she turned them over to the bank for collection only; that they were part of the securities referred to in the agreement of January 31, 1895; 'that she held said note and mortgage as collateral security up to October 2, 1900, and that on October 2, 1900, she made a complete settlement with the Merced Bank, and received the assignment and transfer of said note and mortgage absolutely, as set out in said assignment of October 2, 1900,' which latter was duly proved and admitted in evidence.

"The decree of distribution of the estate of J. L. Ivett to Mrs. Ivett was also admitted in evidence. It appeared at a later stage of the case, and was found by the court, that on the petition of the bank commissioners, in an action commenced October 12, 1895, under the act approved March 30, 1878, and amended January 25, 1895, the said bank was adjudged insolvent, and prohibited from transacting any further business, 'except for the purpose of liquidation.' Resuming the history of the trial, it appears that the bank commissioners extended the period for liquidation, from time to time, and on February 7, 1902, caused an order to be entered in its records reciting that all the assets of the bank have been sold, and the proceeds paid to the creditors of the bank, and the affairs of said bank are fully administered and wound up, concluding as follows: 'It is ordered that said bank be dropped from the list of banks.' The order of substitution, filed April 13, 1905, was admitted in evidence 'over the defendants' objections and exceptions,' the grounds of which are not stated. Thereupon defendants 'moved for a nonsuit, upon the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, which motion for a nonsuit was denied by the court, to which defendants excepted.' The cause was thereupon submitted, with leave to the parties to file briefs, and thereafter, 'and before said matter had been finally submitted to the court for its decision,' the plaintiff served and filed notice of motion for permission to file a supplemental complaint to 'conform to the facts established by the evidence at the trial of said cause on June 19, 1905.' A copy of the proposed supplemental complaint was duly served with said notice. This proposed complaint is similar to the original complaint as amended, but sets forth the assignment to plaintiff, before the commencement of the action, as collateral security, certain notes and mortgages, among them those sued upon, the delivery of the same to plaintiff bank for collection, before the commencement of the action, the subsequent absolute transfer and assignment to her, on October 2, 1900, and her substitution as plaintiff. At the hearing defendants objected to the filing of said supplemental complaint on several grounds, among which are the following: 'That at the trial defendants pointed out the necessity of filing a supplemental complaint; that upon the trial plaintiff failed to make sufficient proof to entitle her to recover, such as is contemplated by section 471, Code Civ. Proc.; that where an assignment is relied upon, it cannot be pleaded for the first time after trial; that plaintiff has been guilty of gross laches in not sooner amending the complaint; that to permit the amendment would be to allow plaintiff to change her position to defendants' prejudice; that the proposed amendment shows upon its face that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, for that Mrs. Ivett's right of action accrued to her by assignment October 2, 1900, and is barred by sections 337, 443, Code Civ. Proc. On July 22, 1905, the court made an order permitting the filing of said supplemental complaint "and granted defendants permission to demur to and answer said supplemental complaint, and to introduce any evidence thereon that defendants might desire, and also permitted plaintiff to introduce further evidence if she so desired, and that all evidence heretofore introduced, and all proceedings taken, should stand, and said supplemental complaint was thereafter, on July 22, 1905, filed and served, to which defendants excepted." A general and special demurrer was interposed to the supplemental complaint and overruled, and defendants thereupon answered, reiterating their former defenses and pleading the statute of limitations, and alleging that the assignment was fraudulent and void as to creditors of plaintiff bank, and, further, that plaintiff Ivett had long since collected all moneys stipulated and agreed to be paid by the Merced Bank to her under the agreement of January 31, 1895.' Later, March 13, 1906, defendants, by leave of court, filed an amended answer to the supplemental complaint, denying the corporate existence of plaintiff bank after it was adjudged insolvent, in 1896; that it was not a licensed corporation under the act of March 20, 1905, and that it failed to pay the tax prescribed by section 20 of the act, and thereby forfeited its charter under section 6 of the act, set up the contract of January 31, 1895, and averred that the indebtedness of plaintiff bank, to secure which the securities in said contract mentioned were pledged to Mrs. Ivett, has been fully paid, and that she has appropriated to her own use, in fraud of other creditors of said bank, other securities; that Mrs. Ivett never commenced any action upon the principal obligation of said bank to her under the contract of January 31, 1895, and all right of action thereon is barred, and her lien as pledgee was entirely extinguished under section 2911, Civ. Code, and her lien thereon ceased February 1, 1899; that defendants were stockholders and creditors of said bank at all times mentioned in the plaintiff's supplemental complaint, and were pecuniarily interested in the collection and distribution of the assets of said bank, and averred that Mrs. Ivett voluntarily surrendered the note and mortgage sued upon to the said bank, and lost her lien thereon, under sections 2988, 2913, Civ. Code, and that plaintiff is not now, and never has been, the owner of said note and mortgage; that said note and mortgage were not specifically mentioned in the decree of distribution of Mrs. Ivett's husband's estate, and she took no interest therein by said decree, denied that the board of directors of said bank had authority to make the assignment of said note and mortgage to Mrs. Ivett, and the same was fraudulent and void, and denied that said assignment of October 2, 1900, was ever delivered to Mrs. Ivett; that it was never recorded, but was secret; that said note and mortgage were not delivered to her, but remained in the hands of the attorney of said bank, and there was no actual and immediate delivery thereof; that the action is barred by the statute of limitations for reasons already stated; that a new cause of action is set up by the amended and supplemental complaint which is barred by the statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 337.

"The cause came on to be heard on March 13, 1905. By the order of the court the evidence, documentary and oral, was to be considered as before the court, as well as the record of all prior proceedings. It appeared from the testimony, without contradiction, that the note and mortgage in question were held by Mrs. Ivett as collateral security under the agreement of January 31, 1895, and were given to the bank for the sole purpose of collection, the proceeds, less costs and charges, to be applied to its debt due Mrs. Ivett; that upon payment by her to the Bank of British Columbia of the $4,000 agreed upon, in addition to the $20,198.46 then due her from plaintiff bank, the latter delivered to her certain securities, among them the note and mortgage sued upon; that plaintiff bank did not deliver to her all the securities it had agreed to deliver, and some were retained by it and collected, and the proceeds not turned over to her; that the $4,000 was to be paid to her out of the assets of the bank other than said securities, but was afterwards repaid out of a portion of said securities, and not out of other assets of the bank; that she had received from said securities only repayment of said $4,000 and $1,050 on two notes; that prior to October 2, 1900, she had been paid nothing except as above, and prior to that date she had made no use of any of the said securities, except as above stated; that she never converted any of said securities to her own use, except as above shown, toward the payment to her of the $20,198.46 due her from said bank; that after receiving the assignment of October 2, 1900, she used it, wherever necessary, in foreclosing mortgages; that the assignment was not recorded, but was 'an open transaction, and had been public to every one interested, especially to the defendants, ever since the fall of 1900, and especially during the summer of 1901, when the defendants were moving to dismiss this action for want of prosecution.' There was also undisputed evidence that plaintiff bank was, at all times mentioned in the complaint, a corporation, and that said bank had never been dissolved or ceased to exist, 'but that all licenses required by law of said bank, up to the time of trial, had been paid'; that the assignment of October 2, 1900, was made by the plaintiff bank in good faith, and in the ordinary course of liquidation of its affairs, 'and in order to expedite the settlement of its affairs, and was an open and public transaction, and was considered, by all parties interested as for the best interest of the creditors.' There was evidence submitted in support of a statement showing the amounts realized by Mrs. Ivett upon the securities held by her. By this statement it appears that there was still due on the indebtedness of the bank to her the sum of $3,799.92. The record does not purport to contain all the evidence, and it is manifest from the findings that all the evidence was not included in the transcript. Such as is before us has been substantially set out in the foregoing history of the case and of the trial, and is without conflict. The defendants submitted no evidence in support of their answer. The findings are quite lengthy and cover every material issue, and some issues not material. They support the judgment and plaintiff's contention upon all points, and negative the allegations set up by defendants in their defense to the action. The briefs discuss numerous questions, as arising upon the record—chiefly by way of challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings—some of which are either not properly here for review, or are not pertinent to any material issue.

"1. The order denying the motion for nonsuit was made upon the sole ground of the insufficiency of the complaint. But the sufficiency of the complaint cannot be inquired into. Cases supra. For like reason we cannot consider the demurrer, as that goes to the sufficiency of the complaint.

"2. In no instance was any ground stated in support of objections to the evidence offered by plaintiff and allowed by the court. The mere objection to some proceeding in the course of the trial, unaccompanied by any ground or reason for the objection, presents no reviewable error, for error must be made affirmatively to appear; and, in the absence of any ground for the objection, we cannot say there was error in the ruling, and the objection must be disregarded.

"3. All question of actual fraud is unsupported by any evidence, and all claim that the creditors of the plaintiff bank were injured must disappear, for there is no evidence that the creditors generally were injured, and the bank commissioners found and declared 'that all the assets of the Merced Bank (in liquidation) have been sold, and all the proceeds therefrom paid to the creditors of the bank, and the affairs of the bank are fully administered and wound up.' This order was entered by the bank commissioners February 7, 1902, and could not have been true if the note and mortgage in suit had been regarded by the bank commissioners as assets of the bank in which the creditors generally were entitled to share. The transfer to plaintiff, October 2, 1900, was made while the bank commissioners were performing their duties. It was an open and well-known transaction, and must have come to the knowledge of the commissioners, and the undisputed evidence is that the transfer was in due course of liquidation of the bank's affairs. We must assume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the bank commissioners sanctioned the transaction as done in process of liquidation, for, having knowledge of it, they were in position, and it was their duty, if disapproved, to have arrested its consummation. Besides, we do not see how in this action objection can be made on behalf of the creditors generally, or by the defendants as such creditors.

"4. The claim that there is a failure to make findings upon material issues, and that the findings are conflicting, must be disregarded. Cases supra.

"5. The securities held by Mrs. Ivett, being "things in action," are subjects of lien without change of possession (Kings v. Roberts, 31 Pac. 620); and, not being dependent upon possession, the redelivery to the bank for the purposes of collection did not extinguish the lien (Civ. Code, § 2913).

"6. Plaintiff bank had a right to commence the action, as it was the owner of the note and mortgage, subject to Mrs. Ivett's lien and was equally interested with her in enforcing collection. Civ. Code, § 2888; Graham v. Light, 4 Cal. App. 400, 88 Pac. 373.

"7. The action was properly commenced in the corporate name of the Merced Bank (Union Savings Bank v. Dunlap, 135 Cal. 628, 67 Pac. 1084; Argues v. Union Savings Bank, 133 Cal. 139, 65 Pac. 307); and, the note being payable to it as a corporation by the defendants, no allegation of the intermediate assignments was necessary, or that the bank was in course of liquidation.

"8. We see no reason for holding, under the bank commission act (St. 1895, p. 172, c. 167) that the plaintiff corporation was without authority to absolutely transfer the cause of action to Mrs. Ivett, the transaction avowedly and in fact being in course of liquidation, and being untainted by fraud, and, so far as appears, for the best interest of the creditors. Section 11 of the act makes it the duty of the commissioners to take control of the corporation and all its property until the order of the court which 'shall order the commissioners to surrender to the corporation the property thereof in their possession, for the purpose of liquidation. The directors or trustees of all banking corporations in liquidation shall be permitted to continue the management of the affairs of such corporations during the process of liquidation.' The assets of the bank transferred by the agreement of October 2, 1900, were in pledge to Mrs. Ivett by the agreement of January 31, 1895, and before the commissioners took control of the bank. Her right to realize upon them in payment of the bank's indebtedness to her was fixed and determined. The bank did not keep faith with her in the matter of securing her claims. It was thought best that a full settlement between her and the bank should be made, and such settlement was necessary in order to wind up the affairs of the bank. Instead, therefore, of having these securities outstanding and in an unsettled condition as collateral, an agreement was made by which the bank was discharged from all liability to Mrs. Ivett, and she became the absolute owner of the assets. This was accomplished while the bank directors were acting under the control and supervision of the commissioners, and while the present action was pending. The act provides that the corporation (section 11) 'shall make reports of the condition of its affairs to the bank commissioners in the same manner as the solvent banks mentioned in the act, and, in addition thereto, shall state the amount of dividend paid, debts collected, and the amounts realized on property sold, if any, since the previous report.' The court found: 'That full reports of the business of said bank in liquidation had been regularly made to the bank commissioners, as required by law, and all moneys collected by said bank in liquidation have been accounted for and reported to the board of commissioners.' We must assume that the commissioners performed their official duty (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963), and, doing so, they must have had knowledge of and approved the transaction now in question. They could not otherwise have truthfully certified that the affairs were finally wound up. The act forbade the transaction of the usual banking business of the corporation—such as receiving deposits, loaning money, and the like—but it had express statutory authority 'to continue the management of the affairs of such corporation during the process of liquidation, under the direction of the bank commissioners.' In Union Savings Bank v. Dunlap, supra, it was held that the corporation might levy an assessment upon the unpaid capital stock, for the purpose of liquidating the bank's indebtedness, and in its corporate name could sue the stockholders to make the collection. The court said: 'The assets belonged to the corporation, and though not a going concern for all purposes, it is a going concern for purposes of liquidation. The cause of action for unpaid subscription accrues to the corporation, and the action is properly brought in its name.' See, also, Union Savings Bank v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 696, 706, 79 Pac. 441.

"9. Appellants contend, also, that the action was commenced by the wrong party, or in the wrong capacity, and that the defect is fatal, and cannot be cured by an amendment substituting the right party, citing Dubbers v. Goux, 51 Cal. 153; Sterrett v. Barker, 119 Cal. 495, 51 Pac. 695; Renwick v. Garland, 1 Cal. App. 238, 82 Pac. 89. In Dubbers v. Goux, the action was commenced by the husband, who afterwards made a motion that his wife be substituted as plaintiff because she was the real party in interest. The lower court allowed the substitution, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court said: 'The court erred in permitting Mrs. Dubbers to be substituted for her husband as plaintiff. It is not pretended that she had succeeded to any interest held by her husband pending the action, nor that she had any joint interest with him in the subject-matter. On the contrary, she was substituted as plaintiff on the theory that she was the only party in interest at the commencement of the action, and had ever since been so. She was permitted to become the sole plaintiff, not to prosecute the same cause of action stated in the complaint, on the ground that she had succeeded to it, but another and distinct cause of action in her separate right. In effect, it was permitting her to prosecute a new suit, for another cause of action, by merely substituting her as sole plaintiff in the former action. It is scarcely necessary to say that section 473, Code Civ. Proc. affords no warrant for such a proceeding.' The difference between that case and the one here is obvious. The very conditions in the case cited which the court found to be wanting to justify the substitution are here present. Both the corporation and Mrs. Ivett were interested in the cause of action, and either could sue upon it—the former as owner, and the latter as pledgee (Civ. Code, § 3006). This common or joint interest after the action was commenced became centered in Mrs. Ivett by assignment, and in her substitution she became plaintiff in this same cause of action. We do not doubt the propriety or legality of substituting her as plaintiff after the assignment. The action might have been continued in the name of the original plaintiff for her benefit, or she might have been substituted as sole plaintiff. Section 385, Code Civ. Proc., and numerous cases cited in Kerr's Cyc. Code. There is nothing in the other cases above cited, as relied upon by defendants, to support their contention.

"10. The point that the statute of limitations had run against the note and mortgage before the assignment to Mrs. Ivett, and that her substitution made her plaintiff in an action barred by the statute, is without merit. Appellants' contention is that the filing of the complaint in the name of the Merced Bank as an existing corporation, without disclosing that it had been adjudged insolvent, was unauthorized and unlawful, and was also unlawful because commenced to enforce a lien for the benefit of the lien claimant; that the running of the statute of limitations was not stopped because the action was unlawfully commenced, and therefore, when Mrs. Ivett was substituted, the action was barred by section 337, Code Civ. Proc. It is a sufficient answer that the action was legally and properly commenced in the name of the payee of the note, the Merced Bank, and that Mrs. Ivett was substituted as plaintiff in the same and not in a different cause of action in which at all times she had an interest—ultimately the sole ownership.

"11. The order granting plaintiff's motion to file a supplemental complaint was within the discretion of the court, and will be reversed only upon a showing that this discretion was abused. Yordi v. Yordi, 6 Cal. App. 20, 91 Pac. 348; Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 51 Pac. 549, 955; Code Civ. Proc. § 473. As was said in Yordi v. Yordi, the question whether the court abused its discretion 'must be answered in the negative, unless the amended complaint introduced new issues substantially different from those presented by the complaint under which the evidence was submitted, and unless it appears that the rights of the defendants were prejudiced by the amendment.' The facts embodied in the supplemental complaint, to conform to which the leave to amend was granted, had fully appeared in the course of the trial. No new facts or matters of surprise were suggested by the proposed amendment, and no fact not already known to defendants and already matter of proof was alleged therein. Full opportunity was given defendants to demur to or answer the complaint, and they did both. In point of fact the only material issue not already pleaded was the assignment to plaintiff, and this, as well as the agreement by which she held the note and mortgage, and how and why she came to redeliver it to the bank, had been made subjects of proof. It is clear to our minds that defendants were deprived of no substantial right by the order of the court, and that it acted within its discretion.

"The foregoing disposes of all the questions which appear to call for examination. We discover no prejudicial error in the record, and the order is therefore affirmed."

Geo. G. Goucher, W. H. Larew, and J. S. Larew, for appellants. J. W. Knox, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the Third District is denied. In so far as the opinion of that court may be held to intimate that an objection that the trial court has failed to find upon a material issue cannot be considered upon a motion for a new trial, or on an appeal from an order denying such a motion, it is erroneous. It is well settled that such a failure renders the decision one against law. But we have been unable to ascertain from the record that there was any such failure in this case.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting in part). I concur in the foregoing modification as far as it goes. I also think there should be a rehearing.

NOTE BY CHIPMAN, P. J.—The point referred to by the Supreme Court, in denying hearing of the cause in that court, was suggested in the briefs of counsel for appellants, and upon the authority of Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 355, 59 Pac. 791, where it was distinctly stated that "the failure to find upon a material issue is no ground for granting a new trial." The District Court of Appeal held that the error could not be reviewed upon appeal from the order denying a new trial, there being no appeal from the judgment. As all the material issues in the case were in fact found upon the point passed without further investigation. In the later case of Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828, it was held, in conformity with the cases cited, "that where the court below fails to find upon a material issue raised by the pleadings, the decision is 'against law,' and may be reviewed upon a motion for a new trial, for the alleged reason that the question raised involves a re-examination of an issue of fact." Attention is called to the matter that there may be no further misapprehension as to the rule of practice. See, for a clear exposition of the rule, Swift v. Occidental Mining, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700.

154 Cal. 554

ATHEARN v. RYAN. (S. F. 4,827.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1908.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 222*)—ACTIONS—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM—FORECLOSURE OF LIEN—"LIEN."

A deed of trust on a homestead is not a lien, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, requiring the presentation of the claim against the estate as a condition precedent to enforcing a lien or incumbrance on the homestead, so that a trust deed executed by a husband and wife on the homestead was enforceable without presenting a claim to the husband's administrator for the debt secured thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 222.*

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 414-4152; vol. 8, p. 7707.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Athearn against Annie Ryan. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

George A. Connolly, for appellant. Garoutte & Goodwin and E. F. Treadwell, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to quiet title. On August 31, 1899, the defendant was the wife of Timothy Ryan and resided with her husband on the premises described in the complaint; the same being community property. On that day the defendant executed and caused to be recorded a declaration of homestead in due form, claiming the said property as a homestead. Afterwards, on June 20, 1902, the defendant and her said husband executed to the plaintiff a note for $680, and, in order to secure the same, executed to certain other persons, as trustees, a deed of trust to the said property. Thereafter, on December 27, 1902, the said Timothy Ryan died, and in due course of time administration was granted on his estate, and notice to creditors given by the administrator. On March 11, 1904, an order was made in said administration proceeding, setting apart the said property to the defendant as a homestead. Afterwards, and before the commencement of this action, the note aforesaid being due and unpaid, the trustees named in said deed of trust, in pursuance of the power conferred upon them by the terms of said deed of trust, sold and conveyed the property to the plaintiff.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

The plaintiff claims title by reason of the deed from the trustees, and the defendant claims that the said deed is void because of the fact that, after the giving of notice to creditors and prior to making the sale, no claim for the debt secured by said deed of trust was ever presented for allowance to the administrator of the estate of said Timothy Ryan. It will be seen from this statement of facts that the case comes exactly within the scope of the decision in Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 Pac. 706. It was held in that case that, under circumstances precisely similar to those in the case at bar, it was unnecessary to present a claim for debt secured by a deed of trust to the administrator of the estate of the deceased husband, and that a deed by the trustees in the execution of the power contained in the deed of trust, made upon a failure to pay the debt when due, was valid and effectual to convey the title to the husband, notwithstanding the failure to present such claim. The only difference between the facts in that case and the facts above stated is that in that case the deed of trust was executed by the husband alone prior to the declaration of homestead, while in this case the homestead was filed first and the deed of trust was thereafter executed by both husband and wife. The principle on which that case rests is that a deed of trust is not a lien or incumbrance on the homestead within the meaning of those terms as used in section 1475 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which requires a presentation of a claim against the estate as a condition precedent to the enforcement of a lien or incumbrance on the homestead. There is no difference in the legal effect of the deed of trust considered in that case and that here involved. Upon the principle of that case, the judgment of the lower court was correct.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(154 Cal. 540)

Ex parte JOUTSEN. (Cr. 1,469.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1908.)

1. CONTEMPT (§ 21*) — ACTS CONSTITUTING CONTEMPT—DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDER.

Where a demurrer to a complaint is sustained, with leave to file an amended complaint, and the time for amendment has not expired, the action is still pending, so that an order made therein will warrant contempt proceedings for disobeying it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 63-65; Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 210*)—ALIMONY—TEMPORARY ALLOWANCE.

By the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405, 1049, and Civ. Code, § 137, an order for alimony pendente lite may be made at any time after the filing of the original complaint and before the termination of the action, if the court has obtained jurisdiction over defendant's person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 610-611; Dec. Dig. § 210.*]

3. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 4*)—NATURE AND GROUNDS—REMEDY BY APPEAL—CONTEMPT.

For an error in the exercise of the court's discretion in granting an order for alimony pendente lite in an action in which the court has acquired jurisdiction over defendant's person, the proper remedy is by appeal from the order, and it cannot be collaterally attacked by habeas corpus to obtain release from imprisonment for contempt in disobeying the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

4. DIVORCE (§ 214*)—ALIMONY—TEMPORARY ALLOWANCE—APPLICATION AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

To justify an order for alimony pendente lite, the marriage must be admitted or proved, and must be determined on the motion in the same manner as any other question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 629-631; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

5. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 4*)—REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Error in granting an order for alimony pendente lite without proof of marriage can be reviewed only by appeal from the order, and habeas corpus will not lie to obtain release from imprisonment for contempt in disobeying the order.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

6. CONTEMPT (§ 78*)—PUNISHMENT.

A party cannot be imprisoned until he obeys an order requiring the payment of money, unless he is able to pay; imprisonment for debt having been abolished.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. § 269; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

7. DIVORCE (§ 269*)—ALIMONY—ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER—CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS—IMPRISONMENT.

A judgment directing defendant's imprisonment until he complies with an order for the payment of alimony pendente lite when he is able to obey the order is authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1219, providing that contempt in refusing to perform an act within the person's power may be punished by imprisonment till he have performed it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 756; Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

In Bank. Application by Herman Joutsen for writ of habeas corpus to be directed to F. Barnet, sheriff of Alameda county. Writ discharged.

Austin Lewis, for petitioner. Walter J. Burpee, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The petitioner seeks his discharge from the custody of the sheriff of Alameda county, by whom he is held under a judgment of the superior court of that county, adjudging him guilty of a contempt of court in failing and refusing to pay to Selma Joutsen certain sums ordered paid by said court in a divorce action instituted by said Selma Joutsen against him as alimony pendente lite, counsel fees and costs, and directing that he be imprisoned in the county jail of said county "for the term of five days and until he comply with said order by paying plaintiff said sums." The divorce action was instituted January 23, 1908, the complaint alleging that plaintiff and defendant intermarried in March, 1894, but failing to allege in terms that the parties were husband and wife at the date of the commencement of the action. On the same date, on the affidavit of plaintiff, an order was made requiring Joutsen to show cause why an order should not be made directing him to pay the plaintiff $50 per month alimony pendente lite, $30 costs, and $75 attorney fees. Summons in said action and the order to show cause having been duly served on petitioner, he on January 27th filed in said court his demurrer to the complaint of plaintiff, based on various grounds, including that of want of facts to state a cause of action. The demurrer and order to show cause came on for hearing January 31, 1908. Thereupon an order was made sustaining the demurrer, with leave to plaintiff to amend within 10 days. The court then proceeded with the hearing on the order to show cause and a motion of petitioner to vacate the same, and, after argument and before any amended complaint had been filed, made its order that petitioner pay the plaintiff on or before February 10, 1908, and on the 10th day of each month thereafter, the sum of $50 alimony, and that he also pay plaintiff on or before February 19, 1908, the sum of $10 on account of costs of suit and $50 for her attorney fees in said action. This order was duly served on petitioner. It was for his failure to comply with this order that the contempt proceedings were instituted on March 11th, and he was adjudged guilty of contempt.

The principal point made by counsel for petitioner in this proceeding is that this order was absolutely void, and could not serve as the basis of a lawful judgment in contempt proceedings, for the reasons, first, that at the time it was made there was no complaint on file, the original complaint having been abrogated by the ruling sustaining the demurrer; and, second, that it was not first established that plaintiff was then the wife of defendant.

As to the first point made against this order: Section 137, Civ. Code, in terms authorizes the court, at any time during the pendency of an action for divorce, in its discretion to require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself and her children or to prosecute or defend the action. A civil action is commenced by the filing of the complaint (section 405, Code Civ. Proc.), and is deemed to be pending from the time of such commencement until its final determination on appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied. Section 1049, Code Civ. Proc. The fact that a demurrer has been sustained to a complaint does not render the action one no longer pending. Where upon such a ruling leave is given to file an amended complaint within a designated time, and the time has not expired, the action is still pending in the court that sustained the demurrer, although no amended complaint has been filed. This was expressly held in Ex parte Barry, 85 Cal. 603, 25 Pac. 256, 20 Am. St. Rep. 248, and is necessarily the case. So we have express statutory authority for the making of such order at any time after the filing of the original complaint and prior to the termination of the action, provided always, of course, that the court has obtained jurisdiction over the person of defendant by service of summons or his voluntary appearance. See Baker v. Baker, 136 Cal. 305, 68 Pac. 971. It may be that an order for alimony, costs, or counsel fees might be held erroneous if made in the absence of a complaint showing a cause of action for divorce, but as to this we need express no opinion. Certainly such an order so made during the pendency of the action cannot be held to have been beyond the jurisdiction of the court and void. At most, it was only error in the exercise of its jurisdiction. For any such error prejudicially affecting the defendant's right in such a case, the only remedy is by direct appeal from the order, which right the defendant is given by our law. On such an appeal the exercise of its discretion by the lower court can be reviewed, and, if there has been an abuse of the discretion confided to it by statute, the order may be reversed. But proceedings on habeas corpus go only to the question of the jurisdiction of the lower court, and, if such jurisdiction has not been exceeded, the petitioner can obtain no relief therein. The attack here on the order directing the payment of alimony, costs, and counsel fees is purely a collateral attack, and all that is necessary to sustain it against such an attack is that it was made in a pending action for divorce, in which the court had acquired jurisdiction of the defendant.

As to the second point made against such order: Petitioner does not here allege that there is not an existing marriage relation between himself and plaintiff in the divorce action. His claim is that this fact was not shown to the court in that action at the time of the making of the order for alimony. He relies upon the doctrine of Hite v. Hite, 124 Cal. 389, 57 Pac. 227, 45 L. R. A. 793, 71 Am. St. Rep. 82, where it was held, on a direct appeal from such an order, that, to justify alimony pendente lite, marriage must be admitted or proven, and that more than the making of a prima facie case is essential, and where it was said that unless upon that question the husband has had his day in court and a hearing, if alimony is allowed, his property is taken without due process of law. What we have said in discussing the first point would appear to be applicable here. It is recognized by the Hite Case, and is manifestly true, that the question of fact whether there is an existing marriage between the parties to the divorce action is addressed to the court hearing the motion for alimony, and it is to be determined by it on that motion in the same manner as any other question of fact is determined. Its order in the case at bar granting the alimony was a determination among other things that there was such an existing marriage between the parties. If the court so determined without sufficient or even any evidence, it simply erred in its conclusion, and such an error can be reviewed only on appeal from the order. There was no excess of jurisdiction in making the order. As we have said, Hite v. Hite, supra, was an appeal from such an order. The same is true of every case cited by petitioner on this subject, and also of every case we have been able to find.

It is said that an order in a contempt proceeding directing a party to be imprisoned until he has complied with the order requiring the payment of money is unlawful unless the party is able to make such payment. This may be conceded. We have no imprisonment for debt in this country. But, in the contempt proceeding under review, the court in terms found that the petitioner "at all times has been and now is able to pay such sums and the whole thereof." His offense for which he is being imprisoned is his failure to obey the order of the court when he has the ability to comply with it. His case is covered by section 1219, Code Civ. Proc., which provides: "When the contempt consists in the omission to perform an act which is yet in the power of the person to perform, he may be imprisoned until he have performed it." The case of Ex parte Todd, 119 Cal. 57, 50 Pac. 1071, is not at all in point.

There is no other point made in the brief of counsel for petitioner that requires notice here. Many of the points so made relate to matters that can be considered on an appeal from the order, and not on habeas corpus. We have considered each of the 27 points made in the petition, and all those made in the brief, and find no reason to doubt the validity of the judgment in the contempt proceedings.

The writ heretofore issued is discharged and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the sheriff of Alameda county.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 215

BROOKS v. ARDIZZONE et al. (Civ. 542.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.

Oct. 14, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 8, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REVIEW—EXTENT OF REVIEW—APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL.

In an action for the value of legal services, where the court found that no services were rendered within the period of limitations, on appeal from the order denying a new trial, but not from the judgment, only the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings can be determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3476; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

2. PAYMENT (§ 63*)—PLEADING—NECESSITY.

Payment may be shown in an action for services under the general issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 158; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. Marion Brooks against Steven Ardizzone and others. From an order denying a motion for a new trial upon judgment for defendants, plaintiff appealed. Order affirmed.

J. Marion Brooks, in pro. per. (Clara S. Foltz and Henry E. Wills, of counsel), for appellant. Gray, Barker & Bowen, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from an order denying a new trial. The action was one to recover attorney's fees on account of services alleged to have been rendered by plaintiff to defendants within two years preceding the filing of the complaint. The answer is a general denial. The court found that plaintiff performed no services of any kind for defendants within the time specified, and that no sum was due or payable to plaintiff on account thereof; that no services were rendered Steven Ardizzone by plaintiff within such time for which payment had not been made in full. There was no appeal from the judgment perfected within proper time, and the only matter which can be considered under the record relates to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. There is a decided conflict in the evidence, but the trial court, having before it the witnesses, determined all of the issues in defendants' favor, and there is some testimony going to support the finding that as to all of the defendants other than Steven Ardizzone no employment of plaintiff ever existed, and no one having authority from them or either of them ever requested services to be performed in their behalf, and that no services were in fact rendered to them or either of them by plaintiff. As to Steven Ardizzone, the evidence is uncontradicted that certain services were rendered him by plaintiff within the time mentioned, but he testifies, and the court seems to have accepted his statement as true, that for all such services performed by plaintiff he made payment to plaintiff in full. While no plea of payment is presented by the answer, the right to prove the same exists in this state where the general issue only is tendered. Wetmore v. San Francisco, 44 Cal. 300.

The order denying a new trial must therefore be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 166

HUBBARD v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR SANTA CLARA COUNTY.

(Civ. 519.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 3, 1908.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 106*)—CIVIL JURISDICTION—DISMISSAL.

Code Civ. Proc. § 890, which is contained in title 11 of the Code which relates to proceedings in justices' courts, permits judgment of dismissal without prejudice, where plaintiff fails to prosecute with reasonable diligence, or upon his nonappearance at the time specified in the summons or the time to which the action is postponed, or within one hour thereafter, etc. Section 581 contained in that part of the Code relating to proceedings in courts of record provides generally for the dismissal of actions, and permits an action to be dismissed, among other causes, for failure to serve summons and make return thereon within three years, which provision was inserted in the section by amendment by St. 1889, p. 398, c. 259, but a similar amendment was never made to section 890. Both sections were taken from the old practice act and occupied the same relative position in the Codes when originally adopted. Held, in view of the positions of the sections in the Codes, that section 581 did not apply to dismissals in justices' courts, and that a summons issued out of such court was not served and return made thereon within three years was not ground for dismissal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 75*)—WITHOUT PREJUDICE—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE.

A dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, permitting a dismissal for failure to serve summons and make return thereon within three years, is without prejudice to a new action unless it operates as a retraxit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dismissal and Nonsuit, Cent. Dig. § 169; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

Prohibition by Henry Hubbard against the Superior Court in and for the County of Santa Clara. Temporary restraining order vacated, and petition denied. See, also, 5 Cal. App. 90, 89 Pac. 865.

C. D. Wright and R. M. Wright, for petitioner. Will M. Beggs, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is a petition for a writ of prohibition to prevent the superior court of the county of Santa Clara from trying a case appealed to said court from a justice's court of said county. The matter is submitted to this court upon the petition and the answer thereto filed by respondent in response to the order to show cause.

The essential facts of the case are as follows: On the 2d day of November, 1902, an action was commenced before a justice of the peace in Santa Clara county by the Union Savings Bank of San Jose against Henry Hubbard by the filing of the complaint on said day. The summons was not served on petitioner, the defendant in that action, until December 14, 1905, which was more than three years after the commencement of the action. The summons never was returned to said justice court, but on the 10th day of April, 1906, the defendant therein specially appeared and moved for a dismissal of the action under section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the ground that the summons had not been served and return made within three years after the commencement of the action, and also under section 890 of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to prosecute the action to judgment with reasonable diligence. The justice of the peace denied the motion, and the defendant in said action (petitioner herein), without waiving the question of jurisdiction to try the case, but expressly reserving such objection, answered to the merits, and upon the trial judgment went against petitioner, who thereupon appealed from said judgment to the superior court of the county of Santa Clara. Promptly after the transmission of the case to the superior court of said county petitioner made the same motion for a dismissal of the action, which was by the said court denied, and said court now threatens to proceed to try the cause on its merits.

It is not contended that a sufficient showing was not made in answer to the motion so far as said motion was based on the failure to prosecute the action to judgment with reasonable diligence, as required by section 890 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or that any question of jurisdiction can arise out of the action of the court in that regard. But the contention that the court is without jurisdiction to proceed to try the cause upon its merits, or to take any action therein other than to dismiss the action, is based on the fact that the summons was neither served nor return made thereon within three years after the commencement of the action. Upon the admitted facts of this case the only question, therefore, presented for the determination of this court, is whether or not section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to actions brought in justices' courts. For, if the justice court had jurisdiction to try and determine an action upon its merits, the superior court would likewise have such jurisdiction on appeal.

The question as to whether or not the provisions of section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to actions brought in justices' courts has not been directly determined by any of the appellate courts. It is insisted by respondent that the dismissal of actions brought in the justice court is governed by the provisions of section 890 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that section 581 of the same Code has no application thereto. While it is difficult perhaps to assign any good reason why the lawmaking power should make it mandatory on the court to dismiss an action brought in the superior court if the summons be not served and return made thereon within three years after the commencement of the action, and make no such provision for actions brought in a justice court, we are constrained after a careful examination of the subject to so hold. Section 890 of the Code of Civil Procedure is contained in title 11 of said Code, which deals with the proceedings in justice courts. Section 581 of the same Code is contained in another part of the Codes relating to actions and proceedings in courts of record. Both sections were contained in the Codes when originally adopted March 11, 1872, and were taken from the old practice act, in which they occupied the same relative positions that they occupy now in the Codes. The provision requiring the dismissal of an action for failure to serve the summons and to make return thereon within three years after the commencement of the action was inserted in section 581 by an amendment thereto in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 398, c. 259), but no similar amendment was then or ever made to section 890.

Although the precise question involved in this case has never before been decided by an appellate court of this state, we think that the rule which should govern has been clearly laid down in two cases. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Banton, 46 Cal. 604; Weimmer v. Sutherland, 74 Cal. 341, 15 Pac. 849. In the first of the above mentioned cases the question arose as to which of several sections governed as to the recordation of a mortgage of real estate. It was there held that sections 1213, 1214 and 1215 of the Civil Code, found in the title relating to "transfers," by virtue of section 2952 of the Civil Code, found in an article relating to "mortgages of real property," governed, as against the provisions of section 2937 of the Civil Code (as it then existed but since repealed), found in an article relating to "mortgages in general." The court followed the rule laid down in the Political Code for the interpretation of the Codes, that as between conflicting or contravening provisions of the Codes the provisions of any title, chapter, or article must prevail as to all matters arising out of the subject-matter of such title, chapter, or article. Pol. Code, §§ 4481, 4482, 4483. The second case above cited is even more in point than the first case. In this case (Weimmer v. Sutherland, supra) a justice court, assuming to act under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, had vacated and set aside a judgment, and the question presented for decision was whether the justice court derived any authority from section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or was confined in vacating judgments to the authority conferred by section 859 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this case, as in the case at bar, there was invoked, on behalf of the jurisdiction of the justice court, the provision of section 925 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "justices' courts being courts of peculiar and limited jurisdiction, only those provisions of this Code which are in their nature applicable to the organization, powers, and course of proceedings in justices' courts, or which have been made applicable by special provisions in this title, are applicable to justices' courts and the proceedings therein." The court said: "The language of section 925 is certainly of difficult construction, and cases might well arise where it would be extremely doubtful whether or not certain acts of a justices' court were justified by its provisions. It will be observed, however, that the section expressly preserves the notion of the 'peculiar and limited jurisdiction' of these courts, and, moreover, that its general character is negative rather than positive. The grant is somewhat in the shape of a parenthesis in a clause of limitation. If, therefore, that part of the Code which expressly deals with proceedings in justices' courts prescribes the powers of those courts in relation to a general subject, about which the powers of courts of record are expressly prescribed in another part, then we think that the powers of the justices' courts with respect to that subject are to be looked for in the former and not in the latter provision. Now, the power in question here—i. e., the power to relieve from a judgment taken through surprise, excusable neglect, etc.—is expressly given to courts of record by section 473, and is expressly given to justices' courts by section 859. Both sections relate to the same general subject. But while section 473 gives this power, in general terms and in all cases, within six months in some instances, and in one year in others, after judgment, section 859 confines the power in justices' courts to cases of a 'judgment by default,' and limits the time to ten days after the entry of the judgment. We think, therefore, that the latter section is determinative of the question here involved, and not section 473." A comparison of sections 859 and 473, construed in the case just cited, with sections 890 and 581, involved in the case at bar, demonstrates the controlling effect of the above cited case upon this case. Section 859 is in the title dealing with proceedings in justices' courts and provides for the vacating by justices' courts of judgments entered in said courts. Section 473 is in that part of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with proceedings in superior courts, and provides in general terms for the vacating of judgments under certain conditions. Section 890, like section 859, is in the title dealing with proceedings in justices' courts, and provides for the dismissal of actions in said courts. Section 581, like section 473, is in that part of the Code of Civil Procedure dealing with proceedings in the superior courts, and provides in general terms for the dismissal of actions under certain conditions. The suggestion of petitioner that the dismissals provided for by section 890 are without "prejudice to a new action," and that, therefore, the subject-matter of section 890 is different from the subject-matter of section 581, is without force. Dismissals under section 581 are also without prejudice to a new action, except when the dismissal is in effect a retraxit. Davenport v. Turpin, 43 Cal. 597; Parks v. Dunlap, 86 Cal. 189, 25 Pac. 916; Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 Pac. 121; Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 48 Pac. 800; Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Portener, 139 Cal. 90, 72 Pac. 716. For the reasons above set forth, we think the court has jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the action in question, although the summons, issued out of the justice court, was not served and return made thereon within three years after the commencement of the action.

The temporary restraining order heretofore made by this court is vacated and discharged, and the petition for a writ of prohibition is denied.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 207

KEEGIN v. JOYCE. (Civ. 385.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 9, 1908.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 180*)—DEMURRER RAISING DEFENSE—RIGHT TO DEMUR.

Where nothing appears on the face of the complaint indicating a bar by limitation, a demurrer thereto upon that ground will not lie.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 671; Dec. Dig. § 180.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by W. C. Keegin, surviving partner, against Thomas F. Joyce. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bernard Potter, for appellant. J. W. McKinley, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendant upon the judgment roll. The complaint averred employment of plaintiff by defendant to prosecute an appeal before the Commissioner of the Land Office, and, if necessary, before the Secretary of the Interior, through which to establish defendant's ownership in certain mining property; that by the terms of such employment plaintiff was to accept, if unsuccessful, $250, but, if finally successful, defendant would pay, in addition, the reasonable value of such services. It is alleged that by a final decision of the Secretary of the Interior, rendered upon a petition for review, defendant's ownership was established; that $2,000 was the reasonable value of such service, and the same remains unpaid. Defendant by his answer admits the employment and the rendition of the services, but claims that when the original decision of the Secretary of the Interior was rendered against defendant it was agreed that the original employment was at an end; that the proceedings upon review were inaugurated and prosecuted under a new agreement, by which plaintiff was to receive an interest in the mining property to the extent of the value of a reasonable fee.

The court found against defendant and appellant upon the issue as to this new agreement, and found the agreement to have been as plaintiff alleges. The objections to the complaint raised by defendant were untenable. A cause of action was stated, and nothing appeared upon the face of the pleading indicating the bar of the statute, and a demurrer upon that ground would not, therefore, lie. Kraner v. Halsey, 82 Cal. 209, 22 Pac. 1137. The court, in addition, found against appellant upon the issue raised by the plea of the statute. The judgment is supported by the findings. The findings, as a whole, are conclusive as to appellant's claim that $250 was to constitute the full consideration for the services, and under all of the findings the issue as to the tender of the deed was of no consequence and no special finding in relation thereto was required.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 209

STEWART v. TORRANCE, Judge. (Civ. 578.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 12, 1908.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 53*) — COMPELLING SETTLEMENT—JURISDICTION.

A divorce suit being an equity suit, and the Supreme Court having, under Const. art. 6, § 4, exclusive appellate jurisdiction in equity, the appellate court will not compel settlement by the trial court of a bill of exceptions refused as not presented in time, though an appeal to the appellate court is under consideration, as the appeal, if taken, will have to be transferred to the Supreme Court, and a review of the question whether the bill was presented in time would be an invasion of the province of the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 80; Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Petition by Gertrude E. Stewart for mandamus to E. S. Torrance, Judge of the Superior Court in and for the County of San Diego. Denied.

L. E. Dadmun, for petitioner. Wadham & Pritchard, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Mandamus to compel settlement of a bill of exceptions. Petitioner filed an action for a divorce in the superior court for San Diego county, against Elmore Stewart, who answered the complaint, and filed a cross-complaint for divorce against petitioner. Respondent, as judge of said court, tried the cause, and on June 4, 1908, rendered judgment in favor of the defendant on his cross-complaint. Notice of decision was served June 5, 1908, and on June 13, 1908, petitioner gave notice of her intention to move for a new trial. An order extending time was made by respondent at the request of petitioner's attorney on June 15, 1908, where it was recited that good cause had been shown to the court why time should be granted to plaintiff and cross-defendant, in which to file her bill of exceptions in the above-entitled action, in support of her appeal to the District Court of Appeal of the state of California, Second district, and ordered "that the time * * * in which to prepare, serve, and file her proposed bill of exceptions in the above-entitled action, in support of her appeal to the District Court of Appeal of the state of California, Second district, be and the same is hereby extended up to and including the 20th day of July, 1908," etc. On the date last mentioned petitioner served on attorneys for defendant, and delivered to the clerk of the court for respondent a copy of her proposed bill of exceptions. On July 30, 1908, defendant served upon petitioner's attorney his objections and amendments to the proposed bill, and within 10 days thereafter the proposed bill, objections, and amendments were left with respondent, as judge of said court, and by said judge regularly set for hearing on September 15, 1908. At the hearing defendant objected to the settlement of said bill, on the ground that it had not been prepared, served, or filed within the time allowed by law, which objection was sustained by respondent, who refused to settle the bill for that reason. On petition to this court an alternative writ was issued, and a return thereto made to this court. The matter was presented orally by attorneys for the respective parties, and heard upon its merits, and now only awaits the filing of briefs to be regularly submitted. We are of opinion, upon an examination of the record, that the writ was inadvertently issued, and that this court is without jurisdiction to determine the matters presented by the application.

By the provisions of section 4, art. 6, of the Constitution, which defines the powers of the Supreme and Appellate courts, the Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity, except such as arise in justices' courts. This includes actions for divorce, as they are proceedings in equity. Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 7 Pac. 456, 635, 8 Pac. 709; Harron v. Harron, 123 Cal. 508, 56 Pac. 334. The petition and the order extending time, upon which petitioner bases her right to have her bill of exceptions settled, both recite that an appeal to this court was under consideration. While the power of transfer given to this court in relation to cases which should have been appealed to the Supreme Court authorizes us to certify the record in a divorce case to the Supreme Court, no other authority is conferred upon this court to do anything else in connection with such a case. The writ of mandamus has two uses; one to acquire original jurisdiction, and the other as an aid in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137-180, 2 L. Ed. 60; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353. Its use as here invoked is of the latter class, and the power of the appellate court is asked to be exercised for the purpose of compelling the settlement of a bill of exceptions, on the ground that it may ultimately be used as a basis for presenting the merits of a case upon an appeal to the Supreme Court. Douglas v. Southern Pac. Co., 151 Cal. 242, 246, 90 Pac. 538. To grant the petition, or to assume to determine the rights of the parties before the court, would be, in effect, to review the action of the trial judge for the purpose of determining whether or not he correctly construed the order extending time to prepare and serve the bill. The preparation of the record and the settlement of bills of exception are primarily for the trial court, and subject to review only by the court to which an appeal lies. The objection that the bill was not presented in time often depends upon a question of fact, in which event the finding of the trial court, like other findings of fact, presents a question for review on the appeal, and not for collateral consideration. Moultrie v. Tarpio, 147 Cal. 376, 81 Pac. 1112; Dernham v. Bagley, 151 Cal. 216, 90 Pac. 543. For this court to issue a writ having for its object the compulsory making up of a record by a superior judge on an appeal to the Supreme Court would be to review a matter not within our jurisdiction, and to invade the province of the Supreme Court.

For this reason it is ordered that the alternative writ be dismissed, and the petition denied.

(154 Cal. 473)

In re RICHARDS' ESTATE.GRANGER v. RICHARDS et al. (Sac. 1,592.)
(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 4, 1908.)1. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—MOTIONS—NOTICE—SERVICE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 1010, 1013, 1015, requiring a party intending to move for a new trial to serve within 10 days after notice of the decision a notice of his intention, and providing for service of notice on parties or their attorneys, etc., to set the time in motion within which a party must serve and file notice of intention to move for a new trial, the adverse party must serve on the attorney for such party a written notice of the decision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 277, 278; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—NOTICE—NOTICE OF DECISION—WAIVER.

The statutory requirement of written notice of decision to fix the time within which a notice of intention to move for a new trial must be served may be waived, and such waiver may appear from some act of the party in open court or in the proceedings in the case, as disclosed by the records or by the minutes of the court, when his conduct is inconsistent with any theory other than that he had formal notice of the decision.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 279; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—NOTICE—NOTICE OF DECISION—WAIVER.

The rule that the statutory requirement of written notice of decision, essential to fix the time within which a notice of intention to move for a new trial must be served may be waived, does not apply where a written notice has in fact been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 279; Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—NOTICE—NOTICE OF DECISION—WAIVER.

Application by a party for a stay of execution, made on the day but subsequent to the service of written notice of the decision on his attorney, does not amount to a waiver of such notice, so as to affect the time within which notice of his intention to move for a new trial must be served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

5. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—NOTICE—NOTICE OF DECISION—WAIVER.

Application by a party for a stay of execution, made on the day but subsequent to the service of written notice of the decision on his attorney, does not operate as a taking of notice of the decision, and does not affect the time within which notice of his intention to move for a new trial must be served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

6. NEW TRIAL (§ 123*)—NOTICE—NOTICE OF DECISION—WAIVER.

If service of notice of the decision was made after the defeated party had applied for a stay of execution, such service would operate as a waiver of the waiver which might otherwise have been claimed by reason of the application for the stay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 123.*]

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 138*)—SALES BY EXECUTORS—CONFIRMATION—NECESSITY.

Executors in a will, providing for the payment of enumerated legacies, devising the residue to persons named, and empowering the executors, after the expiration of a fixed time, to sell any portion of the real estate at public auction without any order of court or without being required to account to any court, must, on making a sale, report the sale to the court and have the same confirmed, to pass the legal title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 575; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

8. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 51*)—CHARACTER OF POSSESSION.

Executors empowered to sell real estate sold certain real property in May, 1891, and executed a deed to the purchaser. In 1895, the purchaser conveyed the premises to a third person, who two days thereafter commenced an action to quiet her title thereto against the executors and the residuary legatee, to which they answered, denying her title. Subsequently and pending the action, the third person reconveyed the premises to the purchaser, who had full knowledge of the action. Held, that the purchaser did not establish adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 51.*]

9. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 138*)—SALES BY EXECUTORS—CONFIRMATION—PROCEEDINGS.

A residuary legatee sought by petition to have the executors account for the rents and profits of real estate which they had sold to a third person. The executors answered, and the court, after settling their account, entered a judgment by which their deeds conveying the real estate were adjudged valid. Held, that the judgment was not a confirmation of the sale; the law providing a method for the return of sales of real estate and the confirmation thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

10. ESTOPPEL (§ 27*)—DEED BY EXECUTORS—AFTER-ACQUIRED TITLE.

Testator devised his residuary estate to his brothers, A. and B., and appointed B. and a son of A. and another executors, and empowered them to sell any portion of the real estate at public auction. The executors sold real property and executed a deed to the purchaser which purported to convey only the title of the testator. The purchaser had succeeded by conveyance from B. to his title as residuary legatee, and the son of A. had succeeded to the interest of A. Held, that the son of A. was not estopped from asserting the invalidity of the conveyance because of the failure of the executors to report the sale to the court and obtain a confirmation thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

11. WILLS (§ 856*)—CONSTRUCTION—DEATH OF LEGATEE.

A will provided for the payment of enumerated legacies, and "after the payment of all legacies herein enumerated," gave the residue of the estate to testator's brothers, W. and F., equally, and provided that, in the event of the death of "any one or more of the legatees herein named," before receiving their bequests, the share of such deceased legatee or legatees should be paid to W. Held, that the provision relating to the death of a legatee did not apply to the residuary legatees, W. and F., and, on the death of F. before distribution, his residuary share did not pass to W.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 856.*]

12. WILLS (§ 472*)—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATES CREATED.

Where the words of a will in the first instance indicate an intent to make a clear gift, such gift is not to be cut down by any subsequent provisions which are of indefinite or doubtful expression.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 990; Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

13. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 302*)—PRESENTING QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL—STATEMENT OF GROUNDS.

A specification of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding, which states that there is no evidence that a sale by executors had not been confirmed does not challenge the finding that confirmation of the sale was refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1752; Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

14. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 149*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

A purchase by one of three executors empowered to sell real estate is voidable only at the instance of those interested in the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 604; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

15. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 149*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

Where executors empowered to sell real estate sold certain real property, and a coexecutor became the purchaser, and no return of the sale was made to the court, the executors might at any time sue to rescind the sale for fraud of the coexecutor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 602-605; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

16. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 144*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

Where executors empowered to sell real estate sold certain real property to a coexecutor, those interested in the estate, on a return of the sale, could elect to have the sale confirmed or rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 580; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

17. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 148*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

Where a sale by executors to a coexecutor was refused confirmation, the executors were required to return the purchase price paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 601; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

18. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 149*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

Where executors empowered to sell real estate sold certain real property to a coexecutor, and the sale was confirmed without the knowledge of those interested in the estate that the coexecutor was the purchaser, those interested might sue to rescind the sale or to have it declared that the coexecutor held title in trust for the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 602-605; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

19. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 149*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

Where an action was brought to rescind a sale by executors to a coexecutor or to have a trust declared after the sale had been confirmed, the estate would not be entitled to possession of the property without returning or offering to return to the coexecutor the purchase money after an accounting between them in which the purchase price would enter as a factor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

20. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 149*)
—SALES—PURCHASE BY COEXECUTOR—VALIDITY.

In an action by a purchaser from executors for the possession of real estate, brought after the court had refused to confirm the sale, the executor and residuary legatee assailing the sale is not entitled to the possession without restoring the purchase price paid, after an accounting between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; F. T. Nilon, Judge.

Action by Samuel Granger against W. G. Richards and others, executors of Philip Richards, deceased. From a judgment for defendant W. G. Richards, as surviving executor and residuary legatee, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Thos. S. Ford, for appellant. C. W. Kitts, J. M. Walling and Fred Searls, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title in which judgment went for the defendant W. G. Richards as surviving executor and residuary legatee. The plaintiff appeals therefrom and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On the hearing here the respondent moved to dismiss the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial on the ground that the notice of intention to move therefor was not served or filed within the time allowed by law or any order of the superior court. The case was tried in the superior court of Nevada county; the then attorney for the plaintiff being a resident of and having his office in Berkeley, Alameda county. The showing upon which the motion to dismiss is based is that the findings of the court were signed and filed upon April 18, 1906, and the judgment filed and entered on July 23d of that year. On July 25, 1906, the attorneys for defendant mailed to the attorney for plaintiff at his residence in Berkeley a copy of the judgment which contained a statement of the filing of the findings and on the same day, July 25, 1906, that the attorneys for defendant mailed a copy of the judgment and notice to the attorney for plaintiff, the plaintiff, who resided in Nevada county, personally applied to the court there for an order staying the issuance of execution for 20 days, which was granted. On August 8th plaintiff personally applied to the court and was granted an order allowing 20 days' additional time within which to serve and file his notice of intention to move for a new trial, and on August 13th a further extension of 10 days for the same purpose was granted to plaintiff on his personal application to the court therefor. On August 29, 1906, a local attorney having been engaged by plaintiff (his former attorney residing in Berkeley having withdrawn from the case), notice of intention to move for a new trial was served that day on the attorneys for defendant and filed, and further proceedings relative to the new trial were conducted under said notice of intention. The position of respondent on this motion to dismiss is that the appellant, by voluntarily appearing and securing in person the order for a stay of execution on July 25, 1906, thereby took notice of the filing of the findings and the decision of the court, and that his time within which to serve and file said notice of intention to move for a new trial commenced to run then, and on the theory that he had but 10 days to file and serve his notice of intention his time to do so expired on August 4, 1906, several days before he obtained the order of August 8th extending his time to serve and file his notice of intention, and hence the latter order was void, the court having no jurisdiction to make it after the expiration of the statutory time within which the appellant could serve and file such notice.

Upon the record before us there is no merit in this contention. In order to set the time in motion within which the appellant must serve and file his notice of intention to move for a new trial, it was necessary for the respondent to serve upon the attorney for the appellant a written notice of the decision. Sections 659, 1010, Code Civ. Proc.; Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 356, 359, 61 Pac. 1123; Code Civ. Proc. § 1015. This latter section requires that, when a party has an attorney in an action, "the service of papers when required must be made upon the attorney instead of the party. * * *" Conformable to these provisions of law the attorneys for respondent mailed to the attorney for appellant what was in effect and intended to be a notice of decision. The service of this notice was complete when the deposit was made in the post office (Code Civ. Proc. § 1013), and, as the distance from Nevada City to Berkeley is conceded to be 150 miles, the attorney for appellant was, under the terms of the section last quoted, entitled to 16 days after the day of deposit, or until the 8th day of August, 1906, to serve and file his notice of intention. It is true that, while the statute requires written notice of decision to be served upon the attorney for the adverse party, it may be waived. Such waiver may appear, as declared in Mallory v. See, supra, from some act or acquiescence of the party in open court or in the proceedings in the case as disclosed by the records, or files of the case, or the minutes of the court, when the conduct of the party in the case, as appears from such records or minutes, is inconsistent with any theory other than that he had formal notice of the decision. Under such circumstances, he is deemed to have waived written notice. But this rule has no application to the matter at bar. It only applies when a written notice has not been given. It does not apply when written notice has in fact been given, because there is then nothing to waive.

Now, as far as is disclosed by the record before us, the attorney for appellant was on July 25, 1906, served with written notice of the decision, and on the same day appellant personally applied for and obtained the order for a stay of execution. This application by appellant, personally, did not amount to a waiver, or "to taking of notice" of the decision, as it is characterized by respondent, so as to affect the time within which notice of intention to move for a new trial must be served and filed. It did not amount to a waiver of notice, because there was nothing to waive, as at that time, as far as the record discloses anything to the contrary, the appellant had written notice of the decision by the service of it on his attorney. Neither did his application for a stay operate as a "taking of notice" of the decision, because he had that already, by the service of it on his attorney. Nor really would it be of any consequence, as far as the matter is presented here, whether the application for a stay was made before or after the service of the notice of decision. If before, and thereafter written notice of the decision was actually served as the statute requires, such service would operate as a waiver itself of the waiver which the respondent might otherwise claim was effected by the application for a stay made prior thereto. If after, it certainly could not operate to curtail the time which service of notice gave. By such service of written notice of decision the right of appellant to give notice of intention to move for a new trial, within the time which the law allowed by reason of the residence of his attorney in a different place from where the attorneys for respondents resided, was fixed, and his mere application for a stay of execution, made either before or after such service, and which had no relation whatever to the matter of moving for a new trial, could not affect the time within which he might serve and file his notice of intention to do so.

We dispose of this objection of the respondent to the consideration of the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial as being entirely untenable upon the record, without discussing the proposition whether an application for a stay of execution would in any case itself constitute a waiver of written notice of decision, or the further proposition whether such application by the appellant personally would constitute a waiver in face of the statutory requirement that the notice of decision must be served on the attorney for appellant, and not upon the appellant himself, or whether, as the statute prescribes that service shall be made upon the attorney, any other person save the attorney could waive the right to have it made as the statute requires. It is unnecessary to consider these propositions, because here written notice of decision was actually given the attorney for appellant, and within the time allowed by law, and the additional time given by orders of the court, the notice of intention to move for a new trial was regularly served and filed. Some other points are made in support of the motion to dismiss, but, as there is clearly nothing in them, we neither mention nor discuss them.

Now as to the appeal on its merits:

Philip Richards died in the year 1887 in Nevada county leaving a will, in which, after providing for the payment of certain annu-merated legacies, he devised the residue of his estate to his two brothers William S. Richards and Francis Richards, or, as the latter is more commonly designated in the record, Francis S. Richards. As his executors he appointed his nephew, William G. Richards, son of said William S. Richards, said Francis Richards, and James Bennallack, and empowered them, after the expiration of two years from his death, to sell any portion of his real property at public auction "without any order of court whatever or being required to account to any court," and upon a sale thereof provided that all legacies which then remained unpaid should be paid at once in full. The clauses of his will relative to the payment of legacies and the disposition of the residue of his estate declared that: "After the payment of all legacies herein enumerated I give and bequeath all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate of whatever kind and character to my brothers William S. Richards and Francis Richards, share and share alike. In the event of the death of any one or more of the legatees herein named, before they or either of them shall have received their bequests, the share of such deceased legatee or legatees shall be paid to my brother William S. Richards." On May 11, 1891, under the power conferred by the will, the executors sold at public auction to plaintiff, as the ostensible purchaser thereof, a lot in Nevada City belonging to the estate, and on the same day made him a deed purporting to convey to him as executors, under the power conferred by the will, the title of the estate to said property. The land was sold for $3,365, an amount considerably in excess of the amount at which it had been appraised shortly before the sale, and the plaintiff was immediately placed in possession of the property by the executors, and he and his successors have remained in possession ever since. The full amount of the purchase price was paid to the executors by the plaintiff on the day of the sale and the execution of the deed, and was shortly thereafter used and paid out by said executors for the use and benefit of the estate of Philip Richards, deceased, in the payment of legacies and the expenses of administration, and accounted for by them and their accounts approved by the court. The executors, deeming that they had sufficient authority under the will to convey title to the property without any confirmation of the sale by the court, made no return thereof or sought confirmation thereof until many years later, and as a result litigation arose between the plaintiff and his successor in interest, and the executors of the estate of Richards, respecting the title to the property; the matter having been here for consideration in the cases of Bennallack v. Richards, 116 Cal. 406, 48 Pac. 622; Bennallauck v. Richards, 125 Cal. 423, 58 Pac. 65, and Granger v. Richards, 126 Cal. 635, 59 Pac. 118.

This present action was brought by plaintiff in 1897 against the executors and the residuary legatees under the will to quiet his title to the property. In his complaint the plaintiff alleged generally ownership of the property by him, and also set up the facts surrounding the sale to him by the executors, payment of the purchase price, and delivery of possession of the property to him, and alleged facts upon which he based a claim of title to the property by adverse possession. He also alleged proceedings in the matter of the estate of Richards under which he claimed that a certain order of court made on February 19, 1895, in effect amounted to a confirmation by the court of the sale of May 11, 1891. He set up further an estoppel by deed of the executors, and an estoppel in pais; the latter based on the alleged fact that he had made large improvements and repairs on the property and expended money thereon with the knowledge and acquiescence of the executors and without any objections on their part. The executor James Bennallack made no appearance in the case, and while it was pending died.

The executor Francis S. Richards answered admitting that plaintiff was the owner of an undivided one-half of the property in question by virtue of a conveyance thereof made by said executor in his individual capacity as residuary legatee under the will to one-half of the estate of the said Philip Richards, deceased. He further set up that the conveyance of executors to plaintiff made on May 11, 1891, was made in good faith and for full value, that the money derived as the purchase price had been used by the executors to pay legacies enumerated in the will, and that as a residuary legatee he elected to treat the deed made by the executors to plaintiff as good and valid and declined to rescind said sale or deed or to return to plaintiff any part of the purchase price. This executor, Francis S. Richards, also died pending the trial of the cause. The other executor, William G. Richards, who in behalf of the estate has all along contested the claim of plaintiff, filed an answer and cross-complaint, and in the former denied all the allegations upon which plaintiff based his claim of ownership. He then averred: That at the time the property was offered for sale by the executors it was the property of the estate of Philip Richards, deceased; that James Bennallack, one of the executors, desiring to purchase said property, caused the plaintiff to attend said sale and bid in said property for him, which he did; that no return of the sale of the property by the executors was ever made, nor was said sale ever confirmed by any court; that within 10 days after the conveyance by the executors to plaintiff plaintiff conveyed said property to said James Bennallack, who thereafter conveyed it to his wife, Mary A. Bennallack, who on May 18, 1895, brought an action in the superior court of Nevada county against these same defendants to quiet her title to said premises, which action is now pending and undetermined; and that about two months prior to the bringing of the present action by plaintiff said Mary A. Bennallack conveyed said property to him. It is then alleged that plaintiff had received large sums of money over and above the expenses of said property, and that plaintiff and his grantees had ever since said sale by the executors received from the income and proceeds of said property a net amount far exceeding what was paid as the purchase price thereof. The prayer of the cross-complaint was that it be decreed that plaintiff has no title to the property, and that it be adjudged to be the property of the estate of Philip Richards, deceased. The answer of the plaintiff to the cross-complaint denied any agreement between himself and James Bennallack to purchase the property for the latter, alleged that the said sale was in fact made to plaintiff, that the purchase money was distributed and paid out in said estate by the executors for the benefit of the persons entitled to the estate, that the executors had never paid or offered to pay back to the plaintiff the money which he had paid as the purchase price of said property, and denied that plaintiff or his grantees had received from the income or proceeds of said property a net amount equal to or in excess of what he paid as the purchase price thereof. Upon the trial the court found: That plaintiff was not the owner of any portion of the lot in question; that W. G. Richards, as the surviving executor of the estate of Philip Richards, deceased, was entitled to the possession of the premises; and that said W. G. Richards, as the successor in interest of his father, W. S. Richards, residuary legatee of said Philip Richards, deceased, was entitled to any residue thereof remaining after closing said estate. The court further specifically found that plaintiff did not purchase or pay for said property in his own behalf, but in making such purchase and payment was acting as agent of James Bennallack, one of the executors of the estate, and that the purchase price was received and paid over by the executors for the benefit of the estate and accounted for in the accounts approved by the court. There are other findings made by the court which, to avoid repetition, will be referred to in considering the points made relative to them.

The appellant attacks the findings made in so far as they are against his claim of title, and they all practically bear against it in that regard. The appellant does not insist that he acquired any legal title to the lot under the sale itself made by the executors, and, of course, he could not, because it was decided in Bennallack v. Richards, 116 Cal. 406, 48 Pac. 622, that, while the will of Philip Richards empowered the executors to sell, still it was necessary to have the sale reported and confirmed by the court in order to convey the legal title. His claim is that the evidence established title in him by adverse possession, that aside from this the sale was in effect confirmed by the court by the order of February 19, 1895, and, further, that his claim of estoppel—both by deed and in pais—was supported by the evidence, and the court should have so found. The court found against him on all these matters, and we think the evidence justified the findings.

The claim of adverse possession was not sustained, because it appeared that subsequent to the conveyance to plaintiff by the executors and on February 9, 1895, he conveyed the property to Mrs. Bennallack, wife of James Bennallack. She, two days thereafter, and much less than five years after the deed to plaintiff from the executors, commenced an action against these identical defendants as executors and residuary legatees, to quiet her title to this same property, to which they answered denying her title, and that action is still pending and undetermined. Mrs. Bennallack and her husband, James Bennallack, reconveyed the property to plaintiff on May 8, 1897; but when plaintiff took such reconveyance the evidence shows, and the court so found, that he did so with full knowledge and notice of the pendency of the action to quiet title brought by Mrs. Bennallack. Under these circumstances, plaintiff could not sustain his claim of adverse possession in himself and his grantor for the requisite period, because, while he and she might otherwise have been in possession for the requisite time, they were not in the peaceable and undisputed possession, as the title and right of possession were being then actually litigated in court.

Neither is there any merit in the claim that by virtue of certain proceedings in the estate of Richards, eventuating in the order of February 19, 1895, alleged in the complaint, the court should have found that the sale to plaintiff was in that proceeding confirmed, or at least the judgment of the court therein operated as a bar against any claim of the executors that the sale by them was not valid so as to convey the legal title. The proceeding referred to was one relating to the settlement of an account in the estate of Philip Richards, wherein W. S. Richards, one of the residuary legatees, sought by petition filed September 5, 1894, to have the executors account for the rents and profits of the property in question. An order of court was made requiring them to do so, which was served personally on two of the executors, James Bennallack and F. S. Richards. The executors appeared and answered the petition, and the court, after settling their account, entered a judgment as follows: "That each of said deeds of real estate as executed and delivered by said executors * * * be and they are hereby adjudged and decreed to have been absolute and valid on the date when so executed and delivered without confirmation of court." It is this quoted judgment which the appellant claims was in effect a confirmation of the sale, or at least operated as a bar against any question as to the validity of the deed; but we do not think it had either effect. The proceeding in which this purported judgment was entered was the settlement of an account, and the court had no jurisdiction to determine a matter which was not involved in the settlement. The law provides a particular method for the return of sales of real estate, and the confirmation thereof, and provides the character of notice which shall be given in order to confer jurisdiction on the court in the proceeding to confirm. The proceeding in question here did not pretend to relate to a confirmation of sale, and was not noticed as provided by law so as to confer jurisdiction on the court to confirm. In fact, the court did not assume to confirm the sale but to declare the deeds valid without confirmation, a matter which is not committed to the jurisdiction of the court sitting in probate in the settlement of an account.

As far as the estoppels asserted by plaintiff are concerned—by deed and in pais—they require no particular consideration. The special point as to the deed of May 11, 1891, by the executors, is that it purported to convey to plaintiff title in fee simple absolute, without qualification or condition, and that both the Richards as residuary legatees are estopped to assert any claim to the property against plaintiff, and he reasons out an estoppel—particularly against W. G. Richards, as successor to his father, W. S. Richards, one of the residuary legatees, on the following consideration: Plaintiff had succeeded by conveyance from Francis S. Richards, one of the executors, to whatever title he had as residuary legatee of an undivided one-half of the property, and his claim is, as to the other executor, W. G. Richards, who subsequently succeeded to the interest of his father, W. S. Richards, the only other residuary legatee, that such after-acquired title inured to the benefit of plaintiff under the deed from said W. G. Richards as executor which was absolute in form. The answer to this claim, however, is that the deed of the executors as found by the court was not absolute in form, but purported to convey only the title which the estate of Philip Richards had in the property and no more. It is unnecessary to say anything further on this point. As to the alleged estoppel in pais by reason of improvements, maintenance, and repair of the premises by plaintiff with the knowledge and acquiescence of the executors and residuary legatees, and without objection on the part of any of them, it is sufficient to say that the court found that there was no evidence presented as to the amount of such expenditures, and no proof made of any of the other elements of estoppel pleaded, and this appears to be true. This disposes of the points made by plaintiff under his attack on the findings, as far as they are against his asserted title, based upon alleged possession, confirmation of sale, or estoppel. The evidence warranted the court in finding against him on all these matters.

But while this is true, we are satisfied that, upon the other findings as made, the judgment of the court that W. G. Richards, as surviving executor of the estate of Philip Richards, is entitled to the possession of the property in dispute, and further that said W. G. Richards, as the successor in interest of said W. S. Richards, residuary legatee of Philip Richards, deceased, is entitled to any residue thereof remaining after closing said estate, were wrong. Addressing ourselves first to the matter of the judgment as to the right of W. G. Richards, as successor to W. S. Richards, one of the residuary legatees: While the question of who would be entitled to take as residuary legatee under the will might well have been left to be determined on distribution in the matter of the estate of Philip Richards, and was not necessarily involved in the case at bar, it stands as a determined matter under the judgment appealed from, and it is necessary to review the accuracy of the conclusion of the court on the subject. The conclusion of the court as made was evidently based on the construction it placed on the clauses of the will as first hereinabove quoted. The court construed those provisions of the will giving to W. S. Richards, one of the residuary legatees, all legacies which had not been paid before the death of any of said legatees to apply to the share of the estate given to Francis S. Richards, his co-residuary legatee, and that by the death of said Francis S. Richards prior to distribution his residuary interest vested in said W. S. Richards and passed to W. G. Richards, his successor in interest, to the residuary estate; but we think the construction so given was incorrect. The testator had provided in his will for the payment of certain enumerated legacies, and it was as to such legacies that he provided, in the event of the death of any legatees, that such legacies should go to W. S. Richards. He did not speak of the brothers as "legatees" of the residue of his estate. In effect, though not so designated, they were under the provisions of the will to be residuary legatees, or residuary devisees, depending upon the character of the residuum of the estate when distribution of it was to be made—whether personal or real property. But the testator did not designate them as either legatees or devisees, but bequeathed, "after payment of all legacies herein enumerated," the residue of the estate to them by name. He did, however, speak about legacies "herein enumerated," and "legatees herein named," and provided, in the "event of the death of the legatees," that the share of such "legatees" should be "paid to his brother W. S. Richards." This mention of "legacies enumerated" and "legatees herein named" had reference to legacies as such, payment of which he had specially provided for, and which payments would be made during the administration of the estate, and had no reference to the residue of the estate which could only be received by the residuary legatees or devisees on distribution. The purpose of the testator was doubtless to provide that, in the event of the death of a legatee entitled to any of the legacies enumerated, his legacy, instead of going to the heirs of the legatee, should go to the brother of the testator, W. S. Richards. This intention is evidenced also by the use of the word "payment" and "paid," in this connection; words which are quite apt when used concerning legacies which are generally of money, but would be quite inapt when applied to the disposition of the residue of an estate which might consist of both real and personal property of which the legatee or devisee could only obtain possession by "distribution." Had the testator intended the provisions of his will relative to the death of legatees to apply to the residuary legatees, he would have used more characteristic words than "payment" or "paid," which apply strictly to monetary transactions as provisions for legacies and their payment generally are. While we are satisfied that this is the proper conclusion, still, if the matter were open to construction by reason of the language used in the provisions of the will, under familiar rules this would be the construction that must be given to it. By the first-quoted provision of the will both brothers are undoubtedly made residuary legatees or devisees of the residue of the estate without limitation or qualification, and by the subsequent section it is at least rendered doubtful whether it applies to all legacies special or residuary, or only to the specially enumerated legacies. Under this condition, it is a well-established rule of construction of wills that, when the words of a will in the first instance indicate an intent to make a clear gift, such gift is not to be cut down by any subsequent provisions which are of indefinite or doubtful expression. Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 30 (2d Ed.) p. 687. It follows therefore that, as F. S. Richards was a legatee or devisee of one-half of the residue of said estate of Philip Richards, and his bequest unaffected by the provision as to deceased legatees, the plaintiff, as his successor in interest, would, instead of W. S. Richards, be entitled to one-half of the property upon distribution of the estate.

Now, upon the proposition that the judgment declaring the surviving executor entitled to the possession of the property in question: This is based on one of two views taken by the court, either that from the finding that the purchase was made by Bennallack for himself as administrator, through the interposition of plaintiff, the contract of sale was absolutely void, or that as the sale was subject to confirmation, and confirmation had been refused, the legal title never passed from the estate and the executor was entitled to a judgment for possession of the property. The plaintiff attacks both the findings made as to these facts. He insists that the evidence is entirely insufficient, and in fact does not warrant the finding that Bennallack was the real purchaser at the sale, or that plaintiff purchased the property for the benefit of any one other than himself, and further insists that there was no evidence to support the finding that in the proceedings in the estate of Philip Richards the court had on June 19, 1900, refused confirmation of the sale; but appellant is in no position to attack this latter finding, because it is not embraced in his specifications of insufficiency as to the findings. His specification, which at all bears on the matter, is that there is no evidence that the sale had not been confirmed by the court. This could only apply to the finding that the order of February 19, 1895, made on the settlement of the account of that date, was not a confirmation, and not to the other finding that confirmation had been refused on June 19, 1900. A finding that there was no confirmation, and a finding that confirmation was refused, are entirely different, and the specification of appellant did not reach the latter. Hence the finding that confirmation was refused must stand as unchallenged.

As to the finding that James Bennallack, one of the executors, was in fact the purchaser at the sale of May 11, 1891, it is unnecessary to determine whether the evidence sustains it or not, because, assuming it to be sustained (which is only an assumption for present purposes), still we are satisfied that the judgment based upon either or both of these findings (and there are no others which could support it) cannot be sustained. If plaintiff was not the purchaser, he at least succeeded to whatever rights James Bennallack had by the conveyance from himself and wife to plaintiff on May 8, 1897. If Bennallack was in fact the purchaser at the sale of this property in question, the purchase by him was not void but voidable only at the instance of those interested in the estate. Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 20, 87 Am. Dec. 146; O'Connor v. Flynn, 57 Cal. 203; Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 341, 41 Pac. 458.

Without making any return of sale at all, the executors might, at any time during the many years which elapsed before confirmation of the sale was refused by the court, have brought an action to rescind such sale for fraud on the part of Bennallack. Or upon a return of sale, those interested in the estate, if they had knowledge of the facts, could elect to have it confirmed or rejected as they might deem it most advisable for the interests of the estate. Had confirmation been rejected, it would have been the plain duty of the executors to have returned the purchase price which had been paid. Had the sale been confirmed without knowledge on the part of those interested in the estate that Bennallack was himself the purchaser, they might have maintained an action to rescind the sale, or to have it declared that Bennallack held the title in trust for the benefit of those interested in the estate. But whether an action was brought to rescind the sale, or to have a trust declared after confirmation, the estate would not be entitled to recover possession of the property in which they had placed the purchaser after receiving from him the full purchase price thereof, without returning or offering to return to him the purchase money after an accounting between them in which the purchase price would enter as a factor. O'Connor v. Flynn, 57 Cal. 293; Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 341, 41 Pac. 458. This is in harmony with plain principles of equity, as it would be unjust to allow one to retain the proceeds of a sale which, as in this case, were devoted to the use and benefit of the estate as the will provided upon a sale of the property they should be, and likewise obtain possession of the property itself. This rule finds its application in the cases cited where confirmation had been made, the proceeds of the sale applied for the benefit of the estate, and actions subsequently brought to recover the property on the ground of fraud upon the part of the administrator in purchasing through the interposition of a third party the property of the estate for himself; but the principle can be no different where an action is brought to recover possession of property after refusal of the court to confirm its sale. In fact, that was the theory upon which the issues in the case at bar were framed. The cross-complaint of the surviving executor, in which he sought a decree establishing the title of the estate to the property and for its possession, alleged that plaintiff and his grantees had received from the income and proceeds of said property a net amount far exceeding what they paid therefor, which by answer the plaintiff specifically denied. In so pleading the surviving executor recognized the equitable rule that he was not entitled to recover possession of the property unless upon a restoration of the purchase price or an accounting which would involve it, but avoided the necessity of any tender of such purchase price by alleging the reception by plaintiff and his grantees of more than sufficient money from the income of the property to reimburse him. The court, however, made no finding upon this issue, but assumed that from the findings that the sale was in fact for the benefit of Bennallack, and confirmation refused, the plaintiff was not entitled to reimbursement of the purchase price which had been received by the estate or to any accounting relating to it. This case, even assuming that Bennallack was the purchaser and the sale was refused confirmation, practically calls for the application of the same rule as applies where a sale is, in fact, confirmed and an action subsequently brought to recover the property on account of fraudulent conduct on the part of the administrator in having the property sold to himself. In such cases, as we have seen, the rule is that reimbursement should be had of the purchase price before the property can be recovered by those setting up the fraud of the administrator to defeat his title. There is no good reason why the same rule should not be applied here, and all equitable considerations are in favor of its application. Here the property was sold under a belief on the part of the executors that their power of sale rendered confirmation unnecessary. Full value was paid for the property, and the purchaser given possession. No return of sale was made until, according to the findings, nearly nine years had elapsed, and during that period the purchaser had made large improvements upon the property at the same time that he had received the income thereof. The money which he had paid had been used for the benefit of the estate in paying the legacies which the will declared should be paid out of the proceeds from the sale of the real property of the estate, and some of it likewise used in paying the expenses of administration. It does not appear directly what the present condition of the estate is, but it may reasonably be inferred from the pleadings and evidence that a considerable amount due on the legacies remains unpaid as well as the expenses of administration. Be that as it may, however, the estate had the benefit of the money paid, and it would be inequitable to permit it to recover the property in question from the plaintiff without restoring to him the consideration he paid for it, or at least determining upon an accounting the equitable rights of the parties. The mere fact that confirmation of the sale was rejected should, under the circumstances, make no difference in the application of the general equitable rule which obtains when confirmation is actually made and the sale subsequently declared void for fraud on the part of the administrator in procuring it to be made for his own benefit. There restitution of the purchase price must be made, or, if necessary, an accounting between the parties had, and it should be made or had here.

Applying this rule, there should be little difficulty in settling this controversy. As the sale was refused confirmation, it is not of much importance whether the property was purchased by Bennallack or plaintiff. Neither had any title to it as against the estate of Philip Richards. At least, none is disclosed by the record here. The interest of plaintiff as successor to F. S. Richards, one of the residuary legatees, is properly a matter for consideration by the court in the probate proceedings in the estate of Philip Richards, on distribution. All that is necessary on the going down of this case is to try the cause on the theory adopted by the parties in their pleadings, namely, that plaintiff is entitled to have restored to him the purchase price which he paid the estate for the property. Of course, considering the long time that has elapsed since the attempted sale to plaintiff, and the fact that he has been in the possession of the property and in the receipt of the rents, issues, and profits during that time, it will be necessary that an accounting between the parties be had, in which necessarily the amount received by the estate as the purchase price of the property will be an element. This the court will have to do in order to adjust the rights of the parties, and it can be done upon the basis as suggested in a supplemental opinion in O'Connor v. Flynn, supra, as the basis for the accounting in that action, as far as it may apply to this one.

Several other points are made by appellant, both as to findings and alleged errors in the reception and rejection of testimony. The point that the finding of the court had the property in May, 1891, was producing a large income, and has ever since produced a large income which has exceeded the amount expended for improvements, repairs, maintenance, and taxes, is not sustained by the evidence. In fact there was no evidence as to income during the period referred to. As far as the claim of error in the rulings as to the admission of evidence is concerned, we do not find anything of a prejudicial nature.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.

154 Cal. 545

DE MERRITT v. WELDON et al.[†]
(S. F. 5,010.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 20, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Dec. 17, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 183*) — OFFICERS—SALARIES—POWER TO FIX—JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE.

Under General Municipal Corporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, pp. 895, 896, 910), §§ 851, 852, 855, 880, vesting the government of cities of the sixth class in a board of trustees and enumerated officers, including a marshal, and providing that the marshal shall have such salary as shall be fixed by ordinance, the power of the trustees to fix the salary of the marshal is absolute, free from judicial interference, subject only to the limitation that the salary cannot be fixed at so low a sum that no competent person can be found to perform the duties of the office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 73*)—LEGISLATIVE POWER—JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE.

Where the state confers on a board of public officers jurisdiction to exercise their discretion on matters within their power, the courts cannot review the question whether the discretion was properly exercised, especially in the absence of fraud or bad faith on the part of the body to whom the power is confided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 134-137; Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 70*)—LEGISLATIVE POWER—JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE.

The courts refuse to consider legislative motives, except as they may be disclosed on the face of enactments or are inferable from their operation and effect, considered in the light of those matters of which judicial notice may be taken.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 129; Dec. Dig. § 70.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 184*) — OFFICERS—POWER TO CREATE.

General Municipal Corporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 910), § 880, providing for the election of a marshal of a city of the sixth class who shall have control of the department of police, execute all process issued to him, collect taxes and licenses, etc., and empowering the trustees to appoint such police and other subordinate officers as may be required, empowers the trustees to create an office with power to exercise the duties of a police officer subject to the limitation that such officer cannot be required to collect license fees and taxes imposed by the act on the marshal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 183*)—OFFICERS—SALARIES—VALIDITY.

An ordinance of a city of the sixth class having a population of about 1,800 inhabitants, which fixes the salary of the marshal at $10 a month for the performance of his statutory duties, is not invalid on the ground that the salary fixed is so small that no competent person can be found to fill the office; the Municipal Corporation Act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 632) not requiring that the marshal shall devote all his time to the duties of his office, and there being nothing warranting the inference that a proper discharge of the duties of the office will materially interfere with the conduct by him of other business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Warren De Merritt against T. J. Weldon as president and another as clerk of the Board of Trustees of the Town of Ukiah City. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rehearing denied in bank; BEATTY, C. J., dissenting.

Arthur J. Thatcher, for appellants. J. W. Preston, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial in a proceeding brought by plaintiff to obtain a writ of mandate requiring defendants to issue and deliver to plain-

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

† For dissenting opinion, see 98 Pac. 671.

"tiff" a warrant for the sum of $60, alleged to be due him as marshal of Ukiah City for salary for the month of April, 1907. The judgment directed the issuance of such writ.

Ukiah City, the county seat of Mendocino county, is a municipal corporation of the sixth class, organized under the provisions of the general municipal corporation act, and having, according to the last federal census, something over 1,800 inhabitants. Sections 851 and 852 of that act (Gen. Laws 1906, p. 895) provide that the government of such a city or town "shall be vested in a board of trustees of five members; a clerk, who shall be ex officio assessor; a treasurer, a marshal, who shall be ex officio tax and license collector," etc., to be elected by the qualified electors at general municipal elections. By section 855, it is provided that "the clerk, treasurer, marshal and recorder shall severally receive, at stated times, a compensation to be fixed by ordinance by the board of trustees, which compensation shall not be increased or diminished after their election, or during their several terms of office." Section 880 prescribes the duties of the marshal substantially as follows: "He shall have direction and control of the department of police of the town, execute all process issued and directed to him, collect all taxes and licenses, have charge of the prison and prisoners and any chain-gang which may be established by the trustees, and perform such other services as this act and the ordinances of the board of trustees shall require." It further provides that he "shall receive such compensation as shall be fixed by ordinance." On January 20, 1896, the board of trustees enacted an ordinance providing that the city marshal shall perform all the duties required by law or any ordinance, "shall devote his entire time and attention to the duties of his office, shall see that the streets and sidewalks are kept free from obstructions, and that all the ordinances of said town are strictly enforced." It further provided: "He shall receive as salary for all services rendered by him as marshal and ex officio tax collector the sum of $60 per month, and for collecting licenses such fees as are now or may hereafter be allowed by law or prescribed by ordinance." Prior to February 15, 1904, plaintiff was elected and qualified as marshal, and has ever since been the marshal of said town, having been last elected at the general municipal election in April, 1906. On February 15, 1904, the board of trustees, acting under the power given by the act to appoint "such police and other subordinate officers as in their judgment may be deemed necessary and fix their compensation," enacted an ordinance creating a new office, the incumbent to be known as the "executive officer," and prescribing his duties to be to exercise the duties of a police officer, to have charge of all town property and work and repairs thereon, including streets, to collect all license fees and license taxes, to collect all sums due the town from patrons of the electric light system or other public utilities, to assist the night watchman and town marshal in the performance of their duties, to patrol the streets of the town each day from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m., and to perform such other duties as might be required by the trustees, and fixing the compensation of such officer at $75 per month. On the same day, the board enacted another ordinance relative to salary of the marshal, providing that "the salary of the marshal shall be fixed at and declared to be the sum of $10 per month, payable as other salaries are paid." Plaintiff was appointed by the board of trustees as such executive officer and continued to hold such office until March, 1907. He was re-elected as marshal in April, 1904, and again in 1906. From the time of his appointment as executive officer to March, 1907, he received the combined salaries of marshal and executive officer, viz., $85 per month; a single warrant "for salary of marshal and as executive officer" being issued to him each month. In March, 1907, the board of trustees revoked his appointment as executive officer. Plaintiff thereupon claimed that his salary as marshal is fixed by the ordinance of January 20, 1896, and that he is therefore entitled to receive the salary of $60 per month. The defendants refusing to comply with his demand that such a warrant be issued for his salary for the month of April, 1907, he instituted this proceeding to compel such issuance.

In view of the fact that the marshal can receive only such compensation as is fixed by the board of trustees, plaintiff's claim in this behalf is necessarily based on his contention that the subsequent ordinance of February 15, 1904, fixing the salary of such office at $10 per month, adopted prior to the election under which he now holds office, is absolutely void, leaving the former ordinance in full force. The absolute right of the board of trustees under the law to fix the compensation of the marshal at any sum it deems proper, free from supervision or review on the part of the courts, is admitted, subject to a single limitation. It is urged: That the effect of the provisions of the municipal corporation act is to require that the trustees shall fix a reasonable compensation; that, while it is for them to determine what is a reasonable compensation, they are at least precluded from fixing it at so small an amount that their action results in the destruction of the office of marshal, a co-ordinate department of the government of the town, by reason of the fact that no competent person would seek the office or perform the duties thereof for the compensation fixed; that any ordinance fixing the compensation at such a low figure is in conflict with the provisions of the general municipal corporation act, and therefore void; and that for this reason the ordinance fixing the compensation at $10 per month is void. The lower court found that the amount of salary attempted to be fixed by the ordinance was an unreasonable and arbitrary amount, and tantamount to the destruction of the office of marshal, that no competent person would seek the said office or perform the duties thereof for any such amount, and that the duties of the office as prescribed by law and ordinance would consume the whole time of a competent person. It further found that a reasonable compensation would be at least 10 times the amount prescribed by the ordinance. Adopting the view of petitioner before stated, it therefore held the ordinance void, and held that the provision of the former ordinance fixing $60 per month as the salary was still in force.

It may be conceded that where the state Legislature has seen fit to determine by lawful act that a municipality shall have a certain designated officer to perform duties specified in the act, who shall be paid for his services a compensation, which compensation shall be fixed by the legislative body of the town, in this case the board of trustees, such legislative body of the town may not effectually provide that there shall be no compensation at all, or practically destroy the office by fixing the compensation at so low a figure that no one will discharge the duties thereof for the compensation fixed. Such a provision by the trustees would appear to be in conflict with the act of the state Legislature, and therefore void. Upon the first point, the case of State v. Mayor, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 697, 54 Am. Rep. 427, is in point. It was there held that where the legislative charter provided that the mayor should receive compensation, but authorized the city council to change the amount fixed by the charter as it deemed proper, except that no change should be made to affect an incumbent during his term of office, an ordinance of the council, adopted in the exercise of the power to change the compensation, providing that the next mayor should receive no compensation, was in conflict with the charter and therefore void. The court expressly declined to decide what the situation would have been had the council fixed any compensation, however small, though its reasoning seemed to imply that the requirement of the charter would not be complied with by the fixing of a mere nominal consideration. The case of County v. Westbrook, 64 Miss. 312, 1 South. 352, is in point on the latter proposition. It was the duty of the supervisors of the county to fix the compensation of a health officer appointed by a state officer under a legislative act. They had fixed it at $15 per month. Subsequently concluding that they did not need a health officer, and having no power to abolish the office or discharge the incumbent, they fixed the salary at $1 per month. It was held that this action was a nullity on the ground that it was practically an attempted abrogation of the state law. The court said: "What the salary should be was a matter within their discretion provided they did not exceed the maximum specified by the statute or place it so low as to virtually abolish the office in the county. * * * But the laws for the protection of the public health under which appellee was appointed are of general application and cannot be nullified in any county by the failure of the board of supervisors to fix the salary of the general health officer of the county after he has been appointed or by fixing it at a rate so far below the maximum that no competent physician will accept the office." To the same effect is a note in 2 Abbott on Municipal Corporations, p. 1644, where it is said: "General legislation cannot be nullified by fixing the salary of a public official in a particular county at such a low figure that no competent person will accept the office." But except for this limitation, the power of the body to whom the fixing of the compensation in such a case is delegated is absolute. It is required to fix a reasonable compensation for the services to be rendered, it is true; but the question what is such a reasonable compensation is addressed solely to it, and not to the courts (Green v. Fresno Co., 95 Cal. 329, 30 Pac. 544), and, however much a court may disagree with the conclusion of the legislative body that a designated sum is reasonable, it may not interfere. As was said in Porter v. Haight, 45 Cal. 639: "When the state, by legislative act, confers upon a board of public officers jurisdiction to exercise their judgment and discretion upon matters within their power to perform, the courts cannot review the question whether that discretion was properly exercised." See, also, San Mateo Co. v. Maloney, 71 Cal. 205, 208, 12 Pac. 53, 55. This is certainly so in the absence of fraud or bad faith on the part of the body to whom the power is confided (see 1 Dillon on Mun. Corp. § 94; 28 Cyc. 457), and the courts refuse to consider legislative motives except as they may be disclosed on the face of the acts or are inferable from their operation and effect, considered in the light of those matters of which judicial notice may be taken. See Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145. See, also, Dodge v. Kings Co., 150 Cal. 96, 88 Pac. 66. Much reliance is placed by plaintiff on the ordinance enacted on the same day as the ordinance under consideration, creating the office of executive officer and prescribing the duties thereof, which it is claimed we may consider as showing the motive of the board to destroy the elective office of marshal and devolve its duties on the appointed executive officer. That ordinance, however, does not sustain plaintiff's claim. It was one clearly within the power of the trustees to enact under their general power to appoint "such police and other subordinate officers as in their judgment may be required," and, with the single exception of the duty to collect license fees and license taxes imposed by the statute on the marshal, the duties prescribed for such executive officer were such as the trustees had the right to annex to an office established by them, filled by their own appointee. However, neither fraud nor bad faith on the part of the trustees was alleged or found.

We are thus brought to a consideration of the question whether the amount of compensation fixed by the ordinance under consideration is so small that the act of the trustees can be held to be a practical abolition of the office of marshal, in that no competent person can be found to perform the duties thereof for that compensation. We are satisfied that no such conclusion is warranted by the facts that may be considered. It is conceded that the courts are limited in the consideration of this question to the ordinance itself and to those facts of which they may take judicial notice. Assuming that this includes all the facts heretofore stated in the opinion, and also the evidence given on the trial as to the amount of taxes and licenses collected each year, the utmost that a court is warranted in saying is that it disagrees with the trustees as to what constitutes reasonable compensation for the services to be performed, which, as we have seen, is not enough to warrant it in holding their action void. There is nothing in the record to warrant the conclusion of the trial court that the action of the trustees was tantamount to the destruction of the office of marshal, that no competent person would perform the duties thereof for any such amount, or that the duties of such office as prescribed by law and ordinance would consume the whole time of a competent person. Much reliance is placed on this last conclusion, which is evidently based solely on the provision in the ordinance of January 20, 1896, specifying the duties of marshal and fixing the compensation at $60 per month, to the effect that he shall devote his entire time and attention to the duties of his office, which provision, it is said, has been repealed. There is nothing in the municipal corporation act requiring that the marshal devote all his time to the duties of his office, and there is nothing in the evidence warranting the inference that a proper discharge of the duties of that office in Ukiah City imposed on him by the state law would occupy all his time, or even interfere to any material extent with the conduct by him of some other business or calling. It may be doubted whether the trustees had the power to require that the marshal devote all his time and attention to the duties of the office, except in so far as the duties were additional to those prescribed by the state law and were imposed by ordinance of their own. It is manifest, however, that the ordinance relative to the executive officer was intended to change the duties of the marshal to the extent of relieving him from all the additional duties imposed by ordinance of the trustees and imposing those duties on the new officer, leaving the marshal with only such duties as are imposed by the state law, and we think it must be held to have operated as a repeal of the entire ordinance of January 20, 1896. The duties of the marshal were, then, only such as were prescribed by the state law. Under this, in a town of some 1,800 inhabitants, he was in charge and control of the department of police, required to execute such process as might be delivered to him for execution; he was in charge of the city prison, if there was such a prison; he would be required to take charge of any chain gang that might be established by the trustees, but none had been established; and he was required to collect all town taxes and town licenses. The last undoubtedly constituted the principal part of his duties. These are all the duties specifically imposed by the statute. While we may feel that $120 per annum is not a reasonable compensation for the performance of these duties, and would fix a larger sum if it were within our province to determine what would be reasonable, we cannot hold, and the trial court was not warranted in holding, that the act of the trustees in fixing that amount was tantamount to the destruction of the office of marshal, in that no competent person would perform the duties for any such amount. It must therefore be held that the action of the trustees was a lawful exercise of the power confided to them to fix the compensation of the marshal, not in conflict with any law of the state. It follows that the marshal can recover only the salary so fixed.

In view of what we have said, it is unnecessary to consider any of the other points discussed by learned counsel for plaintiff.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

154 Cal. 534

In re McCARTY. (S. F. 5,126.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 269*)—ALIMONY—CONTEMPT FOR FAILURE TO PAY—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

An affidavit initiating proceedings for contempt in failing to comply with an order directing the payment of alimony is sufficient where it alleges the making of the order and disobedience to it, and is not required to allege the husband's ability to pay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 269*)—ALIMONY—CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—AFFIDAVIT.

An order entered on affidavit that an order awarding alimony had not been complied with, directing the husband to pay a certain amount by a time fixed, was an independent order, and,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes to invest the court with jurisdiction to proceed against the husband for its violation, it was necessary that a proceeding for contempt should have been inaugurated by an affidavit showing his failure to comply with its terms, and affording him an opportunity to show cause why he should not be punished.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 269*) — ALIMONY — CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT—AFFIDAVIT.

A contempt in failing to pay alimony is not a contempt committed in the presence of the court for which it may deal with the husband summarily, as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, but is a constructive contempt, and an affidavit showing a failure of the husband to pay the alimony, and affording him an opportunity to show cause why he should not be punished, is required to invest the court with jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 269.*]

4. CONTEMPT (§ 64*) — POWER TO PUNISH — SCOPE AND EXTENT OF AUTHORITY—RECORD.

The record upon which a party is adjudged guilty of contempt should show on its face the facts upon which the judicial action is based and jurisdiction depends, as proceedings in contempt are criminal in character, and the court exercises but a limited jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

In Bank. Certiorari by J. H. McCarty to review a judgment convicting him of a contempt of court in failing to pay certain alimony awarded in an action for divorce. Order of conviction annulled.

F. V. Meyers, for petitioner. Alfred H. Cohen and Milton Shepardson, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is a proceeding to review a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco convicting petitioner of a contempt of court in failing to pay certain alimony awarded in an action for divorce pending between his wife and himself. In that action the superior court on April 20, 1908, entered an order directing payment by petitioner to his wife of $90 per month alimony pendente lite, which he paid for two months, and, failing to make further payment, his wife on August 14, 1908, filed and presented to the superior court her affidavit stating such neglect and failure to pay, upon which the said court issued a citation to petitioner to show cause, on a day stated, why he should not be punished for contempt in failing and refusing to comply with said order. The matter coming on for hearing on September 8, 1908, petitioner appearing in response to the citation, and evidence being taken, the court made an order directing the petitioner to pay to his wife the sum of $150 at or before 11 o'clock a. m. on the 18th of September, 1908. The court also found that petitioner was able to pay said sum and had ample means to do so, and directed that, in the event said sum was not paid at the time stated, petitioner should be found and adjudged guilty of contempt of court for failure to comply with the order by not making the payment.

The order before us for review, after reciting the above matters, proceeds as follows: "That on said 18th day of September, 1908, said cause coming on regularly for hearing, testimony having been offered and received by the court, and the cause having been submitted to the court, and it satisfactorily appearing to the court that said order of September 8, 1908, directing the defendant to pay plaintiff the sum of $150, has not been complied with on the part of the defendant, and it appearing to the court that said J. H. McCarty is able to comply with said order, but willfully refuses to pay plaintiff said $150 so ordered to be paid, and it further appearing that said defendant had ample property with which to pay the same, said J. H. McCarty is therefore hereby adjudged to be guilty of contempt of said court.

* * *

The court thereupon ordered petitioner committed to the custody of the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco to be imprisoned in the county jail thereof until he complied with said order of September 8, 1908, by paying the sum of $150 to his wife. It is the validity of this order that the petitioner attacks in this proceeding.

It is claimed by the petitioner that the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order adjudging him guilty of contempt and that it is void. He insists, first, that the affidavit of his wife, made on August 14, 1908, under which the proceeding for contempt was initiated, was fatally defective because it did not contain a statement that the petitioner was able to pay the amounts which it was stated therein he had failed to pay. He insists that it was not enough to confer jurisdiction upon the court to proceed to punish him for contempt to state only in the affidavit that he had failed to make payment, but that it was a prerequisite to the exercise of such jurisdiction that it should have been also stated therein that he had the then ability to pay; that nonpayment and ability to pay were both jurisdictional facts necessary to be stated in the affidavit in order to make a case of contempt and to warrant the court in exercising its jurisdiction to proceed to punish him for it. We do not think there is any merit in this position. The court in the original order of April 20, 1908, found the petitioner had the ability to pay his wife $90 a month, and ordered him to make such payment. While to support the original order it was necessary for the court to find that the petitioner had the ability to pay alimony, the order itself, as far as it related to any affirmative duty to be performed by the petitioner, required only the payment of such alimony by him in the amount and at the time specified in the order. The contempt for which he might be proceeded against consisted in disobeying the only thing that the order required, namely, payment of the sum awarded. It is for this nonpayment that the proceedings in contempt are authorized, and it is only necessary that the affidavit, which constitutes the basis for judicial action in such a proceeding, should show the making of the order for alimony and the fact of the refusal of a husband to make payment as so ordered. It is not necessary for a wife on the hearing of a contempt proceeding for nonpayment of alimony to prove anything more than the making of the order and disobedience of it by her husband in refusing to pay the amounts which the court found he had the ability to do when it made the order. She makes a prima facie case at the hearing by producing the original order, and by proof of the refusal of her husband to make payment according to its terms, and, this being true, she is not required to set forth in her affidavit anything more than she is required to prove. The proceeding in contempt is designed to punish the delinquent husband for disobeying the order of the court and to enforce obedience to it, and at the same time an opportunity is given him to purge himself of contempt by presenting any legitimate excuse he may have, and, if his excuse is that since the making of the original order he has become unable to pay the alimony required by it, it is incumbent upon him to prove that fact. He is in the best position to show why for any reason he has not obeyed the order, and it is his duty to do so as a matter of defense. It is not necessary for the wife to allege his ability to comply with the original order. The court had originally found that he had such ability, and the only jurisdictional facts required to be stated in the affidavit were the making of the order and disobedience to it by refusal to pay. These the affidavit contained and were all that it was requisite jurisdictionally that it should contain.

But, while there is no merit in this first contention of petitioner, we are satisfied that another point urged by him is fatal to the validity of the order adjudging him guilty of contempt. It will be observed that the order of September 8, 1908, directed the petitioner to make payment of the sum of $150 by 11 o'clock on September 18th of the same year; the court then finding that the petitioner had the ability to pay this amount. It is to be assumed that this lump sum, which was ordered paid by the 18th of September, represented a portion of the amount for which the petitioner was delinquent in payment under the original order of April 20,

1908. However, while it would not affect the integrity of the order of April 20th, this order of September 8th for the payment of $150 was an independent order, and is the one for the alleged disobedience to which the respondent adjudged the petitioner guilty of contempt on September 18th. But it is quite clear from the record presented here, and upon the face of which the validity of the judgment of contempt must be determined, that the court had acquired no jurisdiction on September 18th to proceed against the petitioner for the violation of the order of September 8th. That order, as we have said, was a new one directing payment to be made at a future date. It was no different from any other order directing the payment of alimony at a time or times subsequent to its making, and, in order to invest a court with jurisdiction to proceed against the petitioner for its violation, it was necessary that any proceeding for contempt should have been inaugurated in the same manner that the law requires as to the violation of all orders for alimony, namely, by an affidavit showing the failure of the petitioner to comply with its terms, and affording him an opportunity, after a citation, to show cause why he should not be punished for disobeying the order. The contempt of which the court undertook to adjudge the petitioner guilty was not a contempt committed in the presence of the court for which it might deal with the petitioner summarily, as provided in section 1211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but it was a constructive contempt—one committed without the presence of the court—and consisting of a failure to pay to the plaintiff herself in a given time the amount ordered to be paid. The order did not require payment in court but payment outside of it. The court could have no knowledge of the disobedience of its order save upon an affidavit showing the fact of nonpayment. In such a case, where the contempt is a constructive one, in order to invest the court with jurisdiction to proceed to punish for it, it is essentially a prerequisite to the exercise of such jurisdiction that an affidavit setting forth the fact of noncompliance with the order should have been presented to the court. This is so clearly the law that section 1211 of the Civil Code of Procedure (Hutton v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 156, 81 Pac. 409, and Otis v. Superior Court, 148 Cal. 129, 82 Pac. 853), need only be referred to as establishing it. When the court proceeded on September 18th to investigate the matter of contempt on the part of petitioner in failing to comply with its order of September 8th, and adjudged him guilty of contempt therefor, no affidavit had been made showing non-compliance with that order, and necessarily no citation to show cause had been issued. Under these circumstances, the court never acquired jurisdiction to proceed in the matter, and its order for want of such jurisdiction was void. While it was conceded on the hearing that no affidavit had been filed as a jurisdictional prerequisite to sustain the judgment of conviction by the court, it is insisted by the respondent that the court had regularly continued the further hearing inaugurated under the affidavit of August 14, 1908, from the 8th day of September, 1908, when the order for payment was made, until the 18th of that month; that the petitioner on the latter date appeared in court and refused to make the payment which had been ordered.

But these are matters entirely outside the record. There is nothing in the record showing any continuance, as asserted, nor anything showing that the petitioner appeared in court on the 18th and refused to make full payment. Assuming that the petitioner had voluntarily appeared in court on the 18th of September, and upon an examination as to whether he had made payment in compliance with the order it appeared that he had not, and that he had then used language showing an intention and disposition not to do so, which might be treated as a contempt in the presence of the court, as in the case of Ex parte Robinson, 71 Cal. 608, 12 Pac. 794, upon which respondent relies, still it would have been necessary to have the record show the facts in order to sustain the judgment of conviction. Proceedings in contempt are in their nature criminal in character. The court exercises but a limited jurisdiction in such proceedings, and the record of the court upon which the party is adjudged guilty of contempt should show upon its face the facts upon which the judicial action is based and upon which its jurisdiction depended. Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 Pac. 372; Otis v. Superior Court, supra. The record here does not show that the court ever acquired jurisdiction to proceed against the petitioner for disobedience to the order of September 8, 1908, either by reason of the hearing having been regularly continued from that date until the 18th of the same month, or under any affidavit filed setting up the fact of his refusal to comply with the order, or in any other manner.

It follows, therefore, that the order adjudging the petitioner guilty of contempt was void for want of jurisdiction in the superior court to make it, and it is hereby annulled. The clerk of this court is directed to transmit a copy of the judgment to the clerk of the superior court in which the order of conviction was made.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.

154 Cal. 16

Ex parte McCARTY. (Cr. 1,492.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 16, 1908.)

In Bank. Application by J. H. McCarty for habeas corpus against the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. Prisoner discharged.

F. V. Meyers, for petitioner. Alfred H. Cohen and Milton Shepardson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner, having been taken into custody by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco upon conviction for contempt in failing to comply with an order of the superior court directing him to pay alimony awarded in an action for divorce pending between himself and wife, applies to this court to be released on habeas corpus, attacking the validity of the order of conviction. Prior to his application for this writ petitioner had brought a proceeding in certiorari in this court to have the same judgment of conviction which he attacks here annulled.

Both the certiorari proceeding and this petition were heard together, and an opinion has this day been filed in the certiorari proceeding annulling the same order of conviction involved in both proceedings. The order of conviction being annulled and declared void, the petitioner is entitled to be discharged from the custody of the sheriff; and it is so ordered.

154 Cal. 556

PEOPLE v. SILVER. (Cr. 1,458.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 23, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 998*)—JUDGMENT—SETTING ASIDE.—COLLUSION OF ATTORNEYS—EVIDENCE.

On motion to vacate judgment in a murder case in which accused pleaded guilty, evidence held to show that there was no collusion between accused's attorney and the district attorney at the time of the determination of the degree of the crime, and that accused was not forced to plead guilty because of his fear of mob violence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 998.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Ed Silver pleaded guilty to a charge of murder, and was sentenced to death. From an order refusing to amend the minutes and vacate the judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

John D. Pitts and Chas. S. Darden, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and H. L. Dickson, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant pleaded guilty to a charge of murder of the first degree. The court, after hearing the evidence on the subject of the degree of the crime, determined that it was murder of the first degree without extenuating circumstances, and sentenced him to death. Some six weeks later other attorneys for the defendant were substituted in place of the attorney who represented him up to the time of the sentence. Thereafter, before the time fixed for the execution of the sentence, the defendant moved the court to amend the minutes and vacate the judgment. The court, after hearing affidavits for and against the motion made an order denying it. From this order, defendant appeals.

The motion to amend the minutes asked to have inserted therein, or in the record of the final judgment, a conversation alleged to have occurred in the courtroom between the defendant, the attorney then representing him, and Charles S. Darden, who afterwards was substituted as one of his attorneys. The conversation was no proper part of the judgment, or of the minutes of the court, and the motion to amend was properly denied, regardless of whether the conversation actually occurred or not. The motion to vacate the judgment was based upon the alleged grounds, first, that by collusion between the defendant's former attorney and the district attorney at the time of the determination of the degree of the crime material facts bearing on the subject and known to the witnesses then examined were not elicited from them, that other important witnesses were not called, and that, if the facts had all been shown, it would have been demonstrated that the crime was not of the first degree; second, that the defendant, at the time of his arraignment, was terrorized by the fear of death at the hands of a mob, and was thereby forced to enter a plea of guilty and consequently deprived of a trial by jury.

Upon the hearing of the motion evidence and affidavits were introduced showing that each and every of these grounds were wholly unfounded in fact. Before making his plea and until after final judgment, the defendant consulted with and was advised by one of the leading attorneys of the county, a man of learning and good standing in his profession. There was no collusion between him and the district attorney, and all the facts bearing on the degree of the crime were fully exhibited to the court. From the time he was held to answer until the end of the proceedings there was no cause to fear mob violence, nor any exhibition or expression of such fear by the defendant. These facts were fairly established by the testimony. There was some evidence to the contrary, but this only raised a conflict which gives this court no cause to interfere.

The motion and the appeal from the order are both without merit.

The order is affirmed

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

9 Cal. App. 212

JOLLIFFE v. STEELE et al. (Civ. 516.)
(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 13, 1908.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 73*)—AGREEMENTS ENFORCEABLE—PERSONAL SERVICES.

Specific performance of agreement by one to use his best endeavors to sell land cannot be compelled, the obligation being merely to render personal services, which, under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 1, cannot be specifically enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 6*)—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—MUTUALITY OF REMEDY.

A contract to render personal services, not being enforceable against the promisor, will not be enforced against the other party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. QUIETING TITLE (§ 21*)—CLOUD ON TITLE—UNENFORCEABLE CONTRACT.

An option contract for purchase of land, which was unenforceable specifically by either party thereto, cannot support a valid claim of interest in the land, though it might support an action for damages for breach of the contract, and hence the owner was entitled to have his title quieted against such claim, under Code Civ. Proc. § 738, authorizing an action by any person against another claiming an interest in real property adverse to him to determine the adverse claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Dec. Dig. § 21.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 18*)—OPTIONS—CONSIDERATION—SUFFICIENCY.

An agreement by an agent authorized to sell land that he will endeavor to sell it at a fixed net price to the owner is not a sufficient consideration for the grant of an option to such agent to purchase the land at that price within a certain time; the contract being a mere proposal to sell, and revocable by the owner at any time before the land is sold or the agent exercises his option to purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS CONSIDERED.

Where a contract to sell land for the owner was unenforceable by either party, it is unnecessary on appeal to consider the failure of the trial court to find on an issue as to whether the owner's conduct caused the agent to cease his efforts to sell the land in accordance with the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Katherine E. Jolliffe against F. J. Steele and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Russ Avery, for appellants. J. Wiseman Macdonald, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to quiet title. Defendants appeal from judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

On August 18, 1904, plaintiff entered into a written agreement with defendant Steele whereby she granted to him "the exclusive option to purchase or sell for her," at his discretion, the property described in the complaint, at the prices specified in the contract. The stated consideration moving to plaintiff from defendant was the covenants made on the part of Steele, as set forth in said contract. The only covenant contained in the contract on the part of Steele is as follows: "The said second party (Steele) hereby accepts the option to purchase or the right to sell the aforesaid property under the terms of this agreement, and agrees to do all in his power to dispose of the aforesaid property as per the terms of the agreement." By the agreement Steele was authorized to contract for certain street work and surveys of the property, the expense of which, however, was to be borne by plaintiff. For the purpose of subdividing the property, he did, as empowered, cause a survey thereof to be made for the purpose of such subdivision and sale. Plaintiff's title to the property at the time of making the contract was imperfect, which fact was known to Steele at that time. Some time in March, 1905, plaintiff's title was perfected and Steele then proposed to proceed in an endeavor to perform the conditions of the contract on his part; whereupon plaintiff revoked the contract, and notified him that she would not recognize his right to proceed under the contract, and would not be bound thereby. At the time of the revocation Steele had not sold the property, nor had he done anything towards performance of the contract, except causing the said survey of the premises to be made. On May 25, 1905, Steele caused said contract to be recorded, thus constituting a cloud upon plaintiff's title; and on the 29th of May following, and after the revocation thereof by plaintiff, Steele assigned all his interest in the contract to his codefendants, Cherry and Crenshaw, who prior to the commencement of this action offered to perform all the acts required by them to be done under the terms of the contract. By the terms of the agreement it was to remain in force until the entire property was sold, during which time plaintiff was to pay all taxes and liens, and not incumber the property except with the written assent of Steele. The defense to the action is based upon this contract, set up in a cross-complaint filed by defendants, wherein they pray the court to adjudge the agreement to be a valid agreement between plaintiff and defendants, and declare it in full force and effect. By answer to the cross-complaint plaintiff alleged that said agreement was without any consideration, and alleged a revocation thereof. The court so found.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The question involved is not necessarily the validity of the contract, but whether it is a contract supporting defendants' adverse claim to an interest in the property. It is conceded that, if there was no sufficient consideration moving from defendant Steele to plaintiff, she had the right to revoke the contract at any time before a sale of the property or an exercise of the option to purchase same. It is admitted that no sale of said property, or any part thereof, was made; nor is it claimed that any of the defendants, prior to the commencement of the action, made any tender of the purchase price thereof. Assuming, as claimed by appellants, that the promise on the part of Steele to use his best endeavors to sell the property constituted a consideration for the contract, still it was not a covenant the performance of which could be specifically enforced against Steele. At most, it was an obligation to render personal services of an indefinite and uncertain character. An obligation to render personal services cannot be specifically enforced. Subdivision 1, § 3390, Civ. Code. It is a fundamental principle that "equity will not specifically enforce a contract against one party when it cannot be specifically enforced against the other." Federal Oil Co. v. Western Oil Co., 121 Fed. 677, 57 C. C. A. 428; Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 410; Stanton v. Singleton, 126 Cal. 658, 59 Pac. 146, 47 L. R. A. 334. Hence the contract is one the covenants of which were, for the foregoing reasons, incapable of specific enforcement against either party. The asserted claim made by defendants of an interest in the land is under and by virtue of this contract, and, since its terms cannot be specifically enforced against the land, it necessarily follows that such adverse claim based thereon is unwarranted, and this notwithstanding the fact that such contract might constitute a basis for a claim of damages for a breach thereof. A contract for the sale of real estate which for any reason is incapable of specific enforcement cannot form the basis of a valid claim to an interest therein, and, where such claim is asserted, the owner of the real estate is entitled to a decree quieting his title thereto. Section 738, Code Civ. Proc.

Moreover, in our opinion, the express covenant on the part of an agent authorized to sell real estate that he will endeavor to sell it at a fixed net price to the owner is not a sufficient consideration for the grant of an option to such agent to purchase within a given time at such fixed price. Such contract is a mere proposal to sell, unsupported by sufficient consideration, and subject to revocation by the owner at any time before the negotiation of a sale or the exercise of such option by the agent to purchase.

As we view the case, it is unnecessary to discuss the failure of the court to find upon the issue as to whether plaintiff's conduct caused an abatement of Steele's activities in an effort to sell the property. The issue is immaterial.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 224

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 142.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct 19, 1908. Rehearing Denied Nov. 17, 1908; Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 14, 1908.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 267*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—CONTROL OF COURT.

While a reluctant, evasive, or interested witness may be cross-examined with great liberality in order to elicit the truth, the trial court, in the exercise of sound discretion, may limit such examination when it becomes tedious or apparently frivolous so that time is unnecessarily consumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 923; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

2. WITNESSES (§ 267*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Where, on a criminal trial, the court stated that too much time was being consumed in cross-examining a witness and allowed 15 minutes to finish the examination, to which counsel excepted, after which the court asked if counsel desired to further examine the witness, and the latter stated that was all, it not appearing that any question was excluded on the ground that the time for cross-examination was being exceeded, there was no abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 923; Dec. Dig. § 267.*]

3. WITNESSES (§ 387*)—IMPEACHMENT—INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where a witness, in a prosecution for robbery, testified that the man who assaulted her was between 5 and 6 feet tall, about 5½ feet, and between 30 and 40 years old, probably nearer 40 than 30, a question, on further cross-examination, whether witness did not previously state that he was about 5 feet 4 inches high, and between 30 and 35 years old, was properly excluded as immaterial, as such prior statements were not sufficient to impeach the testimony at trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1228, 1229; Dec. Dig. § 387.*]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 44*)—FILING INFORMATION—DESTRUCTION.

The destruction of the original information being shown, a full, true, and correct copy thereof could be filed in lieu of the one destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 155; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

John Smith was convicted of robbery and, from the judgment and an order denying a motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

John J. Earle and Eugene W. Roland, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was charged in the information with the crime of robbery, and with two prior convictions—one of petit larceny, and the other of burglary. The jury returned a verdict finding him guilty of robbery as charged in the information, and the judgment recites that he had theretofore been duly convicted of the crime of petit larceny and of burglary in the first degree. He was thereupon sentenced to a term of 50 years in the state penitentiary. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is not claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, or that the court erred in giving or refusing any instruction to the jury. The main point urged here is that the court improperly restricted and cut off the right of defendant's counsel to cross-examine the complaining witness, Lena Wilson, the person upon whom the robbery was committed. The direct examination of said witness was confined to a narration of the acts of defendant when he committed the robbery, the place where the money was secreted in the house, the amount of money taken, and the injuries inflicted upon the witness by defendant. It occupies eight folios of the transcript. The cross-examination appears to have been in regard to many trivial matters, consists of 140 questions, and covers 60 folios of the transcript. After several apparent repetitions of questions, the district attorney finally objected, and stated that the entire matter concerning which questions were then being asked had been gone into by defendant's counsel. Thereupon the record shows the following in regard to the matter and nothing more: "The Court: The court warns you that you have wasted too much time in the examination of this witness, and I have allowed you 15 minutes more to complete the examination. Mr. Earle: We will take an exception. The Court: If there is any other branch of the case you desire to cross-examine on, proceed. Mr. Earle: That is all. (To which ruling defendant duly excepted, and now assigns said ruling as error.)"

While the right of cross-examination in cases where it is being used in good faith for the purpose of eliciting the truth from a reluctant, evasive, or interested witness should be allowed with great liberality, still the court, in the exercise of its sound discretion, may restrain such cross-examination when time is being consumed by a tedious or apparently frivolous questioning of the witness. It may be further said that it is the duty of the trial judge to confine such examination to such questions as will tend, at least in some degree, to throw light upon the matter under investigation, and to see that the trial is not needlessly prolonged by a useless cross-examination. In this case the court did not abuse its discretion. It merely called the attention of counsel to the fact that much time had been wasted in the cross-examination. After defendant's counsel had excepted to this remark, the judge stated that, if there was any other branch of the case that counsel desired to cross-examine the witness about, they might proceed. Counsel did not see fit to proceed as to any other branch of the case, but remarked: "That is all." No question is stated in the record to which the court sustained an objection on the ground that defendant could not be allowed further time in cross-examination, nor does it appear that defendant was prevented from asking any material question of the witness. What has been stated applies to the remark of the court and counsel during the cross-examination that they were wasting too much time in such cross-examination. The remark appears to have been justified.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

In the cross-examination, in answer to questions asked by defendant's counsel, the witness Lena Wilson testified that the man who assaulted her was about the size of her son, who was apparently in the courtroom, and that he was between 5 and 6 feet tall, about 5½ feet, and that he was between 30 and 40 years of age, probably nearer 40 than 30. Counsel afterwards asked the witness in further cross-examination if she did not tell her daughter that the man who assaulted her was about 5 feet 4 inches in height, and between 30 and 35 years of age. The court sustained the objection of the district attorney to the questions so asked, and it is claimed that the court committed error prejudicial to the defendant in so doing. The questions were not material, as the statements, if made to the daughter as contended, would not be of sufficient importance to impeach the witness. Five feet 4 inches is between 5 and 6 feet, and may be said in one sense to be about 5½ feet; and between 30 and 35 years of age is between 30 and 40. The questions are illustrative of the kind of questions which counsel were asking when interrupted by the court.

There was no error in permitting a copy of the information to be filed in lieu of the one destroyed by the fire of April 18, 1906. There was evidence sufficient to show the destruction of the original by the fire, and that the copy was a "full, true, and correct copy of the original." The record does not show that any exception was taken to the order restoring the record as to the original information, but it is not necessary to place our ruling upon that ground.

There is no ruling to which our attention has been called that was prejudicial to defendant, and he seems to have had a fair trial.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 218

PEOPLE v. PRICE. (Cr. 59.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Oct. 19, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 17, 1908.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 95*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—JUSTIFICATION.

Where an officer approached accused in a peaceful manner, informed him that he was an officer, and that he was performing his official duty in arresting him, and showed his badge of office, and did not attempt in any way to injure accused, the latter had no excuse for drawing his pistol and shooting the officer, though the officer had no warrant or legal authority for arresting accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

2. HOMICIDE (§ 292*)—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

Where accused charged with assault with intent to kill an officer attempting to arrest him was a wrongdoer without regard to the question of the right of the officer to arrest him, an instruction that, if accused in the presence of the officer and others drew a deadly weapon in a rude "or" angry and threatening manner, etc., the officer had the right to arrest accused, was not misleading because of the use of the word "or," instead of the word "and," though the statute expression is "rude, angry, and threatening manner."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 292*)—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to kill, the jury might find that, if accused did not intend to shoot prosecutor, it was criminal negligence to draw his pistol, a requested instruction that in every crime there must exist a joint operation of act and intent was properly refused for leaving out the element of criminal negligence specified in Pen. Code, § 20.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 292.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 860*)—TRIAL—DELIBERATIONS OF JURY—MATTERS CONSIDERED—WEIGHT OF WITNESS—APPEARANCE AT TRIAL.

The jury may use their own senses as to the weight of a witness before them, and the exclusion of the evidence of his weight is not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2060; Dec. Dig. § 860.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 382*)—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT OF PERSON.

Where, on a trial for assault with intent to kill an officer attempting to arrest accused, there was no controversy as to who was the aggressor as between accused and a third person, and it appeared that accused a short time before the shooting of the officer had been struck by the third person, the evidence of the weight of the third person was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 382.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Carl Price was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Jarman, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The information in this case charges the defendant with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, with malice aforethought, and with intent to kill one Toomey. The jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the lesser offense of assault with a deadly weapon. He was thereupon sentenced to pay a fine of $700, or, in default of payment, that he be imprisoned in the county jail in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every $2 of such fine.

His motion for a new trial was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and order.

We have examined the evidence, and it is not deemed necessary to discuss it, but only to say that we find it sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury.

There was no error in the court's refusal to give the defendant's requested instruction as to the law pertaining to an officer making an arrest without a warrant, and as to the right of the defendant to resist an unlawful arrest. If it be conceded that Toomey, the constable, had no warrant or legal authority for making the arrest, such fact would not in any way excuse the defendant for shooting at and wounding the said constable. It is sufficient to say that the constable approached defendant in a peaceable manner, informed him that he was a constable, and that he was performing his official duty, and at the same time showed his badge of office. He did not assault defendant in a violent manner, or attempt in any way to injure him. There was no excuse for defendant drawing his pistol and discharging it twice, one of the shots wounding the constable. In fact, it would be a pernicious doctrine to hold that an officer, known to be such, while attempting to make an arrest, could be shot down, and the defendant or person who did the shooting allowed to go free because it might, upon due investigation, be discovered that the officer did not in fact have proper authority for making the arrest.

It is claimed that the court erred in instructing the jury as follows: "If you should therefore find that the defendant on the streets of the town of Santa Clara, on February 28, 1905, in the presence of Constable Toomey, and, of course, in the presence of two or more persons, did draw a deadly weapon as defined by the court, or exhibit a deadly weapon in a rude or angry and threatening manner, and that such deadly weapon was not drawn or so exhibited in self-defense, the court instructs you that Officer Toomey had a right and authority, and it was his duty, to arrest the defendant." It is claimed that the instruction is vicious, and that its vice consists in the fact that the word "or" was used instead of "and," and, as the statute uses the words "rude, angry, and threatening manner," the instruction should have followed the language of the statute. As we have before stated, the facts of this case show the defendant to have been a wrongdoer without regard to the question as to the right of the officer to make the arrest. If, as contended, the deadly weapon could have been exhibited in a "rude" manner without the manner being "angry and threatening," it is not of sufficient importance to have misled the jury or to have injured the defendant. It will not be presumed that the jury were led astray by the use of the word "or" instead of the word "and" under the circumstances of this case.

The court refused the following instruction asked by the defendant: "I further instruct you that in every crime or public offense there must exist a union or joint operation of act and intent. If, therefore, you find from the evidence that the shot fired which injured Toomey was the result of the sudden clutching or grabbing of the defendant's right arm or hand, and that said shot was not intended by the defendant to injure said Toomey, and said injury was purely accidental and due to the sudden interference with the defendant at the time said shot was fired, then I instruct you that in law there was no operation of intent with the act, and no crime or public offense was committed, and your verdict should be for the defendant and he should be acquitted." It is the better practice for the trial court to give a requested instruction if it correctly states the law, and can logically be held to apply to the facts of the particular case in which it is asked; but it will not be held that the refusal to give such instruction is error if there is a reason which will justify such refusal. The above instruction may well have been refused for the reason that it states that "in every crime there must exist a union of joint operation of act and intent." It leaves out the element of "criminal negligence" which the statute contains. Pen. Code, § 20. The jury might well have inferred from the evidence in this case that even if defendant did not intend to shoot at Toomey or fire the shot that hit him that it was criminal negligence to draw the pistol and fire it once in the ground to frighten Toomey, and then to hold it in his hand in such position that it might be discharged in the scuffle which ensued. Not only this, but the testimony of the defendant himself, when analyzed, would not have justified the instruction. He admitted that he willfully fired the first shot which did not hit Toomey; that he did not think any one had hold of his hand when the second shot was fired; that he did not know whether his finger was on the trigger or not, and that he had the pistol in his hand. After the second shot was fired and the constable was wounded, the defendant ran. Defendant, after having admitted that he fired the first shot at an officer of the law, that he had a pistol in his hand when the second shot was fired from such pistol, that no one had hold of his hand, that he then ran away, and this all in the face of the fact that Toomey had not drawn any weapon or attempted any violence upon his person, is not in a position to urge with any great plausibility that he did not intend to fire the second shot, but that it was purely accidental. It was not error to sustain the objection of the district attorney to the question asked by defendant's counsel of his own witness Perry as to the weight of Perry. The witness was before the jury, and the jury could use their senses as to his weight if that could by any mode of reasoning have been material; but in our opinion it was not material. There was no controversy as to who was the aggressor as between Perry and the defendant. Perry had, a short time before the shooting of Toomey, struck the defendant on the head with a bottle during a row in front of the Model saloon in the town of Santa Clara. The injury to defendant's head appears to have been slight, bleeding but little; and the weight of Perry could have thrown but little light upon a matter which was not the main issue in the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 223

PEOPLE v. WETZEL. (Cr. 151.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Oct. 19, 1908.)

INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 189*)—CONVICTION OF OFFENSE—INCLUDED IN CHARGE—LESSER DEGREE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1159, authorizing the jury to find accused guilty of any offense included in that charged, a verdict finding accused guilty of petit larceny is responsive to the issue made by the information charging grand larceny and accused's plea of not guilty, since the verdict, when read in connection with the information and the plea, impliedly finds the value of the property stolen to be less than $50, instead of $200, as charged in the information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 594; Dec. Dig. § 189.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Samuel P. Wetzel was convicted of petit larceny, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Brennan & Love, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John O'Gara, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of petit larceny under an information charging him with grand larceny. The information charged, and defendant pleaded guilty to, two prior convictions of petit larceny, and the court upon the return of the verdict sentenced him to imprisonment in the state prison for five years. This appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll with no bill of exceptions. No brief has been filed by appellant, and the sole point made in the oral argument is the claim that the verdict of petit larceny is not responsive to the issue made by the information and the plea of not guilty. There is no merit in the contention. The jury had the right to find the defendant guilty of any offense the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged. Pen. Code, § 1159; People v. Huntington (Cal. App.) 97 Pac. 760. The verdict must be read and construed in connection with the plea of defendant and the information. People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 62, 67 Pac. 42. As thus read and construed the verdict found the defendant guilty of the acts set forth in the information, but by implication found the value of the property stolen to be less than $50, instead of $200, as charged therein. Where a defendant is charged with the crime of murder, he may be found guilty of manslaughter. It has never been the sense of the bar nor the rule of courts to require the verdict in such cases to state the name of the person killed, nor that such killing was unlawful. The verdict is read in connection with and as relating to the information or indictment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

154 Cal. 545

DE MERRITT v. WELDON et al.

(S. F. 5,010.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1908.)

Dissenting opinion.

For majority opinion, see 98 Pac. 537.

BEATTY, C. J. The denial of a rehearing of this cause furnishes a proper occasion for a brief statement of the grounds of my dissent from the judgment. The charter of Ukiah is a general law of the state, by which the city marshal is made an elective officer, and by which varied and important duties are devolved upon him. The adoption of the two ordinances of February 15, 1904, was a transparent device by which the board of trustees—the creature of the statute—attempted to subvert the law of the state by devolving the duties of the elected marshal upon an appointee of their own; an attempt in which, with the sanction of this court, they have achieved a partial success. The resulting difficulties do not seem to have been considered. Can the board of trustees relieve the marshal of his statutory duties? Can they, for instance, confer authority upon their executive officer to receive and receipt for license and property taxes? And, if as seems not improbable, it proves difficult to find a fit person willing to perform the duties and assume the responsibilities of tax and license collector, chief of police, custodian of prisoners, etc., for $15 a month, how are those duties to be performed without usurpation of authority by such agent of the board of trustees as may attempt their performance?

I think the ordinance reducing the salary of the marshal was void as part—an essential part—of a scheme to override the statute, and that it should have been so declared.

(154 Cal. 559)

STILL et al. v. SAN FRANCISCO & N. W. RY. CO. (S. F. 4,605.)(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 4, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1909.)1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 193*) — FELLOW SERVANTS—WHO ARE.

A fireman on one train and a conductor of another train are fellow servants, and the railway company is not liable for the death of the fireman resulting solely from the negligence of the conductor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 502, 504; Dec. Dig. § 198.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 169*)—DEATH OF SERVANT—INCOMPETENCY OF FELLOW SERVANT.

Where the death of a fireman on one train was caused by the failure of the conductor of another train to comply with meeting orders, and the evidence showed that the conductor was incompetent, that the railway company failed to use ordinary care in selecting him as conductor, and that the incompetency was the cause of the accident, the company was liable under the exception in Civ. Code, § 1970, relieving the employer from liability to an employé for loss suffered because of the negligence of a co-employé, unless the employer was negligent in the selection of the co-employé.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 334; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

The court on reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict can only determine whether there is evidence to support the verdict, and how the court on appeal would have found the facts is immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3922; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 265*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANT—LIABILITY.

To justify a recovery against a railroad company for the death of a fireman in a collision, resulting from the failure of the conductor of the other train to comply with meeting orders, on the theory of the incompetency of the conductor, plaintiff must show that the conductor was incompetent; that the railway company at the time of his selection as conductor either knew, or by ordinary care would have known, of the incompetency, and that such incompetency caused the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 265.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

In cases of mere conflict of evidence, the conclusion of the trial jury and judge are conclusive on appeal on the question as to which party produced the preponderance of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. 1011.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 168*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANT—"INCOMPETENCY OF SERVANT."

Incompetency of a servant connotes the converse of reliability in all that is essential to make up a reasonably safe person, considering the nature of the work and the general safety of those required to associate with him in the general employment, and one who does not know the meaning of orders used on a railroad as to the movement of trains is incompetent to act as a conductor of a train, where he will be called on to act on such orders in moving his train.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 337; Dec. Dig. § 168.*]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—DEATH OF FIREMAN—INCOMPETENCY OF CONDUCTOR—EVIDENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for the death of a fireman in a collision resulting from the failure of the conductor of the other train to comply with a meeting order, evidence held to justify a finding that the conductor was incompetent, and that his incompetency was the sole cause of the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 973, 975; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 170*) — EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—"ORDINARY CARE."

The term "ordinary care," as used in the rule requiring an employer to use ordinary care in the selection of an employé, means that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would use in view of the nature of the employment and the consequence of the employment of an incompetent person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5029-5042; vol. 8, pp. 7739, 7740.]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 170*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—CARE OF EMPLOYER.

Where the service in which a servant is employed is such as to endanger the lives and persons of co-employés if the servant is not competent, the employer must, in the exercise of ordinary care, make a reasonable investigation as to his character, skill, qualification, and habits of life.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

10. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 287*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—CARE OF EMPLOYER.

Whether an employer has made a reasonable investigation into the character, skill, and qualifications of an employé is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1055; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

11. TRIAL (§ 142*) — ISSUES — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the conceded facts are such that reasonable minds may differ as to the conclusions to be drawn, the question is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 337; Dec. Dig. § 142.*]

12. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption is that an employer has done his duty in investigating into the character, skill, and qualifications of an employé, and as a general rule the employer's knowledge of incompetency of an employé, or the fact that the employer would have obtained such knowledge had he made reasonable inquiry, must be shown by evidence independent of that showing incompetency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

13. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—PRESUMPTIONS.

The incompetency of an employé at the time of his employment, which includes the time of his assignment to a particular duty, may be such that the evidence showing it will rebut the presumption that the employer used the requisite care in his selection and make the question one for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

14. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 170*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—PRESUMPTIONS.

An employer must institute affirmative inquiries to ascertain the qualifications of an employé whom he transfers to a more responsible position, for which special qualifications are demanded, unless the employé has given proof of his capacity in some similar position.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

15. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—PRESUMPTIONS.

Proof of the incompetency of a freight conductor, arising from his want of knowledge of the meaning and effect of telegraphic orders referring to the movement of his train in relation to other trains, justifies the inference that a reasonable investigation by the railway company would have disclosed the incompetency, when it could have been remedied by proper instruction warranting a finding of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 975; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

16. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 170*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—CARE REQUIRED OF MASTER.

A personal examination of one about to be employed in a responsible position as that of conductor of a train is not always essential to the exercise of reasonable care on the part of the railway company, but such investigation as will warrant the assumption, under the circumstances, that the employé has adequate knowledge and qualifications is essential, and such an assumption may be warranted by the knowledge of the employer of the experience and reputation of the employé as to work calling for the knowledge and qualifications adequate to the discharge of the duties of the place, or by the recommendation of other persons on whom he is justified in relying.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

17. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—EMPLOYMENT OF SERVANT—INCOMPETENCY OF SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER.

In an action for the death of a fireman in a collision with a train, resulting from the failure of the conductor thereof to comply with meeting orders, evidence held to justify a finding that the railway company, at the time of the selection of the conductor, knew, or by ordinary care would have known, of his incompetency, authorizing a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 975; Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

18. TRIAL (§ 244*) — INSTRUCTIONS — GIVING UNDUE PROMINENCE TO EVIDENCE.

Where, under the general instructions, the jury must have known that all the evidence on a subject was to be considered in determining an issue, an instruction that the jury, in determining the issue, should consider specified evidence together with other evidence is improper, as singling out a portion of the evidence, and specially directing that it be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 578, 579; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

19. TRIAL (§ 244*) — INSTRUCTIONS — GIVING UNDUE PROMINENCE TO EVIDENCE.

Instructions drawn solely for the purpose, and which simply have the effect, of emphasizing some particular portion of the evidence, are not to be commended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 578, 579; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

20. TRIAL (§ 191*) — INSTRUCTIONS — MISLEADING INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction which is misleading as applied to the facts, and which assumes facts as to which there is a conflict in the evidence, is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-431; Dec. Dig. § 191.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Pura Jane Still and others against the San Francisco & Northwestern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gillett & Cutler and F. A. Cutler, for appellant. Coonan & Kehoe and Geo. T. Rolley, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment for plaintiffs, in an action brought by the surviving wife and two minor children of Charles Still, deceased, for damages resulting to them from the death of said Still, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant. The principal claim of defendant is that the evidence given on the trial is insufficient to support the verdict.

Charles Still was killed on October 5, 1903, in a collision which occurred between two of defendant's trains, one known as "Extra No. 4," a special train, in Conductor Rolley's charge, which was running southerly from South Bay, near Eureka, and the other known as "Freight Train No. 5," a regular schedule train, under Peter Clark as conductor, which was running northerly from Carlotta, the southerly terminus of the road, to South Bay. He was the fireman on "Extra No. 4," and at the time of the collision was in the cab of the locomotive engaged in the discharge of his duties. His train was proceeding under an order addressed to its conductor and engineer, which was as follows: "Leave South Bay 6:45 October 5th. Take E. R. V. L. Co.'s empties to their switch. Return light to Gravel Pit. Meet P. L. Co's train at Singley's. Meet No. 5 at Cousins' switch. Exchange engines at Cousins' switch with No. 5." A special meet order had been given to the conductor and engineer of freight train 5, reading as follows: "October 5, '03. Train No. 5, Conductor Clark, Engineer Thayer. Meet Extra 4 at Cousins' switch. Exchange engines with her. Take E. R. V. Lbr. Co's train to S. Bay." It is conceded that such an order supersedes all schedules, and means exactly what it says, viz., that the trains to which it is addressed must meet at the place named, and that the one arriving first at the designated place must stay at that place until the other train arrives, or until the order is withdrawn or changed. Train 5 started from Carlotta at its scheduled time, and proceeded according to its schedule to Cousins' switch, which was almost midway between South Bay and Carlotta. Extra 4 had been delayed by an accident farther north, and had not yet arrived at Cousins' switch. Conductor Clark of train

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

5, having taken on the E. R. V. Lumber Company's train as directed by his special order, proceeded north with his train, without waiting for extra 4, with the result that in the neighborhood of Fortuna, the next station north of Cousins' switch, his train came into collision with extra 4, which was proceeding south in strict accord with its orders. Concededly the failure of Clark to comply with the requirements of the meet order was the sole cause of the deplorable accident.

Under the law of this state as it was at the time of the collision, deceased and Clark were fellow servants, and no recovery could be had against defendant by the heirs of deceased for damages resulting solely from the negligence of Clark. The claim of plaintiffs, sustained by the jury that tried the case, was that Clark was incompetent to act as conductor of train 5, that defendant had failed to use ordinary care in selecting him to serve in that capacity, and that his incompetency was the cause of the accident, thus bringing the case within the rule of law that renders the employer liable to an employé for damages resulting from his failure to use ordinary care in the selection of other employés, and to select only those who are competent to properly perform the duties of the position for which they are selected—the rule declared by section 1970, Civ. Code, as it was at the time of the accident, as follows: "An employer is not bound to indemnify his employé for loss suffered by the latter * * * in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless the negligence causing the injury was committed in the performance of a duty the employer owes by law to the employé, or unless the employer has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employé." In accord with this claim the jury specifically found, in response to questions submitted to them: First, that Peter Clark was incompetent to act as conductor of train No. 5 at the time of the collision; second, that the collision was caused by such incompetency of Peter Clark to act as conductor; third, that the defendant failed to use ordinary care in the selection of Peter Clark for the position of conductor for such train; and, fourth, that the defendant, prior to the accident, knew that Clark was incompetent for the position of conductor on such train, or could have known it by the exercise of ordinary care on its part. A general verdict in favor of plaintiffs was also rendered.

It must be borne in mind that the question before us in considering the attack on the verdict of the jury is not how we would find the facts to be, but whether there was enough in the evidence from which the jury might find the existence of facts which would justify the verdict they rendered. It, of course, devolved on plaintiffs to show that Clark was in fact incompetent for the position to which he was assigned, that defendant at the time of his selection therefor either knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care would have known, of such incompetency, and that such incompetency was the cause of the accident. The verdict of the jury constituted findings in the affirmative upon all these propositions. Was there substantial evidence in support thereof? If so, the verdict must stand, however strongly such evidence may be opposed to other evidence given on the trial. In cases of mere conflict of evidence the conclusions of the trial jury and judge are conclusive on the question as to which side produced the "preponderance of evidence." See Fowden v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 149 Cal. 151, 159, 86 Pac. 178.

As we have said, it is necessarily conceded that the failure of Clark to hold his regular schedule train at Cousins' switch until the arrival of extra 4, in accord with the requirements of the meet order, was the cause of the accident. Was this failure due to his incompetency or unfitness from any cause to act in the position to which he had been assigned, or was it due to his mere negligence in the discharge of duties which he was entirely competent to perform? The incompetency claimed is that he was not possessed of adequate knowledge of the meaning and effect of a "meet order," under such circumstances as confronted him at Cousins' switch on the day of the accident, the kind of incompetency referred to in Nofsinger v. Goldman, 122 Cal. 609, 617, 55 Pac. 425, 429, where it was said: "An engineer might not be careless. He might exercise extreme care within the limitations of his knowledge, and yet for lack of adequate knowledge might be unfit and incompetent for the position"—and in Evansville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Guyton, 115 Ind. 450, 17 N. E. 101, 7 Am. St. Rep. 458, a case similar in many respects to this. Incompetency connotes the converse of reliability in "all that is essential to make up a reasonably safe person, considering the nature of the work and the general safety of those who are required to associate with such person in the general employment." 1 Labatt's Master and Servant, § 181. It goes without saying that one who does not know the meaning of the rules or orders used on a railroad relative to the movement of trains is absolutely incompetent to act as a conductor of a train thereon, where he would be called upon to follow such rules and orders in moving his train. We are satisfied that the evidence amply warranted the jury in finding that Clark was without this knowledge, and that his ignorance in this respect was the sole cause of the accident.

Clark had been acting as conductor of this train for less than a month, having commenced on September 10, 1903. His employment on this train was practically his first experience as conductor on a schedule train, there being some testimony that between July 17, 1903, when he came to this road, and September 10, 1903, he had acted for a few days as conductor. During the same time he had acted for a few weeks as conductor of a gravel train, an inferior unscheduled train, running under special orders. During the same interval of less than two months he had also acted for a very short time as brakeman on a passenger train on this road. For nearly two years prior to July 17, 1903, he had been a brakeman on a passenger train on the railroad running from Eureka to Arcata, a short road which had only one train and one train crew, and where, consequently, there were no rules or orders as to the meeting and passing of trains. Prior to that time he had worked for some years on the road where the accident occurred in the several capacities of sectionman, tunnel watchman, and fireman, positions in which he had not been required to know or charge his mind as to the effect of orders relative to the meeting of trains. Prior to assuming the work of conductor he had shown himself to be a reliable and competent man in the various positions in which he had been placed, which would rather tend to indicate that within the limits of his knowledge he would not be likely to make a mistake in such a vital matter as the one causing the accident. The evidence was not such as to compel the conclusion that he had ever before been confronted with the situation that confronted him at Cousins' switch on the day of the accident, or that he had ever been informed, or had ever learned, that a regular schedule train, arriving at a place where it had been directed by special order to meet an inferior train before the arrival of the latter, was bound to await such arrival, unless the special order was withdrawn or modified. Upon being made a conductor he was given a printed schedule or time-table of the various regular trains, on the back of which were printed what was styled "Time-Table Rules." A new time-table, to take effect October 5, 1903, at 12:01 a. m., was issued before the accident, and a copy placed in his hands. On this appears the schedule for his train "No. 5 Freight." At the bottom of the page, in large type, appeared the following: "North-bound trains are superior to and have the right of track over south-bound trains of same or inferior class." At the time of the accident his train was north-bound, while extra 4 was south-bound, and inferior to his train, under the express provisions of a rule printed on the back of the time-table. Among the other rules so printed on the back of such time-table was rule 8, providing that "inferior trains must keep out of the way of all superior trains," and rule 16, providing, "when the expected train is not found at the schedule meeting or passing point, the superior train will proceed on schedule; the inferior train will take siding and wait for the superior train." When Clark arrived at Cousins' switch, he had his special order in mind, as is fully shown by his compliance with that portion thereof requiring him to take on the "E. R. V. Lbr. Co.'s train," so that his action in proceeding with his train cannot be accounted for on the theory that he had forgotten the existence of any special order. In addition to this, Joseph Still, the fireman on train 5, testified that, before directing the engineer to move out from Cousins' switch, Clark told him (the engineer), "our instructions were to meet No. 4, but we are the superior train, and we will run on schedule, run on rule 16, and extra 4 will have to take siding and keep out of the way." It appears that this statement of Still was denied by Clark when he was recalled as a witness by defendant, and that Still was a brother of deceased, and also had a damage suit pending against defendant, arising out of the same accident, but we must assume that the jury believed the testimony of Still in this regard, and they were the sole judges as to his credibility. It also appeared that Still had given the same testimony in the presence of Clark on two previous trials of another action growing out of this accident, and that no denial thereof had then been made. Clark himself was not called by either party to testify at this trial as to the circumstances of the accident, or to explain why he had disregarded the "meet order." Of course, it is possible that Clark did know the full meaning and effect of such orders as applied to regular schedule trains, and that his proceeding on the day of the accident in violation of the order he had received was due simply to forgetfulness, and constituted merely an act of negligence on his part. But we have no doubt whatever that the evidence above set forth was sufficient to warrant a jury in concluding that he did not possess the knowledge that such an order superseded all schedules and printed rules in so far as such schedules and printed rules conflicted therewith, and that he believed that it was his duty to proceed from Cousins' switch with his regular schedule train under such printed rules, without waiting for the inferior train he had been directed to meet at that point. If they so concluded, they were necessarily compelled to find him to be incompetent to discharge the duties of the place to which he had been assigned.

This brings us to the question whether defendant used ordinary care in the selection of Clark as conductor of the freight train, or rather whether the evidence was such as to sustain the finding of the jury that it did not use ordinary care. Under all the authorities the term "ordinary care" as used in this connection means that degree of care that a man of ordinary prudence would use in view of the nature of the employment, and the consequences of the employment, of an incompetent person—a degree of care commensurate with the nature and danger of the business and the grade of service for which the servant is intended, and the hazards to which other servants are to be exposed from the employment of a careless or incompetent person. Wood's Law of Master and Servant, §§ 417, 418. In accord with this rule it is generally declared that, where the service in which the servant is employed is such as to endanger the lives and persons of co-employés if the servant is not competent, an employer is bound, in the exercise of ordinary care, upon the plainest principles of justice and good faith, to make a reasonable investigation into his character, skill, qualifications, and habits of life. See 1 Labatt's Master and Servant, § 194; Bailey's Personal Injuries, § 1407; Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ill. 472, 38 N. E. 241, 42 Am. St. Rep. 244; Mann v. D. & H. C. Co., 91 N. Y. 495. The question whether he has made such investigation as is reasonable under all the circumstances is peculiarly one for the jury. As has been said before, even where there is no conflict in the evidence on the question of negligence, if the conceded facts are such that reasonable minds might differ as to the conclusion to be drawn, the question is one of fact for the jury. See Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 271, 72 Pac. 1006. The presumption is that the employer has done his duty in this regard (Beaseley v. S. J. Fruit, etc., Co., 92 Cal. 388, 28 Pac. 485); and, as a general rule, the employer's knowledge of incompetency, or the fact that he would have obtained such knowledge had he made reasonable inquiry, must be shown by evidence independent of that showing the incompetency, and cannot be inferred therefrom. Mr. Labatt in his Master and Servant says that the latter rule is subject to certain qualifications, one of which is that the testimony by which the incompetency is established may be such as to warrant a conclusion that the employer either had notice of the incompetency, or omitted to make such inquiries as common prudence would have dictated (section 196), and that it seems impossible to deny that the delinquency which caused the injury may be of such a flagrant character that a jury might fairly infer that the master could not have failed to discover the servant's unfitness if proper inquiries had been instituted when he was hired. Section 199. See, also, Bailey on Personal Injuries, § 1419. In Murphy v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 71 Mo. 202, this is declared to be the law, and the statement is made that the inference is one of fact for the jury. In Lee v. Michigan C. R. Co., 87 Mich. 574, 49 N. W. 909, the evidence showing incompetency was of such a nature that the court said that proof that he was so incompetent when employed need not be supplemented by proof of the employer's knowledge thereof; the presumption that the employer had done his duty being overcome by the proof of incompetency. It further said that, where one, competent at the time of employment, becomes incompetent, or indulges in a habit which renders him incompetent during its indulgence, notice of the incompetency must be brought home, but that, where the incompetency existed at the time of the employment, proof of notice is not necessary. This was said in reference to one who had been employed only a few weeks. In Pleasants v. Raleigh, etc., R. Co., 121 N. C. 492, 28 S. E. 267, 61 Am. St. Rep. 674, the court said that there was no evidence that the defendant knew of the incompetency of Dunn when he was employed, except his action on the occasion of this fearful wreck, and the fact that he had been employed in this capacity only a few weeks, but that these facts raised such a presumption against the defendant as to make this an issue fit to be submitted to the jury under proper instructions. These are examples of decisions that support the statement of Mr. Labatt. If it be conceded that any of them states the rule in broader terms than is warranted, we think nevertheless that there can be no doubt under the authorities that the incompetency of an employé at the time of his employment may be of such a character that the evidence showing it will be legally sufficient to rebut the presumption that the employer used the requisite care in his selection, and make the question one for the jury. This is on the theory that the incompetency was of such a nature that a reasonable investigation would have disclosed it, and that, therefore, the employer either knew of it, or omitted to make such investigation, the same theory upon which evidence of general reputation of the employé for incompetency is admissible to show want of care on the part of the employer. See Gier v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 22; Gilman v. Eastern R. R. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 433, 441, 90 Am. Dec. 210. When we speak of the time of his employment, we mean the time when he was assigned to the particular employment. An employer is bound to institute affirmative inquiries in order to ascertain the qualifications of an employé whom he transfers to a more responsible position, for which special qualifications are demanded, unless the employé has given proof of his capacity in some similar position. Labatt, § 194. See, also, Mann v. Delaware, etc., Co., 91 N. Y. 495.

The rule we have just discussed appears to us to be peculiarly applicable to incompetency of the character found by the jury, on sufficient evidence, to exist in the present case, viz., want of knowledge by a conductor of a schedule train as to the meaning and effect of telegraphic orders referring to the movement of his train in relation to other trains on the road. The safety of all those associated with him is dependent on his having such knowledge, and the most ordinary care requires reasonable affirmative investigation, on the part of the employer, to ascertain that the employé has it, before assigning him to the employment. Where such incompetency is shown, it is a fair inference that a reasonable investigation would have disclosed it, when it could have been remedied by proper instruction. The uncontested showing by an employer, in response to the prima facie case thus made, may doubtless be such, in some cases, as to require the conclusion, as a matter of law, that the requisite investigation was made, and that the result thereof fully warranted the employer in selecting the culpable employé. But the record here presents no such case. There was evidence showing some inquiry by the trainmaster, and some discussion by him with Clark himself relative to the duties to be performed about the time he was first assigned as a conductor, but the evidence in this behalf relied on by defendant was such that, assuming it to be without conflict, reasonable men might well differ as to whether it showed such investigation as was requisite under the circumstances. The proposed conductor was being taken from the position of brakeman, on a road where, by reason of the fact that there was only one engine and one train crew, it was not essential for even a conductor to know anything about the rules and orders for the meeting and passing of trains. His service in that capacity on that road had continued for nearly two years next preceding his employment on the road where the accident occurred. His former employment on the road where the accident occurred had been several years before, and in capacities wherein he was not required to charge his mind with rules and orders relative to the meeting and passing of trains. His reputation as a careful and competent man, and the recommendation of Mr. Rose, the former trainmaster, amounted to no more than a showing that he was a competent railroad man within the lines of his knowledge and experience, and that he was the kind of man who might safely be made conductor of an extra train on defendant's road. Mr. Rose's statement to the trainmaster was substantially that he was a valuable man, and that he had promised him a conductorship of a gravel train on this road when the same was put on. There was nothing in all this to warrant the conclusion on the part of the trainmaster that, either by experience or actual instruction, Clark had acquired the adequate knowledge as to rules and orders relative to the meeting and passing of trains. The testimony as to the conversations between Clark and the trainmaster at and about the time of his employment is not of such a nature as to require a conclusion that the trainmaster was warranted in assuming that he had such knowledge, and the same must be said of the experience of Clark as conductor of the extra gravel train immediately prior to his employment as conductor of a regular freight train. A very clear knowledge, on the part of the conductor, of a regular schedule train as to the unprinted rule making a special "meet order" superior to all the printed "time-table rules" was especially essential, in view of the printed rules, which expressly declared extra trains "inferior to all regular trains," required "inferior trains" to keep out of the way of all "superior trains," and provided that, when the expected train is not found at the schedule meeting or passing point, the superior train will proceed on schedule time, and the inferior train will take siding and wait for the superior train.

The case of Gier v. Los Angeles, etc., 108 Cal. 129, 41 Pac. 22, is much relied on by learned counsel for defendant, but we see nothing therein that is in conflict with what we have said. As the court there said, the act producing injury in that case "was not one evincing 'incompetency,' employing the word strictly to denote a lack of skill or ability to use appliances or perform a duty in a workmanlike way, but was a single and signal exhibition of carelessness or recklessness," being the voluntary starting and sending ahead his electric car by a motorman under such circumstances that the car must strike the conductor who was standing at a switch. The motorman had been originally employed by the defendant as a driver of a horse car, and was subsequently trained as a motorman. At the time of his original employment, inquiry was made by the defendant of his former employers for whom he had acted in the capacity of driver of a horse car, and they had declared him "to be the best and most careful of men." It was in regard to such a case that the court said that defendant was not at fault in originally employing as a motorman a horse car driver without questioning him personally, inasmuch as it took pains to avail itself of evidence upon the matter, "disinterested and superior"—that of his former employers. But we do not desire to be understood as intimating that a personal examination of one about to be employed, even in such a responsible position as that of conductor of a railroad train, is always essential to the exercise of reasonable care. Such investigation as will warrant the assumption, under all the existing circumstances that the employé has adequate knowledge and qualifications is essential. Such an assumption may be warranted by the knowledge of the employer of the experience and reputation of the employé as to work calling for the knowledge and qualifications adequate to the discharge of the duties of the place, or by the recommendation of other persons on whom he is justified in relying. Each case must be determined on its own facts, and generally, as here, the question whether due care was exercised by the employer in this regard is one exclusively for the jury and trial judge. The verdict was not in conflict with any of the instructions.

The only other points made for reversal are as to the refusal of the trial court to give certain requested instructions to the jury. The first of these was one to the effect that, in determining the question of incompetency, the jury might take into consideration, "with other evidence" given on the trial, certain specified evidence. As to this instruction it is sufficient to say that no reason appears why the court should have singled out a portion of the evidence given on the issue of incompetency, and specially directed that it might be considered. Under their general instructions the jury must have known that this evidence, with all other evidence on the subject, was to be considered by them in determining the question. Instructions which are drawn solely for the purpose of, and which simply have the effect of, emphasizing some particular portion of the evidence, are not to be commended. The second, defendant's proposed instruction 9, was properly refused. While taken from the opinion in Gier v. Los Angeles, etc., supra, it was misleading as applied to the facts in this case, and assumed facts as to which there was a conflict in the evidence, if, indeed, one of such assumed facts was not wholly at variance therewith. If the third, defendant's proposed instruction 12, had been limited to the proposition suggested by learned counsel that, if defendant had made reasonable inquiry as to the fitness and competency of Clark at the time of his employment, with the result that Clark appeared to be competent, it had fulfilled its duty in the matter of selection, notwithstanding it was afterwards disclosed that Clark was in fact incompetent, it would doubtless have stated the law correctly. Such was the effect of other instructions given, as we read them. But by this proposed instruction it was attempted to have the court state what specific acts, inquiries, and information would constitute a reasonable investigation warranting the assumption of competency and requiring a conclusion that defendant had used proper care. We think this proposed statement would have been very misleading as applied to the evidence given on the trial, and that the court properly refused to give it.

The instructions given by the learned judge of the trial court were very complete and fair, and clearly and correctly stated the law applicable to the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(154 Cal. 573)

LOWE et al. v. SAN FRANCISCO & N. W. RY. CO. (S. F. 4,548.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 4, 1908. Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 997*)—REVIEW—DENIAL OF NONSUIT.

If all the evidence given by both parties, considered together, supports the verdict, an order denying a nonsuit will not be disturbed, however weak the case when plaintiff closed his evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4024; Dec. Dig. § 997.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 419*) — DENIAL OF NONSUIT — WAIVER OF ERROR.

Error in denying a nonsuit for want of testimony upon a material issue is waived by defendant proceeding and supplying the defect by evidence introduced by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 982; Dec. Dig. § 419.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—INCOMPETENCY OF FELLOW SERVANT—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, in an action against a railway company for death of a brakeman in a collision, held to sustain a finding that his conductor was incompetent, and that the company knew of such incompetency, or would have known of it if using ordinary care in employing him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 279*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CAUSE OF INJURY—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action against a railroad company for death of a brakeman in a collision, evidence held to sustain a finding that the accident was caused by the conductor's incompetency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 279.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*) — HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for death of a railway brakeman, based on the company's negligent promotion of one to be conductor, witnesses were asked whether the company examined persons promoted to be conductor, error in not striking witnesses' nonresponsive answers that "they" were not examined when they were promoted was harmless, where it was practically admitted that the first-mentioned conductor was not examined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4164; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*) — HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against a railway company for negligent death, any error in receiving evidence that, when a new schedule with rules governing trainmen printed thereon was issued, the rules were not explained to an engineer and a conductor was harmless, where it appeared the same rules had been in effect previously.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*) — HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railway company for negligent death, caused by a conductor's incompetency, any error in refusing an instruction that it was unnecessary to instruct him as to rules governing trains, if he had proved by his conduct that he understood all the rules and was competent, was harmless, where the jury found that he was incompetent, and where it did not appear that he had ever been previously placed in a situation like that confronting him at the time of the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1068*) — HARMLESS ERROR—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a company for an employe's negligence, any error in refusing an instruction that the company was not negligent in failing to examine the employe as to his competency, if his former employer, the company's predecessor recommended him, was harmless,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes where the jury found that the predecessor did not recommend him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4230; Dec. Dig. § 1068.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; W. G. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Myrtle Lowe and others against the San Francisco & Northwestern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gillett & Cutler, for appellant. Henry L. Ford, L. F. Burnell, and J. F. Quinn, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action brought by the surviving wife and minor children of Henry S. Lowe, deceased, against defendant, to recover the damages resulting to them from the death of said Lowe, such death being alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant.

Lowe was killed in the collision described in the opinion in Still et al. v. San Francisco & Northwestern Railway Company (S. F. 4,605, this day filed) 98 Pac. 672. He was at that time employed as a brakeman on regular freight train No. 5, under Conductor Clark. The claim of plaintiffs, as in the Still Case, was that Clark was incompetent to act as such conductor for the reason, shown in that case, that his incompetency was the cause of the accident, and that defendant had neglected to use ordinary care in his selection as such conductor. According to the record before us, learned counsel for defendant are in error in their statement that there was no allegation in the complaint of defendant's failure to exercise due care in the original selection of Clark as conductor, and that, according to the complaint, the claim was simply that defendant had retained an incompetent servant after knowledge of his incompetency, it being alleged in paragraph 9 of the first count of the complaint, that the defendant "did carelessly and negligently employ and retain said Peter Clark in its employ." The answers to the special issues submitted to the jury show that the jury adopted the theory that defendant was negligent in the selection of Clark to act as conductor of freight train 5. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case a motion for nonsuit was made, on the ground that plaintiffs had not made a sufficient case for the jury on the claim of incompetency on the part of Clark, and the failure of defendant to use ordinary care in his selection, and the ruling of the trial court denying this motion is assigned as error. It is not necessary to determine whether the trial court erred in this ruling. The motion for nonsuit having been denied, defendant proceeded with its defense, and introduced much evidence. If all the evidence given on the trial by both plaintiffs and defendant, considered together, sufficiently supports the verdict, "the order denying the motion for a nonsuit will not be disturbed, however weak the case may have been at the time plaintiff closed his evidence." Scrivani v. Dondero, 128 Cal. 31, 60 Pac. 463; Williams v. Long, 139 Cal. 186, 189, 72 Pac. 911. The rule is well settled that, if a motion for nonsuit for want of testimony upon any material fact has been erroneously overruled, and the defendant proceeds and supplies the defect by evidence which he himself introduces, the error committed in overruling the motion is waived. Elmore v. Elmore, 114 Cal. 516, 519, 46 Pac. 458; Higgins v. Ragsdale, 83 Cal. 219, 23 Pac. 316; Vica Valley, etc., R. R. v. Mansfield, 84 Cal. 560, 565, 24 Pac. 145; Schlesinger v. Mallard, 70 Cal. 326, 334, 11 Pac. 728; Abbey, etc., Association v. Willard, 48 Cal. 614, 617.

Under these circumstances, the principal question on this appeal is the same as that presented in the Still Case, viz., Was the evidence given on the trial sufficient to support the conclusion of the jury that Clark was incompetent to act as conductor of the train, that the accident was caused by his incompetency, and that the defendant either knew of such incompetency, or would have known of it if it had used ordinary care in the matter of his selection for that employment? The rules of law applicable in the consideration of these questions have been sufficiently stated in the opinion in the other case, and need not be again stated here. The evidence given on the trial as to the circumstances and cause of the accident, the prior experience and reputation of Clark as an employé of a railroad company, the time and circumstances of his employment by defendant on the road where the accident occurred, his promotion to the position of conductor of the gravel train, and his subsequent assignment as conductor of freight train 5, and his experience thereon prior to the accident, and the inquiries made and information received by defendant in relation to him prior to his selection as conductor, was substantially the same as that given in the Still Case. In one or two particulars defendant's case was somewhat weaker than in the Still Case. For instance, Clark, who was at the time of the trial in the employ of defendant, was not called as a witness at all, and the evidence of Joseph Still as to the statement made by Clark at Cousins' switch, when he ordered his engineer to proceed north with his train, being the same statement testified to in the Still Case, was not contradicted by any witness. Taking all the evidence together, we are satisfied, for the reasons stated in the opinion in the Still Case, that it cannot be held that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the conclusions of the jury and the trial judge.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Certain rulings in the matter of evidence are assigned as error. Witness Rolley, who had been promoted from brakeman to conductor, was asked if he knew whether or not the defendant "examined their conductors in promoting them from brakeman to the position of conductor." This was objected to by defendant, and the objection overruled, whereupon the witness answered, "Well, I don't know about any one else, but they never examined me." A motion to strike out the answer as not responsive, incompetent, and irrelevant, was denied. Witness Joseph Still, who said he had acted as conductor on some special occasions, was asked a similar question, and, over objection, answered, "Well, I never was examined upon the rules," and a motion to strike out the answer as not responsive, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial was denied. It may be conceded that the motions to strike out these answers should have been granted. But we do not see how they could have prejudiced defendant. Their utmost effect was to tend to show that defendant had not examined Clark prior to selecting him as a conductor. Defendant did not claim that it had examined him. It introduced evidence showing all that it had done in the way of acquiring information as to his qualifications, relying on that as sufficient to have warranted it in assuming that he was competent, and there was no intimation that it had attempted to examine Clark himself. It was thus practically an admitted fact that he had not been so examined, and the refusal to strike out the answers of Rolley and Still to the effect that they had not been examined was a mere technical error not warranting reversal. Nor, assuming the objections to have been good, can we see any prejudicial effect to defendant in the evidence of Mr. Porter, defendant's vice president and general manager, to the effect that, at the time the new schedule of October 5th with the rules printed thereon was given to Clark and his engineer, Mr. Thayer, the rules were not explained, and that he did not instruct the trainmaster to construe those rules to Messrs. Clark and Thayer. It clearly appeared that the same rules had been in existence and printed on the prior schedule in the hands of the employes for some three months preceding, and it is unreasonable to assume that any inference of negligence may have been drawn by the jury from the mere fact that, when reprinted on a new time-table, the employes were not further instructed regarding the same.

There was no prejudicial error in the refusal to give certain instructions.

The requested instruction 5 was one relative to the matter of instructing Clark in the rules, and telling the jury that, if they found certain facts to exist, there was no necessity for any such instruction, and the defendant was not negligent in failing to give it, or in examining him as to said rules. Among the facts so set forth was the following: That Clark had, during the time he was employed as conductor prior to the accident, "proved by his conduct and management of said trains that he thoroughly understood all of defendant's rules, * * * and that he was perfectly competent to manage the trains as a conductor thereof." The finding of the jury on the issue of incompetency disposed of the necessity for this instruction, assuming it to be a correct statement of the law. Under the facts of this case that finding necessarily implied that Clark had not "proved" by his conduct and management of trains that "he thoroughly understood all of its rules," and "that he was perfectly competent to manage the trains as a conductor thereof." If the evidence as to Clark's service during the few weeks prior to the accident was such as to prove that he in fact thoroughly understood all the rules, and was perfectly competent to manage the trains, the finding of incompetency could not be held to be sustained. As we said in the Still Case, the evidence as to his experience as a conductor was not such as to require the conclusion that he had ever been confronted with such a situation as confronted him on the day of the accident, or that he ever understood the effect of a "meet order" as against the printed rules relating to regular schedule trains. The most that can be said for defendant on that proposition is that there was a conflict in the evidence, which has been determined by the jury in favor of plaintiffs.

The requested instruction 6 was one to the effect that, if Clark was in the employ of the predecessor of defendant, and said former employer "recommended him to the defendant as a safe, careful, competent employe to take charge of trains, then it was not negligence, on the part of defendant, if it failed to examine said Clark as to his said competency at the time he entered its employ." Regardless of other points made against this instruction, the refusal to give it was not prejudicial. In response to a special question submitted to it, the jury found that the former employer of Clark did not recommend him as a competent person to act as conductor on one of its trains. This finding is specially attacked by learned counsel for defendant as not having support in the evidence, but we cannot so hold. The recommendation implied by the proposed instruction, and the question submitted to the jury, was one to the effect that Clark not only was competent and reliable within the lines of his knowledge and experience, but that he had an adequate knowledge as to the rules and orders under which trains were operated on that road—a sufficient knowledge to enable him to understand and apply the printed rules and orders that might be given to him in the course of his employment. The effect of the evidence as to the nature of the recommendation of Mr. Rose, the trainmaster of the former employer, was discussed in the opinion in the Still Case.

The requested instruction 3 was substantially that, if Clark was competent to act as conductor when employed in that capacity, defendant could not be found guilty of negligence in having failed to examine him as to his competency as to rules and time-tables, or in failing to instruct him therein. The alleged error in refusing to give this instruction is disposed of by the finding of incompetency.

What has been said in reference to the requested instruction 6 is applicable to the refusal to give requested instruction 18, which was an instruction to the effect that defendant was not negligent in employing Clark as conductor, if, among other things, his former employers recommended him "as a competent man to act as conductor."

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 238

PEOPLE v. GRINNELL. (Cr. 102.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 27, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 154*)—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER—INFIRMITIES ON FACE OF INDICTMENT—SUBJECTS OF DEMURRER.

Failure to demur or move in arrest of judgment waives those infirmities on the face of an indictment which are subject to special demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 501; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 154*)—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS—FAILURE TO STATE OFFENSE.

Failure to demur or move in arrest of judgment does not waive an objection that an indictment states no offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 501; Dec. Dig. § 154.*]

3. LEWDNESS (§ 5*)—INDICTMENT.

Pen. Code, § 228, makes it a felony to commit any lewd or lascivious act, other than the acts constituting other crimes, provided for in part 2 of the Code, upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under 14 years of age. An indictment alleged that defendant did "lewdly commit a lewd and lascivious act with the body of a child," etc. It did not specify the act, nor state that the act was one not constituting a crime provided for in part 2 of the Code. Held, that the indictment was fatally defective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lewdness, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

H. S. Grinnell was convicted of a violation of Pen. Code, § 288, and he appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Reversed.

L. E. Dadman, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. Defendant was convicted under an indictment charging him with the offense defined in section 288 of the Penal Code. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

At the trial the defendant interposed an objection to the introduction of evidence, upon the ground that the facts stated in the indictment did not constitute a public offense, which objection was overruled. Said section 288 is as follows: "Any person who shall willfully and lewdly commit any lewd or lascivious act other than the acts constituting other crimes provided for in part two of this Code upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years, with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person or of such child, shall be guilty of a felony and shall be imprisoned in the state prison not less than one year." The allegation in the indictment is that the defendant "did willfully and lewdly commit a lewd and lascivious act upon and with the body of a child under the age of 14 years, * * * with the intent," etc. Respondent contends that defendant's failure to demur to the indictment, or move in arrest of judgment, constitutes a waiver of all infirmities appearing upon the face of the indictment. We may concede this to be true as to those defects which are the subject of a special demurrer, but neither neglect to demur, nor the absence of a motion in arrest of judgment, can be deemed a waiver of an objection based upon the ground that the indictment does not state a public offense. Section 1012, Pen. Code. As said in People v. Smith, 103 Cal. 563, 37 Pac. 516: "This was a defect which was not waived by a failure to demur, but one which went to the very essence of the cause of action, and which might be raised at any point in the progress of the case."

Section 15 of the Penal Code defines a public offense as "an act committed or omitted in violation of a law forbidding or commanding it. * * *" The indictment purports to charge defendant with the crime designated in said section 288, but does not attempt to specify the particular acts which defendant must have committed in order to warrant his conviction. Nor does it describe the offense substantially in the language of the statute, in that it fails to state the act committed was not one constituting some other crime, provided in part 1 of the Penal Code (erroneously designated part 2). People v. Bradford, 1 Cal. App. 41, 81 Pac. 712. It is only lewd and lascivious acts other than the acts embraced in those other crimes which constitute a public offense under said section. The acts referred to in the exception "other than the acts," etc., are descriptive of and define the offense. Hence the indictment, in order to state the offense, must, unless it appear from particular acts described therein, negative any conclusion that the acts which defendant is charged with committing are those embraced in the exception. "The question is whether the exception is so incorporated with and becomes a part of the enactment as to constitute a part of the definition or description of the offense; for it is immaterial whether the exception or proviso be contained in the enacting clause or section, or be introduced in a different manner. It is the nature of the exception, and not its location, which determines the question. Neither does the question depend upon any distinction between the words 'provided' or 'except,' as they may be used in the statute. In either case the only inquiry arises whether the matter excepted, or that which is contained in the proviso, is so incorporated with as to become, in the manner above stated, a part of the enacting clause." State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60, 67 Am. Dec. 754; Ex parte Hornef (Cal.) 97 Pac. 891.

Defendant is entitled to the benefit of any inference, reasonably deducible from the facts charged, consistent with his innocence. The indictment, neither by a particular description of the act, nor by describing the offense substantially in the language of the statute, charges defendant with committing the lewd and lascivious acts described in the statute as constituting the crime, and for this reason fails to state a public offense.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 233

PEOPLE v. JOHNSON. (Cr. 123.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Oct. 27, 1908.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 61*)—COMPETENCY—HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1322, providing that neither husband nor wife shall be a competent witness for or against the other, except with the consent of both, or in case of criminal violence upon one by the other, if witness was the wife of defendant at the time of an assault, she is competent to testify; but, if she was not then his wife, but became such thereafter, she is incompetent without his consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where it does not appear whether defendant's wife was such at the time of an assault with intent to murder, and therefore whether she was competent or not as a witness, and she gave no testimony on the trial for the assault against him, defendant was not injured because she was sworn and asked whether she was his wife at the time of the assault, to which she replied that she could not remember.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1110*)—APPEAL—REVIEW.

An amendment of the bill of exceptions cannot be allowed under rule 14 of rules of the Supreme Court (78 Pac. x), providing that, if there is an error or defect in the transcript, the proper clerk may be required to certify to the Supreme Court the whole or part of the record, and the appeal be determined upon the amended record, where to do so would not be to review the trial court's action, but to pass upon a different case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1110.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1208*)—PUNISHMENT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The severity of the sentence and the placing of defendant on probation rest in the sound discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1208.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

William Johnson was convicted of an assault with intent to murder, and from the judgment, an order denying a new trial, an order denying probation, and the sentence, he appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel O'Connell and Milton T. U'Ren, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of assault to commit murder, and was sentenced to the penitentiary for the term of 10 years. This appeal is from the judgment, the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, the order denying probation, and from the sentence.

It is claimed that the trial court committed error in permitting a certain witness to be sworn and to be asked whether she was the wife of appellant (defendant). After having been sworn, no testimony on the subject having yet been introduced, the district attorney, over the objection and exception of the appellant, asked the witness whether or not she was the wife of the appellant at the time of the alleged assault, to which question she responded that she could not remember, whereupon the district attorney announced that he did not wish to further question the witness, and she gave no other testimony. Section 1322 of the Penal Code declares: "Neither husband or wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties, except with the consent of both, or in case of criminal violence upon one by the other. * * *" Under this section, as construed in People v. Curiale, 137 Cal. 534, 70 Pac. 468, 39 L. R. A. 588, if the witness was the wife of appellant at the time of the assault, she was competent to testify; whereas, if she was not his wife at the time, but (as is claimed in appellant's brief) became such afterward, she could not have testified for or against appellant without his consent. But the record in this case—and even the suggested diminution of the record—fail to show whether the witness was the wife of appellant at the time of the assault, and therefore whether she was competent or not as a witness, and, as she gave no testimony against him, we are unable to see wherein he was at all injured.

A diminution of the record has been suggested, and it is asked that the court permit the bill of exceptions to be amended by inserting therein certain testimony under rule 14 of this court (144 Cal. xlv, 78 Pac. x), providing that, where there is an error or defect in the transcript, the proper clerk may be required to certify to the appellate court the whole or part of the record, but the court has no power to vary or amend the transcript itself. Campbell v. Coburn, 77 Cal. 36, 18 Pac. 860; Thompson v. Patterson, 54 Cal. 546; Hanna v. De Garmo, 140 Cal. 174, 73 Pac. 830; Hayne on New Trial & Appeal, vol. 2, § 283. If we should allow the proposed amendment, and then determine this appeal upon the amended record, we would not be reviewing the action of the trial court, but would be passing upon a different case. Satterlee v. Bliss, 36 Cal. 521; Rogers v. Tennant, 45 Cal. 186. It may not be improper to say that we have examined the testimony which it is alleged was inadvertently omitted from the bill of exceptions, and we are of the opinion that if the testimony had been incorporated therein our conclusion would be the same, namely, that the court committed no error in regard to the examination of the wife of the appellant.

Appellant further claims that, upon the showing made, the sentence was too severe, and that he should have been placed on probation. Without discussing these matters at any greater length than counsel has, we will say that in our opinion these contentions are without merit. They concern matters which rested in the sound discretion of the trial court, which discretion does not appear to have been abused.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 267

PEOPLE v. HIGGINS. (Cr. 78.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Oct. 31, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1171*)—APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

It was not ground for reversal of the conviction that the district attorney in his argument referred to the failure of accused to testify, where the evidence was convincing, and the court promptly and clearly instructed the jury that they could draw no inference from the silence of accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3127; Dec. Dig. § 1171.*]

2. BURGLARY (§ 46*)—INSTRUCTIONS.

On a prosecution for burglary an instruction that if defendant made the entry charged "in the nighttime, between sunset and sunrise," he should be convicted, was not erroneous on the ground that it took from the jury the question whether the burglary was effected in the nighttime, but the instruction was proper as declaring as a matter of law the meaning of "nighttime" as defined by Pen. Code, § 463.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 114; Dec. Dig. § 46.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Charles Higgins was convicted of burglary, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

H. W. A. Weske, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary of the first degree, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The claim for a reversal of the judgment is based, principally, upon alleged misconduct of the district attorney in his address to the jury. Objection is also urged against one of the instructions given by the court.

The evidence presented by the record is conclusive of the guilt of the appellant. The place alleged and proven to have been burglariously entered by the accused was a saloon, located in a small town called Bloomfield, in Sonoma county. In addition to a number of strong circumstances pointing to the defendant's guilt, two witnesses positively testified that they saw him in the saloon after the proprietor had closed the establishment for the night. The defendant did not take the witness stand, nor did he offer any testimony contradictory to that introduced by the people.

During the course of his argument to the jury, the district attorney, among other things, said: "Then, in addition to that, was the other bottle which he has not yet found, and two beer bottles which were found, which correspond with the bottles which he had in stock. Now, then, it cannot be presumed for one moment—the defendant himself and no one in his behalf have seen fit to testify, or to contradict—" At this juncture the attorney for the defendant interposed an exception to the remarks of the district attorney, whereupon the court thus admonished the jury: "Yes, that should not be referred to at all. He is not called upon to take the stand. Gentlemen of the jury, you will entirely disregard that. You have no right to infer anything by reason of the matter commented upon. Do not touch that, Mr. Hoyle."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Cal. Rep. 98-101 P.—11

In view of the convincing character of the testimony presented by the people against the defendant, we do not think we would be justified in holding that the remarks of the district attorney involved misconduct on his part prejudicial to the accused. The district attorney had no right to refer either directly or indirectly to the defendant's silence. Under the law it was defendant's right either to become a witness or to refuse to take the stand, and his omission to testify could not, legally, be the basis of an unfavorable inference against him. And, in a case where the evidence is so slight that a verdict either of conviction or acquittal might be warranted, unfavorable criticism by the prosecuting officer in his address to the jury of the defendant's omission to testify in his own behalf ought to be, and we think would undoubtedly be, held sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment. In the case at bar, however, under the evidence as disclosed by the record, the jury could have consistently returned no other verdict against the accused than the one found. Besides, the court promptly and with clearness instructed the jury that the reference by the district attorney to the failure of the defendant to testify for himself was without legal justification, and that no inference militating against the appellant could lawfully be drawn by the jury from that circumstance.

In the case of the People v. Amer, 96 Pac. 401—a case decided by this court—a similar point was made by the appellant, and the language of the district attorney was much stronger against the accused than the language of which complaint is made here. In the opinion of the court, speaking through Justice Burnett, it is said: "But admitting that it is error for the district attorney to comment upon the circumstance, notwithstanding it is within the knowledge of the jury, and it is referred to by defendant's counsel and the judge of the court, it is clear in the case at bar that error was without prejudice. This follows from the nature of the evidence against the defendant. We shall not review it, but deem it sufficient to say that it is inconceivable that any honest jury could have found any other verdict, in the absence of any dereliction on the part of the district attorney. His objectionable remarks, in other words, could not have been considered nor used by the jury to the prejudice of the defendant." The foregoing observations are peculiarly applicable to the case at bar. For further authorities as to the rule under consideration, see 2 Ency.

Pleading and Practice, p. 725; People v. McRoberts, 1 Cal. App. 28, 81 Pac. 735; People v. Salas, 2 Cal. App. 540, 84 Pac. 295; State v. Ahern, 54 Minn. 196, 55 N. W. 959; People v. Bradbury, 151 Cal. 675, 91 Pac. 497.

The following is the instruction to which appellant objects upon the alleged ground that it involves a trespass upon the province of the jury in that it deals, so it is charged, with the facts: "If you are satisfied from the evidence herein beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime charged in the information herein, in the manner and form therein charged, and that he entered the said house and building with the felonious intent as charged, in the nighttime, during the period between sunset and sunrise, then your verdict should be burglary of the first degree."

The criticism specifically directed against the foregoing instruction is that its language is such that the question of fact of whether the burglarious entry of the building was effected in the day or the night time was taken from the jury and determined by the court. We do not so read the instruction. The Legislature has defined the meaning of the term "nighttime" as used in connection with the commission of the crime of burglary (section 463, Pen. Code), and a trial court remains strictly within its power and authority in the matter of instructing a jury in such a case as this when it declares that, as a matter of law, the "nighttime," as it is employed in that section, means the period between sunset and sunrise. This is all that the court did in the criticised instruction, and, in doing so, did not invade the province of the jury or the constitutional right of the accused to have the jury alone pass upon all the questions of fact in the case.

Some contention is also made that the only direct testimony offered against the accused was that of an accomplice, and that the circumstances and other testimony do not corroborate said accomplice as required by section 1111 of the Penal Code. As suggested in the beginning of this opinion, the testimony conclusively establishes the defendant's guilt. No doubt one of the witnesses was an accomplice, but there were, as before observed, strong circumstances proved against the accused, and, moreover, a witness, not an accomplice, Mrs. Lefevre by name, positively declared that she saw the defendant in the saloon after the proprietor had closed the place and saw him light several matches while in the building.

We see nothing in the record calling for a reversal of the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, J.; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 260

HANNON v. HARPER et al.

SAME v. LELANDE et al. (Civ. 408, 409.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 30, 1908.)1. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL (§ 58*)—ACTION TO COMPEL ISSUE OF LICENSE.

Proceedings to review the action of city officials in revoking plaintiff's license to conduct an employment agency, and to compel city officials to issue such a license, which is a mere personal right not assignable, and not assets of plaintiff's estate, abate upon his death without right of revivor in his personal representatives.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abatement and Revival, Dec. Dig. § 58.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 333*)—PARTIES—DEATH—ABATEMENT.

Where appellant dies after taking appeals in actions which abated upon his death, the appeals will be dismissed; the records presenting mere abstract questions, the determination of which could be of no practical benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1846-1850; Dec. Dig. § 333.*]

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Petitions by E. H. Crowley for a writ of review against A. C. Harper and others, as the Board of Police Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, and for a writ of mandate against H. J. Lelande, as Clerk of the City of Los Angeles, and others. From judgments denying the petitions, plaintiff appeals. Upon plaintiff's death subsequent to the appeals, his administrator, J. Vincent Hannon, was substituted. Appeals dismissed.

Isidore B. Dockweiler, for appellant. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., and John W. Shenk, Deputy City Atty., for respondents.

SHAW, J. The first of the above-entitled causes, No. 408, is an appeal from a judgment denying plaintiff's petition for a writ of review directed to said defendants in their capacity of, and as constituting, the board of police commissioners of the city of Los Angeles; said petition being based upon the alleged fact that said board had unlawfully made an order whereby it revoked the employment agency license which had theretofore been issued to and under which said Crowley was conducting an employment agency. The second entitled action, No. 409, is an appeal from a judgment denying plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandate requiring defendants, as officials of the city of Los Angeles, to issue to him a license and permit to conduct an employment agency in said city. In each case the respondents have filed a motion to dismiss the appeal upon the ground, supported by certificate of such fact, that since the taking of said appeal said Crowley has died, and said right of action is not one which survives to the personal representative of said deceased. The administrator of said deceased has been duly substituted as appellant in said proceedings, and the notice of said motions duly served upon him, but he has interposed no objection to the granting of said motions.

Neither case presents a cause of action which survives to or can benefit the estate of deceased. Conceding that deceased was entitled to have the proceedings of the board of police commissioners, whereby they revoked his license, set aside and annulled, and likewise conceding that he was entitled to have issued to him the license as prayed for in his petition for writ of mandate, they were nevertheless personal rights and privileges not assignable and not assets of his estate. Buck's Estate, 185 Pa. 57, 39 Atl. 821, 64 Am. St. Rep. 816. The proceedings belong to that class of actions which, upon the death of plaintiff, abate without right of revivor in the personal representative of the deceased. Booze v. Humbird, 27 Md. 1. For the reasons given, the records present mere abstract questions, the determination of which could be of no practical benefit to any one. Bradley v. Voorsanger, 143 Cal. 214, 76 Pac. 1031.

Appeals dismissed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 236

McDOUGALD v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.
(Civ. 476.)(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Oct. 27, 1908.)EVIDENCE (§ 67*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

In an action for damages to land from the construction of a railroad embankment thereon, Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32, providing that a thing once shown to exist is presumed to continue as long as is usual with things of that nature, does not render evidence of the value of the land at the time of trial sufficient to support a finding as to the value of the land at time the damage accrued.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 88; Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by Carrie B. McDougald against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. F. Buck and Buck, Miller & Clark, for appellant. Budd & Thompson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover damages caused by the construction of a certain railroad drawbridge and embankment in front of, and partly upon, the premises of plaintiff.

The vital finding upon which the judgment rests is: "That said real property in finding 2 described was prior to and at the time of the acts of the defendant hereinafter mentioned of the value of $2,624, and that by reason of the works and acts of the defendant hereinafter mentioned the said real property has been depreciated in value, and plaintiff has thereby been and is damaged in the sum of $1,200." This finding is assailed by appellant as unsupported by the evidence. It is declared that "the only testimony in the record in regard to the value of plaintiff's property at that time is the testimony of witness Boggs, and he placed the value of said property at said time at $500." The only answer to this contention made by respondent is that "the evidence fully justifies the findings." We are not pointed to any part of the transcript wherein may be found any testimony inconsistent with that given by witness Boggs. Our own examination of the record has served to confirm the contention of appellant. Indeed, Boggs seems to have been the only witness who testified to the value of the property at the time mentioned in said finding. It is true certain witnesses gave their opinion as to what the property would be worth at the time of the trial without the obstructions caused by defendant. For instance, C. M. Weber was asked this question: "What in your opinion is the market value of this tract of land of the plaintiff, eliminating from consideration the railroad bridge and embankment as shown on this plat?" But the answer is not evidence of the value of the property at the time mentioned in said finding, for the reason that the trial took place more than three years afterwards. Evidence of the value of property to-day cannot be sufficient of itself to show the value nearly four years ago. There is no room for the presumption of subdivision 32, § 1963, of the Code of Civil Procedure, "that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature," as that is prospective and not retrospective. In view of the rapid and radical fluctuations in values characterizing our growing communities, which is a matter of common knowledge, it cannot be said that this evidence is sufficient to support said finding. The court proceeded upon the theory that damages could be shown as of the date of the trial. Conceding this view to be correct, nevertheless, there is no finding as to what the property would be worth without the obstruction at the time of the trial. In the one respect therefore there is a finding without evidence, and, in the other, evidence without any corresponding finding or allegation in the complaint. Hence the judgment lacks adequate support.

If the other questions discussed arise upon a new trial, we assume that they will be correctly decided, and we deem it unnecessary therefore to consider them.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

9 Cal. App. 262

PEOPLE v. COOMBS. (Cr. 71.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Oct. 31, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1114*)—APPEAL—RECORD—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

In a prosecution of an elector for perjury in misstating the place of his birth in an affidavit for registration, an objection that the complaining witness is but a year older than accused, and that therefore his statement in the complaint that accused was born at a designated place could not have been based on personal knowledge, and must have been made on information and belief, cannot be considered on appeal, where the record fails to show the age of the complaining witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1114.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 238*)—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT COMMITMENT—"SUFFICIENT CAUSE"—"PROBABLE CAUSE."

Under Pen. Code, § 872, providing that if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe defendant guilty, the magistrate must issue the commitment, evidence that accused on June 16, 1906, stated, in the affidavit to secure registration as a voter, that he was born in England, and on January 31, 1908, stated, in a similar affidavit, that he was born in San Francisco, was sufficient to justify an order of commitment; the term "sufficient cause," as used in the statute, being equivalent to the term "probable cause," as used in the habeas corpus act. Pen. Code, § 1487.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 238.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5618-5627; vol. 8, p. 7765; vol. 7, pp. 6760, 6761.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. D. Goodwin, Judge.

William Gulliver Coombs was charged with perjury, and from an order setting aside the information, the People appeal. Reversed and remanded.

M. C. Kerr, Dist. Atty., U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People. W. W. Kellogg and J. D. McLaughlin, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of perjury alleged to have been committed in registering as a voter. When called upon to plead in the superior court, he demurred to the information, and also filed a motion to set it aside upon the following grounds: That prior to the filing of the information against him he had not been legally committed by a magistrate because of the insufficiency of the complaint filed in the magistrate's court. This alleged insufficiency consisted in the claim that the said complaint was not based upon the personal knowledge of the complaining witness; that no depositions of persons knowing the facts of the case of their own personal knowledge were attached to said complaint or made part thereof, and hence the issuance of the warrant of arrest was illegal and void; that the commitment and the succeeding proceedings were illegal and void; "that the testimony of the two witnesses, H. P. McBeth and W. M. Cleveland, consisted entirely of questions and answers touching their qualifications to administer oaths and regarding statements made by defendant at two different times and in a manner contradictory to each other, but no attempt was made or was any evidence offered to prove which of the two statements was true or which was false." The information charged that defendant, in making oath at the time his name was placed upon the great register, in 1908, declared that he was born in San Francisco, Cal.; whereas, in truth he was born in England. No objection was made as to the sufficiency in point of form either of the information, the warrant of arrest, or commitment; but it was further objected "that, though the complaint (filed in the magistrate's court) appears on its face as sworn to that M. C. Kerr, the complainant (district attorney), makes complaint upon his own personal knowledge, and not upon information and belief, his affidavit of registration on file in the office of the county clerk of Plumas county shows that at the time of the birth of the defendant the complaining witness was an infant of the age of about one year," and hence he could not have made the complaint otherwise than upon information and belief, which it is claimed is wholly insufficient. The trial court made an order setting aside the information, and the people appeal. The testimony of County Clerk McBeth and his deputy, Cleveland, was that the defendant registered in 1906, making oath that he was born in England, and that upon registering in 1908 he made oath that he was born in San Francisco, Cal. The respondent has filed no brief.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

As to the objection to the complaint that it was made upon information and belief, the record fails to support the claim that the complainant was at the birth of defendant too young to personally know where defendant was born, and hence must have deposed upon information and belief only. If such was the fact, it should have been made to appear, for error will not be presumed. For all that appears, the complaining witness was a much older man when he swore to the complaint than as stated in the objection made. We must assume it to be true that the complaining witness deposed from personal knowledge, as the complaint on its face so shows. The question therefore whether a complaint charging perjury upon information and belief, otherwise unsupported, is insufficient in law, is not before us for review.

But it was urged in support of the motion that the evidence taken before the magistrate was wholly insufficient to justify the making of the order of commitment. It was proved that on January 31, 1908, defendant signed and verified an affidavit stating that he was born in San Francisco, Cal. It was also proven that on June 16, 1906, he had signed and verified an affidavit stating that he was born in England and had been naturalized in San Francisco. We think there was enough in the two contradicting affidavits of defendant to establish probable cause for holding him to answer the charge made. Section 872, Pen. Code, provides that if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof, the magistrate must issue the commitment. The terms "sufficient cause" here mentioned mean, we think, about the same as the terms "probable cause" in the habeas corpus act. Pen. Code, § 1487. We held in the Matter of Jesse Heacock (Cal. App.) 97 Pac. 77, that, though the evidence was insufficient to warrant conviction, it was sufficient to establish probable cause. So here the evidence shows that there was sufficient cause appearing to the magistrate that a public offense had been committed, and that the defendant was guilty thereof.

The Attorney General makes the point that insufficiency of the evidence is not mentioned among the statutory grounds (Pen. Code § 995) upon which an information may be set aside, and hence the court was without the power to consider the objection. We do not find it necessary to decide the question.

The order setting aside the information is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

We concur: HART, J; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 223
DENIKE v. SANTA CLARA VALLEY AGR.
SOCIETY et al. (Civ. 590.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Oct. 23, 1908.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 179*)—PLEADING—FRAUD.

In an action to set aside deeds for fraud, an allegation that plaintiff did not know or have notice of, or have the means of knowing or discovering, said acts of fraud until within three years next before the commencement of this action, is too general to take the action out of the statute barring actions for fraud after three years, and especially where the deeds attacked have been recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 668; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 179*)—FRAUD—DISCOVERY—PLEADING.

To take a case based on fraud out of the statute of limitations by reason of nondiscovery of the fraud, plaintiff must allege that the fraud was done under such circumstances that he would not be presumed to have any knowledge of them—as that it was done in secret or was kept concealed—and he must allege, also, when and how the facts constituting the fraud were brought to his knowledge, so that the court may determine whether the discovery of these facts was within the time alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 668; Dec. Dig. § 179.*]

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 37*)—GROUNDS—FRAUD—PLEADING—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

Where, in an action to set aside deeds as fraudulent, plaintiff alleges facts showing the transfer of title down to the only defendant having possession of the property, and shows that defendants acquired title by purchase from the grantees in deeds claimed to be fraudulent, but does not allege that the defendants were not bona fide purchasers for value, he fails to state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

4. EJECTMENT (§ 23*)—TITLE—SOURCES—DEFENSES.

Where defendant, in a suit to set aside deeds and to recover possession of land, obtained title both through a deed from an agricultural society and through a sale on execution on judgments against the society, the fact that the acts of the society as to the deed were ultra vires is immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

5. EXECUTION (§ 50*)—ORGANIZATION OF SOCIETIES—POWER TO DISPOSE OF LANDS.

Under the express provisions of St. 1859, p. 104, c. 110, agricultural societies organized under the act have authority to sell, lease, and dispose of its lands at pleasure, and hence its lands could be sold under execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by A. R. Denike against the Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society and others to set aside a judgment and deeds, and to recover the possession of land. From a judgment on sustaining demurrers to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. P. Veuve, for appellant. Olney & Olney and E. M. Rea, for respondents.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from final judgment against him upon defendants' demurrers to his amended complaint, and the only question presented by the record concerns the correctness of the ruling of the court in sustaining said demurrers.

The action was brought for the benefit of the defendant Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society, a corporation organized and still existing under and by virtue of the act entitled "An act concerning agricultural societies," approved March 12, 1859, plaintiff suing as a life member of said corporation, and making the members of the board of directors and several life members thereof, as well as said corporation, formal defendants. The other defendants are San Jose Land & Exhibit Association, a corporation, Peninsula Land & Improvement Company, a corporation, San Jose & Santa Clara Railroad Company, a corporation, E. M. Rea, and L. E. Hanchett.

The action was brought to obtain a decree:

- (1) Vacating and annulling a certain judgment made and entered on the 18th day of May, 1899, in favor of W. C. Andrews, and against the Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society, and all proceedings founded thereon, including the sheriff's deed of the land described in the complaint executed in pursuance of a sale to satisfy said judgment;
- (2) vacating a deed to the said premises executed by the said Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society on the 7th day of June, 1900;
- (3) that said Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society have and recover possession of the premises described in the complaint;
- (4) and that said society recover of the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company the sum of $1,000 as the value of the rents and profits of said premises.

The defendant, the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company, appeared separately, and demurred to the amended complaint upon the grounds that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and upon the ground that the supposed cause of action is barred by subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The other defendants also demurred to the amended complaint upon the same grounds. The court sustained the demurrers upon both grounds, and rendered judgment against plaintiff.

If the action be treated as an action for relief on the ground of fraud, it was clearly barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, requiring such an action to be brought within three years from the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud. The complaint charges that the judgment and deeds sought to be vacated were procured and executed through alleged fraud on the part of the officers of the agricultural society and others of the defendants. But these alleged frauds occurred prior to and during the year 1900. The precise date when this action was commenced does not appear from the record brought here by appellant, but the amended complaint appears to have been filed on the 12th day of June, 1907. Respondent in its brief states that the original complaint was filed on the 19th day of February, 1907, and appellant has not challenged this statement. We therefore assume it to be true. At any rate the action was commenced after the 3d day of November, 1906, for the complaint alleges that a transfer of a right of way to one of the defendants occurred on that day.

The only allegation as to when the plaintiff learned of the frauds complained of is that "the plaintiff did not know, nor have notice of or have the means of knowing or discovering, said acts of fraud hereinbefore specifically alleged until within three years next before the commencement of this action." Such general allegation is insufficient to take an action for relief on the ground of fraud, occurring more than three years before the commencement of the action, out of the bar of the statute. People v. San Joaquin Valley Agr. Ass'n, 151 Cal. 797, 91 Pac. 740; Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 589, 53 Pac. 26; Lady Washington Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 486, 45 Pac. 809; Lant v. Manley (C. C.) 71 Fed. 7. "He must show that the acts of fraud were committed under such circumstances that he would not be presumed to have any knowledge of them—as that they were done in secret, or were kept concealed; and he must also show the times and circumstances under which the facts constituting the fraud were brought to his knowledge, so that the court may determine whether the discovery of these facts was within the time alleged." Lady Washington Co. v. Wood, supra; People v. San Joaquin Valley Agr. Ass'n, supra. Especially is this rule applicable where it appears, as it does in the complaint here, that the deeds attacked were recorded in the recorder's office. Lant v. Manley, supra. The complaint in this case in no respect complies with the rule laid down in the above-cited cases.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The appellant, however, takes the position that this is an action to recover the possession of land, and that the statute barring actions for fraud after three years does not apply; citing Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820. The only defendant who is charged to be in possession of the premises is the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company. It is not claimed that any of the other defendants are now in possession of the land, or have ever been in possession of any part of it, save that the railroad corporation defendant has, since the entry of the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company, received from it a grant of a right of way across the premises. As to the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company, it appears from the complaint that it derails title to the premises in question from the defendant Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society through the judgment and the two deeds sought to be declared fraudulent and void. The two deeds in question were executed to defendant San Jose Land & Exhibit Association, and it in turn conveyed to defendant E. M. Rea. Thereafter E. M. Rea and his wife in November, 1905, conveyed to defendant L. E. Hanchett, and on the 31st day of March, 1906, said Hanchett conveyed the premises to defendant the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company. These facts are alleged in the complaint, but it is not alleged that either Hanchett or defendant Peninsula Land & Improvement Company were not purchasers for value, or that they or either of them had any notice of the alleged frauds now complained of, or were in any way parties thereto. It appears from the complaint that defendant Peninsula Land & Improvement Company entered into possession of the premises under its deed from Hanchett. It must be assumed that plaintiff has stated his cause of action as strongly as the facts will warrant, and we must therefore assume that the Peninsula Land & Improvement Company is a bona fide purchaser for value. This being so, its title is good against plaintiff and the defendant for which he sues. Morrow v. Graves, 77 Cal. 218, 19 Pac. 489; 2 Pom. Eq. § 754. See, also, Pratt v. Curtis, Fed. Cas. No. 11,375, where it was held that, where a subsequent purchaser of land alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed is made defendant in a bill to set aside the conveyance, he must be charged with participation in or knowledge of the fraud.

The general allegations in the complaint that certain of the acts of the officers of the Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Society were ultra vires do not strengthen the case of plaintiff against defendant Peninsula Land & Improvement Company, for said company holds title both under the deed of the society and the sheriff's deed upon execution under the judgment against the society. The act under which the society was organized expressly authorizes it "to sell, lease and dispose of" its lands "at pleasure" (St. 1859, p. 104, c. 110), and not being a public corporation, such as are societies organized under the act of 1880 (People v. San Joaquin Valley Agr. Ass'n), its lands could be sold upon execution. The whole case of plaintiff resolves itself into an attempt to recover from the possession of a subsequent bona fide purchaser for value, land, the title to which may have been obtained from the defendant society (for the benefit of which plaintiff sues), by frauds of some of the grantors of the present possessor and owner of such title. Such an action cannot be maintained. Morrow v. Graves, supra; Pratt v. Curtis, supra; 2 Pom. Eq. § 754.

For the reasons above stated, the court did not err in sustaining the demurrers, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

by the obstruction, which, under Civ. Code, § 3490, cannot by lapse of time be legalized, and the public officers charged with the duty of removing obstructions from streets may remove the same on the refusal of the owner so to do.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1498; Dec. Dig. § 696.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Valentine Nerio and others against Frank A. Maestretti and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. S. Peery and Jas. G. Conlan, for appellants. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and John T. Nourse, Asst. City Atty., for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs, seeking to enjoin the defendants, constituting the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco, from an alleged unlawful interference with their property. The facts found by the court are that plaintiffs had erected houses upon a part of a public street of the city and county of San Francisco; that the board of public works had given notice to the plaintiffs to remove these structures and abate the nuisance created by them; that, upon plaintiffs' failure and refusal so to do, the board of public works entered and proceeded to remove the obstructions, using no more force than was necessary so to do; that the board of public works in so demolishing plaintiffs' buildings was authorized and empowered so to do by the laws of the state of California, wherein and whereby the said board of public works was charged with the duty of removing obstructions from the public streets of the city and county.

The appeal here is from the judgment and upon the judgment roll alone, and the appeal is entirely without merit. The findings abundantly support the judgment. The continued occupation by plaintiffs of a portion of the public street was but the continuance of a nuisance. No lapse of time can legalize a public nuisance amounting to an actual obstruction of a public right. Civ. Code, § 3490.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(154 Cal. 580)

NERIO et al. v. MAESTRETTI et al.
(S. F. 4,787.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 4, 1909.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 696*)—STREETS—OBSTRUCTIONS—NUISANCE.

The continued occupation by one of a portion of a public street by maintaining a house thereon is a continuance of a nuisance created

PEOPLE v. MESKEL. (Cr. 1480.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1090*)—APPEAL—AFFIRMANCE.

Where accused appealed from a conviction of murder, but no briefs were filed nor appearance made for him in the Supreme Court, and the transcript contained only the information, judgment, and instructions, in which there was no substantial error, the judgment must be affirmed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2807; Dec. Dig. § 1090.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Daniel F. Meskel was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Smyser, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant was convicted of murder of the first degree and sentenced to death. His motion for a new trial in the court below was denied. He appeals from the final judgment and from the order denying his motion.

No briefs have been filed in his behalf and upon the hearing of the cause in this court there was no appearance for him. The cause was submitted by the Attorney General without briefs and without argument. No bill of exceptions was filed in the court below, and the evidence is not before us. The transcript contains only the information, the judgment, and the instructions given by the court. After a careful examination of the record, we find no substantial error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

9 Cal. App. 244

PEOPLE v. BOTKIN. (Cr. 68.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 29, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1186*)—APPEAL—DESTRUCTION OF PART OF RECORD—BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR.

Photographic copies of writings introduced on a trial for murder, some as made by defendant and tending to connect her with the homicide, and others as exemplars of her handwriting used by expert witnesses in making comparisons with disputed writings, were made by the bill of exceptions a part thereof, but after settlement of the bill were destroyed by fire, and could not be restored. Held, that a reversal of a conviction was not required on the ground that the entire record could not be presented to the Supreme Court, as it was incumbent on defendant to show error, and the court could not presume that he did not have a fair trial because a portion of the record had been destroyed without fault of either party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1186.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1186*)—APPEAL—RECORD—REVERSAL.

A reversal was not required, where the only apparent purpose of including in the record photographic copies of writings, made by defendant and destroyed after the record was made up, was to enable the Supreme Court to judge of the weight of the evidence to the effect that defendant was the author of the incriminating writings, and to make comparisons, and where, under the condition of the evidence tending to connect defendant with the homicide, any views which the Supreme Court might have as to the credit that should be given to the handwriting experts and the witnesses who testified that, in their opinion, the incriminating writings were written by defendant would not justify the Supreme Court in reversing the conviction by the jury who heard and saw all the witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1186.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 112*)—VENUE—CRIME COMMITTED IN PART IN STATE.

Where poisoned candy is prepared in and sent from the state to a person in another state in which it is eaten, and such person dies, the homicide is committed in part in the state, within Pen. Code, § 27, making a person amenable to the penal laws of the state who in whole or in part commits a crime therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 230; Dec. Dig. § 112.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1180*)—DECISION ON FORMER APPEAL.

A decision on a former appeal is conclusive on a subsequent appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3002-3004; Dec. Dig. § 1180.*]

5. JURY (§ 33*)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY.

Where poisoned candy was prepared in and sent from the state to a person in another state in which it was eaten, and such person died, the homicide was committed in part in the state, within Pen. Code, § 27, making a person amenable to the penal laws of the state, who in whole or in part commits a crime therein, and a trial in the state did not deprive defendant of the right of trial by jury secured by Const. art. 1, §§ 7, 13, on the ground that no crime was committed in the state, but in such other state, and that the jury must be selected from the county where the crime is committed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 33.*]

6. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 2*)—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. U. S. 5th Amend., providing that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment, has reference only to the United States, and not to the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 162*)—FORMER JEOPARDY—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. U. S. 5th Amend., providing that no person shall be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy, has reference only to the United States, and not to the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 285; Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 293*)—PRIVILEGE—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. U. S. 5th Amend., providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself, has reference only to the United States, and not to the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1013; Dec. Dig. § 293.*]

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 251*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

Const. U. S. 5th Amend., providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, has reference only to the United States, and not to the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutions¹ Law, Cent. Dig. § 727; Dec. Dig. § 251.*]

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

10. JURY (§ 11*)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY.

Const. U. S. 6th Amend., providing that in all criminal prosecutions accused shall enjoy the right of trial by a jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, has reference only to the United States, and not to the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 23; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

11. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 67*)—APPLICABILITY OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION—STATES.

Const. U. S. art. 3, relative to the judicial department of the federal government, has reference only to the United States, and not to the states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 67.*]

12. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 207*)—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES OF CITIZENS OF THE SEVERAL STATES.

Pen. Code, § 27, making a person amenable to the penal laws of the state, who in whole or in part commits a crime therein, is not in violation of Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, providing that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

13. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 259*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—VENUE.

Pen. Code, § 27, making a person amenable to the penal laws of the state, who in whole or in part commits a crime therein, is not in violation of Const. U. S. 14th Amend. § 1, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 750; Dec. Dig. § 259.*]

14. HOMICIDE (§ 166*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—MOTIVE.

On a trial for murder, evidence that close, intimate, and meretricious relations had existed between defendant and decedent's husband was properly admitted upon the question of motive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 327; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

On a trial for murder by sending poisoned candy, evidence that decedent on opening the box, had said that she wondered whom it was from, if not strictly admissible because being hearsay, was too trivial in character to require a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3137; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

16. HOMICIDE (§ 175*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial for murder by sending poisoned candy, evidence by witnesses who had partaken thereof that shortly thereafter they had symptoms of arsenical poisoning was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 448*)—EVIDENCE—BELIEF OF WITNESS.

On a trial for murder by sending poisoned candy, an objection that a witness who, according to the state's theory, as an employé of certain candy manufacturers, sold the candy was permitted to testify that defendant reminded her of the person to whom she had sold the candy went to the weight of her testimony, rather than its admissibility; witness' whole testimony being to the effect that she believed defendant the purchaser, but could not be sure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 448.*]

18. HOMICIDE (§ 173*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial for murder by sending poisoned candy, evidence by candy makers that no arsenic or other poison was used in making candy at the factory at which they were employed was properly admitted; there being evidence to show that the candy came from such factory, and was strongly charged with arsenic when received by decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

19. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error, if any, in permitting the state to prove that on the first trial defendant's attorney, in her presence, admitted writings introduced on the second trial as exemplars of defendant's handwriting to be in her handwriting was cured, where defendant thereafter testified that the exemplars were in her handwriting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3138; Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

20. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

The characterization by the district attorney of a question, asked by defendant's attorney, as a cowardly statement will not justify a reversal, where the court at once instructed the jury that such remark was not evidence, and was not to be considered and should be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

21. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

The use of a microscope by the district attorney, during his argument on a trial for murder by sending poisoned candy, will not justify a reversal, where defendant's objection thereto was sustained, and the jury admonished not to allow the district attorney's action to influence them, and to render their verdict upon the evidence and the law, and upon nothing else.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

22. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 730*)—TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF COUNSEL.

Reference by the district attorney to another case will not justify a reversal, where the court sustained defendant's objection thereto, and admonished the jury that, when other cases were mentioned and such remarks made, they were not to be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1693; Dec. Dig. § 730.*]

23. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 768*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY OF JURORS.

An instruction that, "If you do so, no harm can come from my errors, if I commit any, for a Supreme Court sits to correct them, and the jury should not assume to exercise the functions of that tribunal," given at the close of an instruction that the jury must determine all questions of fact, but must receive the law from the court, but emphasized what had been said as to the duty of the jury to be governed by the court's instructions, and contained no erroneous statement of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1798-1802; Dec. Dig. § 768.*]

24. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 783*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—LIMITING EFFECT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction, on a trial for murder by sending poisoned candy, concerning evidence that close, intimate, and meretricious relations had existed between defendant and decedent's husband was proper, and designed to limit the effect of such evidence to the proof of motive, and

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes protect defendant from the possibility that the jury might allow it to otherwise prejudice her.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 783.*]

25. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 778*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS AS TO INTENT.

An instruction on a trial for murder in the express language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 1, that a malicious and guilty intent is conclusively presumed from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1850; Dec. Dig. § 778.*]

26. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 782*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT AND EFFECT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction that the jury were not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which did not produce conviction in their minds against a less number, or against a presumption of law, or other evidence satisfying them; in other words, that it was not the greater number of witnesses that should control where their testimony was not satisfactory to the jury against a less number whose testimony did satisfy them, and that it was upon the quality, rather than the quantity or number, of witnesses that the jury should act—was, as to the first part, in the express language of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, and what the court added was but an amplification thereof, and was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 782.*]

27. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—INSTRUCTIONS—"REASONABLE DOUBT."

An instruction that the term "reasonable doubt" does not mean a "mere possible doubt, a conjectural doubt," nor "a doubt which is merely capricious," when read in connection with a preceding instruction that a reasonable doubt is that state of the case which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves the minds of the jurors in that condition that they cannot say they feel an abiding conviction to a moral certainty that defendant committed the offense, was entirely correct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 5958-5972; vol. 8, p. 7779.]

28. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 811*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction that, in considering the weight and effect to be given to the testimony of witnesses, the jurors have the right to consider the consequences resulting to a witness from the result of the trial is not open to the criticism that it singles out defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 811.*]

29. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1137*)—APPEAL—INSTRUCTIONS—MOTIVE—ESTOPPEL TO ALLEGE ERROR.

Defendant, having asked and obtained an instruction that absence of motive is a circumstance in favor of innocence, cannot complain that the court gave a correlative instruction as to the presence of motive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1137.*]

30. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 768*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY OF JURY.

General observations by the court, intended to guard the jury against being moved by pity for defendant, or prejudice or passion that might be caused by the heinous nature of the crime, and to impress upon them the serious nature of their duties, were not open to criticism.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1798; Dec. Dig. § 768.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

Cordelia Botkin was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, and also an order denying a motion in arrest of judgment, she appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. A. Knight, Frank McGowan, and Knight & Heggerty, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and thereupon made a motion for a new trial, and also a motion in arrest of judgment. Both motions were by the court denied, and final judgment was pronounced that she suffer imprisonment for life in accordance with the verdict of the jury. This is an appeal from the judgment and from the orders denying said motions.

Defendant was convicted for the killing of one Mary Elizabeth Dunning, otherwise known as Mrs. John P. Dunning. The manner in which the death of Mrs. Dunning was accomplished is fully set forth in the indictment, from which it appears that, on or about the 4th day of August, 1898, defendant, at the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, prepared and sent through the United States mail certain poisoned candy to Mrs. Dunning, at Dover, in the county of Kent, in the state of Delaware, where it was by Mrs. Dunning received and eaten, and from the effects of which she, on the 12th day of August, 1898, at Dover, in said county of Kent, state of Delaware, died. Defendant was once before convicted under this indictment, but upon appeal the judgment was reversed because of an erroneous instruction. People v. Botkin, 132 Cal. 231, 64 Pac. 286, 84 Am. St. Rep. 39.

A. The first point urged for a reversal of the judgment is that, without the fault of defendant, a part of the record on appeal was destroyed in the conflagration of April 18, 1906. Upon the trial certain writings were introduced in evidence. Some of these were writings claimed to have been made by defendant, and tending to connect her with the killing of Mrs. Dunning, and others were exemplars of her handwriting used by expert witnesses in making comparisons with the incriminating and disputed writings. From the bill of exceptions in this case it appears that photographic copies of these exhibits were made upon the former trial, and were filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court. These photographic copies of exhibits are by the present bill made a part thereof, but since the settlement of the bill were destroyed by the conflagration of April 18, 1906, and cannot now be restored. It is now urged that because the entire record cannot now be presented to this court, we should reverse the judgment and remand the case for a new trial. No authority is cited in support of this position, and we know of none that could be. It is incumbent on the appellant to show error, and we know of no rule that permits us to presume that defendant did not have a fair trial because a portion of the record upon her appeal has been destroyed without fault of either party. Furthermore, an examination of the bill of exceptions shows that, so far as the writings appear to have been read to the jury, their contents are set forth in the bill of exceptions. The only apparent purpose of making the photographic copies of the writings a part of the record on appeal was to enable this court to judge of the weight and effect of the evidence to the effect that defendant was the author of the incriminating writings, and to enable this court to make comparisons between the exemplars of defendant's writing and the incriminating writings. Under the condition of the evidence in this case, tending to connect appellant with the killing of Mrs. Dunning, any views that we might have as to the credit that should be given to the evidence of the handwriting experts, and of the witnesses that testified that, in their opinion, the incriminating writings were written by defendant, could not justify us in reversing the judgment founded on the verdict of the jury that heard and saw all the witnesses as they gave their testimony. We see no reason for reversing the judgment because the photographic copies of the said exhibits have been destroyed under the circumstances appearing in this case.

B. The second point urged for reversal is that the California court had no jurisdiction of the crime charged, for the reason that the poisoned candy was received and eaten by Mrs. Dunning in the state of Delaware, where she died, though prepared in and sent from the city and county of San Francisco, with intent that Mrs. Dunning should eat thereof and be killed thereby in the state of Delaware. Which state had jurisdiction of the offense is stated by appellant in her brief to be the principal controversy in this case. But this question has been on the former appeal determined adversely to the present contention of appellant. People v. Botkin, 132 Cal. 231, 64 Pac. 286, 84 Am. St. Rep. 39. That decision is conclusive on this court.

C. Appellant, under the deed of "Objections to the Jurisdiction of the Court Involving Federal Questions," contends that by the trial in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco various provisions of the Constitution of this state and of the United States were violated.

1. It is insisted that defendant was deprived of her right of trial by jury, secured to her by sections 7 and 13, art. 1, of the Constitution. This contention is based on the proposition that no crime of murder was committed in the state of California, but in the state of Delaware, if committed at all, and that the jury must be selected from the vicinage or county where the crime is alleged to have been committed. This contention is answered by the decision upon the first appeal. It was there said: "The defendant, having committed a murder in part in the state of California, is punishable under the laws of the state exactly in the same way, in the same courts, and under the same procedure as if the crime was committed entirely within the state." People v. Botkin, supra; Pen. Code, § 27.

2. Predicating her contention upon the same proposition that the only crime charged was committed in the state of Delaware, appellant claims that by the trial in this state she was deprived of rights under article 5 and article 6 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and article 3 of the same Constitution. But it is well settled that the provisions of these articles have reference to powers exercised by the government of the United States, and not to those of the states. Ellenbecker v. Plymouth County, 134 U. S. 35, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 174, 20 Sup. Ct. 77, 44 L. Ed. 119.

3. It is also urged that appellant was deprived of rights given her by section 2, art. 4, and section 1, art. 14, of amendments to the Constitution of the United States. This contention seems to be predicated upon the assumption that the provisions of section 27 of the Penal Code, making any one amenable to our penal laws who, in whole or in part, commits a crime within the state, is in violation of said sections of said articles. Section 2, art. 4, simply provides: "The citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states." How it can be conceived that the provisions of section 27 of the Penal Code contravenes this provision is not discernible. The provision of the fourteenth amendment claimed to be violated is: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." We see nothing in section 27 of the Penal Code that violates this provision. "The fourteenth amendment does not profess to secure to all persons in the United States the benefit of the same laws and the same remedies. Great diversities in these respects may exist in two states separated by only an imaginary line. On one side of the line there may be a right of trial by jury, and on the other side no such right. Each state prescribes its own modes of judicial proceeding." Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989. "Any legal proceeding sanctioned by age and custom, or newly devised in the discretion of the legislative power, in furtherance of the general public good, which regards and preserves these principles of liberty and justice, must be held to be due process of law." Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 292, 28 L. Ed. 232. So, also, it was said in Leeper v. Texas, 139 U. S. 462, 468, 11 Sup. Ct. 577, 579, 35 L. Ed. 225, "that law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice is due process, and when secured by the law of the state the constitutional requirement is satisfied." We find nothing in any of the constitutional provisions relied on by appellant that prevents a state from punishing, as an offense against the penal laws of such state, a crime when only a portion of the acts constituting the crime are committed within the state.

D. The court allowed the prosecution to show, by both John P. Dunning and by other witnesses, that close, intimate, and meretricious relations had existed between defendant and John P. Dunning for several years, and up to the time of his departure from this state, which occurred shortly before the killing by poison of Mrs. John P. Dunning. Appellant urges this action of the court as error. The court, however, carefully and fully instructed the jury that this evidence could only be considered by them upon the question of motive, and for this purpose it was clearly admissible. To make this clear it is only necessary to state some of the salient facts shown by the evidence. John P. Dunning and Mrs. John P. Dunning were married in 1891, and continued to be husband and wife until her death. The defendant was also a married woman but not living with her husband during the period covered by the evidence. Several years before the killing of Mrs. Dunning she and her husband came to San Francisco, where they both resided for a while, but Mrs. Dunning and her young child returned to Dover, Del., several years before her death, and there remained as a member of the household of her father until her death. John P. Dunning remained in San Francisco, except for a short time, when he worked in Salt Lake City. He became acquainted with defendant before his wife left San Francisco, and after her departure his relations with defendant became closer. He took up his residence in the same house with her and cohabited with her. Shortly before the death of Mrs. Dunning John P. Dunning was offered work as a war correspondent for a New York paper, from the scene of activity about Cuba in the Spanish American War. He accepted the position, and upon telling defendant of his purpose to leave San Francisco, and that he expected never to return to San Francisco, but at the close of the war to go to New York, and establish a home for himself, wife, and child, and to there again live with his wife, she sought to dissuade him from so doing, and urged him to remain in San Francisco. After his departure from San Francisco defendant corresponded with him, and after the death of Mrs. Dunning, and after she knew that suspicion had been directed to her as the person who had sent from San Francisco the poisoned candy to Mrs. Dunning, she used expressions, to one witness at least, that she even then cherished the thought or hope that she and Dunning might yet come together and be married. Defendant and Mrs. Dunning were not acquainted. The evidence connecting the defendant with the killing of Mrs. Dunning was circumstantial only. It was therefore most important that the prosecution should show that defendant had a motive for desiring the death of Mrs. Dunning; and we think that it cannot admit of a doubt but that the evidence now under discussion tended to prove the existence of such motive, and was therefore admissible. The action of the court upon this matter is amply sustained by the authorities. People v. Brown, 130 Cal. 591, 62 Pac. 1072; People v. Stout, 4 Parker Cr. R. (N. Y.) 128; People v. Bowers, 1 Cal. App. 503, 82 Pac. 553; People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 Pac. 43; People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093; People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 15, 87 Pac. 1016; Plerson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524; State v. Larkin, 11 Nev. 329; People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 517, 36 Pac. 16; People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 664, 49 Pac. 1049, 40 L. R. A. 269; People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186.

E. Under the head of "Errors of Law on the Admission and Rejection of Evidence" appellant calls our attention to several rulings of the court which she claims were erroneous.

1. The box of poisoned candy was received at the post office at Dover, Del., at 5:58 o'clock p. m., August 9, 1898. It was shortly after obtained by a witness, Harry C. Pennington, a nephew of Mrs. Dunning, and by him taken to the house of her father, and handed to her in the presence of several members of the family, when she opened the box, and took therefrom a note in pencil, "With love to yourself and baby," and signed "Mrs. C." After testifying to the above facts the witness was asked, "Did she say anything?" and, over the general objection made by defendant that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial," answered that "after she read the note she wondered as to who the candy could be from." Appellant now urges the court thus allowed hearsay evidence of the declarations of Mrs. Dunning. But whether the answer of the witness "that she wondered as to who the candy could be from" should be regarded as hearsay, or as proper evidence because a part of the res gestæ attending the receipt of the candy, as contended by respondent, we do not think it of sufficient importance to justify a reversal. The question that was objected to was "Did she say anything?" and called for the answer "Yes" or "No." The question was but preliminary, and the objection was not specifically directed to the point that the answer might be hearsay. When the answer was given going beyond the question, and perhaps containing hearsay matter not called for by the question, no motion was made to strike it out. The statement made by Mrs. Dunning was at most but negative in its character. It simply indicated that she had no thought as to who sent the candy. Whether the evidence was strictly admissible or not, it was too trivial in character to require a reversal of the judgment or a new trial.

2. Several witnesses, who partook of the candy received by Mrs. Dunning, were allowed, over the objections of defendant, to testify as to the symptoms experienced by them shortly after eating of the candy. All these symptoms were shown to be characteristic of arsenical poisoning, and the evidence thereof tended to prove that the candy contained arsenic, and was clearly admissible.

3. Appellant claims that the court permitted the physician who attended Mrs. Dunning to testify as to what she told him as to what she had eaten on the previous day. (He was called the next morning after she had eaten the candy.) An examination of the folios referred to in appellant's brief does not sustain this contention, but on the contrary, we find that the court, as well as the district attorney, confined the witness to stating what Mrs. Dunning said to him as to her then existing symptoms, and admonished the witness not to state what Mrs. Dunning said as to what she had eaten, and promptly struck out the testimony that the physician seems to have interjected as to what she said to him about eating the candy. In other words, the point made by appellant has no existence in the record.

4. Objection is made to the action of the court in permitting Mrs. McGinnis, who, according to the theory of the prosecution, as an employé of Haas & Son, sold the candy that was sent to Mrs. Dunning, to testify that the defendant reminded her of a person to whom she sold candy on Sunday afternoon, July 31, 1898. Her whole testimony on the subject of the identity of defendant with the purchaser of the candy was to the effect that she believed them to be the same person, but could not be sure. The criticism of her testimony simply goes to its weight, and not to its admissibility.

5. There was no error in allowing testimony from the various candy makers in the employ of Haas & Son that no arsenic or other poison was used in making candy at the factory of Haas & Son. The evidence in the case tended strongly to show that the candy sent to Mrs. Dunning came from the candy store of Haas & Son, and that this particular candy was strongly charged with arsenic when received by her. The evidence in question, while probably not at all necessary, tended to show that the poison was placed in the candy after it was sold.

6. Certain writings were introduced in evidence as exemplars of defendant's handwriting. The district attorney, over the objection of defendant, proved that at the first trial of this case defendant's attorney, in her presence, admitted these writings to be in her handwriting. Undoubtedly such admission at the first trial could not be used as a conclusive admission of the fact at the second trial. But we see no good reason why it was not proper proof of a statement, made in the presence of the defendant, which might be considered as evidentiary matter tending to prove that the writings were in her handwriting. It is quite improbable that a defendant would permit her counsel to make such admission in her presence without objection if it were not a fact. If such admission had been made by her attorney in her presence to the district attorney in his office, proof thereof would have been admissible as evidentiary matter. We do not see why the fact that the admission was made on the trial and in open court robs it of its evidentiary character. But however that may be, the defendant herself afterwards, while on the witness stand, without objection, testified that these same exemplars were in her handwriting. This clearly cured any error that may have been committed in the manner of their proof in the first instance. Some other alleged errors of law in the admission of testimony are referred to by appellant, and we have carefully examined each of them, but find no error in any of them, and we do not consider them of sufficient importance to require special discussion.

F. Appellant also makes the point that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. We have carefully read all the evidence in the record. While it is a case of circumstantial evidence, we are justified in saying that it is a very convincing one of the guilt of the defendant. No good purpose will be served by detailing the evidence, which shows a remarkably cruel act, resulting as it did in the death of two persons and illness of several who partook of the poisoned candy. The evidence in the record is quite sufficient to justify the verdict.

G. Complaint is made that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct during the taking of evidence in the case and in his argument to the jury. We have examined the record carefully as to the various assignments of misconduct, and find nothing that will justify a reversal. We find that whenever the alleged misconduct of the district attorney was at all serious the court, by proper and timely admonitions to the jury, guarded against any injurious effect therefrom. Thus, where the district attorney characterized a question asked by the attorney for defendant as a cowardly statement, the court at once instructed the jury that such remark of the district attorney was not evidence, and was not to be considered by them, and should be disregarded by the jury. Also, when defendant objected to the use of a microscope by the district attorney during his argument, the court sustained the defendant's objection, and admonished the jury not to allow the action of the district attorney in this matter to influence them in regard to their verdict, but that they must render their verdict upon the evidence and the law, and upon nothing else. So, too, when the district attorney referred to the Bowers Case, the court sustained the position taken by the defendant, and concluded his remarks by this statement to the jury: "When other cases are mentioned of that sort, and such remarks made as have just been referred to, they are not to be considered in this case, not to be considered by you as evidence in any manner or form." But without discussing each assignment of misconduct, it is sufficient to repeat that we find nothing under this head to justify a reversal of the judgment or order.

H. "Errors in the Charge of the Court."

Under this head our attention is very briefly called to several alleged errors in the charge to the jury, which we shall now notice.

1. At the close of an instruction to the effect that the jury must determine all questions of fact, but must receive the law from the court, the court used this language: "If you do so, no harm can come from my errors, if I commit any, for a Supreme Court sits to correct them, and the jury should not assume to exercise the functions of that tribunal." This but emphasizes what had been before said as to the duty of the jury to be governed by the instructions of the court as to the law of the case, and certainly cannot be said to contain any erroneous statement of law.

2. The instruction concerning the evidence as to the relations existing between defendant and John P. Dunning was entirely proper, and clearly designed to limit the effect of such evidence to the proof of motive. As we have heretofore shown, such evidence was admissible upon the question of motive, and the instruction of the court was designed to protect the defendant from the possibility that the jury might allow it to otherwise prejudice defendant.

3. The court did not err in instructing the jury "that a malicious and guilty intent is conclusively presumed from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another." Subdivision 1, § 1962, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 Pac. 600.

4. The court charged the jury as follows: "You are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses which do not produce conviction in your mind, against a less number, or against a presumption of law or other evidence satisfying your mind; in other words, it is not the greater number of witnesses that should control you where their testimony is not satisfactory to your minds, against a less number whose testimony does satisfy your minds, and produces moral conviction that they are telling the truth. It is upon the quality of the testimony, rather than the quantity or the number of witnesses, that you should act, providing it produces in your minds this moral conviction, and satisfies you of its truthfulness." The first part of the instruction is taken from the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2), and that which the court added is but an amplification of what is taken from the statute.

5. After giving the well-known charge upon reasonable doubt from the Webster Case (Commonwealth v. Webster, 59 Mass. [5 Cush.] 295, 52 Am. Dec. 711), the court further charged the jury to the effect that the term "reasonable doubt" does not mean a "mere possible doubt, a conjectural doubt," nor "a doubt which is merely capricious," and more to the same effect. The instruction is substantially the same as the instruction approved in People v. Yun Kee (Cal. App.) 96 Pac. 96, except that it omits the only portion of the instruction in the Yun Kee Case that was even criticised, and when read in connection with the preceding charge was entirely correct.

6. The instruction as to the effect of the presumption of innocence, so far as it was not taken from a requested instruction of defendant, is substantially the same as was approved in People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 50 Pac. 390, and clearly was in no sense erroneous.

7. The charge of the court to the effect that in considering the weight and effect to be given to the testimony of witnesses the jurors have the right, among other things, to "consider the consequences resulting to a witness, if any, from the result of the trial," is not open to the criticism "that it singles out the defendant." The language of the court is general, and simply lays down a principle without making any special application to any particular witness. As was said in People v. Amaya, 134 Cal. 539, 66 Pac. 797: "The proposition is general and abstract, not indicating any particular witness as being, in the opinion of the court, subject to its application." The application of the principle was left to the jury. The instruction is fully supported by People v. Amaya, supra; People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 159, 62 Pac. 404.

8. The appellant criticises the charge of the court on the question of "motive." A substantial part of this instruction was taken from an instruction requested by defendant. The criticism made is that the charge is an instruction upon a matter of fact. The portion given at the request of the defendant is in these words: "When the evidence fails to show any motive to commit the crime charged on the part of the accused, this is a circumstance in favor of innocence. And in this case, if the jury find, upon careful examination of all the evidence, that it fails to show any motive upon the part of the accused to commit the crime charged against her, then this is a circumstance which the jury ought to consider in connection with all the other evidence in the case in making up their verdict." In addition to this, the court charged that the presence or absence of any motive to commit the homicide charged against defendant was a circumstance to be considered by the jury in connection with all the evidence in the case, and if no motive was apparent, that this was a circumstance in favor of innocence and should be so considered. The court also stated that the presence or absence of motive increases or diminishes the presumption of innocence, and can have no other function. Having asked and obtained the instruction which was given as to the effect of absence of motive, it does not lie in the mouth of defendant to complain that the court gave the correlative instruction as to the presence of motive. Upon the subject of motive, see People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 208, 48 Pac. 82.

9. The court explained to the jury what is meant by "circumstantial evidence," and gave instructions in regard thereto, several being given at the request of defendant. Appellant now says, "The charge of the court as to the value and effect of circumstantial evidence is an argument in favor of that class of evidence," but fails to point to any statement in the instructions in support of this contention. After a careful examination of the instructions on circumstantial evidence, we have failed to find anything that can fairly be said to be argumentative.

10, 11, and 12. Appellant finally criticises some general observations made by the court, intended to guard the jury against being moved by pity for defendant, or prejudice or passion that might be caused by the heinous nature of the crime, and to impress upon them the serious nature of the duties they were called upon to perform. We find nothing of merit in this criticism.

In conclusion, we will say that, after a careful examination of the whole record, we are unable to find any just cause for reversing the judgment of conviction in this case, but are of opinion that the judgment and orders should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

PEOPLE v. LA PIQUE. (Cr. 110.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Oct. 28, 1908.)

COURTS (§ 212*)—JURISDICTION.

Under Pen. Code, § 1174, an application to prove exceptions which the trial judge refuses to allow should be made to the Supreme Court; there being no provision for such proceeding in the Court of Appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 212.*]

Application by John La Pique to prove exceptions taken on trial in a superior court which the trial judge refused to allow. Application dismissed.

See, also, 98 Pac. 256, 257.

PER CURIAM. An application to prove exceptions taken upon a trial in the superior court, and which the trial judge refused to allow, was made to this court. Since the matter was presented the petitioner has filed in the Supreme Court an application to that court for the same purpose.

It appearing from an examination of section 1174 of the Penal Code that the statute provides that such application be made to the Supreme Court, and that no provision is made for such proceeding in this court, the application to this court is hereby dismissed.

9 Cal. App. 241

CURTIN v. INGLE. (Civ. 545.)†

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.

Oct. 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 622*) — FILING TRANSCRIPT—TIME—PROVISO TO RULE.

Appellant is not within a proviso to Court of Appeal rule 2 (144 Cal. xi, 78 Pac. vii), providing that the time for filing the transcript on appeal (ordinarily 40 days from perfection of appeal) shall not, when a proceeding for settlement or statement on appeal is pending, commence to run till the settled statement is filed, where no proceeding for settlement of a statement was pending within said 40 days, but respondent was served with a statement long thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2735; Dec. Dig. § 622.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 624*)—FILING TRANSCRIPT—TIME—PROVISO TO RULE.

Appellant is not within a proviso to Court of Appeal rule 2 (144 Cal. xi, 78 Pac. vii), as to time for filing the transcript on appeal, extending the time when appellant has given notice of motion for a new trial before perfecting the appeal; he having perfected his appeal the day before giving notice of motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 624.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 620*)—FILING TRANSCRIPT—TIME—PROVISO TO RULE.

Even if it be immaterial that appellant perfected his appeal the day before he gave notice of motion for a new trial, the proviso to Court of Appeal rule 2 (144 Cal. xi, 78 Pac. vii), extending till the decision of the motion, the time from which the 40 days for filing the transcript on appeal shall commence to run, will not avail him; the transcript not having been filed within 40 days after denial of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 620.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—SETTLEMENT OF STATEMENT — LACHES — QUESTION FOR TRIAL COURT.

Whether there has been such laches and delay in settlement of the statement on appeal as

*For other cases on same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes to warrant the trial court in dismissing the proceeding therefor is a question primarily for such court.

†For Supreme Court opinion, see 99 Pac. 480.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 628*)—DISMISSAL—PRESUMPTION—NEGLECT IN SETTLING STATEMENT.

No motion having been made in the trial court to dismiss the proceeding to settle the statement on appeal, but it still being pending there unabandoned, it must be assumed, on motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the transcript in the prescribed time, that appellant in that proceeding has been guilty of no inexcusable neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 628.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 628*)—DISMISSAL—DELAY IN FILING TRANSCRIPT—NEGLECT.

As the transcript on appeal cannot be filed till the statement is settled, appellant is not guilty of inexcusable neglect in failing to file the transcript in the prescribed time, where the statement has not been settled, and he has not been guilty of neglect therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 628.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—DISMISSAL—DELAY IN FILING TRANSCRIPT.

The facts disclosed by the record, on motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to file the transcript in the prescribed time, being such that an extension of time would have been granted by the Court of Appeal, had application therefor been made to it, the appeal will not be dismissed, especially where the rule of court invoked for the dismissal does not seem to be primarily designed to deal with a case of the character in hand.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by D. A. Curtin against J. W. Ingle. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appealed. Defendant moves to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

William M. Cannon, for appellant. Wal J. Tuska, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal from a judgment. The ground of the motion is that the transcript was not filed within 40 days after the appeal from the judgment was perfected.

The judgment in this case was entered May 22, 1907, and, for the purpose of keeping alive an attachment, plaintiff took and perfected an appeal therefrom within five days, to wit, on May 27, 1907. On May 28, 1907, plaintiff served and filed his notice of motion for a new trial, to be heard on the minutes of the court. This motion was heard October 4, 1907, and was denied and entered October 14, 1907. Thereafter, and in due time, on December 17, 1907, the plaintiff served on defendant his original statement on motion for a new trial, and the defendant served his amendments thereto December 27, 1907. On the 6th day of January, 1908, the statement and amendments were delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge for settlement, and the settlement thereof is now pending and set for hearing. The affidavits on file do not show that any stipulation had been entered into or order made extending the time to serve and file the transcript on appeal. The respondent contends that the transcript on appeal from the judgment should, under rule 2 of this court, have been filed 40 days after the appeal was perfected. This, of course, is true unless the facts bring the case within either of the two provisos of the rule extending the time, or unless good cause is shown for the delay.

Rule 2 (144 Cal. xl, 78 Pac. vii) reads as follows: "The appellant in a civil action shall within forty days after the appeal is perfected serve and file the printed transcript of the record, duly certified to be correct by the attorneys of the respective parties, or by the clerk of the court from which the appeal is taken; provided, that when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or a statement which may be used in support of such appeal, the time for filing and serving the transcript shall not begin to run until the settled and authenticated statement or bill of exceptions has been filed; and provided, further, that when a party appealing from a judgment has given notice of motion for a new trial before perfecting said appeal, the time for filing and serving the printed transcript shall not begin to run until the motion for a new trial has been decided or the proceeding dismissed for want of prosecution; and the appeal from the judgment and from any order denying a new trial of the issue may in all cases be presented upon the same transcript." The appeal from the judgment, as we have just seen, was perfected May 27th, and not within 40 days thereafter, nor, indeed, until nearly 7 months later (December 17th), when appellant served respondent with a statement on appeal, can it be said that there was pending a proceeding for the settlement of a statement which might be used to support such appeal. Hence, as there was no settlement of a bill of exceptions or statement pending within 40 days after the perfecting of the appeal, the first proviso of rule 2 does not apply. Nor does appellant come within the second proviso, for instead of giving the notice of motion first and perfecting his appeal afterward, he did the reverse. He perfected the appeal May 27th, and the next day gave his notice of motion for a new trial. But assuming, without deciding, that the order in which these two steps were taken is, as claimed by appellant, unimportant, still this proviso is inapplicable because more than 40 days have long ago elapsed since the motion was denied (October 14th), and no transcript has yet been filed.

The rule covers the majority of cases, but it does not seem to contemplate a state of facts such as is here presented. However this may be, we are of the opinion that the circumstances of the present case show a sufficient excuse why the transcript has not yet been served and filed. Inasmuch as the question of laches or delay in the settlement of a statement is primarily one to be determined by the trial court (Dernham v. Bagley, 151 Cal. 219, 90 Pac. 543), and as no motion has been made there to dismiss the proceeding, and as it is still pending there and not abandoned, we are bound to assume that the appellant in that proceeding has been guilty of no inexcusable neglect. If he has not been guilty of neglect there, and as the transcript cannot be served and filed until the statement is settled, we certainly cannot hold that he has been guilty of inexcusable neglect here. The facts disclosed by the record in this case are such that, had the appellant made application to this court for an extension of time in which to serve and file the transcript, such extension would have been granted; and we see no reason why the same considerations should not have weight in the determination of this motion (Chapman v. Bank of California, 88 Cal. 420, 26 Pac. 608), particularly as the rule of court here invoked for the dismissal of the appeal does not seem to be primarily designed to deal with a case of this character.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 265

PEOPLE v. PEREZ. (Cr. 76.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Oct. 31, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Dec. 28, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 998*)—JUDGMENT ON PLEA OF GUILTY — APPLICATION TO SET ASIDE—REMEDY.

A motion to set aside a judgment of conviction on a plea of guilty, and to permit accused to withdraw his plea, on the ground that it was extorted from him by fear of violence, is the proper procedure for the avoidance of a judgment on a plea of guilty extorted by fear of violence; the statute not providing how the action of the court shall be invoked for the avoidance of such judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2549; Dec. Dig. § 998.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 538*)—CONFESSION OF GUILT THROUGH DURESS—EFFECT.

A confession of guilt obtained by duress is void and cannot form the basis for a valid judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1227; Dec. Dig. § 538.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1023*)—PLEA—ORDERS APPEALABLE—ORDER AFTER JUDGMENT.

An order denying a motion to set aside a judgment of conviction entered on a plea of guilty, and to permit accused to withdraw his plea, on the ground that it was extorted from him by fear of violence, is appealable within Pen. Code, § 1237, authorizing appeals from orders after judgment affecting the substantial rights of accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2588; Dec. Dig. § 1023.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 998*)—JUDGMENT—MOTION TO SET ASIDE—ASCERTAINMENT OF FACTS.

The court, on a motion to set aside a judgment of conviction entered on a plea of guilty extorted by fear of violence, is not bound to accept as true the statements of accused in his petition in support of the motion, but must ascertain the facts and act accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2549; Dec. Dig. § 998.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 998*)—JUDGMENT—SETTING ASIDE—EVIDENCE.

A motion to set aside a judgment of conviction, entered on a plea of guilty, on the ground that the plea was extorted by fear of violence, held properly denied on the showing made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2549; Dec. Dig. § 998.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. M. Rector, Judge.

Juan Perez was convicted of robbery, and from an order denying a motion to set aside the conviction, and to permit accused to withdraw his plea of guilty, he appeals. Affirmed.

Ben. Berry, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Appellant pleaded guilty to the crime of robbery, and on March 23, 1907, he was sentenced to the penitentiary for life. On the 2d day of March, 1908, he filed a petition in the lower court alleging: That his plea of guilty was made while under duress, "in that subsequent to his arrest, and prior to the preliminary examination, and while incarcerated in the county jail, the sheriff represented to him that he was in immediate danger of mob violence, and the only way to escape the same was to plead guilty and be immediately taken to the penitentiary. That believing and acting solely upon said representations, he did then and there consent to plead guilty to said charge of robbery." On March 31, 1908, after notice given to the district attorney, counsel for petitioner moved the court to grant a writ of error coram nobis in accordance with the allegations and prayer of the petition. Affidavits in opposition to the motion were offered by the district attorney, which were received in evidence by the court over the objection and exception of petitioner, and from the order denying said motion the appeal has been taken.

It is claimed by respondent that no such proceeding is known to our practice as an application for the writ of "error coram nobis"; but we need not discuss this technical phase of the question, as we consider the proceeding here equivalent to a motion that the court set aside the judgment and permit the defendant to withdraw his plea of guilty upon the ground that it was extorted from him by fear of violence. That such a motion is proper we entertain no doubt. A confession of guilt obtained by duress is void and cannot be the basis for a valid judgment. The statute does not expressly provide how the action of the trial court shall be invoked for the avoidance of such a judgment, but under the authorities it is clear that the proper procedure is by motion supported by documentary or oral evidence, or both.

Again, it is contended by the Attorney General that no appeal lies from the order denying the motion; but in this we think respondent is in error, as this is an "order made after judgment affecting the substantial rights of the defendant." Section 1237, Pen. Code.

The order should be affirmed, however, for the all-sufficient reason that the trial court was justified in believing that defendant's plea was entirely voluntary. The court was not bound to accept as true the statements of appellant in his petition, but it was its duty to ascertain the facts and act accordingly. The affidavits of the sheriff and other witnesses are clear and complete to the effect that nothing whatever was said to appellant about mob violence, and that there was no support for his claim of coercion. No doubt, if appellant had desired to make a further showing, upon application, the court would have granted him permission; but from the record before us we must conclude that appellant committed a most atrocious crime, and that the judgment of the court is valid and must be upheld.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

9 Cal. App. xlii

PEOPLE v. MONTANO. (Cr. 77.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Oct. 31, 1908.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County;
E. M. Rector, Judge.

Antone Montano was convicted of crime, and from an order denying a motion to set aside the judgment, and to permit accused to withdraw his plea of guilty, he appeals. Affirmed.

Ben. Berry, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This case is in all essential respects similar to People v. Perez (No. 76, this day decided by this court) 98 Pac. 870, and for the reasons therein stated the order is affirmed.

(154 Cal. 581)

J. F. PARKINSON CO. v. BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY et al.
(S. F. 4,469.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 8, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—NECESSITY OF MOTION TO REVIEW FACTS.

The right of appellant to a review of the evidence on his appeal from an order overruling a new trial is not prejudiced by his failure to move for such review under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663½.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3480; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

2. TRADE UNIONS (§ 4*)—ELIGIBILITY TO MEMBERSHIP—"EMPLOYER OF LABOR."

A stockholder in a corporation which employs tinnerns is not an "employer of labor" within the meaning of a by-law of a labor union which admits to its membership master tinnerns, but by such by-law describes them as employers of labor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade Unions, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

3. TRADE UNIONS (§ 3*)—CONSTRUCTION OF RULES—DEFINITION OF WORD "UNFAIR."

The word "unfair," as used in a rule of a labor union to indicate the attitude of employers towards members of the union, does not mean that the employer is guilty of fraud, breach of faith, or dishonest conduct, but only that the employer has refused to comply with the conditions upon which union men will consent to remain in his employ or handle materials produced by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade Unions, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 104*)—CONSPIRACY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A conspiracy which will afford ground for injunctive relief is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish by concerted action a criminal or unlawful purpose or a lawful purpose by a criminal or unlawful means.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 177; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

5. TORTS (§ 3*)—GROUNDS OF ACTION—MOTIVE OR INTENT.

An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Torts, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 4; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

6. INJUNCTION (§ 101*)—BOYCOTTS AND OTHER COMBINATIONS.

Defendant, a labor union, in accordance with one of its rules prohibiting its members from working for or handling the material of an employer who employed nonunion men, called out its members from plaintiff's establishment, sent notices to persons employing union men and dealing with plaintiff, informing them that plaintiff had been declared unfair by defendant, and that union men could not handle material supplied by plaintiff, and presented to plaintiff a written agreement for its signature embodying the terms on which the union men would re-enter its service. Aside from these acts there was no force, violence, threat, or intimidation used towards the nonunion men employed by plaintiff, and no attempt to obstruct plaintiff in its efforts to secure nonunion men. The most serious act proved against defendant was that one of its business agents informed plaintiff's manager that the union would drive plaintiff out of business, if plaintiff refused to observe its rules, but this appeared to be no more than a mere expression of the agent's opinion. Held, that defendant was not guilty of unlawful acts, and that its conduct did not amount to "coercion" or "intimidation," and plaintiff was not entitled to injunctive relief.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 175; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

7. INJUNCTION (§ 12*)—COMPLETED ACTS.

The act of defendant, a labor union, in sending notices to plaintiff's customers, notifying them that plaintiff had been declared unfair by defendant, is not ground for injunctive relief where the act complained of had been completed at the time the action for injunction was commenced, and there is no evidence that defendant threatens to send further notices; plaintiff's remedy being an action for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 12; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

8. INJUNCTION (§ 22*)—GROUNDS—DEFENSES—INJUNCTION INEFFECTUAL.

Injunctive relief cannot be granted to prevent a labor union from holding out to plaintiff a standing warning that union men will not work for him or handle his material while he remains on the "unfair" list, since such injunction could not be enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 20; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

9. TRADE UNIONS (§ 9*)—RESTRAINING ACTS OF LABOR UNION—ACTS OF INDIVIDUAL MEMBERS.

In an action to restrain a labor union from interfering with plaintiff's business, an injunction will not be granted on a mere showing of improper acts by individual members of the union.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trade Unions, Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

10. TORTS (§ 10*)—INJURY TO BUSINESS.

Any injury to a lawful business, whether the result of a conspiracy or not, is prima facie actionable, but may be defended on the ground that it was merely the result of a lawful effort by defendants to promote their own welfare, and that the act was not inspired by express malice to injure plaintiff without benefiting themselves.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Torts, Cent. Dig. § 10; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

Shaw, J., dissenting. Sloss, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; Hiram D. Tuttle, Judge.

Action by the J. F. Parkinson Company against the Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order overruling a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Cleveland L. Dam, Charles S. Burnell, and Austin Lewis (R. M. Royce, of counsel), for appellants. Will M. Beggs, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a suit to enjoin an alleged boycott. The plaintiff is the owner and proprietor of a lumber yard at Palo Alto, in Santa Clara county, and also of a plumbing and tinning shop, mill, etc. It buys and sells lumber, building materials, and hardware, and employs laborers, teamsters, and mechanics. The principal defendant, the Building Trades Council, is a voluntary association composed of delegates from various labor unions of Santa Clara county. The other defendants are labor unions composed of artisans engaged in the various crafts concerned in building operations, the officers of the council, and of the several unions and a large number of members of said unions.

The allegations of the complaint are, in brief: That the defendants, for the purpose of coercing the plaintiff into the subjection of its business to their control, entered into a conspiracy to compel compliance with their demands by force and intimidation, and, in pursuance of said conspiracy, gave notice that, unless plaintiff should agree to comply with the rules of the Building Trades Council, they would declare a boycott, etc. That in consequence of plaintiff's refusal to sign a written agreement presented by the council, agents, and emissaries of the defendants unlawfully and against the will of the plaintiff entered upon its premises and notified its employés that they must quit work for plaintiff on pain of being themselves boycotted and turpented and beaten, etc., thereby causing many of its employés to quit its service. That by threatening injury to them in their business if they continued to do business with plaintiff the defendant caused persons with whom plaintiff had been dealing to refuse to sell to it, and its customers to cease buying from it. That by these and other acts of the defendant in which they are still engaged, and which they threaten to continue, plaintiff has been damaged in a large amount and will be irreparably damaged; the defendants and each of them being pecuniarily irresponsible and unable to respond in damages. A general and special demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and all the defendants united in an answer denying all the material allegations of the complaint except those descriptive of the several parties and their relations to the controversy as above stated. A preliminary injunction was issued and the cause subsequently tried by the court. It was found that the defendants had not caused persons with whom the plaintiff had been dealing to refuse to sell to it, but upon the remaining issues generally the findings were in favor of the plaintiff, and by the judgment and decree of the court the defendants, all and each of them, were enjoined "from boycotting plaintiff—that is to say, from coercing others against their will to withdraw from plaintiff their beneficial business intercourse, through or by threats that, unless those others do so, the defendants will cause directly and indirectly, loss to them—and to desist and refrain from forcibly or by threats of violence or intimidation, or coercion of any kind, interfering with plaintiff in the conduct of its business, or at all, and from forcibly or by threats of force or intimidation, or coercion of any kind, interfering with any person or persons doing or desiring to do business with plaintiff, and from obstructing or interfering forcibly or by threats of force or intimidation, or coercion of any kind with the business of plaintiff and its dealings with its customers or its employés, and from forcibly or by threats of force or intimidation or coercion of any kind, or in any manner molesting, harassing, annoying, or interfering with the employés of the plaintiff at any time." There was also a judgment for $1 damages and costs taxed at $304.25.

The defendants in due time moved for a new trial upon a bill of exceptions, specifying numerous alleged errors in the rulings of the court at the trial, and numerous particulars in which it was claimed the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings. The motion for a new trial was overruled, and the appeal is from that order and from the judgment. In support of their appeal the defendants contend that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings of the court in material particulars, and that those findings which are sustained by the evidence will not support the judgment. They contend, also, that the findings are vitiated by the rulings admitting and rejecting evidence at the trial against their objections. Counsel for respondent objects to any consideration of the questions raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings on the grounds, first, that the appeal was not taken from the judgment within 60 days after its entry; and, second, that the defendants have failed to move under sections 663, 663½, Code Civ. Proc. This objection is wholly untenable. The defendants do not ask us to review the evidence on their appeal from the judgment, and their right to have it reviewed on their appeal from the order is not prejudiced by their failure to move under the sections cited upon the ground that the facts found do not support the judgment.

The first and most important finding of the superior court attacked upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to sustain it is the following: "That in order to coerce, and for the purpose of coercing plaintiff into the subjection of its business to the control of said defendants, a combination and conspiracy was entered into by and between the said defendants as individuals and as members of the said defendant associations, and other persons, associations, and organizations of persons unknown to plaintiff, and that said persons, defendants, associations, and organizations confederated and conspired together to injure, coerce, and intimidate plaintiff into compliance with the rules and regulations of said associations, organizations, and union, and to the subjection of its business to the control of said defendants and said associations and unions, thus depriving plaintiff of the control and management of its said business."

The evidence does not sustain this finding, except in a qualified sense, and, when properly understood, it presents a question of law materially different from that arising upon its literal terms. The defendants, as above stated, are the Building Trades Council of Santa Clara county, its officers and agents, several labor unions affiliated with the council, and the members of said unions. The council is composed of delegates from the affiliated unions, and exercises a general control in matters of common interest to the whole body of its constituents. The unions are voluntary associations organized for the purpose of enforcing regulations which they consider necessary for their welfare. These rules cover a variety of details, including terms of admission into the unions, rates of wages, hours of labor, etc., not of especial importance in this connection, all of which the members are pledged to observe under penalty of fine or expulsion. What we are more immediately concerned with is the rule that union men are not allowed to work on the same job or in the same shop with non-union men, or to handle or use in their several employments material which has been supplied by a dealer who has been declared "unfair" by the council because of the employment by him of nonunion workmen. The evidence in this case shows without conflict that the Building Trades Council of Santa Clara county and its constituent or affiliated unions were organized, and that they adopted these and other rules before there was any controversy with plaintiff, and without any special reference to it, and that they merely put its rules in force when, as they contend, the corporation had become "unfair" and had been so declared, by reason of its retention in its employment of a tinner who had refused to join the Tinnerns' Union. Their combination and conspiracy, if it can be called a conspiracy, was not inspired by any malicious purpose or feeling against the plaintiff. It embraced the world at large, and consisted wholly in an agreement to which all the members were pledged that they would refuse to work for any person or firm who employed nonunion men, and that they would refuse to work upon or handle any material supplied by an employer of nonunion men. They were, in other words, organized for the purpose of enforcing in Santa Clara county what is known as the "closed shop," and the means by which they proposed to accomplish their object was to bind themselves by a mutual pledge to quit working for any one who should be declared "unfair" either because he employed nonunion men, or because he required them to handle material supplied by an employer of such men. This being the situation on the 1st of February, 1904, the plaintiff corporation, which seems to have been conducting its business under some understanding with the council, to the effect that it would employ only union men, set some nonunion men to work erecting sheds in its lumber yard at Palo Alto.

The employment of these men was made the subject of complaint by the business agent representing the council, and while that matter was still pending another and more serious controversy arose. There was a tinner by the name of Waterman working in plaintiff's shop who was not a member of the Tinnners' Union. He was advised by Steuder—a plumber—to join the union of his, Waterman's, craft, and to take out a working card. Being informed that the initiation fee was $25, he agreed to become a member, and gave Steuder $5 as a first payment upon his application. A few days afterwards he was informed that the initiation fee was $50. This and other circumstances induced him and Mr. Parkinson, the plaintiff's manager, to believe that the initiation fee had been raised from $25 to $50 for the express purpose of "freezing him out," and, acting upon Parkinson's advice, he determined to withdraw his application for a journeyman's card, and instead thereof to apply for a master tinner's card, which would enable him to continue to do the work he was doing without any violation of the rules of the union, and would cost only $5. It was necessary, however, to entitle him to a master's card that he should be a boss—an employer of labor, not a journeyman working for wages. In order to comply with this condition, he purchased five (out of twelve thousand five hundred) shares of the plaintiff corporation's stock (par value ten dollars per share) and upon this basis claimed to be an employer within the rules of the union. His claim was disputed and was clearly untenable. A stockholder of a corporation—even a large and preponderant stockholder—is not in legal contemplation the employer of those who are working for the corporation, which is a person distinct from its members, and as such the only employer in the case. Aside from this technical view, it is equally clear that the holder of a minute fraction of the stock of a corporation from which he is receiving wages is not his own employer in any substantial sense. As to this branch of the dispute, therefore, the position of the union and of the council in denying Waterman's claim to be a master tinner within the meaning of the union rules was clearly correct. As to the contention that the initiation fee of the union was doubled in violation of its own constitution for the express purpose of keeping Waterman out, the evidence wholly fails to sustain it. Steuder, it is true, told him that it was $25, but Steuder was a member of the Plumbers' Union, and based his statement upon the rule of his own union and on the former rule of the Tinnners' Union. It appears, however, very clearly from the uncontradicted evidence that the preliminary steps for raising the initiation fee of the Tinnners' Union of Santa Clara county had been taken in December, 1903, nearly two months before Waterman was employed by plaintiff, and that it had been ratified by all the superior bodies whose approval was required as early as February 2, 1904, the day upon which Waterman made his preliminary payment to Steuder, who received it, not as the agent of the union, but as the agent of Waterman. These matters have been stated thus fully and in detail—not because they are regarded as very material in point of law—but because they have been largely discussed in the briefs under the claim upon the part of the respondent that the raising of the initiation fee by the Tinnners' Union after Waterman's application for membership, and while he was in the employment of plaintiff, and the subsequent refusal of a master's card, is proof of a malicious determination on the part of the council and union to force a quarrel upon the plaintiff, and to make use of the dispute as a mere pretext for interfering with its legitimate control of its own business. The evidence in our opinion does not sustain this contention. The action of the union in this matter was in strict accordance with the rules then in force, and the approval of the council was also in accordance with its established rules. There was no doubt some heat exhibited in the course of the controversy between the parties over this Waterman affair, and as a consequence considerable bitterness of feeling engendered on both sides, but what followed was the inevitable outcome of the rules of the council as applied to a situation brought about by causes implying no actual desire on the part of the defendants to injure the plaintiff specially, or to injure it at all except in so far as the enforcement of the rules of the council and its affiliated unions must affect injuriously all who might undertake to carry on business in defiance of those rules. What happened was this: On the 9th of February the business agent of the council reported the final refusal of Waterman to take out a journeyman tinner's card, and plaintiff's refusal to discharge him from its employment. Plaintiff was then declared "unfair," and on the following day the business agent went upon plaintiff's premises and notified his union employes of that fact, reminding some of them of their pledge to quit work for any employer declared "unfair." He also mailed or delivered notices to all the contractors of Palo Alto employing union men as follows: "San Jose, February 10th, 1904. To all whom it may concern: You are hereby notified that J. F. Parkinson Company has been placed on the unfair list of the Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County. And Union men cannot work for, or handle any material furnished by said Parkinson until further notice. Building Trades Council, per Chas. H. Harrison, Secretary." The effect of these notices was that all the union employes of plaintiff quit work and its mill was closed at noon on the 10th of February, remaining closed until it secured a crew of nonunion men. And most of the contractors who had formerly purchased building material from plaintiff ceased to deal with it upon receipt of the written notice addressed to them. On the day following the strike, the council, by its agent, presented to plaintiff the draft of a contract with a demand that he execute it as follows:

"Articles of Agreement.

"Article of Agreement between J. F. Parkinson Co. of Palo Alto, Santa Clara County, Cal., and the Building Trades Council of Santa Clara County, Cal.

"Article 1. It is hereby agreed by the J. F. Parkinson Co. of said County and City that work on all buildings or construction work, old or new, erected for their use or by them, shall be done by men carrying the working card of said Building Trades Council of the current quarter.

"Art. 2. It is further agreed by the said J. F. Parkinson Co. that they will pay and enforce in full to and with all of their employes working in any craft coming under the jurisdiction of the said Building Trades Council and under the control of the said J. F. Parkinson Co. the schedule of wages and demands that are adopted and demanded by the said Building Trades Council.

"Art. 3. It is further agreed by the said J. F. Parkinson Co. that they will employ on all tinning and sheet metal work directly or indirectly done for or by the said J. F. Parkinson Co. a member or members of the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers' International Alliance in good standing and carrying a regular working card of said Building Trades Council.

"Art. 4. In consideration of the foregoing the said Building Trades Council agrees to consider the said J. F. Parkinson Company as a fair firm and to deal with them and their products accordingly.

"Art. 5. This agreement shall remain in full force and effect for one year from date hereof."

The plaintiff refused to execute this proposed agreement, and at once set about obtaining the services of a sufficient number of nonunion laborers, teamsters, mechanics, etc., to reopen its mill and shops. The mill was shut down for only one week. It does not appear how long the shops were idle. It does appear that Waterman and the foreman of the plumbers worked continuously. There was but a very brief interruption to plaintiff's business before a full resumption in the mill and shops with nonunion men, but there was a substantial loss of profits for a time by reason of the withdrawal of patronage by the contractors who had no alternative except to stop buying material of the plaintiff or losing the services of their union employes. Some of the contractors dealing with the plaintiff disregarded the "unfair" notice, and, when their union employes quit work, replaced them with nonunion men. All of the men who quit the employment of plaintiff and of those contractors who disregarded the unfair notice did so peaceably and quietly. There was no force, no threat, no violence, or intimidation used against them aside from the reminder addressed to one or two individuals of their obligation to their respective unions. There was no force, violence, threat, or intimidation used towards the nonunion men employed in place of the strikers, and no attempt to obstruct the plaintiff in its efforts to secure nonunion men. There was not at any time any picketing of the plaintiff's premises or interference with its customers. The most serious act proved against the council was that its business agent in the course of the dispute over the Waterman affair told Mr. Parkinson that they—the council—would drive him out of business if he refused to observe their rules. This, however, was merely an expression of the business agent's opinion of the effect of declaring the plaintiff unfair. It was a warning, or caution, intended no doubt to force compliance with the council's demands, but evidently it did not have that effect, for Mr. Parkinson, being of a different opinion, stood his ground, and accepted the consequences. There was also some evidence that in three instances individual members of some of the unions had warned some of the strikers that they would incur some danger of personal violence if they returned to work while the plaintiff remained unfair, but these threats were not authorized or countenanced by the council or any of the unions, and not a single act of violence was proved against any one who did return to work. It was found by the court upon evidence which fully sustains the finding that the plaintiff had been injured by the acts of the defendants in an amount not susceptible of computation, and it was found that a continuance of such acts would cause a damage irreparable, for the reason, I suppose, that its amount could not be computed, and for the same reason that the plaintiff had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. It was not found that the defendants were insolvent or unable to respond in damages.

In reference to the word "unfair," it clearly appears that, as employed by the defendants and labor organizations generally, it has a technical meaning well understood by the plaintiff and by all the persons to whom the council sent notices that plaintiff had been declared unfair. Such declaration means, and in this instance was understood by all parties concerned to mean, not that the plaintiff had been guilty of any fraud, breach of faith, or dishonorable conduct, but only that it had refused to comply with the conditions upon which union men would consent to remain in its employ or handle material supplied by it. The sole effect of the notice to the contractors was that a majority of them ceased to deal with the plaintiff, at least for a time, and some of them countermanded orders for lumber and other material previously sent in.

The foregoing statement embraces the substance of all the material findings of the superior court, and indicates the qualified sense in which the principal finding above quoted is to be taken in applying the law to the facts.

Can it be said, in view of this more specific and detailed statement of the probative facts involved in the general finding of the trial judge, that the defendants entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of compelling the plaintiff, by coercion and intimidation, to subject its business to their control? Can it be said that they entered into a conspiracy at all? A combination there certainly was, but it had no reference to the plaintiff except as the business of the plaintiff put it into the general class (employers of labor) who would necessarily be affected by the enforcement of the regulations of the unions. Their object was to secure higher wages, shorter hours, and more favorable conditions generally than employers of labor might be willing to concede, and just so far as they might be successful in accomplishing this object it may be assumed that employers, as a class, the plaintiff included, would incur a corresponding loss. But assuming all this, would that constitute the combination a conspiracy? A conspiracy is a combination of two or more persons to accomplish by concerted action a criminal or unlawful purpose, or a lawful purpose by criminal or unlawful means, and, to support the conclusion that these defendants were guilty of a conspiracy, it must be held that their purpose was at least unlawful if not criminal, or their purpose being lawful that they proposed to attain it by the employment of some unlawful means.

Limiting our consideration for the present to this question of conspiracy, it is clear that the avowed object of these organizations—the several unions of working men and the council in which they were combined—was in no sense unlawful, and the discussion may be confined to the question whether the means proposed for its attainment were unlawful, a question as to which there is a wide divergence of view disclosed by the decisions of the courts of different jurisdictions, and often by the differing opinions of judges of the same court. There is, however, at the present day a tolerably uniform consensus of judicial opinion as to some fundamental principles which form the basis of discussion in all that class of cases, which, for convenience, may be designated as boycotting cases. In one of the more recent of these (National Protective Association v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 63 N. E. 369, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648) the seven justices of the Court of Appeals were divided, four to three, as to the lawfulness of the avowed object of the defendants, and as to the means employed by them against the plaintiff. Chief Justice Parker—three of his associates concurring—held both object and means to have been lawful, while Justice Vann, with the concurrence of the other two justices, condemned the means employed by the defendants to accomplish their purpose, not because the acts of defendants were otherwise unlawful, but because they were rendered unlawful by the selfish and censurable motive which inspired them. "The object of the defendants," he concluded, "was not to get higher wages, shorter hours, or better terms for themselves, but to prevent others from following their lawful calling." This conclusion was based upon evidence which showed clearly enough what appears as clearly in this case—that the immediate object of the defendants was to exclude the competition of men outside of their unions. This purpose Judge Vann considered so selfish, and its accomplishment so opposed to public policy and common right as to infect acts otherwise entirely lawful with the taint of illegality. The opposing opinion of the Chief Justice—the majority opinion—seems to be rested partly upon the ground that, in order to secure employment on more favorable terms for themselves, individuals have an absolute right to combine for the purpose of preventing the employment and competition of others, and partly upon the further and independent ground that, whether such right is absolute or not, every man is clearly privileged to stop work with or without reason whenever he can do so without violating his contract, and that no one can question his motive, since a bad motive does not convert an act otherwise lawful into a ground of action. This last proposition embodies the rule of decision which was approved by this court in the case of Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 33 Pac. 492, 21 L. R. A. 233, and which has recently been reaffirmed in the much discussed case of the People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717. In the first named case it was concluded upon an extensive review of the authorities, American and English, that "an act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent." This was more than five years before the same question was considered and decided in England by the House of Lords in the great case of Allen v. Flood, Appeal Cases H. of L. 1898, p. 1. The report of that case covers 180 pages of the volume cited, and shows that in the House of Lords all the English and several of the American cases were reviewed. Elaborate opinions were delivered by the chancellor, Lord Halsbury, and by eight others of the law lords present and deliberating upon the case. Altogether it is safe to say that few cases have ever been more thoroughly considered, and the conclusion reached by six out of the nine judges is stated in the headnote of the report in substantially the same terms in which this court announced its conclusion in Boyson v. Thorn: "An act lawful in itself is not converted by a malicious or bad motive into an unlawful act so as to make the doer of the act liable to a civil action." We are aware that several of the adverse criticisms of our recent decision in the Schmitz Case, where this doctrine was applied in construing the indictment, have claimed that it was repudiated by the House of Lords in deciding the later case of Quinn v. Leatham (Appeal Cases H. of L. 1901, p. 495). If this were so, it would afford no conclusive reason for changing the rule of decision here. But nothing could be farther from the truth, and, since counsel for respondent in this case places great reliance upon Quinn v. Leatham as an authority supporting his position, it will not be unprofitable to point out the distinction between that case and Allen v. Flood, and to emphasize the fact that so far from overruling Allen v. Flood upon the particular point in question here Quinn v. Leatham lends it additional support and confirmation.

The question for the House of Lords to decide in Allen v. Flood was whether there was any evidence to support the verdict for the plaintiffs. There was evidence that the defendant had procured the discharge of the plaintiffs by their employers and had prevented their re-employment, and this not only for the purpose of securing their places for members of his own union, but also for the purpose of punishing them for past acts. It was held, however, that because the defendant had violated no legal right of the plaintiffs, had done no unlawful act, and had employed no unlawful means in procuring their dismissal, his conduct was not actionable no matter how malicious or bad his motive may have been. Appeal Cases H. of L. 1898, p. 1. In the case of Quinn v. Leatham the principal question again presented for decision was whether the evidence for plaintiff should have been submitted to the jury; whether, in other words, it was sufficient to support the verdict in his favor. Upon this question it was held, without dissent by the six judges participating in the decision, that the evidence did support the verdict, and accordingly the judgment of the trial court was affirmed. Five of the six judges delivered opinions expressing more or less fully their views of the evidence and its effect. The chancellor,

Lord Halsbury, who had dissented in Allen v. Flood, delivered a rather short opinion in which he adopted the more elaborately stated views of Lords Lindley and Brampton. Lord Robertson concurred upon the grounds stated by Lord Justice Holmes in the Irish Court of Appeal (an opinion which I have not been able to consult). Lords Shand and Macnaghten, who were of the majority in Allen v. Flood, while expressly adhering to their decision in that case, concurred in the judgment upon the ground that the two cases presented a radically different state of facts. Lord Halsbury in his short opinion, while adhering to his views expressed in Allen v. Flood, concedes that Quinn v. Leatham "is distinguished in its facts from those which were essentially important facts in Allen v. Flood," and in the end bases his decision upon the ground that: "Rightly or wrongly, the theory upon which judgment was pronounced in that case (Allen v. Flood) is one whereby the present is shown to be one which the majority of your Lordships would have held to be a case of actionable injury inflicted without any excuse whatever." Page 507. Coming next to the more elaborate opinions of Lords Brampton and Lindley (approved in his opinion by Lord Halsbury), we find a fuller and clearer statement of the difference between Quinn v. Leatham and Allen v. Flood. Lord Brampton (page 523) shows that in the earlier case "all questions of conspiracy, intimidation, and coercion or breach of contract were withdrawn from the jury; the only matters of fact found by them being that Allen maliciously induced the Glengal Company to discharge Flood and Taylor from their employment, and not to engage them again, and that each plaintiff has suffered £20 damages." He proceeds to show that it was assumed as the grounds of decision that "Allen in making the communication which induced the Glengal Company to dismiss the plaintiff was doing only that which he had a legal right to do, and they [the Lords Justices] held, therefore, that the plaintiffs had no legal cause of action against either the Glengal Company or the defendant, and that the mere fact as found by the jury that the defendant was actuated by a malicious motive could not convert a rightful into a wrongful act." He then proceeds (page 524) to stamp this doctrine with his express approval in these words: "This latter proposition, that the exercise of an absolute legal right cannot be treated as wrongful and actionable merely because a malicious intention prompted such exercise, was established as clear law by this House in Bradford Corporation v. Pickles (1895) App. Cas. 587, and it is now too late to dispute it even if one were disposed to do so, which I am not." Could anything be more emphatic than this in support of the doctrine of Allen v. Flood, of Boyson v. Thorn, of People v. Schmitz, and of the large number of cases in England and in the United States, which like Boyson

v. Thorn have accepted as "a maxim of the law" the words of Baron Parke in delivering the judgment of the Common Pleas in Stevenson v. Newnham in 1853: "An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent." 13 C. B. 297. Immediately following the passage above quoted from Lord Brampton's opinion, he proceeds to demonstrate the scope of the rule by mentioning the limited class of cases which constitute the exception to its operation; such actions, for instance, as libel, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution, which would always be wrongful and actionable unless privileged, and where proof of a malicious intent defeats the plea of privilege or probable cause. In Lord Lindley's opinion (also approved by Lord Halsbury), where he states the propositions decided in Allen v. Flood, he uses this language (page 533): "The first and important proposition is that an act otherwise lawful, although harmful, does not become actionable by being done maliciously in the sense of proceeding from a bad motive, and with intent to annoy or harm another. This is a legal doctrine not new or laid down for the first time in Allen v. Flood. It had been gaining ground for some time, but it was never before so fully or authoritatively expounded as in that case." I have thus shown that five out of the six judges who sat in Quinn v. Leatham delivered opinions in the case; that Lords Shand and Macnaghten adhered to their views expressed in Allen v. Flood; that Lord Halsbury, who had dissented in that case, concurred with Shand and Macnaghten in holding that Quinn v. Leatham might be decided as it was decided without infringing the doctrine of Allen v. Flood; and that Brampton and Lindley, whose opinions were specially commended by Lord Halsbury, each expressly approved the doctrine of Allen v. Flood. The importance of that doctrine in its application to controversies such as the present seems to justify this extended review of a case which has been supposed to have brought it in question, but which, when carefully considered, will be found to have placed it upon a firmer basis of authority than it occupied before. The rule of law, therefore, as firmly established in England, in this state, and in most of the United States, supports the conclusion of Chief Justice Parker and the majority of the Court of Appeals of New York in the case first above cited (National Protective Association v. Cumming), so far as it rests upon the doctrine "that an act lawful in itself is not converted by a malicious or bad motive into an unlawful act so as to make the doer of the act liable to a civil action." We may, therefore, in the further consideration of this case, confine our attention to what the defendants did and threatened to do, and to the simple question whether those things were or were not in themselves lawful. The general objects of the union and the council being lawful, if they used no unlawful means for their attainment, the motives which inspired their action in this case are irrelevant to the question of conspiracy and immaterial as affecting the cause of action.

As to what are lawful acts in furtherance of such objects as were proposed by the defendants in this case, the consensus of recent judicial opinion above referred to cannot be better illustrated than by quoting the propositions upon which the majority and the minority of the New York Court of Appeals, despite their opposite conclusions in National Protective Association v. Cumming, were entirely agreed. Chief Justice Parker at the outset of his opinion (170 N. Y. 320, 63 N. E. 369, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648) says: "I shall assume that certain principles of law laid down by Judge Vann are correct, namely: 'It is not the duty of one man to work for another unless he has agreed to, and if he has so agreed, but for no fixed period, either may end the contract whenever he chooses. The one may work or refuse to work at will, and the other may hire or discharge at will. The terms of employment are subject to mutual agreement, without let or hindrance from any one. If the terms do not suit, or the employer does not please, the right to quit is absolute, and no one may demand a reason therefor. Whatever one man may do alone, he may do in combination with others, provided they have no unlawful object in view. Mere numbers do not ordinarily affect the quality of the act. Workingmen have the right to organize for the purpose of securing higher wages, shorter hours of labor, or improving their relations with their employers. They have the right to strike; that is, to cease working in a body by prearrangement until a grievance is redressed, provided the object is not to gratify malice or inflict injury upon others, but to secure better terms of employment for themselves. A peaceable and ordinary strike, not to harm others, but to improve their own condition, is not in violation of law.'" This is a most conservative statement of the law. It embraces nothing that is not conceded at this day by even the most determined opponents of the principle of the strike, and contains in the concluding sentence a qualification which the rule of Boyson v. Thorn would compel us to disregard. In case of a peaceable and ordinary strike, without breach of contract, and conducted without violence, threats, or intimidation, this court would not inquire into the motives of the strikers. Their acts being entirely lawful, their motives would be held immaterial. But, taking the doctrine as stated by Justice Vann with all its qualifications, it suffices for the decision of everything of real importance in the present controversy, so far as the council and its constituent unions are concerned. The rule that their members could not work with nonunion men, or handle material supplied by an employer of nonunion men, was adopted before any difference had arisen between them and the plaintiff or its manager. It was a rule which they supposed would benefit them, and that was its sole purpose. Whatever others may think of the policy or justice of such a rule that is a matter outside the province of the courts, and as with regard to other questions of economic or political aspect, the remedy, if a remedy is needed, must be found by the Legislature. In the meantime, and for present purposes, we must recognize the fact that this rule, as established by the council and the affiliated unions, was devised for the promotion of an object certainly not unlawful, that the occasion that called for its application was the voluntary act of plaintiff's agent, and that with two or three possible exceptions to be hereafter noticed the defendants did nothing unlawful in their attempt to make it effective.

Certainly it was not unlawful to call out the union men, and it was not unlawful for the men to cease work which they were bound by no contract to continue. It was no doubt a technical trespass for the business agent of the council to enter the premises of plaintiff for the purpose of calling the men out for which the plaintiff might have recovered nominal damages in an action at law, but, it was no ground for an injunction in the absence of any evidence of a threatened repetition of the act. Was it unlawful to send the written notices to the contractors employing union labor that the plaintiff had been declared unfair, and that union men could not work for it or handle material supplied by it till further notice? There are authorities on both sides of this question, but I think those which would answer it in the negative have the better reason. The contractors were working in harmony with the unions (as indeed the plaintiff had previously done), and fair dealing required that the council, representing and acting for the unions, should protect such contractors from any loss they might incur if left in ignorance of the action it had taken. If they had not sent the notices some of those contractors who felt constrained to stop dealing with plaintiff when informed that it had been declared unfair might have purchased material which they could not have used, and it is only upon the assumption that such purchases would have been made that the plaintiff can base a claim that it was damaged by the notices. But can plaintiff make such a claim as a ground for equitable relief? It seems very clear that it cannot; for, with full knowledge that it had been declared unfair and of all the consequences flowing from that declaration, it would not have been justified in selling material to a contractor employing union men without disclosing a fact so material to his freedom of contract. And, if good faith and fair dealing imposed an equal obligation upon the plaintiff and the council to inform the contractors of what the plaintiff knew, it is difficult to see what right of plaintiff was infringed by the sending of the notices. Their only effect was to enable the contractors and plaintiff to conduct their future dealings on equal terms. Nor was there anything unlawful in the presentation to the plaintiff of an agreement embodying the conditions upon which union men would consent to re-enter its service and handle the output of its mill and shops. Conceding that the conditions of the proposed contract were intolerable, the right to propose them stood upon the same plane as the right to reject them, and no right of the plaintiff was infringed unless it can be held that men who are free to work or not to work, with or without reason, are breaking the law in proposing unreasonable terms as a condition of entering the employment of another. If this were so, why would it not equally follow that an employer would be breaking the law by proposing to men seeking employment conditions of service which they might consider intolerable, or a court deem unreasonable? Neither proposition can be admitted. The fact that the business agent of the council in the course of the dispute over the Waterman affair told Mr. Parkinson that they would drive him out of business if he refused to observe their rules is material only in so far as it is an item of evidence tending to show that the course pursued by the council was dictated by a malicious purpose to injure the plaintiff, and not by a desire to benefit its members. I think myself, as I have in substance said, that it has very slight probative force for that purpose, and that it is completely refuted by all the facts of the case. But, conceding that it might have warranted the superior court in concluding that the motives of defendants were tainted with malice, it cannot be denied that all the acts of the council and its affiliated unions were lawful, and that they were adapted to the promotion of the plans devised by them for bettering the condition of the members. Being so adapted, and being lawful in themselves, they could not be rendered actionable by the mere fact that some feeling of animosity had been engendered in the course of the controversy between the parties.

One other consequence of the strike and the notice to the contractors remains to be considered. Some of the contractors to whom the notices were sent countermanded orders for building material which they had already placed with the plaintiff. This it may be conceded was a breach of their contracts, and the law is pretty thoroughly settled both in England and in this country that causing another to violate his contract with a third party, without a legal justification, is an actionable injury, from which it follows that if the defendants by sending the notices to the contractors caused some of them to break their contracts, and did so maliciously and without justification, they made themselves liable at least to an action for damages. But I do not think it can be said that the sending of the notices was without justification. The plaintiff had been declared unfair, and it was certain that, until that action of the council should be reversed, no member of any of the unions—so long as he remained a member—would handle material supplied by the plaintiff. The contractors to whom the notices were sent were all employing union men, and it was no less the duty of the plaintiff than of the council to inform them, with a view to future transactions, that they could not use material supplied by the Parkinson Company without engaging nonunion men in place of the men they had. If this is so—if the notice to the contractors was proper and essential to fair dealing, as between them and the plaintiff—the fact that some of them violated their existing contracts cannot be deemed a wrong caused by the defendants. It was a wrong for which the contractors alone were responsible. But, even if it could be held that the action of the council in sending the notices was without justification and malicious, something would still be wanting to sustain the injunction. The notices had all been sent before this action was commenced, and there was no evidence of any threat to send notice to any other person. An injunction lies only to prevent threatened injury, and has no application to wrongs which have been completed, and for which the injured party may obtain redress by an action at law. This proposition involves a consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the fifth finding of the trial court: "That said defendants threatened to continue to coerce and intimidate plaintiff and its patrons and customers to the irreparable damage and injury of plaintiff." Being challenged to point out the evidence to support this finding, counsel for respondent cites us to the testimony of only one witness (Harrison, an officer of the council), the entire substance of which is a mere restatement of the rule forbidding union men to work for a person declared unfair, or to handle his material. The finding, therefore, so far as it is sustained by the evidence, means no more than this: There is a standing warning that union men will not work for plaintiff while it remains on the unfair list, or handle its material. This is the whole extent of the coercion and intimidation threatened, and against such a threat an injunction would be utterly impotent. To enjoin men from not working would be wholly ineffective unless there resides in the courts a power to compel them to go to work. But there is no such power. A court of equity cannot even enforce specifically a contract for personal services, and much less can it enforce the performance of such services in the absence of any contract.

I have not overlooked the fact that there was evidence that two or three individual members of the unions used threatening language in one or two instances towards other members who spoke of returning to work, and there may have been reason to conclude that they would continue to employ threats of the same character to deter others from seeking employment with the plaintiff. If so, the court would have been justified in enjoining those individuals, but there was nothing to justify an injunction against the council or the unions, or their officers, or the large number of individual members who made no threats.

I have not attempted to review in detail the numerous cases cited by counsel in support of the judgment. The task indeed would be endless. Speaking generally, it may be said that many of them relate to propositions which are not here questioned, while many of the others, like Quinn v. Leatham, supra, were actions for damages for unlawful interference with a legitimate business, in which, as in that case, the verdicts were sustained, and on substantially the same grounds. We do not question the doctrine of Quinn v. Leatham, as we gather it from the opinions of the judges—particularly those of Lords Brampton and Lindley, with which the Lord Chancellor agreed. Any injury to a lawful business, whether the result of a conspiracy or not, is prima facie actionable, but may be defended upon the ground that it was merely the result of a lawful effort of the defendants to promote their own welfare. To defeat this plea of justification the plaintiff may offer evidence that the acts of the defendants were inspired by express malice, and were done for the purpose of injuring plaintiff, and not to benefit themselves. The principle is the same which permits proof of express malice to defeat the plea of privilege in libel, or the defense of probable cause in actions for malicious prosecution or false imprisonment. In such cases as Quinn v. Leatham a verdict for the plaintiff imports a finding by the jury that the injurious acts of the defendants, which standing by themselves are actionable, have not been justified, or, in other words, that they were done to injure the plaintiff and not to benefit the defendants, or that the means employed were unlawful. In Quinn v. Leatham the verdict was supported on both grounds. There was proof of express malice, and of unlawful means employed to injure plaintiff's business. In this case there was overwhelming proof that the council, when the occasion arose, simply put in force a rule long before adopted for their own benefit, and not directed against the plaintiff or any particular person. Nor did the council, the unions, or their members generally use any unlawful means to injure the plaintiff, unless it was unlawful to send the notices. I have expressed the opinion that so far from being unlawful the sending of the notices was only the fulfillment of a duty under the circumstances, but whether so or not, since the contractors doing business in Palo Alto and employing union men had all received the notices before the action was commenced, and there was no threat to send notices to any other persons, there was nothing to enjoin. As to the sending of notices that a firm or corporation has been declared "unfair," the authorities are by no means uniform that such notices are unlawful. In the case of Gray v. Building Trades Council, 91 Minn. 171, 97 N. W. 663, 63 L. R. A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 483 (a Minnesota case cited by respondent), the Supreme Court modified an injunction by striking out that part which restrained the giving of unfair notices, and this for reasons equally applicable to the present case.

There is nothing in our decision in Goldberg v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, at all inconsistent with the views herein expressed. By their demurrer to the complaint the defendants in that case admitted the truth of all that was charged, and the injunction as modified restrained only acts of violence and intimidation.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment of the superior court is reversed.

I concur: LORIGAN, J.

SLOSS, J. I concur in the judgment, but am not prepared to assent to everything that is said in the main opinion.

What is particularly to be borne in mind is that we are not here concerned with a strike or boycott presenting any of the features of violence, either expressly or impliedly threatened, to be found in so many of the decided cases. There was here no effort or threat to interfere by physical force with the plaintiff or its employes, nor any intimidation of employes or customers, using the term "intimidation" as meaning an act tending to inspire fear of violence to person or property. One may, to be sure, be put in fear of violence without the use of any word indicating an intent to resort to force. "Picketing," as practiced in labor disputes, may, and perhaps usually does, constitute an intimidation of the employes and patrons of the person whose establishment is picketed. Goldberg v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145. The carrying, near a place of business, of banners calling upon laborers to remain away from such place, has been treated as a form of menace directed against those who might seek employment. Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 17 N. E. 307, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689. So, too, words which, of themselves, purport to express merely a request, may be uttered in such manner and under such circumstances as to convey to the hearer a plain threat that refusal to comply with the request (or demand) will result in physical harm to him. None of these considerations are, however, presented in this case. In so far as the injunction restrains the defendants from the use of force or threats of violence, it is clearly not supported by any evidence.

Nor need we here consider how far it is unlawful, whether by persuasion or other means, to induce one of the parties to a contract to break it to the damage of the other. As is pointed out in the opinion of the Chief Justice, any acts of this character that may have been committed by the defendants had occurred prior to the commencement of the action, and there was no evidence that any further interference in this direction was to be anticipated. There was, therefore, no basis for enjoining such acts.

The real question in the case turns upon the activities of the defendants exerted in two ways: First, in ceasing to work for the plaintiff (striking); second, in notifying (or threatening, if that term be preferred) the customers of plaintiff that workmen affiliated with the Building Trades Council would not work for contractors using materials purchased of plaintiff. That workmen employed by the Parkinson Company had a right to leave its employ whenever they desired, and for any reason that might seem to them sufficient, is universally conceded. Was it unlawful to notify contractors dealing with the Parkinson Company that union men would not continue to work for them if they purchased material of said Parkinson Company? In this inquiry I think it is unimportant that the defendants were merely acting in accordance with a rule adopted before any difference with the plaintiff had arisen. The opinion of the Chief Justice appears to proceed upon the theory that, since the defendants had bound themselves to act in a certain way in the event of a controversy of this kind, it was not only proper, but laudable, for them to notify contractors of their intended action and of the consequences which would follow to contractors who should continue to deal with the plaintiff. More than this, that it was in some way incumbent upon plaintiff to notify contractors dealing with him that a continuance of their patronage would be likely to result in loss to them. I cannot agree to the proposition that the rights of the parties are in any way affected by such considerations. If the defendants' course of conduct amounted to an unlawful interference with plaintiff's rights, it was not made lawful by the fact that the defendants had decided, in advance, to act in this way whenever an occasion should present itself.

But was their action unlawful? They had a right, as has been said, to cease working for Parkinson. They had an equal right to cease working for any other employer. Upon what ground, then, is it claimed that, while their refusal to work for plaintiff gave plaintiff no cause of complaint, the refusal to work for others did give plaintiff a ground of action?

Because, it is said, they are bringing to bear upon the Parkinson Company, with which they have a controversy, the pressure of loss inflicted by third persons, not connected with the main dispute, and are, by holding over these third persons the risk of financial loss, compelling them against their will to inflict upon Parkinson the damage resulting from a cessation of their patronage. This is the argument commonly advanced to establish the illegality of what has been called, in much of the recent discussion of the subject, a "secondary" rather than a "primary" boycott. I do not see that we are helped to a solution of the question of the illegality of the defendants' acts by looking into the "motive" or "intent" with which they acted. Even if we assume, contrary to the decisions of this court, that an improper motive may, as a general proposition, render actionable an act otherwise lawful, or, to use another form of statement, that damage intentionally inflicted will be actionable unless its infliction can be justified by showing that it was inspired by a proper motive, the motive with which these defendants acted was not, in my opinion, one which the law regards as improper. The defendants were seeking in all they are shown to have done to secure employment by the plaintiff for themselves, to the exclusion of those not associated with them, and to secure that employment upon terms deemed satisfactory or advantageous to them. That is the effort of every dealer in goods. It is the struggle of competition, and is no more to be frowned upon where the subject of trade is labor than where it is a specific commodity. The uniting or combining of a number of persons to accomplish a lawful object by lawful means will not per se render the conduct of the many any more unlawful than would be the same conduct on the part of any one of them. "It is plain," as is said by Mr. Justice Holmes in his dissenting opinion in Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 108, 44 N. E. 1077, 1081, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, "from the slightest consideration of practical affairs, or the most superficial reading of industrial history, that free competition means combination, and that the organization of the world, now going on so fast, means an ever increasing might and scope of combination. * * * One of the eternal conflicts out of which life is made up is that between the effort of every man to get the most he can for his services, and that of society, disguised under the name of capital, to get his services for the least possible return. Combination upon the one side is patent and powerful. Combination on the other is the necessary and desirable counterpart, if the battle is to be carried on in a fair and equal way."

The injunction then, must rest upon the principle that it is unlawful, in an effort to compel A. to yield a legitimate benefit to B., for B. to demand that C. withdraw his patronage from A. under the penalty of losing

B.'s services or patronage to which he has no contract right. That there are many cases sustaining the affirmative of this proposition is true. Thomas v. Railway Co. (C. C.) 62 Fed. 803; Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co., 83 Fed. 912, 23 C. C. A. 99; Vegelahn v. Guntner, supra; Beck v. Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 77 N. W. 13, 42 L. R. A. 407, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421; Gray v. Building Trades Council, 91 Minn. 171, 97 N. W. 663, 63 L. R. A. 753, 103 Am. St. Rep. 477; Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 101, 30 Atl. 881; Lucke v. Clothing C. & T. A., 77 Md. 396, 26 Atl. 505, 19 L. R. A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421; Jackson v. Standfield, 137 Ind. 592, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14, 23 L. R. A. 588; Crump v. Commonwealth, 84 Va. 927, 6 S. E. 620, 10 Am. St. Rep. 895. So are there many to the contrary. Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, L. R. (1892) App. Cas. 25; National Protective Association v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 16 N. E. 369, 58 L. R. A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648; Clemmitt v. Watson, 14 Ind. App. 38, 42 N. E. 367; Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. 420, 28 Atl. 190, 23 L. R. A. 135, 39 Am. St. Rep. 686; McCauley Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 33 Atl. 1, 37 L. R. A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, 55 N. W. 1119, 21 L. R. A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319; Payne v. Railroad Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666; Heywood v. Tillson, 75 Me. 225, 46 Am. Rep. 373; Raycroft v. Tayntor, 68 Vt. 219, 35 Atl. 53, 33 L. R. A. 225, 54 Am. St. Rep. 882; State v. Van Pelt, 136 N. C. 633, 49 S. E. 177, 68 L. R. A. 760; Lindsay & Co. v. Montana Fed. of Labor (Mont.) 96 Pac. 127. This enumeration does not attempt to cite all of the great mass of authority that might be referred to as bearing upon the proposition here involved. Nor do I undertake to review or to reconcile the well-known English cases of Allen v. Flood and Quinn v. Leatham.

Upon a consideration of the authorities, I think the sounder rule is that one who is under no contract relation to another may freely and without question withdraw from business relations with that other. This includes the right to cease to deal, not only with one person but with others; not only with the individual who may be pursuing a course deemed detrimental to another who opposes it, but with all who by their patronage aid in the maintenance of the objectionable policies. In other words, if the defendants violated no right of the Parkinson Company by refusing to work for it, they violated none by refusing to work for contractors who used material bought of Parkinson. Such refusal, as is shown in the opinion of the Chief Justice, and as is stated in the testimony of plaintiff's manager and principal witness, was the "sum total of the interference" which was practiced or threatened. An agreement by shipowners, in order to secure a carrying trade exclusively for themselves, that agents of members should be prohibited upon pain of dismissal from acting in the interest of competing shipowners (Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, supra); a combination of retailers binding the members to refuse to purchase of wholesalers who should sell to nonmembers of the combination (Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, supra; McCauley Bros. v. Tierney, supra); an agreement of contractors to withdraw their patronage from wholesalers selling to a contractor who had conceded the demands of his employes for an eight-hour day (Cote v. Murphy, supra); a threat by a railroad company to discharge any employe who should deal with the plaintiff (Payne v. R. R. Co., supra); a threat by an employer that he would discharge any laborer who rented plaintiff's house (Heywood v. Tillson, supra)—have been held to give no right of action to the individuals affected. The defendants in each case were held to be acting within their absolute legal right in entering or refusing to enter into business relations with persons to whom they were not bound by contract. I see no reason why workmen have not the same absolute right to dispose of their labor as they see fit. So long as they abstain from breach of contract, violence, duress, menace, fraud, misrepresentation, or other unlawful means, they may lawfully inflict such damage as results from the withholding of their labor or patronage. To quote again from Judge Holmes' opinion in Vegeahn v. Guntner: "If it be true that workmen may combine with a view, among other things, to getting as much as they can for their labor, just as capital may combine with a view to getting the greatest possible return, it must be true that, when combined, they have the same liberty that combined capital has to support their interests by argument, persuasion, and the bestowal or refusal of those advantages which they otherwise lawfully control." The terms "intimidation" and "coercion," so frequently used in the discussion of this question, seem to me to have no application to such acts as were here committed. One cannot be said to be "intimidated" or "coerced" in the sense of unlawful compulsion by being induced to forego business relations with A., rather than lose the benefit of more profitable relations with B. It is equally beside the question to speak of "threats" where that which is threatened is only what the party has a legal right to do. It may be that the combination of great numbers of men, as of great amounts of capital, has placed in the hands of a few persons an immense power, and one which, in the interest of the general welfare, ought to be limited and controlled. But if there be, in such combinations, evils which should be redressed, the remedy is to be sought, as to some extent it has been sought, by legislation. If the conditions require new laws, those laws should be made by the lawmaking power, not by the courts.

Chief Justice in his opinion upon such matters as are material to a determination of this appeal. The only material question in the case as to which there can be any doubt under the law as it is now generally stated by the courts is whether the defendants have been and are guilty of any such coercion or intimidation towards patrons of the plaintiff, tending to injure its business, as would warrant the granting of relief by injunction. Their offending in this regard was simply the notification given by them to contractors who were patrons of plaintiff and employers of union men that plaintiff had been "placed on the unfair list of the Building Trades Council of Santa Clara county," and that "union men cannot work for or handle any material furnished by said Parkinson until further notice." This notice concededly meant only that plaintiff had refused to comply with the conditions upon which union men would consent to remain in its employ, or handle material supplied by it while in the employ of any one else. While it was in effect a statement to the effect that, if the persons notified desired to retain union men in their employ, they must refrain from using material supplied by plaintiff, and was thus effectual to deprive plaintiff to its injury of the patronage of those who preferred to retain such union employes, I do not think it constituted the coercion or intimidation as to which the courts can extend relief. In the absence of statutory prohibition of such combinations, the right of persons, no matter how numerous, to voluntarily agree among themselves to withhold their labor from any one for any reason they see fit, and voluntarily abide by such agreement, seems clear. The decisions now generally recognize that right so far as an employer, with whom some dispute has arisen and who refuses to grant demands which they deem essential to their interests, is concerned, even though the effect of their refusal to work for him would be most injurious to him. If he yields to their demands, he may be said to have been coerced into doing so by the fear that, if he does not, he will not be able to obtain such employes as will enable him to properly carry on his business, but this is not the kind of coercion of which the courts can take notice. Those who have labor to give have the same right to insist upon the terms upon which it shall be given by them as have employers to refuse to employ except upon such terms as they see fit to make, and the law will not interfere with either class in the lawful exercise of that right. Even where the courts hold that the motive with which an otherwise lawful act is done may render the act unlawful, it is held that there is no unlawful motive where there is a mere refusal of organized labor to work for one who refuses to concede such terms as to wages, hours, etc., as they in good faith demand for the purpose of compelling him to accede to more reasonable terms. But in this state and in

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur in the judgment, and generally in what is said by the most of the other states the motive with which a lawful act is done is absolutely immaterial. Where such is the rule, the right of persons associated in labor unions to voluntarily withhold their labor for any reason and with any motive would appear to be absolute, and, after careful consideration of the authorities, I can see no material distinction so far as the lawfulness of the act is concerned between the withholding it from A. with whom they have some dispute arising out of his treatment of union labor, and withholding it from B. against whom they have no other grievance than that he is assisting A. by trading with him. That their motive in withholding it from B. is to induce A. to accede to their terms through the apprehended loss of B.'s patronage is immaterial, even if it be conceded that there is anything wrong in such a motive, which I do not grant. On this point I am in entire accord with the views expressed by Justice SLOSS. But regardless of this, their simple withholding of labor being lawful, the courts will not inquire into their motives. We are, of course, speaking of cases where there is no contract between employer and employé under the terms of which the legal obligation rests upon the employés to continue work. There is no consideration of that kind in this case, and we need not consider how it would affect the question. If employés thus banded together have a lawful right to withhold their labor from one unless he refrains from patronizing another, there can be nothing unlawful in their simple announcement that they intend to do so. It may be claimed by some that such combinations of labor are inimical to the public welfare, but that, it appears to me, is purely a question for the legislative department of the government. The question, in this respect, is the same in character as would arise over any kind of combination for business purposes. If any of plaintiff's customers were guilty of a breach of contract with plaintiff because of the knowledge of the intention of the defendants communicated to them, that was a matter purely between such customers and the plaintiff, and one for which the defendants were in no way legally responsible.
Cal. Rep. 98-101 P.—13

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. I think the judgment should be modified, but that it should not be reversed.

The plaintiff complains of both a strike and a boycott, and asks an injunction against both. So far as the matter of the alleged strike of plaintiff's men is concerned, I think the defendants did nothing which they did not have a lawful right to do, and that they used no unlawful means in doing what they did. The plaintiff was employing a number of men who belonged to the several unions represented by the Building Trades Council, and it was understood by all the members of the unions that they would not work for an employer who persisted in employing nonunion men in the business. The plaintiff employed nonunion men, and thereupon the union men in its employ quit work. There was no violence used and no effort made to prevent plaintiff from securing other men to work, or to prevent other men from seeking its employment. The men had an absolute right to quit work at any time. None of the defendants used any improper means to induce the men to quit. They were simply informed that the plaintiff had refused to discharge the nonunion men, and thereupon, in accordance with the rules of the unions, which amounted to a previous agreement of all the members between themselves, they left the plaintiff's service. The judgment purports to enjoin the defendants from "molesting, harassing, annoying, or interfering with the employés of plaintiff at any time" by "threats of force, intimidation, or coercion." There is no evidence that the employés had been or would be threatened, or coerced, or that they had been harassed, annoyed, molested, or interfered with. This part of the judgment is therefore without support. An injunction should not be granted against the doing of acts which have not been done or threatened. I think the judgment is sustained by the evidence in so far as it enjoins the continuance of the alleged boycott. The defendants are forbidden to coerce plaintiff's customers to withdraw their custom from plaintiff by threats that, unless they do so, the defendants will cause loss to them in their business.

The respective unions represented by the Federated Trades Council were 22 in number. It does not appear how many members they had in the aggregate, but it is plain from all the circumstances that the membership included the majority of the workmen in that vicinity engaged in the respective trades, and that they were of such numbers that, if they all refused to work for any contractor engaged in building enterprises in that neighborhood, such contractor would be unable to carry on his business without substantial loss. The agreement of the union men that they would not work for any contractor who employed nonunion men, or who used material made by any manufacturer or sold by any dealer who employed nonunion men, was embodied in their rules adopted by them long before any difficulty had arisen with the plaintiff and without any reference whatever to the plaintiff. It was a general regulation and agreement, intended to apply to all persons and to be enforced whenever any occasion arose which made it applicable. The method of putting it in force was that the Building Trades Council, when it found any contractor, dealer, or manufacturer employing nonunion men, or using nonunion materials, sent out notices to all union workmen and to other dealers and contractors that the person in question was "unfair," and thereupon it was understood that all men in the employ of such other persons would refuse to work for their respective employers unless such employer refused to use materials received or purchased from such boycotted person. When the Parkinson Company employed nonunion men, these notices were immediately sent to all its customers. As a result, its customers immediately countermanded such orders to plaintiff for goods as were then unfilled, and ceased thereafter to deal with plaintiff. The evidence showed that at least seven of the plaintiff's important customers quit dealing with the plaintiff; that substantial damage had already been caused to the plaintiff by this loss of custom during the time it had continued, and that its further continuance would cause plaintiff further substantial loss; that these customers were, by the aforesaid threats of defendants, coerced and compelled, against their wish and will, to cease dealing with plaintiff or using goods obtained from plaintiff; and that the defendants intended and threatened to continue this boycott indefinitely. The claim of the defendants appears to be that these notices were intended for the benefit of the several persons to whom they were sent to warn them of the consequences that might attend their patronizing the plaintiff, so that they could avoid doing so, and thereby escape the evil results that would otherwise come to them, and that the sending of notices for such a purpose is not only lawful and innocent, but praiseworthy as well; that these consequences would not come as the result of any act done with reference to the parties warned, but as the result of conditions that existed under the union rules established long before any difficulty with plaintiff arose. These rules seem to be regarded as of similar force to the law of the land and a notice not to disregard them as a friendly act similar to a notice to a friend not to violate the law. I concede, of course, that, where a strike has been determined upon, the mere sending of a notice of the fact is not unlawful, or blameworthy, and cannot be made the foundation of an action. Perhaps the sending of these notices under some circumstances might have been considered as an act of this character. But under the circumstances disclosed in this case, and in view of the findings of the court which show that the acts of the defendants were intended to coerce plaintiff's patrons to cease dealing with plaintiff in order to injure plaintiff in its property rights, the conduct of the defendants must be considered as malicious and unlawful. The defendants had the right, by lawful means, to persuade or induce others to cease dealing with plaintiff, although their purpose in so doing was to injure the plaintiff in its business and constrain plaintiff to yield to their demands in regard to the conduct of plaintiff's business. It is only when they seek to accomplish such injury by the use of means which the law deems unlawful that their action to that end becomes unlawful and the resulting injury an actionable wrong. The entire case depends on the question whether or not the means by which the defendants induced the plaintiff's customers to cease dealing with it were unlawful.

It is settled in this state, and, for the most part, in other jurisdictions, also, that in cases where one person induces another to do an act injurious to a third person, the mere fact that the person instigating the doing of the act was actuated by a bad motive, or by malice toward the third person, will not make his instigation unlawful. Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 33 Pac. 492, 21 L. R. A. 233. The effect of the authorities, in cases like the present, is that, in order to make such instigation unlawful, the customer must be induced to cease dealing with the party intended to be injured by means of some force, intimidation or coercion which destroys his freedom of action and constrains him to cease such dealing when he does not wish to do so and would not do so except for the constraint put upon him. In People v. Schmitz, 94 Pac. 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717, it is said that the means used to induce the injurious action toward the third party, and which, if used, will make the resulting injury actionable, includes duress, menace, fraud, and undue influence, as defined in Civ. Code, §§ 1569, 1570, 1572 and 1575. According to these sections, fraud involves deceit, duress, confinement of the person, or detention of property, and menace a threat of violence to person or property or of an attack on character. Neither of these things occurred here. The class to which the conduct of the defendant belongs, if it can be characterized as illegal, is that of undue influence. In the decisions on the subject, this method of influencing the action of others is usually included with various forms of menace, and is designated as intimidation or coercion. In other jurisdictions, there are no code provisions defining the general principles of law such as we have in the Civil Code. By the provisions of the Code above mentioned a contract which is procured by either duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence is said to be voidable. The use of such means is characterized as illegal. It is not necessary, in order to constitute such undue influence or coercion, that there should be any sort of physical violence done or threatened, or that there should be any act done or threatened, which in itself, and apart from its effect in controlling the action of the person coerced, would be unlawful. It is sufficient if the acts threatened, although lawful, were of such a character that, if done, they would cause loss or injury to the person threatened of so serious a nature that the mere threat prevents him from exercising his own will in the matter, and causes him, against his will, to act injuriously to the person intended to be injured.

These principles are established by a great number of decisions of the courts of this country and England. One of the latest of these is Quinn v. Leatham, in the House of Lords (App. Cas. 1901, p. 495). Leatham, a butcher, was employing nonunion men. Quinn and others, members of a union, threatened Leatham that, if he did not discharge these men, they would stop his custom and call out his union men. He refused to discharge the objectionable men, and thereupon, by threats to a customer named Munce that they would also call out his men if he did not cease dealing with Leatham, they forced Munce to comply with their demand and cease buying of Leatham, to his injury. One Dickie, a workman, was by similar means compelled to quit Leatham's service. The question was whether or not there was sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff for damages. Lord Brampton, referring to Dickie, who quit without notice, says: "There was an abundance of evidence that he was induced to do that wrongful act by the unjustifiable influence of the defendants." And respecting the rights of the defendants as a trades union, he says: "As members of a trades union society they have no more legal right to commit what would otherwise be unlawful wrongs than if the association to which they are attached had never come into existence. They have no more right to coerce others pursuing the same calling as themselves to join their society or adopt their views or rules than those who differ from them and belong to other trades associations would have a right to coerce them." And with reference to the method of such coercion his opinion proceeds: "It is at all times a painful thing for any individual to be the object of hatred, spite, and ill will of any one who seeks to do him harm. But that is nothing compared to the danger and alarm created by a conspiracy formed by a number of unscrupulous enemies acting under an illegal compact, together and separately, as often as opportunity occurs, regardless of law and actuated by malevolence, to injure him and all who stand by him. Such a conspiracy is a powerful and dangerous engine, which in this case has, I think, been employed by the defendants for the perpetration of organized and ruinous oppression." On this subject Lord Lindley's opinion is the fullest. The following is extracted from it: "What the defendants did was to threaten to call out the union workmen of the plaintiff and of his customers if he would not discharge some nonunion men in his employ. In other words, in order to compel the plaintiff to discharge some of his men, the defendants threatened to put the plaintiff and his customers and persons lawfully working for them to all the inconvenience they could without violence. * * * The defendants were doing a great deal more than exercising their own rights. They were dictating to the plaintiff and his customers and servants what they were to do." Page 536. "One man without others behind him who would obey his orders could not have done what these defendants did. One man, exercising the same control over others as these defendants had, could have acted as they did, and, if he had done so, I conceive that he would have committed a wrong towards the plaintiff for which the plaintiff could have maintained an action. I am aware that in Allen v. Flood (1898) App. Cas. 128, 138, Lord Herschell expressed his opinion that it was immaterial whether Allen said he would call the men out or not. This may have been so in that particular case, as there was evidence that Allen had no power to call out the men, and the men had determined to strike before Allen had anything to do with the matter. But, if Lord Herschell meant to say that as a matter of law there is no difference between giving information that men will strike and making them strike or threatening to make them strike by calling them out, when they do not want to strike, I am unable to concur with him. It is all very well to talk about peaceable persuasion. It may be that in Allen v. Flood there was nothing more; but here there was very much more. What may begin as peaceable persuasion may easily become, and in trades union disputes generally does become, peremptory ordering, with threats, open or covert, of very unpleasant consequences to those who are not persuaded. Calling workmen out involves very serious consequences to such of them as do not obey. Black lists are real instruments of coercion, as every one whose name is on one soon discovers to his cost. A combination not to work is one thing, and is lawful. A combination to prevent others from working by annoying them if they do is a very different thing, and is prima facie unlawful. * * * A threat to call men out given by a trades union official to an employer of men belonging to the union and willing to work with him is a form of coercion, intimidation, molestation, or annoyance to them and to him very difficult to resist, and, to say the least, requiring justification. * * * It is said that conduct which is not actionable on the part of one person cannot be actionable if it is that of several acting in concert. That may be so where many do no more than one is supposed to do. But numbers may annoy and coerce where one may not. Annoyance and coercion by many may be so intolerable as to become actionable, and produce a result which one alone could not produce. * * * Coercion by threats, open or disguised, not only of bodily harm, but of serious annoyance and damage, is prima facie, at all events, a wrong inflicted on the person coerced; and in considering whether coercion has been applied or not, numbers cannot be disregarded."

In Read v. Friendly Societies, 1902, K. B. Div. 737, an apprentice sued the defendants for damages arising from the coercion of his employer to discharge him by threats to call out the employer's men, all of whom belonged to the society. The court considered this to be the use of illegal means, and said regarding it: "Where illegal means have been used to bring about a breach of contract to the detriment of a party thereof, 'just cause' cannot come into the discussion at all." In Glamorgan Co. v. South Wales M. Federation (1903) 2 K. B. Div. 573, it was held that the act of the defendants in inducing a breach of their contract of service by the employer's men could not be justified by showing that the direction to strike was made for the benefit of the men and without malice towards the employers. In Giblan v. Amalgamated L. U., 2 K. B. Div. (1903) 620, the court said: "In my opinion it was not essential, in order for the plaintiff to succeed, that he should establish a combination of two or more persons to do the acts complained of. In my judgment, if a person who, by virtue of his position or influence, has power to carry out his design, sets himself to the task of preventing, and succeeds in preventing, a man from obtaining or holding employment in his calling, to his injury, by reason of threats to, or special influence upon, the man's employers, or would-be employers, and the design was to carry out some spite against the man, or had for its object the compelling him to pay a debt, or any similar object not justifying the acts against the man, then that person is liable to the man for the damage consequently suffered." And on page 623 the "special influence" there intended is thus described: "Going to his employer and threatening that they would resort to the powers which were, or were believed to be, vested in them as officers of a trades union, and which involved a resort to the power of numbers in a way which might and probably would cause detriment to the employer. * * * Such acts, so persisted in, seem to me to be in the nature of molestation or coercion; and, although they do not involve recourse to physical force, I am far from satisfied that they are not such as to be illegal, even if done by a single individual."

In Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 38 Atl. 96, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252, the court says: "For a person to wrongfully—that is, by employment of improper means—induce a third party to break a contract with the plaintiff, whereby injury will naturally and probably, and does in fact, ensue to the plaintiff, is actionable," although the third party has the lawful right to terminate the contract at any time. "Wherever a person, by means of fraud or intimidation, procures the breach of a contract * * * which, but for such wrongful interference, would have continued, he is liable." "The important question in an action of this kind is as to the nature of the defendant's acts and the means adopted by him to accomplish his purpose. Merely to induce another to leave an employment or discharge an employé, by persuasion or argument, however whimsical, unreasonable, or absurd, is not in and of itself unlawful, and we do not decide that such interference may become unlawful by reason of the defendant's malicious motives, but simply that to intimidate an employer by threats if the threats are of such a character as to produce this result and thereby cause him to discharge an employé whom he desired to retain and would have retained except for such unlawful threats is an actionable wrong." In Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 99, 44 N. E. 1077, 35 L. R. A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, it is said: "A combination to do injurious acts expressly directed to another by way of intimidation or constraint either of himself or other persons employed or seeking to be employed by him is outside of allowable competition, and is actionable." In Commonwealth v. Hunt, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 129, 38 Am. Dec. 346, the court says: "When an association is formed for purposes actually innocent, and afterwards its powers are abused by those who have the control and management of it to purposes of opposition and injustice, it will be criminal in those who misuse it, or give consent thereto." In Lucke v. Clothing C. A., 77 Md. 407, 26 Atl. 505, 19 L. R. A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, a cutters' union threatened the employers of Lucke that if they did not discharge him, all labor organizations would be notified that the house was a nonunion house, and it appeared that this was intended to mean, and was so understood, that all the union men in their employ would walk out, and that this would cause the employers great loss in their business. This threat so made caused the discharge of Lucke, and it was held to constitute unlawful coercion and that it gave Lucke a cause of action against the union making the threats for the damages suffered therefrom. In Cœur D'Alene Co. v. Miners' Union (O. C.) 51 Fed. 267, 19 L. R. A. 382, the court said: "If the things done, or the words spoken, are such that they will excite fear, or a reasonable apprehension, of damages, and so influence those for whom designed as to prevent them from freely doing what they desire and the law permits, they may be restrained, and the courts will look beyond the mere letter of the act or word into its spirit and intent." In U. S. v. Kane (C. C.) 23 Fed. 748, the opinion by Brewer, J., shows that a threat may be sufficient if merely implied, although not expressed. In Thomas v. Railway Co., (C. C.) 62 Fed. 818, Taft, J., said: "All the employés had the right to quit their employment but they had no right to combine to quit their employment, in order thereby to compel their employers to withdraw from the mutually profitable relations with a third person, for the purpose of injuring that third person, when the relation thus sought to be broken had no effect whatever upon the character or reward of their services." See, also, O'Brien v. People, 216 Ill. 354, 75 N. E. 108, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219; U. S. v. Cassidy (D. C.) 67 Fed. 763; Oxleys Co. v. Coopers' Union (C. C.) 72 Fed. 695; Nashville v. McConnell (C. C.) 82 Fed. 65; Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co., 83 Fed. 918, 28 C. C. A. 99; Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 614, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524, 43 L. R. A. 797, 802, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203; Casey v. Typographical Union (C. C.) 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193; Boutwell v. Maar, 71 Vt. 1, 42 Atl. 607, 43 L. R. A. 803, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746; Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14, 23 L. R. A. 58; Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 59 N. E. 125, 52 L. R. A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289; Willcutt Co. v. Bricklayers' Union (Mass.) 85 N. E. 897. All these expressions are but different ways of saying that the use of undue influence to compel or bring about the action of one person to the injury of a third person is the use of illegal means to that end.

It is of no importance that the rules were adopted without special reference to the plaintiff. They were adopted for the express purpose of being put in force against any person when the occasion should arise which made it desirable that the conduct of such person should be influenced or controlled. The effect in contemplation of law is the same as if they had been made expressly for the occasion for which they were used. Nor is the case of plaintiff defeated by the fact that the only act done by the defendants at the time of the boycott was the sending of notices that the plaintiff had been declared unfair without threat of any sort accompanying it. It is in evidence that all the persons thus notified knew of the purport and effect of the union rules which would be applied in such a case. The defendants had created this engine of oppression for use at any time they desired, and had prepared the signal upon which it was to become active. The parties notified were aware of all this, and the defendants also knew that these parties had this knowledge. Further words were unnecessary. The threat would not have been more complete if the notice had expressly stated that all business with Parkinson Company must stop under penalty of a strike of their union workmen. The defendants had arranged this condition of affairs. They cannot escape its effects on the ground that they were simply giving information of action which would inevitably take place and were doing it for the benefit of the contractors so that they might act as requested, and thus avoid the damages otherwise ensuing. If the action of which this notice was given had been that of third persons for whom defendants were in nowise responsible, or with whom they were not in collusion, such a claim might stand. But the action of which they were so kindly notifying the contractors was their own action long before resolved upon. If they had no right to act in this manner for this purpose, the fact that it was previously arranged or decided upon for this or any similar occasion, was immaterial.

It is further argued that the only thing with which the customers were threatened was a strike of these customers' employes; that this threat was made by the men themselves, through their agents authorized to act for them; and that they had a lawful right to strike at any time and for any cause or no cause, and hence that their conduct was not unlawful. The principle settled by the cases cited, however, is that, while men have a right to strike, they have no right by that means to coerce their employers so as to compel them to act to the injury of a third person. The fact that they were to strike in such numbers gave them a power over the threatened customers of plaintiff, which constituted undue influence over them, or coercion or intimidation, as most of the authorities usually express it, and this coercion, exercised for the purpose of injuring a third person, is an unlawful act, and makes the resulting injury an unlawful injury, which may be enjoined if only threatened, and which, if committed, may be redressed by an action for damages. It is the control of another's conduct against his will that is the unlawful element in the proposition. This being unlawful, the resulting injury to a third person is unlawful, although every other act in the transaction is lawful in itself. So far as this unlawful element is concerned, it is immaterial whether that control is obtained by fear produced by the immediate prospect of serious pecuniary loss, as the result of a threatened strike, or by fear produced by a threat of bodily injury.

154 Cal. 644

EVANS v. EVANS. (S. F. 4,769.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE (§ 310*)—SUPPORT OF WIFE AND CHILDREN—FORFEITURE.

While a wife may abandon or forfeit her own claim to be supported by or from the estate of her divorced husband, she cannot forfeit or abandon the claims of the children to support by their father.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 310.*]

2. DIVORCE (§ 308*)—DECREE—MODIFICATION—SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

Where a divorce decree gave to the father the custody of certain children, subject to the further order of the court, and required him to maintain and educate them, the court, on subsequently modifying the decree so as to give the custody of the children to the mother, was entitled to require the father to continue to support them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

3. COURTS (§ 474*)—JURISDICTION—PRIORITY.

An application for guardianship of minor children in the superior court of another county on which no letters had been issued did not deprive the court having awarded their custody to the father in a divorce decree of jurisdiction reserved in the decree to so modify it as to award custody to the mother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Dec. Dig. § 474.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Benito County; M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Action by Helen M. Evans against Thomas B. Evans. From an order modifying a divorce decree, so as to award the custody of certain children of the parties to plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William A. Bowden, for appellant. Gilmore Agnew, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. In 1903 the superior court of San Benito county granted plaintiff a divorce from defendant upon the ground of his extreme cruelty. In accordance with an agreement of the parties at that time entered into, the custody of the children was given to the defendant, "subject to the further order of the court," and defendant was "required to maintain and educate them." Defendant moved with the children to the county of Santa Clara, and there remarried and continued to reside. In 1906 this plaintiff made application to the court of San Benito county to award to her the custody of the children, upon the ground that the father had proved, by reason of his cruelty to them, to be an unfit and improper person to have charge of them. To this application was joined a request for an allowance of $30 per month for their maintenance. The probation officers of Santa Clara county at about the same time had taken charge of the children, and placed them temporarily in the Orphans' Home at San Jose; their father having been arrested for cruelty to them.

These matters were disclosed in evidence before the superior court of San Benito county at the hearing of this application, with further testimony of the cruelty which the father had practiced upon the children. The court then made its order in accordance with the prayer of the petition. Upon appeal the contention is made that the order decreeing payment of a monthly sum for the maintenance of the children was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and therefore void, because in the original judgment and decree in divorce no provision had been made for such maintenance, and no reservation of the right to make such provision in the future. This contention, however, is contrary to the facts. By the agreement of the parties, adopted by the court, the wife did relinquish any claim to maintenance or support for herself, but she did not attempt to do this upon behalf of her children, and, if she had done so, the act would have been nugatory. A wife may abandon or forfeit her own claims to be supported by or from the estate of her divorced husband, but she cannot forfeit or abandon the claims of the children. Ex parte Gordan, 95 Cal. 374, 30 Pac. 561. Moreover, the decree of divorce distinctly imposed upon the father the duty "to maintain and educate the children." So that the decree is not, as appellant contends, silent upon the matter.

This court had occasion in the recent case of Harlan v. Harlan (Cal.) 98 Pac. 32, to consider the question of the power of the court in cases such as this. The authorities are there reviewed, and the conclusion reached and expressed that the court has power to make future provision for the children's care, custody, education, and maintenance, as was done in this case. It is made to appear that an application for letters of guardianship of the persons of these neglected children was pending in the superior court of the county of Santa Clara at the time the order here appealed from was made by the superior court of San Benito county. Upon this appellant bases an argument to the effect that the superior court of Santa Clara county had acquired jurisdiction, and that the superior court of San Benito county was, therefore, without power to act. To this proposition is sought to be applied the case of Younger v. Younger, 106 Cal. 381, 39 Pac. 779. The Younger Case is not in point. In the Younger Case the custody of an infant child by the decree of divorce had been awarded to the mother. With her consent the child was subsequently regularly adopted by its grandfather, and this court held that such adoption so changed the status of the child that the superior court lost jurisdiction to modify its decree relative to the custody. Such is not the situation here presented. Manifestly the application for guardianship in the superior court of Santa Clara county was for the sole purpose of sheltering and harboring the children until some permanent arrangement could be effected for their care and custody. No letters of guardianship had been issued. The superior court of San Benito county was therefore not without jurisdiction to proceed.

The order appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.

RUDDICK et al. v. ALBERTSON et al.
(S. F. 4,735.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1903.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 61½*)—INVALIDITY—EFFECT.

Where a trust created by a deed of land is invalid for any reason, the legal title remains in the grantor, and is not conveyed to the trustees freed from the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 86; Dec. Dig. § 61½.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 9*) — BENEFIICIARIES—UNINCORPORATED VOLUNTARY ASSOCIATIONS.

Under the rule that a valid grant may be made to trustees for an unincorporated voluntary association, and that the title will descend in perpetuity, a deed to Indians in trust for a specified tribe of which they were captains, to be held and used by the tribe as communal property, was valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 6; Dec. Dig. § 9.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Dick Ruddick and another, Indians, for and on behalf of the Yokayo Tribe, against F. C. Albertson and others. Judgment for complainants, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. P. L. Held, for appellants. Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas and McNab & Hirsch, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. The appeal in this case is from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone. The history of the litigation, as disclosed by the findings, is as follows: The Yokayo Indians are a body of native redmen, who, from time immemorial, have been known and recognized as a tribe existing and living in tribal relationship, with their own laws, customs, usages, and rules. The tribe selected chiefs or captains, who under its loose system of government controlled the people as to their tribal affairs, and dealt for them with the outside world. Their ownership of property was communal. They possessed no real property, and their life was nomadic. In October, 1881, the four captains or chieftains of this tribe were Capts. Dick, Charley, Bill, and Lewis. With more knowledge and foresight than the majority of their fellow tribesmen, these captains, recognizing the improvidence of their people, their lack of permanent home, their inability to make provision for the future, decided that they would purchase a rancho, which should become the village and home of the tribe for the benefit of all its members, whereby all might have a permanent abiding place, lands to till, a home while living, and a burial place when dead. According to custom, they called the tribe together at an appointed place, and there was collected from the individual members of the tribe, by voluntary contribution, it not being now ascertainable who were the donors nor the amounts of their donations, the sum of $800, which was given to the captains. They, through a trusted white man as their agent, undertook with this money the purchase of a certain rancho then owned by one J. H. McPeak. The purchase price of the land was $4,500. Charles Yates acted as the agent of the tribe in the matter of this purchase, the $800 was paid, and Yates, as the agent of the tribe, took a deed to the land in his own name. From time to time, as the tribe under the directions of its captains accumulated money, in farming the land of which they had thus entered into possession, and by the sale of baskets which they manufactured, the land was completely paid for. These later moneys, like the first $800, came from the voluntary contributions of the tribe's members. So that all of the moneys which paid for the purchase of this property were the joint mingled communal funds of the entire Yokayo Tribe. When the land was finally paid for, the tribe assembled to deliberate as to how they should take title to it, and, as a result of these deliberations, it was in tribal assembly agreed upon that the deed should be made to their four captains for the benefit of the tribe. Such a deed was actually made by Yates on the 20th of October, 1881, the grantees being described as follows: "Dick, Lewis, Bill, Charley, all Indians, and their tribe." Ever since this date the tribe has continued in the ownership, occupation, and use of these lands, farming them under their communal custom. During the lifetimes of the four captains they, individually and collectively, acknowledged, respected, and fulfilled their trust, recognizing always their fiduciary position, and consulting with the various members of the tribe and with the tribe in meeting assembled upon all matters pertaining to the lands. For the transaction of business with the outside world too difficult for them to understand, or too intricate for them to manage, these captains employed a white man as their agent, and since the year 1896 that agent has been F. C. Albertson, one of the defendants herein. This agent, besides transacting business for the benefit of the tribe, such as paying their taxes and protecting them in the making and execution of contracts, was the custodian of the tribal funds, which funds were paid over by him to the captains upon request. These funds were used for various purposes—the purchase of farming machinery and implements, for feasts and barbecues, marriage festivals, and burials, and, in one instance, $200 was drawn for per capita distribution amongst the members of the tribe. Thus it was the understanding and intention of the tribe and of their captains, the grantees named in this deed, that the land should be held as the communal property of them all, a system which history tells us is the most usual form of the holding of real property upon the part of primitive races emerging from barbarism. And so they lived, the captains, as has been said, always recognizing that their trust and tenure was of the nature indicated. In time two of these captains died, Charley and Bill, and one T. J. Weldon was appointed administrator of the estates of both. Weldon laid claim to an undivided one-fourth interest in these lands as the property of the estate of each. Upon the assertion of this claim the living captains, Dick and Lewis, instituted this action on behalf of the tribe, asserting no personal private interest in the property on their own behalf, but asserting a full and complete tribal interest in it for all. F. C. Albertson, the white agent, was made a party defendant for the complete determination of all rights as he was the custodian of the tribal funds. Mr. Albertson joins with the plaintiffs and with the tribe in this effort to preserve their rights. Upon these findings, the court gave judgment that neither the estate of Captain Charley nor the estate of Captain Bill, nor defendant Weldon, as administrator of these estates, had any ownership, right, or title to the lands, or to the moneys in the possession of defendant Albertson.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Appellants' contention, in brief, is that the trust attempted thus to be created in the four captains of the tribe for the benefit of the tribe is void for many reasons, not necessary here to particularize; that from this it results that the deed is to four distinct individuals who take as tenants in common, each an undivided one-quarter; that the legal title was vested by the deed, and that, as there is no trust, the title remains in the designated grantees. We have said that it is unnecessary to particularize the grounds upon which appellant contends that the trust is void. This is so, because, if it were void (a matter which we do not here decide), appellant would be entitled to no relief. Clearly the four captains took as trustees, and, if the trust fails, the legal result is that no title whatsoever passed out of the grantor. The legal title would not then be in the four captains and in their estates, but would remain in their grantor. So that, if the argument for which the appellant contends should prevail, it would result, not in conferring title to any of the land upon these captains living or their estates dead, but would result merely in the determination that the legal title was in Charles Yates, with a resulting trust in favor of those who had contributed the money for the purchase of the land. Appellant's effort is to convert property conveyed in trust to the personal use and benefit of his intestates under his contention that the trust has failed. But such an act is abhorrent to equity, and is never permitted. Mandeville v. Solomon, 33 Cal. 44. It follows, therefore, that appellant, having no interest in the subject of this litigation, is not injured by the determination and his position would not be bettered, even if he should prevail in his contention that the trust is void. But, finally, it may be said that it would be a reproach to our jurisprudence if, under all the circumstances shown, those laws should compel that this tribe be driven from the land which they purchased, and forced again to become wanderers on the earth. But such reproach, we take it, does not attach. At common law, it is true, a deed of conveyance to an unincorporated voluntary association was bad for lack of a capable grantee, and cases will be found which hold that, where the grantee could not take directly, he or it cannot take through the medium of a trustee. But from this grew an abuse which equity was prompt to remedy. So that it is now recognized that a valid grant may be made to trustees for such an unincorporated voluntary association, and that such title will descend in perpetuity. Penny v. Coke Co., 138 Fed. 769, 71 C. C. A. 135; Liggett v. Ladd, 17 Or. 89, 21 Pac. 133. And certainly, if ever there was a case where equity would seek to sustain such a grant, it is the case here presented.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

(154 Cal. 623)

DAVIS v. BUTLER. (S. F. 4,779.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 94*)—VALIDITY—FRAUD—MISREPRESENTATION.

A single material misstatement knowingly made, with intent to influence another into entering into a contract, is, if believed and relied on by the latter, a ground for the rescission of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 420-427; Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 116*)—CAPITAL STOCK—SALES—FRAUD—MISREPRESENTATION.

A representation that the indebtedness of a corporation having an outstanding issue of 430 shares of stock of the par value of $10 each was only $1,530, when it was in fact $2,800, made to influence one to buy 250 shares at par, is a material misrepresentation, justifying the buyer in rescinding the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 117*)—TRANSFER OF STOCK—RESCISSON—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

In an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of corporate stock on the ground of misrepresentations as to the indebtedness of the corporation, evidence held to justify a finding that defendant had stated to plaintiff that the indebtedness of the corporation did not exceed $1,530, while it actually amounted to $2,800, justifying the granting of relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 116*)—CAPITAL STOCK—SALES—FRAUD—MISREPRESENTATION.

A buyer of corporate stock may rely on the seller's statement as to the amount of the indebtedness of the corporation, where the seller states that there are no books of account showing the corporate indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 116.*]

5. SALES (§ 40*)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—FRAUD—MISREPRESENTATION BY SELLER.

To justify a buyer to rescind the contract of purchase on the ground of fraudulent rep-representations, it is sufficient to show that he was induced by false representations to buy property which, if the representations had been true, would have been worth more than it actually was worth.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 79-83; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 117*)—TRANSFER OF STOCK—RESCISSION.

In an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of corporate stock on the ground of misrepresentations, the allegation of the complaint, not denied, that plaintiff tendered to defendant and offered to transfer to him the stock, is an allegation that he offered to do everything, including the delivery of an indorsed certificate, necessary to accomplish such transfer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—JUDGMENT—REVIEW.

An objection to the form of a judgment granting relief in an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of corporate stock, based on the insufficiency of the averment that plaintiff had tendered to defendant and offered to transfer to him the stock, cannot be raised on appeal from an order denying a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3476; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

8. CORPORATIONS (§ 117*)—TRANSFER OF STOCK—RESCISSION—TIME TO RESCIND.

In a suit to rescind a contract for the purchase of corporate stock on the ground of misrepresentations, evidence held to justify a finding that plaintiff did not delay an unreasonable time in electing to rescind after the discovery of the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

9. CONTRACTS (§ 270*)—TRIAL—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Whether one induced by fraud to enter into a contract promptly elected to rescind on the ground of fraud, as required by Civ. Code, § 1691, is a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1200; Dec. Dig. § 270.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; B. V. Sargent, Judge.

Action by H. E. Davis against T. C. Butler. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Maguire, Lindsay, Houx & Barrett, for appellant. Dougherty & Lacey, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. On November 7, 1905, the defendant sold to the plaintiff 250 shares of the capital stock of the Salinas Valley Bottling Company, a corporation. In January, 1906, the plaintiff, claiming that he had been induced to buy the stock by means of fraudulent misrepresentations made to him by the defendant, undertook to rescind the agreement of purchase and sale. The defendant refusing to restore the money and property received as the purchase price, the plaintiff brought this action, praying a decree that the agreement be rescinded, and that defendant be required to transfer to plaintiff the property received as the purchase price of the stock upon plaintiff retransferring the 250 shares of stock. The plaintiff had judgment in the court below. The defendant now appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The Salinas Valley Bottling Company was engaged in the business of bottling and selling beer which it purchased in bulk. Four hundred and thirty shares of its stock, of the par value of $10 each, had been issued. The misrepresentations alleged by plaintiff to have been made by defendant had reference to three matters. The complaint averred that the defendant had stated that the indebtedness of the corporation, over and above the money it then had in bank and solvent credits due to it by its patrons, amounted to the sum of $1,530, and no more, whereas in fact such indebtedness amounted to the sum of $2,963.64. He had represented that the corporation was and had been marketing and selling two car loads of beer per month, whereas in fact it had not been and was not selling more than one car load per month. The third representation relied upon was that the corporation received a net profit of $6.15 per barrel on the beer bottled and marketed by it, when as a matter of fact said net profit did not exceed $3.35 per barrel. A jury impaneled to try the issues raised as to fraudulent representations returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and, in addition, the court made findings covering all the issues. It found that representations had been made by defendant, as alleged in the complaint, with reference to the three matters above mentioned. The actual indebtedness of the corporation over and above its money in bank and solvent credits due it was found to be $2,800, instead of $2,963.64, as averred in the complaint. It was found that not more than one car load of beer per month had ever been marketed or sold by the corporation, and that the profit per barrel on the beer marketed and sold by it did not exceed $4.77 per barrel.

The principal point urged by appellant is that these findings are unsupported by the evidence, and a more or less elaborate argument is advanced to show that in each of the three particulars complained of no representations that were not substantially true were made by the defendant. We need not follow counsel into this extended field of discussion, since we are satisfied that there was ample evidence to justify the finding that, at least with regard to the indebtedness of the corporation, the defendant had made false representations. A single material misstatement, knowingly made, with intent to influence another into entering into a contract, will, if believed and relied on by that other, afford as complete ground for rescission as if it had been accompanied by a multitude of other false representations. It will hardly be contended that a representation that the indebtedness of the corporation was only $1,530, when in fact it was $2,800, was not material. There are many corporations having assets and conducting a business of such magnitude that a difference, one way or the other, of a few thousand dollars of indebtedness would not appreciably affect the value of their stock. But the Salinas Valley Bottling Company had a total outstanding issue of only 430 shares, of the par value of $10 each. The sale to plaintiff embraced 250 shares at par. The difference between $1,530 and $2,800, if apportioned among the outstanding shares of stock, amounts to almost $3 for each of the 430 shares. Such a discrepancy, having a close relation to the value of the stock, would certainly be material in a transaction based on a selling price of $10 per share. The testimony of plaintiff was clear and direct in support of the allegation and finding that the defendant had stated to him that the indebtedness did not exceed $1,530. That it actually did amount to as much as $2,800 was also sufficiently shown. The plaintiff testified that certain amounts were due from the corporation to various creditors. There is no merit in the contention that this evidence must be disregarded because it appeared to be based on demands and statements made by the alleged creditors. The defendant, who was a witness in his own behalf, did not deny that these obligations had been incurred. Furthermore, plaintiff testified that, when he learned of these claims, he demanded of defendant that he "make it good," to which the defendant answered that he would "see about it." The court was justified in treating this as an admission that the debts had been incurred.

The point is made that a car load of beer had without the knowledge of either party come in just prior to the sale of the stock to plaintiff, and that, in so far as defendant's statement of indebtedness failed to include the amount due on this, it was an innocent mistake. It is not clear that the evidence bears out this claim; but, if it did, the effect would merely be to make the misrepresentation less gross, while still leaving it substantial and material. The rule that a party may not complain of misrepresentations regarding matters which he has investigated, or, having the opportunity so to do, has begun to investigate for himself (Dow v. Swain, 125 Cal. 681, 58 Pac. 271), has no application here. While the plaintiff, before purchasing, looked over the books of the corporation, the court finds (and the finding is not challenged) that defendant stated to plaintiff that neither he nor the corporation kept any books of account showing the corporate indebtedness. The plaintiff was fully justified in relying upon defendant's statements as to such indebtedness. Spreckels v. Gorrill, 152 Cal.

383, 92 Pac. 1011. It is not essential to the right to rescind a contract for the purchase of property that the purchaser should be able to show that the property purchased was worth less than he paid for it. It is enough that he was induced, by false representations, to buy property which would, if the representations had been true, have been worth more than it actually was worth. Spreckels v. Gorrill, supra.

If, as is contended by appellant, the delivery of a duly indorsed certificate of stock is necessary to transfer the shares, the allegation of the complaint (not denied) that the plaintiff tendered to the defendant and offered to transfer to him said 250 shares of stock is an allegation that he offered to do everything, including the delivery of an indorsed certificate, necessary to accomplish such transfer. The objection to the form of the judgment, based on this same criticism, cannot be raised on an appeal from an order denying a new trial. Crescent Feather Co. v. United Upholsterers' Union (Cal.) 95 Pac. 871. The sale to plaintiff was made on November 7, 1905. The notice of rescission was given on January 11, 1906, and the complaint filed on January 18, 1906. The court found that plaintiff did not delay an unreasonable time in electing to rescind the contract after discovery of the falsity of the defendant's representations. This finding cannot be said to be contrary to the evidence. The total time elapsing between the purchase and the rescission was only a few days more than two months. Just when the plaintiff discovered the facts is not clearly shown, but it does appear that some delay may properly be attributed to the evasive answer given by the defendant when complaint was made about outstanding bills. Whether the defrauded party has acted promptly (Civ. Code, § 1691) is a question to be decided by the trial court upon the facts of the particular case, and there were here no circumstances requiring the court to find that the delay had been unreasonable.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.

154 Cal. 647

DEL CAMPO et al. v. CAMARILLO et al.
(L. A. 2,142.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 253*)—DECLARATIONS OF CONSPIRATORS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6, providing that, after proof of a conspiracy, the declaration of a conspirator against his co-conspirator and relating to the conspiracy is admissible, declarations of one conspirator made while the conspiracy is pending and during the progress of the plan adopted for its accomplishment are admissible against all the conspirators; but a declaration made after the act designed is accomplished, and after the object of the conspiracy has been obtained or defeated, is admissible only against the person making it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 994-1002; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 253*)—DECLARATIONS OF CONSPIRATORS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, providing that, after proof of a conspiracy, the declaration of a conspirator against his co-conspirator is admissible, etc., declarations of one conspirator made after the act designed is accomplished, and after the object of the conspiracy has been obtained or finally defeated, are inadmissible against a co-conspirator to prove the conspiracy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 994-1002; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 253*)—DECLARATIONS OF CONSPIRATORS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the object of a conspiracy was to obtain from one her interest in land, and the conspirators secured the execution by her of a deed conveying to them her interest, the object of the conspiracy was accomplished, and a declaration of a conspirator thereafter made was inadmissible against a co-conspirator, though the conspirators remained tenants in common of the land acquired.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 994-1002; Dec. Dig. § 253.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*)—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—EFFECT.

Where a will is valid and binding, a decree of distribution under it vests the property devised in the devisee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1306, 1307; Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

5. COURTS (§ 35*)—JURISDICTION—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the superior court makes a decree distributing an estate, and the fact of the making of the decree is properly made to appear, it will be presumed that the court has jurisdiction to make it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 8*)—FACTS AND CONCLUSIONS—SUIT TO IMPEACH JUDGMENT—WANT OF JURISDICTION.

In an action in equity to impeach a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction on the ground of want of jurisdiction, the complaint must set forth the particular defects showing want of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 8*)—ALLEGATIONS—CONCLUSIONS.

The bare allegation in a complaint, in a suit to impeach a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction for want of jurisdiction, that the court did not have jurisdiction of the proceedings, is an averment of a conclusion of law, contrary to the presumption of jurisdiction existing from the fact of the rendition of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

8. JUDGMENT (§ 463*)—SUIT TO IMPEACH JUDGMENT—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION—TRIAL.

Where a decree of a court of general jurisdiction is attacked for want of jurisdiction which appears on the face of the record, the question of its validity is one of law, to be determined from the record itself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 463.*]

9. JUDGMENT (§ 460*)—SUIT TO IMPEACH JUDGMENT—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION—PLEADING.

Where it is sought to impeach a decree for want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the record, the pleader should either exhibit the record or state the particular defects therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

10. JUDGMENT (§ 460*)—SUIT TO IMPEACH JUDGMENT—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION—PLEADING.

Where it is sought to impeach a decree for want of jurisdiction because of facts outside the record, the complaint must aver the facts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 460.*]

11. COURTS (§ 35*)—JURISDICTION—PRESUMPTION.

Where the complaint in a suit to impeach a decree distributing the estate of a testator for want of jurisdiction avers no facts showing want of jurisdiction, either on the record or outside of the record, the court will assume that the order admitting the will to probate and the decree of distribution were made after the court had acquired jurisdiction by the necessary notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 140; Dec. Dig. § 35.*]

12. JUDGMENT (§ 461*)—SUIT TO IMPEACH JUDGMENT—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in a suit to impeach a judgment for want of jurisdiction, the answer put in issue the allegation of the complaint of lack of jurisdiction, plaintiff had the burden of proving want of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 461.*]

13. JUDGMENT (§ 461*)—SUIT TO IMPEACH JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit to impeach a judgment for want of jurisdiction, the entire record of the cause should be exhibited, and an offer of only a part thereof for the purpose of showing want of jurisdiction was improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 461.*]

14. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 19*)—AVOIDANCE—RETURN OF CONSIDERATION—NECESSITY.

A party accepting money and property in satisfaction of her claims, based on the fraudulent acquisition of real estate, cannot retain the property, and prosecute a suit for the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

15. WILLS (§ 718*)—RIGHT TO DENY VALIDITY—ESTOPPEL.

One cannot hold property under a will, and deny the validity thereof, and seek to have it declared void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1717; Dec. Dig. § 718.*]

16. DEEDS (§ 211*)—SUIT TO SET ASIDE—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

A party who seeks relief against frauds occurring seven, nine, and fourteen years before the beginning of the action, and who asks the court to cancel a contract and deed which imply a settlement of the wrongs inflicted by the frauds, must allege a clear case, and prove it by satisfactory and convincing evidence, and must clearly show that he did not discover the commission of the frauds until a reasonable time before the commencement of the action, that he proceeded promptly on such discovery,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes and that his failure to make the discovery sooner was not due to his lack of diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 645; Dec. Dig. § 211.*]

17. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 34*)—ACTION TO SET ASIDE DEED—FRAUD—LACHES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to set aside a deed of a decedent as obtained by fraud of the grantees held to show such knowledge of the fraud on the part of the decedent's heirs to justify the dismissal of the suit because of their subsequent delay in the commencement of the suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Dec. Dig. § 34.*]

18. EVIDENCE (§ 75*)—PRESUMPTIONS.

Evidence withheld by a party is presumed to be adverse to him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

19. WILLS (§ 427*)—PROBATE—EFFECT.

A valid and effectual probate of a will operates to establish the will according to its tenor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 916; Dec. Dig. § 427.*]

20. WILLS (§ 421*)—PROBATE—SUIT TO SET ASIDE.

An order admitting a will to probate made by a court of probate jurisdiction in a proceeding for that purpose cannot be vacated by a court of equity for direct fraud in establishing it, consisting either of perjured testimony or a false will, produced before the court at the time of the hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 904; Dec. Dig. § 421.*]

21. WILLS (§ 421*)—PROBATE—SUIT TO SET ASIDE.

Where a court of probate jurisdiction in a proceeding for that purpose admitted a will to probate, the devisee therein cannot be declared a trustee in favor of the heirs in a suit in equity by the heirs because of fraud produced before the court at the time of the hearing for the probate of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 421.*]

22. WILLS (§ 421*)—PROBATE—SUIT TO SET ASIDE.

Fraud, consisting of producing a will to the court in proceedings for its probate, introducing evidence establishing its due execution, and avoiding a disclosure of an alleged attempted revocation and fraudulent preservation thereof, relates to the validity of the will, and the only remedy therefor is by a proceeding to contest the will and revoke the probate thereof, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, may be begun within a year after the probate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 421.*]

23. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 315*)—DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—EFFECT.

Where the probate of a will devising real estate to devisees named was valid and effectual, any error in the distribution of the estate could not be taken advantage of by heirs disinherited by the will, but the devisees might have the decree amended.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Aldegunda C. Del Campo and others against Adolfo Camarillo and another.

From a judgment of nonsuit, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Barnes & Selby, Knight & Heggerty, and B. T. Williams, for appellants. J. S. Chapman, Orestes Orr, Blackstock & Orr, Robert M. Clarke, and Henley C. Booth, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to rescind and cancel a deed from the plaintiffs and others to the defendants, purporting to convey to the defendants two tracts of land in Ventura county, and also all of the interest of the grantors in the estates of Juan Camarillo, deceased, Martina H. Camarillo, deceased, and Jose Camarillo, deceased, except certain property held by the plaintiff Wolfsohn under devise by the will of said Juan Camarillo, and to declare defendants trustees of plaintiffs as to a certain interest in the property. The principal tract in controversy consisted of a ranch known as "Rancho Calleguas," containing over 10,000 acres. The complaint also seeks to have the defendants declared trustees for the plaintiffs as to the undivided $15/28$ of the property described in the deed, and for an accounting of the rents and profits thereof. Upon the trial, after the plaintiff's evidence was introduced, the court granted separate motions of the defendants for a nonsuit. Thereafter plaintiffs moved for a new trial, and the motion was denied. The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment of nonsuit, and also from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The ground of the action is the alleged fraud of the defendants in procuring the execution of the deed, and the subsequent fraud alleged to have been committed by the defendants in preventing the revocation of the will of Martina H. Camarillo, whereby the said will, which seems to have been favorable to the defendants, was preserved, and was subsequently admitted to probate. It will be necessary to state briefly the facts alleged in the complaint. Juan Camarillo, who died in 1880, was the husband of Martina H. Camarillo, by whom he was the father of the defendants and of the plaintiffs Aldegunda C. Del Campo, Maria C. De Arnaz, Adelaide C. De Moraga, and Arcadia C. Mahoney, and the grandfather of the plaintiff William Wolfsohn, who was the son of his deceased daughter. By his will, and by descent as community property, five-eighths of the property in controversy was given to his widow aforesaid and one-eighth each to the two defendants, the other one-eighth being given to his son Jose Camarillo, who died in 1884 unmarried, and leaving his mother as his only heir. She thereby became invested with a three-fourths interest in the property. On May 14, 1891, the said

Martina, desiring to convey her interest in the said rancho to the plaintiffs and defendants in equal shares, directed the defendants to have a deed of gift to that effect prepared so that she could execute the same. She was unable to read or write, except that she could write her name, and she had great confidence in the honesty and fidelity of the defendants. Intending to deceive and defraud the plaintiffs and their said mother, the defendants had a deed prepared purporting to be a conveyance by her to the said defendants alone of her said interest in the said rancho as a gift from her to them. This they induced her to execute by representing to her that it purported to convey the said rancho in equal shares to all of her said expectant heirs, including plaintiffs and defendants. By this means they caused the deed to be executed, and under this deed they claim to hold the three-fourths interest in the said rancho. This deed was not recorded until January 19, 1897. On April 13, 1885, said Martina executed her will, and on September 2, 1889, she executed a codicil thereto. In December, 1896, she determined to destroy this will and codicil, and, with that intent, she sent for the document. The defendant Adolfo, intending to deceive her, intercepted the will on its way to her, and represented to her that a certain other document which he had in his possession was the will and by that false representation caused her to destroy the other document, believing it to be the will, at the same time preserving the will in his own possession, and thus preventing its destruction. This was done with full knowledge of the codefendant Juan. Martina, the widow, died on April 15, 1898. Upon the petition of defendants, the said will and codicil were admitted to probate by an order of the superior court of Ventura county, and on April 22, 1899, a decree of distribution of her estate was made by the said court. The contents of this will are nowhere stated in the complaint, and neither the will itself nor the decree were introduced in evidence. The rancho was not described in the decree of distribution. The complaint and the evidence are alike devoid of express statement on the question whether or not the decree contained any general terms giving to the defendants the estate of the widow not specifically described. Because of these frauds, the plaintiffs claim that the defendants hold as trustees for the plaintiffs that portion of the land which would have descended to the plaintiffs if the widow Martina had died intestate and possessed of the three-fourths interest in the said rancho. The deed which they seek to cancel was executed on September 16, 1898, by the plaintiffs claiming as heirs of Martina H. Camarillo and her deceased husband Juan Camarillo, and by Thomas B. Bishop, Charles S. Wheeler, L. M. Hoefler, William Rix, and Guy C. Earl, as grantees from the said plaintiffs of a one-third part of their interest, and quitclaims all interest of the said grantors to the defendants in consideration of the sum of $25,000, which was therein declared to be in full settlement and satisfaction of all their claims and interests in and to the estates of Juan Camarillo, Martina H. Camarillo, and Jose Camarillo, deceased. There were other allegations made for the purpose of showing the ignorance of the plaintiffs of the frauds committed, and that they did not discover the same until shortly before the beginning of this action. The answers put in issue all the allegations of the complaint relating to the alleged frauds and the ignorance and discovery thereof by the plaintiffs. Each defendant answered separately.

There are several sufficient grounds upon which the ruling granting the nonsuit may be supported. The defendants each separately moved for a nonsuit, and, although they both assign the same grounds, the motions were separate and independent. So far as the rancho is concerned, and it is by far the most valuable part of the property involved, it is immaterial whether or not there was any fraud in preserving and probating the will which was intended to be destroyed, provided the deed executed in 1891 was not shown to be invalid. With respect to Adolfo, there was no evidence of any substantial character tending to show that there was any deception or fraud in connection with the execution of that deed. The only evidence on the subject consisted of the testimony of certain witnesses to the effect that on March 28, 1905, the defendant Juan E. Camarillo confessed or declared to the plaintiff Mrs. Mahoney that in December, 1896, his mother Martina had sent a letter to Adolfo, asking him to bring her the said will, stating that she wanted to destroy it, so that all her sons and daughters, in case of her death, would share equally in her estate, as expressed in her deed, and that thereupon Adolfo perpetrated upon her the deception alleged in the complaint by substituting another document for the will and causing her to burn such other document, supposing it to be the will; that at that time, in 1905, Juan gave the letter to Mrs. Mahoney, and also stated to her that when the deed to Adolfo and himself was made, in 1891, one de la Guerra was called to interpret the deed to his mother, and that he translated it wrong, representing that it purported to convey the land to all her sons and daughters alike, instead of to her sons only, as the fact was. The theory of the plaintiffs is that this confession or declaration of the codefendant Juan is evidence against Adolfo, as a declaration of a co-conspirator relating to the conspiracy. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6. Many authorities are cited by the respective counsel in regard to the rule concerning the admissibility and effect of such declarations. There is no serious disagreement on the subject. The rule is that such declarations of one conspirator, made while the conspiracy is pending and during the progress of the plan adopted for its accomplishment, are admissible against both. But, if made after the act designed is fully accomplished, and after the object of the conspiracy has been either attained or finally defeated, the declaration will be admissible only against the person who made it. People v. Aleck, 61 Cal. 139; People v. Moore, 45 Cal. 20. Nor are such declarations admissible against a co-conspirator to prove the formation of the conspiracy. Section 1870, supra; People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 502, 20 Pac. 56. The plaintiffs contend that in the present case, at the time this declaration was made by Juan E. Camarillo in March, 1905, the object and purpose of the conspiracy had not been accomplished, and hence that the declaration was evidence against Adolfo. Their theory is that the purpose of the conspiracy was to obtain the interest of their mother in the property and to keep possession thereof as long as they lived, and that at any time during the life of the two conspirators, while they remained in possession and ownership of the property, the declaration of either as to the conspiracy would be admissible against the other. In our opinion this theory is absolutely untenable. The object of the conspiracy, if there was any, was to obtain from the mother her interest in the rancho. That object was fully accomplished when they secured the execution of a deed from her to them conveying to them her interest. The deed, being executed, immediately vested in them whatever interest the mother had. Nothing further remained to be done in furtherance of the conspiracy, or to effect the object for which it was formed. The fact that they thereafter remained tenants in common of the land thus obtained does not operate as a continuance of the scheme, nor make declarations of one of the tenants in common, made years after the execution of the deed, with respect to its execution, admissible as to the other. The other parcel of real estate described in the deed of September 16, 1898, here sought to be canceled, was a house and lot in the town of San Buena Ventura, which is described in the deed by metes and bounds and also as "the home place of said Martina H. de Camarillo." There is no direct allegation that this parcel ever belonged to Mrs. Camarillo, or that the plaintiffs ever had any legal or equitable estate or interest in it. It is alleged in that behalf that the superior court on April 22, 1899, made its decree of distribution of the estate of Martina H. Camarillo, deceased, whereby there was distributed to the defendant Juan E. Camarillo the said house and lot above mentioned. This implies that Martina H. Camarillo died seised of this parcel, so that plaintiffs would have inherited interests in it as her heirs if she had died intestate. This fact was practically conceded throughout the trial. If the will is valid and binding, the decree of distribution would vest that parcel in the defendant Juan, and not in Adolfo. Consequently, in that event, there could be no recovery against Adolfo on account of this tract of land.

The plaintiffs apparently seek to avert any such consequence arising from this decree of distribution by the allegation that the court making the decree, the superior court of Ventura county, had no jurisdiction of the estate of Mrs. Camarillo, or of the proceeding for the probate of the will and for the administration and distribution of the estate. But it appears from the complaint that she was a resident of Ventura county at the time of her death; that the said will and codicil thereto and the petition for the probate thereof were filed in and presented to said court; and that a decree of distribution of her said estate was made as aforesaid. When the superior court makes a decree distributing an estate, if the fact of the making of the decree is properly made to appear, it will be presumed that the court had jurisdiction to make it. The presumption in this respect is the same as in the case of any other judgment of a court of general jurisdiction. In re Griffith, 84 Cal. 109, 23 Pac. 528, 24 Pac. 381; Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 338, 41 Pac. 458; Luco v. Bank, 70 Cal. 342, 11 Pac. 650. In an action in equity to impeach a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction on this ground, where the complaint alleges the giving of such judgment by the court, it is necessary for the plaintiff to set forth in his complaint the particular defects in the record which show a want of jurisdiction. The bare allegation that the court did not have jurisdiction of the proceeding is an averment of a conclusion of law contrary to the presumption of jurisdiction which exists from the fact of the rendition of the judgment. In re Griffith, supra; 23 Cyc. 1040; 11 Ency. Plead. & Prac. 1187; Herbert v. Herbert, 47 N. J. Eq. 14, 20 Atl. 290; Masterson v. Ashcom, 54 Tex. 324. If the decree was void because of a want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the record, the question of its validity would be a pure question of law to be determined from the record itself (People v. Davis, 143 Cal. 673, 77 Pac. 651), and, in order to show its invalidity, it would be necessary for the pleader either to exhibit the record itself, or to state the particular facts and defects in the record which in law would make it void. If the lack of jurisdiction was because of facts outside the record, then those facts should have been averred. The complaint in this case does not aver any facts of either character, and consequently the order admitting the will to probate and the decree of distribution must be assumed to have been made after the court had acquired jurisdiction by the necessary notice in that behalf.

Furthermore, even if it were conceded that a general averment of lack of jurisdiction would be sufficient in a pleading of this character, the answers denied the allegation, put the fact in issue, and placed upon the plaintiffs the burden of proving the absence of jurisdiction. This they utterly failed to do. No evidence was introduced tending to prove the allegation. They offered an affidavit of the county clerk showing the mailing of notice of the time appointed for proving the will to all the heirs of Mrs. Camarillo, except the plaintiff William Wolfsohn and the two defendants, neither of whom were mentioned therein; the defendants being the petitioners for its probate. At that time the plaintiffs' counsel had before them all the papers in the estate, and stated that they did not propose to introduce the other parts of the record relating to jurisdiction. This affidavit was properly excluded by the court on the objection of the defendants that, for the purpose of showing lack of jurisdiction, the entire record on the subject should be exhibited, and that an offer of only a part of it for that purpose was improper. No other evidence on the subject was offered, and this affidavit cannot be considered even if it could be supposed to furnish evidence tending to prove a failure to obtain jurisdiction. The decree of distribution is therefore to be deemed valid, so far as this point is concerned. It shows that Adolfo has no interest in the home place distributed to Juan. It follows that no case was made against Adolfo with regard to either tract of land in controversy and as to him the nonsuit was properly granted. With respect to the plaintiff Mrs. Mahoney, the evidence shows a complete estoppel, at least so far as the defendant Juan is concerned. The alleged confession of the defendant Juan was made to her. During that interview Juan gave her $5,000 in money and property amounting in value to $3,500, in consideration whereof she executed to him the following contract: "For and in consideration of the sum of eighty-five hundred dollars to me in hand paid by Juan E. Camarillo, I hereby acknowledge satisfaction of all claims of every kind and character, I may have against him or his interests in the estates of my deceased father Juan Camarillo and my deceased mother Martina H. Camarillo, and my brother Jose Camarillo. Dated this 28th day of March, 1905. [Signed] A. C. Mahoney." According to her present contention, Juan at that time held title to an interest in the property in controversy, as trustee for her as heir at law of Mrs. Camarillo, and the right to enforce this trust was one of the claims she then held against him. The above instrument acknowledges the receipt from him of full satisfaction of all such claims. The confession was made to her before the contract was fully closed, and before she had received all of the money which he then paid to her. If she did not have any previous knowledge of the frauds which she now asserts as the basis of her right to set aside the deed and the will, it must be admitted that this confession fully informed her thereof. Yet with this knowledge she closed the transaction, and received and accepted the money and property given to her in satisfaction of the claims she now asserts. Instead of then and there offering to rescind the contract, restoring what she had received and refusing to receive any further payment, she kept the said property and money, and immediately thereafter paid one-half of the money to an attorney as a retainer for the prosecution of a suit to enforce the claim which she had just relinquished. So long as she retains the property thus received, she is clearly estopped to prosecute any suit to enforce the claim for which that property was received in satisfaction.

The plaintiff Wolfsohn is also estopped to assert the invalidity of the will. It appears that this will specifically devised to him a house and lot known as the "Old Camarillo Homestead." This fact was recited in the deed which is here attacked, and it was therein expressly excepted from the operation of the general conveyance of all his interest in the estate of Mrs. Camarillo. He still retains that part of her estate, and has never offered to restore it to the defendants or to relinquish it for the benefit of the heirs. He cannot be allowed thus to hold property under and by virtue of the will and at the same time deny its validity and seek to have it declared void.

The remaining points in support of the nonsuit apply equally in favor of both defendants. The deed of plaintiffs which is attacked was made nearly seven years before this action was begun. The alleged fraud in the execution of the deed from Mrs. Camarillo to the defendants occurred, if at all, in 1891, more than 14 years before the beginning of the action. The alleged deception in regard to the attempt to burn the will was in December, 1896, almost nine years prior to the action. In seeking relief against the effects of frauds occurring so long ago, and in asking a court to cancel the contract and deed, which, in itself, implies a settlement of the wrongs inflicted by those frauds, the plaintiffs are required to allege a clear case, and to prove it by satisfactory and convincing evidence. They must clearly show that they did not discover the existence or commission of the alleged frauds until within a reasonable time before the action was begun, that they proceeded promptly upon such discovery, and that their failure to make the discovery sooner was not due to their own lack of diligence. All this must be shown, not merely by a bare statement of the conclusions as we have stated them, but by a detailed statement of the facts and circumstances which caused the ignorance, which prevented an earlier discovery, and which constitutes the diligence in seeking a discovery, including also a statement of all facts previously known to them tending to indicate the existence of the frauds. Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 588, 53 Pac. 26; Lady Washington Consol. Co. v. Wood, 113 Cal. 486, 45 Pac. 809; People v. San Joaquin, etc., Ass'n, 151 Cal. 807, 91 Pac. 740.

The evidence shows that, shortly before the mother's death, she told several of the plaintiffs that her property would go to all her children in equal shares, and that all the plaintiffs were soon afterwards informed of this statement. The deed of 1891, from her to the defendants, was duly recorded on January 19, 1897. A lease from the defendants to the Union Oil Company, purporting to cover the entire interest in the oil underlying 3,707 acres of the ranch, was recorded in June, 1896. Maria Tico, whose testimony was the only evidence of the episode of December, 1896, the attempt to burn the will, and the prevention thereof by Adolfo, also testified that within three weeks after the mother's death she related the occurrence to the plaintiff Mrs. Del Campo. The mother had for many years a small tin box in which she was known to keep her valuable papers. This box was at her bedside at the time she died, and the defendants and several of the plaintiffs were then present. The plaintiff William Wolfsohn testified that within five minutes after her death he saw Adolfo with this box in another room upstairs, and saw him take a paper from his pocket, place it in the box, and then shut the box, and that he then knew it was his grandmother's private box. The plaintiffs Mrs. Arnaz and Mrs. Del Campo each testified to the fact of seeing Adolfo take the box from his mother's room a few minutes after her death. This occurred on April 15, 1898. On June 6, 1898, the plaintiffs executed to the law firm of Bishop & Wheeler in San Francisco a deed and agreement whereby they conveyed and transferred to said firm the undivided one-third of all their rights, interests, and estates in and to the said ranch, and in and to the estates of Martina H. Camarillo and Jose Camarillo, in consideration whereof said firm agreed to institute, maintain, and prosecute all such suits and actions as should be necessary to establish the invalidity of said will and codicil of Mrs. Camarillo and of her deed of gift to the defendants conveying to them her interest in said rancho, and said firm were thereby empowered, with the consent of plaintiffs, to compromise and settle such suits and receive for their compensation one-third of the proceeds; the plaintiffs agreeing not to settle or compromise without the consent of said firm. Both the complaint and the evidence are silent as to grounds upon which it was then proposed to invalidate the said will and deed and also as to the proceedings and inquiries made by the plaintiffs and the said firm with respect thereto. A compromise was effected, however, and in pursuance thereof the defendants paid to the plaintiffs and to said firm the sum of $25,000, and the plaintiffs and said firm conveyed to the defendants by quitclaim all their rights, titles, and interests in and to the property here in controversy. It is this deed, made on September 16, 1898, which the plaintiffs now seek to have canceled. This contract with Bishop & Wheeler expressly recites that said gift deed had been executed, and that the petition for the probate of said will had been filed, that the plaintiffs challenged the validity of said deed and of said will, and that the defendants asserted the validity thereof and claimed the said ranch and other property of the mother under the said deed and will. After Bishop & Wheeler obtained the conveyance from the plaintiffs of one-third of the plaintiffs' interests on June 6, 1898, and until the execution of the compromise deed of September 16, 1898, the said firm was interested as part owners, in common with the plaintiffs, in making inquiries for evidence to avoid the deed and will. Not only so, but the said firm was by said agreement specially employed to make such inquiries, and it was the duty of its members to exercise diligence in the search. It is evident that a contest of the will and a suit to avoid the deed were then contemplated, if not actually instituted, and that the deed of 1898 was made in settlement of those claims and to avoid the expected litigation. The complaint herein does not explain the reason of this compromise nor aver that said firm of attorneys, who were then interested parties, were ignorant of the frauds now alleged, and of the evidence now produced or other evidence sufficient to prove them, nor does it show that said attorneys used diligence in prosecuting inquiries and searching for evidence, nor that they were not negligent in that respect. And there is no evidence on these points. Both before and since the mother's death the plaintiffs and defendants have frequently met in friendly relations. It does not appear that either of the plaintiffs, or any one of said firm of attorneys, has ever asked the defendants to explain the alleged statements of the mother to plaintiffs that all her property was to go equally to all the heirs. Due diligence required that such inquiry should have been made, and also that they should inquire of each other. Notwithstanding anything in the complaint and proof, Bishop & Wheeler, during their employment, may have had knowledge of the frauds now alleged and of evidence in support thereof. The compromise then made, with at least some knowledge of the frauds now alleged, the delay of seven years in suing to avoid it, the lapse of time after the execution of the deed of gift, and before the donor's death, and all the other circumstances above detailed, with no better or more complete excuse than is here given, are sufficient to justify a court of equity in dismissing the action on the ground of laches.

It is rather remarkable that, while the plaintiffs apparently object to the provisions of this will, manifestly considering it injurious to them and advantageous to defendants, and allege its fraudulent preservation as one of the wrongs upon which their present action is based, they do not set out its contents in the complaint and did not introduce it in evidence, although it was before them at the time of the trial. While there is thus an absence of direct allegation and evidence on the subject, the whole case, as exhibited in the complaint and as shown by the evidence, necessarily implies that this will purported to devise the ranch to the defendants. If it did not do so, the whole charge of fraud in its preservation would be immaterial in so far as Adolfo was concerned. The fact that its contents were not shown raises an inference that it did devise the ranch to the defendants. Evidence withheld is presumed to be adverse. Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 446. The allegations imply this fact also. It is alleged that by virtue of the will Adolfo procured a distribution of "the greater part" of his mother's estate to himself and Juan. No other property could answer this description. The inventory, which was introduced in evidence, shows that her entire estate was of the value of $6,750, of which $750 was personal property, $5,000 was the home place, devised by the will to Juan and distributed to him by the decree, and $1,000 was "the Old Camarillo Homestead," devised and distributed to William Wolfsohn. If she then also owned the ranch, as the plaintiffs contend, it constituted the greater part of her estate, and it would be this ranch which Adolfo by procuring the probate of the will contrived to have distributed to himself and Juan. It does not appear that Adolfo got any part of the property described in the inventory except one-half of the personal property if any remained after paying debts and expenses, and yet, according to the complaint, he and Juan obtained by the decree of distribution "substantially all of her estate." The decree does not expressly mention the ranch. The only rational explanation from the standpoint which plaintiffs have chosen to occupy is that the will, after some specific provisions in favor of Juan and William Wolfsohn, gave the residue of the estate to Juan and Adolfo, and that the decree of distribution, by a general clause, gave them all of her estate not therein specifically mentioned. This latter clause would include the ranch, if the deed of gift to the defendant were void, as the plaintiffs claim. In addition to all these circumstances, there is the direct testimony of Adolfo, while a witness for the plaintiff, that his mother told him that the will gave the ranch to him and Juan, and that afterwards he saw the will and was present at the execution of the codicil substituting him and Juan as executors thereof. From all these circumstances the trial court may rightfully have concluded that the will devised the ranch to the defendants. There is no evidence to the contrary.

The fact that the will purports to give the ranch to the defendants has an important bearing on the motion for a nonsuit. The will was duly probated. If this probate was valid and effectual, it operated to establish the will according to its tenor, and thus it gave the ranch to the two defendants, regardless of the validity of the deed from their mother. If this were the case, the mere fact, if it be a fact, that the decree of distribution did not carry out this disposition of the will, would be of no benefit to plaintiffs. If they cannot be allowed to set aside the probate of the will, nor change its effect, it would avail them nothing to have the distribution vacated. In that event the only thing that could be done would be to have a new decree of distribution made expressly distributing the ranch to the defendants in accordance with the provisions of the will. It is the established law of this state, as well as of many other jurisdictions, that an order admitting a will to probate duly made by the court of probate jurisdiction in a proceeding for that purpose cannot be vacated by a court of equity for direct fraud in establishing it, consisting either of perjured testimony or a false will, produced before the court at the time of the hearing, and, further, that the devisee therein cannot be declared a trustee in favor of the heir in a suit in equity by the heir based on such fraud. The fraud here complained of consisted of producing this will to the court, introducing evidence establishing its due execution and in avoiding a disclosure of the alleged attempted revocation and fraudulent preservation thereof. All these were facts relating to the validity of the will, which was the very fact to be then determined by the court. This character of fraud comes within the same class as perjured testimony or the fraudulent production and proof of a false will previously forged. The only remedy for a fraud so committed is the remedy afforded by the probate statute; that is to say, a proceeding to contest the will and to revoke the probate thereof, which under section 1327 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be begun within a year after such probate. This short limitation is made in order to prevent the unsettling of titles and the reopening of contests over estates of deceased persons. These propositions are firmly established by the following decisions: State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 234, 271, 81 Am. Dec. 118; Kieley v. McGlynn, 88 U. S. 503, 22 L. Ed. 599; Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 19, 41 Pac. 814; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 483, 89 Pac. 317; Tracy v. Muir, 151 Cal. 363, 90 Pac. 832, 121 Am. St. Rep. 117; Estate of Davis, 151 Cal. 327, 86 Pac. 183, 90 Pac. 711, 121 Am. St. Rep. 105. It follows, therefore, that the provisions of the will, as established by the probate thereof, would, in any event, operate to vest the ranch in the defendants. If the decree of distribution failed to dispose of it at all, the defendants could have the decree amended in that respect. And, as the probated will would be conclusive as to the disposition of the ranch made by the testator, the plaintiffs would have no interest therein which would entitle them to maintain any action or proceeding in relation to it. This is also true of the home place devised to Juan Camarillo by the will and distributed to him by the decree.

For all of these reasons, we think the nonsuit was properly granted.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

154 Cal. 628

In re GRUENDIKE'S ESTATE.
(L. A. 2,279.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1908.)

WILLS (§ 496*)—CONSTRUCTION—DESIGNATION OF BENEFICIARIES—"TO HIS WIFE."

Testator provided that the part going to a nephew should be divided into three parts, "one-third to be paid to him, one-third to his wife, and one-third to his child." At the time of the execution of the will, the nephew had been married and his wife had procured a divorce and had remarried. Testator knew the facts. There was evidence that testator had been informed that the nephew intended to contract another marriage, but such marriage had not taken place. Held, that under Civ. Code, §§ 1325, 1340, providing that where, in applying a will, it is found that no person exactly answers the description of the beneficiary, any omission therein must be corrected, etc., the words, "to his wife," in the quoted clause, referred to the nephew's divorced wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1066; Dec. Dig. § 496.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Jacob Gruendike, deceased. From a part of the decree of final distribution of the estate of the deceased, Charles D. Elfers and another appeal. Affirmed.

L. L. Boone, for appellants. Chas. C. Boynton and H. E. Doolittle, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from a part of the decree of final distribution of the estate of Jacob Gruendike, deceased.

The appeal concerns the interpretation of the third clause of his will. The testator was a bachelor. He was over 80 years of age at the time of his death, and left surviving a brother and three sisters and a large number of nephews and nieces; the appellant Abbott being one of the nephews. He left an estate of the value of something near $300,000. After providing for the burial of his body and giving a legacy of $1,000 to his nephew Edwin Phillips, he devised the residue of his estate by the third clause of the will. This clause provides that the residue shall be equally divided between his brothers and sisters and all of his nephews and nieces living at the time of his death, each to take per capita and as a class; that is to say, a nephew or niece was to take the same share as a sister or brother. The appellant Abbott being one of the nephews, the effect of this clause, if it had not been qualified, would be to vest in him an equal share in the residue with the other nephews and nieces, brothers and sisters. The will, however, in the last sentence of the third clause provides with respect to Frank W. Abbott as follows: "The proportion going under this paragraph to my nephew, Frank Abbott, is to be divided into parts, one-third (1-3) to be paid to him, one-third (1-3) to his wife, and one-third (1-3) to his child." The appellant Elfers is the assignee from Frank Abbott of all of the estate and property covered by the phrase "one-third to his wife" in the above-quoted provision of the will.

Upon the face of the will this provision is entirely clear. It divides the portion going to Frank Abbott, into three parts, giving one part to him, another to his wife, and another to his child. It appeared, however, upon the hearing that at the time the will was made, and at the time of the death of the deceased, Abbott had no wife. The fact was that he had been married in the year 1883 to the respondent Effie A. Smith, and that in the year 1893 she obtained a divorce from him and afterwards married one Smith. Frank W. Abbott had never been married to any other person at the time of the death of the testator. The court decided that the person intended in the provision of the will above quoted by the term "his wife," was the respondent Effie A. Smith, and distributed to her one-third of the proportion otherwise going to Frank W. Abbott as a nephew. The appeal is from this portion of the decree. To explain the meaning of this phrase in the will and clear up the latent ambiguity, it was shown by extrinsic evidence that the deceased lived in the county of San Diego; that he knew of the marriage of Abbott and the respondent Effie A. Smith; that he had visited with them in Merced county some years prior to the divorce; that shortly after the divorce was granted in 1893, Abbott lived with him in San Diego for several months, was employed by him on one of his ranches; and that he was then informed by Abbott of the fact that Abbott had been divorced from his wife. The date of the execution of the will does not appear in the record, but it affirmatively appears that it was made long after the divorce and after the subsequent marriage of the divorced wife of Abbott, Effie A. Smith. Evidence was also given for the same purpose, on behalf of the appellants, showing that he had been informed that Abbott also intended to contract another marriage, but there is no evidence that the testator was ever informed or believed that such marriage had taken place, and in fact no such marriage had occurred. Under these circumstances, it is argued that, since the testator knew that she was not then the wife of Abbott, he could not have referred to her as such, and could not have intended her by that reference. The fact that she was not then, in fact, the wife of Abbott, is not conclusive as to the intention of the testator to designate her by the phrase "to his wife." It is the testator's intention which is to be ascertained and which must prevail. He was over 80 years old at the time he made the will. The child referred to in the clause under consideration was the only child of Frank Abbott and the former wife, and he had been in the custody of his mother. It is not surprising that aged members of a family, in speaking of the divorced wife of a nephew who has not remarried, should refer to her as the wife of such nephew. The other members of the family, living with or near the testator, often referred to her as "Frank Abbott's wife." She had been so designated by them in his presence, but there is no evidence that he had thus described her. The provision itself indicates that, in the estimation of the testator, the character and family relations of Abbott were different from those of the other relatives mentioned, else he would not have thus divided and apportioned that particular legacy. The others were not thus treated. The same sentence refers to the boy as "his child," meaning the child of Abbott. As the testator's mind, for the time being, reverted to the situation of Frank Abbott, and became imbued with the desire to divert a part of the legacy from Frank and bestow it on those connected with and related to him instead, it would be natural at his age that the earlier conditions should vividly return to his memory and that he should refer to the former wife, the only person he had known in that relation, simply as "his wife," and to the only child as "his child." It is presumed that he intended thereby to refer to some person in being, and this is the most obvious and reasonable interpretation deducible from the circumstances and the context.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

A will must be so construed as to give every expression some effect rather than so as to make any expression inoperative. Civ. Code, § 1325. If, in applying a will, it is found that no person exactly answers the description of the beneficiary, any omission in such description must be corrected, if the error of omission appears from the context, or from extrinsic evidence. Civ. Code, § 1340. Applying these rules, considering all the circumstances, and viewing the will, as near as may be, from the situation of the testator, we are of the opinion that the trial court did not err in holding that the person intended by the words "one-third to his wife" was none other than Effie A. Smith, the former wife of Frank W. Abbott, and that the apparent omission should be supplied by correcting the phrase in question so as to make it read "one-third to his former wife."

The information given to the testator to the effect that Frank Abbott was contemplating a remarriage was communicated to him as mere vague hearsay, and was not likely to impress him seriously. No such marriage in fact occurred. It was shown that such important family matters as a marriage were usually communicated to those members of the family with whom the testator associated. The court below may reasonably have considered the evidence as to this information to be insufficient to prove that the testator believed that Abbott was about to marry again, or had remarried, and, because of such belief, made the provision for the new wife. In view of its decision, we must presume that this evidence was rejected or disregarded.

The part of the judgment from which this appeal is taken is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

154 Cal. 638

In re FRETWELL'S ESTATE.

CRABTREE v. FRETWELL et al.

(S. F. 4,884.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 190*)—WIDOW'S ALLOWANCE—APPLICATION—DELAY.

That a family allowance to the estate of the deceased was not applied for until more than three years after letters of administration had been issued did not impair the widow's right thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 703; Dec. Dig. § 190.*]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 194*)—FAMILY ALLOWANCE—TERM.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1406, declares that, if an estate is insolvent, the family allowance shall not be longer than for one year "after granting letters testamentary." Held that, where an allowance was not applied for until more than three years after administration granted, the fact that an order granting it provided that it should run for 12 months from decedent's death was a nonprejudicial irregularity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 194.*]

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 184*)—FAMILY ALLOWANCE—BAR OF RIGHT.

That a former administratrix loaned or gave to the widow without authority funds of the estate did not affect the widow's right to a family allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Dec. Dig. § 184.*]

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 106*)—LOAN TO WIDOW—ADMINISTRATOR'S LIABILITY.

An administrator is directly responsible to the estate for moneys improperly loaned to or expended for the benefit of the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 433; Dec. Dig. § 106.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thos. J. Lennon, Judge.

Application for family allowance by Annie S. Fretwell, as widow of Edwin Fretwell, deceased. From an order granting an allowance, Lotta M. Crabtree, a creditor, appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 152 Cal. 573, 93 Pac. 283.

John Flournoy, for appellant. Barclay Henley, Crittenden Thornton, and Jas. K. Hawkins, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by a creditor from an order of family allowance made in favor of the widow of the deceased. The application for family allowance was made and granted more than three years after the letters of administration had been issued, but this fact, of course, did not impair the widow's rights. In re Welch, 106 Cal. 427, 39 Pac. 805. The court found that the widow had no income, that no order had been made exempting any of the property, and that the sum of $150 per month was reasonable, and ordered a family allowance in that amount "commencing from the time of the death of said deceased and running for twelve months. This order is made without prejudice to another application for family allowance in case hereafter said estate shall turn out to be solvent." The court, for the purposes of the order which it made, treated the estate as insolvent. An objection is presented to the form of the order, in that it is made to continue one year from the death of the deceased, instead of from the time letters of administration were granted. Section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that, in case of an insolvent estate, the allowance must not be longer than one year "after granting letters testamentary." But the irregularity here is without prejudice, since the order is limited in its operation to 12 months, and it cannot matter to appellant whether the 12 months began to run from the date of the death or from the date of the issuance of letters testamentary. In either case the result is the same, and, as the time has long since elapsed, the order couched in either form amounts to nothing more than a direction to the administrator to pay to the widow for her support the sum of $1,800.

The principal contention of appellant is that to grant any family allowance was improper because the petitioner before making application for a family allowance had received from the former administratrix of the estate nearly $5,000 of the funds of the estate which she had not repaid. If it be a fact that the former administratrix of the estate loaned or gave to the widow, without authority, some $5,000 of the funds of the estate, it cannot affect the widow's right to an order of family allowance. In such a case the administratrix would be directly responsible to the estate for the moneys thus improperly loaned or expended. But such advancements to the widow, even if made improvidently and without authority, cannot be held to operate as a bar to the right of a family allowance which the statute accords. Whether or not the present administrator would be entitled to set off the award of family allowance against the advancements already made is a matter entirely without the consideration of this case.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 679

GRUMBACH v. LELANDE et al. (L. A. 2,260.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 590*)—LEGISLATIVE POWER—POWER OF CITY COUNCIL.

It will require a clear enunciation in the organic law of a city to lead to the conclusion that it was intended to deprive the council thereof of a portion of its legislative power, including the power of making and enforcing police regulations, as authorized by Const. art. 11, § 11.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1309; Dec. Dig. § 590.*]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 61*)—GRANT AND REVOCATION OF LICENSES—AUTHORITY OF POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

Section 95a, Los Angeles Freeholders' Charter (Laws 1903, p. 570, c. 6), added in 1903, providing that the board of police commissioners may grant, "under and in conformity to the ordinances" of the city, liquor permits, and may revoke such permits, etc., confers a limited and quasi judicial power on the board, but does not deprive the council of the legislative authority, vested in the municipal corporation, to license and regulate the liquor business, and, on compliance with the regulations prescribed by the ordinance, the duty of the board to grant a permit is ministerial, while, as to revocation of permits, the functions of the board are quasi judicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 60; Dec. Dig. § 61.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 611*)—POLICE POWER—REGULATION OF LIQUOR BUSINESS.

It is within the police power of a city to limit the conduct of the liquor or other businesses coming within the regulatory scope of the city, or to exclude such businesses from specified districts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1344; Dec. Dig. § 611.*]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 296*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—REGULATION OF BUSINESS.

A regulation of the liquor business excluding it from a district where it is then in operation is not invalid because it impairs or destroys the business of those so located.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Dec. Dig. § 296.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 15*)—ORDINANCES—REASONABLENESS—VALIDITY.

A municipal ordinance which prohibits the wholesale liquor business within described territory of the municipality, but which permits saloons and liquor selling restaurants to continue to operate in such territory, is not invalid on the ground that it is unreasonably discriminatory, in the absence of a satisfactory showing to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

In Bank. Application for mandamus by Theodore Grumbach against H. J. Leland and others to compel the issuance of a wholesale liquor permit. Petition denied.

Isidore B. Dockweiler, Frank James, and C. W. Pendleton, amici curiæ, for petitioner. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., Lewis R. Works, Asst. City Atty., for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate, by which petitioner seeks to compel the clerk of the city of Los Angeles and the other proper municipal authorities to issue to him a permit and license to conduct a wholesale liquor establishment. The facts are the following: Ordinance No. 5746 (N. S.) of the city of Los Angeles defined a "wholesale liquor establishment," distinguishing it from a "retail liquor establishment," commonly designated a "saloon." It prescribed that no license should be issued to carry on either class of business until a permit in writing should have been granted by the board of police commissioners authorizing such issue and filed with the city clerk, and that such board "shall have power to issue such permits and revoke the same at any time." The ordinance further provided that the board of police commissioners should not grant a permit for a license for any retail liquor establishment, or for the transfer of any existing license for such establishment, to be conducted outside of a portion of the city of Los Angeles described therein. Petitioner conducted a wholesale liquor establishment under permit and license, as required by this ordinance at the time it was amended. The amendment made new boundaries for the inhibited territory or zone, and declared that the police commissioners should not grant any permit for the issuance or transfer of any retail liquor dealers', wholesale dealers', license, or restaurant liquor license, for any establishment to be conducted outside of the described portion of the city. The place of business of petitioner was situated outside of the described portion. The ordinance was then further amended, so as to declare "that all permits heretofore granted by the said board of police commissioners for wholesale dealers' licenses for establishments to be conducted outside of the aforesaid portion of the city of Los Angeles shall continue until the first day of April, 1908, and thereupon all such permits shall expire and be of no further force or effect; and that it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to establish, conduct or maintain any wholesale liquor establishment outside of that portion of the city of Los Angeles hereinbefore described, after the first day of April, 1908." The petitioner, who had been conducting his business under a permit and license formerly granted, made application for a renewal thereof, and his application was refused, the refusal being based on the provisions of the amended ordinance above quoted. He seeks by mandate to compel their issuance.

The first proposition which he advances is that under the charter of the city of Los Angeles the board of police commissioners, and not the city council, are invested with plenary power over the matter in question. Upon this petitioner's argument is that the charter of the city of Los Angeles until 1903 vested the regulation of the liquor traffic in the city council, and that the police commissioners drew such power as they may have possessed in this matter from the grant of the city council, which in the original ordinance No. 5746 (N. S.) authorized the police commissioners to issue and revoke liquor permits at any time. It is pointed out that in 1903 (Laws 1903, p. 570, c. 6) the freeholders' charter of the city was amended and a new section added thereto, which section is numbered and reads as follows: "Sec. 95a. The board of police commissioners shall have power to grant permits, under and in conformity to the ordinances of said city, authorizing the city clerk to issue licenses to persons desiring to engage in the sale of liquors, and to revoke any such permit when it shall appear to the board that the business of the person to whom such permit was given is conducted in an illegal, disorderly, or improper manner. Without such permit no person shall engage in the business of selling liquor." Petitioner contends that the meaning and effect of this provision is, to confer upon, and vest in, the board of police commissioners exclusive jurisdiction with reference to the granting of permits authorizing the issuance of licenses to persons desiring to engage in the sale of liquors; that the city council is deprived of the power which formerly it had over the matter, and that its ordinance prescribing that after a certain date licenses shall no longer be issued is inoperative and void if it conflicts with, or is designed to curtail, the power of the board of police commissioners; that this board has full power to grant permits, and that when a permit is so granted, it is the imperative ministerial duty of the clerk, upon payment of the required fee, to issue the license thereon. Could we construe section 95a as does petitioner, the conclusion at which he arrives would be irresistible, but this cannot be done. The legislative power of a municipality is usually vested in its mayor and city council. Regulatory ordinances in the exercise of the police power granted to all cities (Const. art. 11, § 11) constitute a most important part of its legislative functions. It would be unusual to find the council thus shorn of a portion of this power; and, while we are not to be understood as implying that this may not be done, it would require a clear enunciation in the organic law of a city to lead to the conclusion that it was intended to be done. This court recently had occasion to construe the charter of this city with reference to the constitutionality of the provisions therein contained for the initiative and referendum, and it declared that "the effect of the provisions of the Los Angeles charter as amended is to give the legislative power vested in the city [by the Constitution] to the council and mayor, subject to such control by the electors as is given to them by the initiative and referendum provisions." In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 84, 88 Pac. 270, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092. Section 95a itself makes recognition of the authority of the council by limiting the power of the police commissioners to grant permits, and declaring that the exercise of that power shall be "under and in conformity to the ordinances of said city." Article 1, § 2, subd. 13, of the charter (St. 1889, p. 455, c. 1) vests in the municipal corporation the power "to license and regulate the carrying on of any and all professions, trades, and occupations," and, as has been said, the general legislative control of these matters rests with the council and the mayor. A design to deprive those officers of the right to regulate the liquor traffic requires more complete expression than is found in section 95a. There is no inconsistency nor conflict in the provisions of the charter as we read it. Section 95a confers powers of a limited and quasi judicial nature upon the board of police commissioners. The power to grant permits is subordinate to the power of the council to make regulations and prescribe rules governing the conduct of the business. Where one has complied with the regulations and rules, the duty of the police commissioners to grant a permit is ministerial merely, and they may not arbitrarily refuse to perform it. In the matter of the revocation of permits actually granted their functions are quasi judicial. They act upon the individual case as it may be presented, and are empowered to revoke when it shall appear to them that the business of the person is conducted in an illegal, disorderly, or improper manner. It would always be their duty to refuse to issue a permit or to revoke a permit already issued if the applicant for or the holder of the permit did not bring himself within the terms of the legally existing ordinances of the city bearing upon the matter.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Petitioner's second contention that the ordinance as to him is void in that its enforcement deprives him of property and vested rights without compensation or due process of law is without support in reasoning or authority. It is well settled that it is entirely within the police power to limit the conduct of the liquor or other businesses coming within its regulatory scope, or to exclude such businesses from specified districts. In re Linehan, 72 Cal. 114, 13 Pac. 170; Ex parte Lacey, 108 Cal. 326, 41 Pac. 411, 38 L. R. A. 640, 49 Am. St. Rep. 93; White v. Bracelin, 144 Mich. 332, 107 N. W. 1055; Strauss v. City of Galesburg, 203 Ill. 234, 67 N. E. 836; Shea v. City of Muncie, 148 Ind. 14, 46 N. E. 138. Moreover, where a liquor regulation excludes the conduct of a business from a given district in which such establishments are already in operation, it is no objection to the validity of the regulation that its effect is to impair or render valueless the business of those operating such establishments. Mugler v. State of Kansas,¹²³ 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346; Newson v. City of Galveston, 76 Tex. 559, 13 S. W. 368, 7 L. R. A. 797; Brown v. State, 82 Ga. 224, 7 S. E. 915; New Orleans v. Faber, 105 La. 208, 29 South. 507, 53 L. R. A. 165, 83 Am. St. Rep. 232.

Petitioner finally urges that the ordinance is unreasonably and unjustly discriminatory, and therefore void. In this connection he points out that within the prohibited zone or territory there are, besides wholesale liquor establishments, saloons and restaurants. The ordinance permits these saloons and liquor selling restaurants to continue in operation while denying the same license and privilege to wholesale vendors of liquors; that if reasons can be shown for permitting the former classes to continue in existence, every such reason applies with greater force to the less obnoxious business of wholesale vending, or conversely, that if the design of the ordinance be to protect the residents of the district of the city from the presence of an annoying, disagreeable, or offensive business, there was more reason to suppress the saloon and the liquor selling restaurant than there was to put the wholesale business under the ban; that there is thus presented a clear case of unreasonable discrimination in violation of the general rules justifying the creation of such by-laws (Ex parte Bohlen, 115 Cal. 372, 47 Pac. 55, 36 L. R. A. 618; Los Angeles v. Cemetery Ass'n, 124 Cal. 344, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75; Cooley on Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] p. 280), as well as a violation of the particular provision of subdivision 13, § 2, of the charter, which expressly prohibits such discrimination. The question thus presented is not without difficulty. The reasons which may have induced the council of the city to suppress the one class of business, while permitting the other, are not obvious. But, upon the other hand, there may have been reasons actuating the council, good and sufficient in themselves, though not clearly appearing from a mere reading of the ordinance itself. Thus, it is not improbable that the so-called wholesale liquor houses within the prohibited district were but adjuncts to retail grocery stores. The regulations governing the conduct of saloons forbid the presence at or about them of women or girls. These regulations do not apply to the wholesale houses, and it is conceivable that abuses may have sprung up from the sale to or use by women and girls of liquors purchased from such grocery stores. While designated "wholesale dealers," liquors are allowed to be vended by such houses in such small quantities as pints, and the presence of women and girls in grocery stores where liquor in such small quantity could be vended might have resulted in an evil not attached to the existence of the saloon, which by law all women and girls and children are forbidden to enter. It certainly is not made clear that good reason does not exist for the discrimination; and, in the absence of a satisfactory showing to this effect, a court leans to the upholding of such regulatory provisions.

For the foregoing reasons the petition is denied.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.

154 Cal. 685

MUZZY v. D. H. McEWEN LUMBER CO. (S. F. 5,055.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 18, 1908.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 32*) — APPEAL FROM ORDER—AUTHENTICATION OF PAPERS.

The proper method of authenticating the papers on appeal from an order is by bill of exceptions signed by the judge, and not by certificate of the clerk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 40; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 56*)—AUTHENTICATION OF PAPERS—RULES—COMPLIANCE.

Under Sup. Ct. Rule No. 29 (64 Pac. xii), providing that, on appeal from orders of the superior courts, the papers and evidence used on the hearing must be incorporated in a bill of exceptions, except where another mode of authentication is provided by law, a certificate of the clerk, on appeal from an order, that the transcript contained true copies of the original papers on file in his office, all of which were used on the hearing, was insufficient, as failing to show that the transcript contained all of the papers used on the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 94; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; T. C. Denny, Judge.

Action by H. B. Muzzy against the D. H. McEwen Lumber Company. From an order changing the place of trial on defendant's motion, and transferring the cause for trial to the county of defendant's residence, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

T. T. C. Gregory and James W. Oates, for appellant. Aitken & Aitken, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the order of the court changing the place of trial upon motion of defendant, and transferring the cause for trial to the county of defendant's residence. The action was to recover damages for breach of contract. Respondent on the appeal moves its dismissal, upon the ground that there is no bill of exceptions nor other authentication of the papers on appeal, as required by rule 29 (64 Pac. xii) of this court. The transcript contains the complaint, the notice of motion to change the place of trial, the supporting affidavit and demand for change of place of trial, filed with defendant's demurrer to the complaint. To these papers is appended the order of court granting the motion. There is no attestation nor authentication to any of these papers other than the certificate of the clerk to the effect that the transcript contains full and true copies of original papers on file in his office, "all of which were used on the hearing of said motion." That this is not a proper method of authentication may not be doubted. The proper method, of course, is by a bill of exceptions, certified to by the judge. Moreover, waiving the question of the power of the clerk, the authentication is incomplete; for while it states that these papers were used upon the hearing of the motion, it is nowhere made to appear that they were all of the papers, and thus additionally this certificate of the clerk is subject to the same objection considered fatal in Shain v. Eikerenkotter, 88 Cal. 13, 25 Pac. 966. There the papers embodied in the appeal bore the indorsement of the judge that they were read upon the motion. This court said that there was no bill of exceptions or other proper certification to show "that all of the papers used on the hearing in the court below are before us in this transcript." To this, however, respondent makes answer that his case comes within the exception noted in Miller v. Lux, 100 Cal. 609, 35 Pac. 345, 639. But the case does not come within the exception noted in Miller v. Lux. It is there specifically pointed out that section 951, Code Civ. Proc., makes it the duty of a person appealing from an order to furnish this court with a copy of the order appealed from, and copies "of papers used on the hearing in the court below," which means, as construed in 88 Cal., supra, all of the papers used in the court below. It is said: "This rule was only intended to apply to those appeals in which the order is sought to be reversed because of matters alleged to be shown by affidavits or evidence used or taken upon the hearing of the court below." Such is precisely the case here presented. The motion was based upon at least one affidavit, and we are not advised by any authentication whether other affidavits were or were not before the trial court. The exceptional case illustrated by Miller v. Lux, supra, was upon an appeal from an order settling the accounts of the executors, and the point of attack was that the court had failed to charge the executors with interest upon money which it found had been improperly paid by them to the widow as a family allowance. It is manifest that this order, in the nature of a final judgment, was reviewable upon the face of the record itself, and for this reason constituted an exception to the general rule.

Such, as has been said, is not the situation presented upon this appeal, and the motion to dismiss is therefore granted.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(154 Cal. 663)

CRAGG v. LOS ANGELES TRUST CO.
(L. A. 2,165.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 278*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to an employé by the sudden starting of a passenger elevator as he entered, evidence held to support a finding that the starting of the elevator was due to the failure of the operator to leave the operating lever in a secure position.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 969, 970; Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 6*)—VIOLATION OF STATUTE OR ORDINANCE—EFFECT.

The violation of any valid statutory or municipal regulation established for the benefit of private persons is a sufficient breach of duty to sustain a private action for negligence brought by a member of the protected class, where the other elements of actionable negligence concur, and the violation of such statute or municipal regulation is conclusive evidence of negligence, where such violation is not excused by other evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 8; Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 170*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—INCOMPETENCY OF FELLOW SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

Under Civ. Code, § 1970, providing that an employer is not required to indemnify his employé for injuries through the negligence of a co-employé in the same general business, unless the employer fails to use ordinary care in the selection of a capable co-employé, an employer is liable to an employé for injuries from the mere negligence of a fellow servant, where he failed to use ordinary care in the selection of such fellow servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 336; Dec. Dig. § 170.*]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 169*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—COMPETENCY OF SERVANTS—LICENSING ELEVATOR OPERATORS.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé by the sudden starting of a passenger elevator, the evidence showed that the starting of the elevator was caused by the neglect of the operator, that the employer violated a municipal ordinance providing for the examination and licensing of operators of elevators and prohibiting the employment of unlicensed persons, and that the operator was not licensed, and there was no evidence excusing a violation of the ordinance, there was evidence of negligence of the employer in the selection of the operator authorizing a recovery, though the employé and the operator were fellow servants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 334, 344; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 185*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—EMPLOYMENT OF FELLOW EMPLOYÉ—DELEGATION TO FELLOW SERVANT.

The duties of an employer which are personal to him, and which include the duty of using ordinary care in the selection of fellow servants, cannot be delegated to an employé, and, when such duties are confided to an employé, such employé in the performance of such duties is the representative of the employer, and not a fellow servant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 420; Dec. Dig. § 185.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 281*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to an employé by the sudden starting of a passenger elevator, evidence held to support a finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 987; Dec. Dig. § 281.*]

7. PLEADING (§ 11*)—COMPLAINT—PLEADING EVIDENCE.

Under the California system of pleading, it is improper to plead the evidence relied on to establish the ultimate facts essential to a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 31; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

8. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 264*)—INJURY TO SERVANT—COMPLAINT—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action by an employé for injuries by the sudden starting of a passenger elevator, through the negligence of the employer in not employing a competent operator, a municipal ordinance requiring the examination and licensing of operators and prohibiting the employment of unlicensed persons, accompanied by proof that the operator was unlicensed, was admissible, though not pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 867; Dec. Dig. § 264.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 122*)—ORDINANCES—PRESUMPTIONS—CONTINUANCE.

Where a municipal ordinance is introduced as evidence of the duty of a party in the selection of employés, it is not necessary for the adverse party to show that it had not been repealed, for the presumption in the absence of evidence is that it continued in force.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 284; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1048*)—HARMLESS ERROR — EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES — STRIKING OUT UNRESPONSIVE ANSWERS.

Where an answer of a witness was a complete answer, and also contained matter not responsive to the question asked, the striking out of the unresponsive matter was not prejudicial error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4140; Dec. Dig. § 1048.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINIONS—FACTS OR CONCLUSIONS.

In an action for personal injuries by the sudden starting of a passenger elevator, the statement of a witness that plaintiff was at the time of the accident in the possession of his faculties, given in response to the question whether plaintiff was holding on like a man who was hurt or a man in the possession of his faculties, was objectionable as a mere conclusion of the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2167, 2168; Dec. Dig. § 471.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Allen Cragg against the Los Angeles Trust Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hunsaker & Britt, for appellant. Wellborn & Wellborn, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment and order denying a new trial in an action brought by plaintiff, an employé of defendant, to recover damages on account of personal injuries sustained in the falling of an elevator in defendant's building, alleged to have been due to the negligence of defendant. The action was tried by the court, without a jury, and the principal claim of defendant on this appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings in several respects.

The allegation of negligence in the complaint as amended was as follows: "That on said 26th day of October, 1906, * * * as plaintiff entered said elevator * * * said defendant negligently allowed and caused said elevator suddenly and unexpectedly to be abruptly and improperly started in such a manner as to, and defendant did thereby, precipitate plaintiff against the wall of the shaft in which said elevator ascended and descended, and crushed said plaintiff between said elevator car and wall; * * * that plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that said negligence consisted in hiring, and causing and permitting to operate said elevator, an inexperienced, and unsafe operator or elevator boy, who left his station in said car and directed and permitted plaintiff to enter the same when it was not, by reason of the condition of the machinery operating it, and of the starting mechanism of it, and the condition the same was left in by said operator, safe so to do, all of which caused said car to start as alleged." The trial court found in accord with this allegation, and that defendant was guilty of negligence in hiring and permitting to operate said elevator, such inexperienced, inexperienced, and unsafe fellow servant, and also that the negligence of defendant was the cause of the injury to plaintiff. These findings are attacked as wanting sufficient support in the evidence.

Plaintiff was a janitor in defendant's employ, in its building on the corner of Second and Spring streets, in Los Angeles. It was one of his duties early each morning to take down to the lower floor a large can in which had been placed the waste paper and refuse collected from the various offices and halls in his charge, and empty the same into a large box kept for that purpose. For this purpose, he was authorized to use the two elevators maintained and operated by defendant in said building for the accommodation of its tenants. He was engaged in the performance of this duty at the time of the accident. The evidence shows that he approached the elevator shaft on the second floor with his garbage can as one of defendant's two elevators came down the shaft and stopped at the second floor. The operator, a young man named Eagle, who had been in the employ of defendant only a few days, opened the door, and stepped out into the hallway to leave a paper at an office door some 50 feet away. It appears to have been his custom to deliver papers at various offices. He told plaintiff that he would take him down as soon as he delivered this paper, and, as he stepped out of the elevator, plaintiff stepped into it with his can. For some reason, the elevator suddenly started down, going to the bottom, and in some way plaintiff was severely injured during the progress downward, among other things his lower jaw being fractured in two places. The evidence clearly showed that there was no defect of any kind in the machinery itself. The elevator was operated by means of a lever in the car, thrown in one direction along a quadrant to move the car up, and in the other direction to move it down. When the lever was at the point midway between the two ends of the quadrant—in other words, on the center—the car would not move in either direction. When squarely on the center, a sort of locking device held the lever so it could be moved in neither direction without releasing or lifting a latch located at the handle of the lever. The evidence was of such a nature as to warrant a conclusion that Eagle, when he stopped the car at the second floor on the occasion in question, and left it for the purpose of delivering the paper, did not leave the lever squarely on the center and locked, but negligently left it to one side in such a position that, when the plaintiff stepped into the car with his garbage can, the weight thus suddenly imposed, and the probable jarring or shaking resulting therefrom, caused the lever to slip along the quadrant and put the car into motion. The machinery being in perfect condition, there is no other theory accounting for the starting of the car, except the theory suggested that plaintiff himself moved the lever by striking it with his can or pressing against it in some way. It seems unlikely that this could have happened if the lever had been squarely on the center, and plaintiff testified that the car commenced to move the moment he put his can on the floor thereof. We are satisfied that the trial court was warranted in concluding that the starting of the car was due to the failure of Eagle to leave the operating lever in a secure position.

There was an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles enacted in April, 1905, providing for the examination and licensing of operators of passenger elevators. It made provision for examination by competent officers of all persons desiring to operate any such elevator, as to age, knowledge of mechanical construction, and principal parts of passenger elevators, their practical experience in operating the same, and their ability and competency to properly operate them. It provided for the issuance of a license to such as were found competent, and made it unlawful for any one to operate any such elevator unless licensed to do so. It further made it unlawful for the owner in charge and control of any building to employ or permit any person to operate a passenger elevator therein who was not duly licensed to do so under the provisions of the ordinance. This ordinance was introduced in evidence by plaintiff, and it was further shown that Eagle had never been licensed to operate an elevator, and that defendant, through the superintendent of its building, had hired him without making any inquiry in regard thereto. This, according to the record, constituted the only substantial evidence tending to show incompetency on the part of Eagle, except in so far as such incompetency may have been shown by the circumstances of the accident, or negligence on the part of defendant in hiring him.

There can be no doubt under the decisions in this state, and in most of the other states where the question has arisen, that the failure of the defendant to comply with the provisions of the ordinance by hiring and permitting to operate an elevator one who was not licensed was negligence per se. The general rule, which is the one adopted in California, is thus stated in 1 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, in section 13: "The violation of any statutory or valid municipal regulation, established for the benefit of private persons, is of itself sufficient to prove such a breach of duty as will sustain a private action for negligence brought by a person belonging to the protected class if the other elements of actionable negligence concur." It is further said in the same section that it is the opinion of the writers that the true rule is that the violation of such a statute or ordinance is presumptive evidence of negligence, which, if not excused by other evidence, including all the surrounding circumstances, should be deemed conclusive, and, as an example of what is meant by the expression as to excusing evidence, it is said that, under special circumstances, a jury might excuse an omission to give signals required by a statute as prudent under those circumstances. No attempt was made in this case to show anything in the way of excuse for failure to comply with the ordinance, and we need not consider that branch of the rule. As said above, the quotation from Shearman & Redfield states the rule adopted in this state. See Siemers v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; Driscoll v. Market Street, etc., Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 565, 32 Pac. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203; McKune v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 480, 485, 42 Pac. 980.

Both the allegations of the complaint and the findings of the court imply negligence on the part of defendant in the operation of the elevator by Eagle, as well as negligence in the hiring and selection of Eagle as such operator. As we have seen, the evidence was sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the starting of the elevator at the time of the accident was caused by the negligence of Eagle in the operation thereof. Such negligence on Eagle's part would ordinarily, as to third persons injured thereby, constitute negligence on the part of his employer, the defendant. It is assumed by plaintiff's counsel, however, in response to defendant's claim to that effect, that plaintiff and Eagle were fellow servants, "employed by the same employer in the same general business," and defendant therefore claims that it cannot be held responsible to plaintiff for the negligence of Eagle. We will assume for the purpose of this case that Cragg and Eagle were fellow servants, employed by the same employer in the same general business. Our statutory provision on this subject (section 1970, Civ. Code) was at the time of this accident as follows: "An employer is not bound to indemnify his employee for losses suffered by the latter * * * in consequence of the negligence of another person employed by the same employer in the same general business, unless the negligence causing the injury was committed in the performance of a duty the employer owes by law to the employee, or unless the employer has neglected to use ordinary care in the selection of the culpable employee." (The italics are ours.) Under this statutory provision, an employer is liable to an employé for injuries resulting from the mere negligence of a fellow servant, where he had failed to use ordinary care in the selection of such fellow servant. The ordinance and its violation in the selection of Eagle constituted, upon the record before us, conclusive proof of negligence on the part of defendant in the selection of the culpable fellow servant, rendering the defendant liable to any other employé for damages caused by his negligence—in other words, making the negligence of such culpable servant its own negligence as to other employés, as well as to other persons.

The suggestion that the selection of Eagle was made by a fellow servant of plaintiff, in that Eagle was directly selected and employed by the manager of the building, who had full charge thereof for defendant, and hired all the help therein, is without force. It is too well settled to admit of discussion that such duties of an employer as are considered personal to him, among which is the duty to use ordinary care in the selection of fellow servants, cannot be delegated to another servant, and that, when such duties are confided to another employé, such employé, in the performance of those duties, is the representative of the employer, and not a fellow servant. See Skelton v. Pacific Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 507, 511, 74 Pac. 13, and cases there cited. We think that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the trial court in finding that the injuries to plaintiff were caused by the sudden starting and progress downward of the elevator under the circumstances shown, and that plaintiff was not guilty of any negligence contributing thereto.

It is claimed that the court committed several errors on the trial. The ordinance hereinbefore referred to was not alleged in the complaint; plaintiff simply alleging negligence in the manner we have specified. It is urged that it was necessary to plead the ordinance in order to make it available as evidence, and that the trial court therefore erred in admitting it over the objections of defendant. The precise question thus presented appears never to have been decided by this court, but it appears to us that upon elementary principles it was admissible without having been pleaded. The cause of action here alleged was not a violation of the ordinance, but the negligence of the defendant, and the ordinance was simply evidence offered to show such negligence. Under our system of pleading, it is both unnecessary and improper to plead the evidence relied on to establish the ultimate facts essential to a cause of action. In Brasington v. South Bound R. R. Co., 62 S. C. 325, 40 S. E. 665, 8 Am. St. Rep. 905, an action for damages for injuries for falling into an excavation left unguarded in violation of the provisions of an ordinance where the complaint simply alleged negligence in leaving the excavation unguarded and did not properly allege the existence of any ordinance, it was held that the ordinance was admissible to show the alleged negligence, and the court quoted approvingly from an earlier case as follows: "This is not an action to enforce the performance of any duty imposed by an ordinance of the city of Charleston, or to enforce the payment of any tax or penalty imposed by such ordinance, but the cause of action here is the negligence of the defendant company resulting in the death of the intestate, and the ordinances of the city are only referred to as showing such negligence." In Bragg v. Met. St. Ry. Co., 192 Mo. 331, 350, 91 S. W. 527, 532, where a similar question was presented, it was said: "Should it [the ordinance] be excluded because not pleaded? We think not. Where a suit is based on an ordinance, it should be pleaded, * * * but, where the ordinance is merely sought to be introduced as an evidential fact, it would seem on principle that it need not be pleaded. And this is so because it is necessary to plead only the ultimate and substantial facts necessary to constitute the cause of action." See, also, Riley v. Wabash, etc., Ry. Co., 18 Mo. App. 385. These cases appear to us to state the true rule. Some of the cases cited by counsel for defendant were cases where it was not attempted to allege any negligence other than the violation of an ordinance, and the ordinance was not well pleaded. If the allegation as to the ordinance was stricken out, nothing remained to show negligence. Of these Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mikesell, 23 Ind. App. 395, 55 N. E. 488, is an example. In such cases it is held that the ordinance must be properly pleaded, and that the complaint should also aver that the ordinance was in force at the time of the occurrence of the act complained of. Such ruling does not appear to us to be inconsistent with our conclusion. Treating the ordinance simply as evidence of the obligation resting on defendant in the matter of the selection of employés, it was not necessary for plaintiff to show that it had not been repealed. The presumption, in the absence of evidence, was that it was still in force.

What we have said upon this point is also a sufficient answer to the claim that the testimony showing that Eagle had never been licensed should not have been admitted. There would be much force in some of the claims of learned counsel for defendant in relation to the effect of this ordinance if the allegations of the complaint and the findings did not sufficiently show any negligence other than the selection of an incompetent elevator operator; but, as we have said, they do sufficiently show negligence in the operation of the elevator by the operator, for which negligence defendant, by reason of its failure to use ordinary care in the selection of such operator, is responsible to any other employé injured thereby without fault on his own part. There was no prejudicial error in striking out the concluding portion of an answer given by witness Macomber to a question asked him on cross-examination by defendant's counsel. The portion stricken out was in no way responsive to the question, and the portion allowed to remain constituted a complete answer.

There was no error in striking out an answer given by witness Collon to the somewhat vague question: "What was Cragg doing holding on to the grill work? Was he holding on like a man who was hurt, or a man who was in the possession of his faculties?" Collon was in the lobby on the lower floor, adjacent to the elevator shaft, and had testified that he saw the elevator coming down, and the plaintiff, therein, endeavoring to hold on to the grill work of the elevator, with his feet above the bottom of the car, until, as the elevator nearly reached the bottom, he fell to the floor of the cage. He answered the above question: "Well, I should say he was in possession of his faculties." We think it manifest that this was a mere conclusion of the witness upon a matter concerning which, under the circumstances, he was in no better condition to judge than would be any other person to whom the acts of plaintiff, as detailed by Collon, might be related, and that the rule of People v. Manoggian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 Pac. 177, and other like cases has no application.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

(154 Cal. 672)

BOOKER v. CASTILLO et al. (L. A. 2,191.)
(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1908.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 262*)—"COMMUNITY PROPERTY"—PRESUMPTIONS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under the provisions of Civ. Code, § 164, before the amendment of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219), that all property acquired after marriage by a husband or wife, or both, except by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, is community property, the presumption was that property conveyed to a husband or wife after their marriage by other than a deed of gift was community property, which presumption could be overcome only by showing that it was acquired by gift, bequest, devise or descent, which, under sections 162 and 163, would make it their separate property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 913, 914; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1343, 1344; vol. 8, p. 7608.]

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 114*)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The amendment of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219), to Civ. Code, § 164, providing that property conveyed to a married woman by a writing shall be presumed to be her separate property, and that the presumption shall be conclusive in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith for a valuable consideration, was not retroactive.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 395; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 262*)—ACTION BY HUSBAND TO RECOVER LAND CONVEYED BY WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

The amendment of March 3, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 71, c. 62), to Civ. Code, § 164, providing that where married women have conveyed land acquired prior to May 19, 1889, the husband, his heirs, or assigns shall be barred from suing to show that the land was community property, or to recover it after July 1, 1894, and the amendment of March 4, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 63, c. 72), making the provision applicable where a wife shall thereafter convey, and providing that, as to future conveyances, the action must be commenced within a year from the filing for record of the conveyances, were simply statutes of limitation, and did not change the presumption that land conveyed to a wife before the amendment of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219), which took effect May 19, 1889, by other than a deed of gift, was community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 913, 914; Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

4. STATUTES (§ 199*)—CONSTRUCTION—"CONVEY"—"CONVEYED"—"CONVEYANCES."

The words "convey," "conveyed," and "conveyances," as used in the amendments of March 3, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 71, c. 62), and March 4, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 63, c. 72), import a transfer of the title, according to their ordinary meaning when used in reference to real property, and the amendments do not apply to a married woman's mortgage on land to secure a debt, a mortgage being merely a lien which transfers no title in view of Civ. Code, § 2872, defining a lien; section 2877 providing that mortgages shall be subject to all the provisions of the chapter (on liens), and section 2888 declaring that a lien transfers no title in the property subject thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 199.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1570-1575; vol. 8, p. 7618; vol. 2, pp. 1575-1584; vol. 8, p. 7619.]

5. MORTGAGES (§ 1*)—CONSTRUCTION—"CONVEYANCES."

Civ. Code, § 1215, defining the term "conveyance," as used in the recording act, to be any instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is mortgaged, etc., applies only to the recording act, and does not make a mortgage a conveyance of real property in any other sense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by L. W. Booker, executor of Tennessee A. Andrews, against Gregorio Castillo, whose true name is Gregorio Valencia, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Wm. Mallagh and Wm. Shipsey, for appellants. R. V. Bouldin and Carpenter & Gibbons, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial in an action commenced by plaintiff on June 12, 1905, to have it determined that the estate of his testatrix is the owner of a tract of land containing some 160 acres in San Luis Obispo county, and that defendants' claims thereto are without right. Plaintiff's claim, sustained by the findings and judgment, is that the estate of Mrs. Andrews owns the whole property. The defendants' claim is that such estate owns only an undivided eight-twelfths thereof; that four of the defendants, surviving children of Juan Castillo, deceased, each owns an undivided one-twelfth; and that the whole property is subject to administration in the matter of the estate of Juan Castillo, of which one of said children, Graciano Castillo, is administrator.

The material facts are clearly set forth in the findings of the trial court. Plaintiff's claim is based entirely on a sheriff's deed executed after sale in foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage given on the interest of Gorgonia Valencia in said property by the administrator of her estate on order of the court duly made in the administration of her estate. It was authorized to be given and was given to secure a loan of $1,100, made by plaintiff's testator, Mrs. Andrews, to enable the administrator of Mrs. Gregorio Valencia's estate to satisfy a foreclosure decree on a prior mortgage on the property, given by her and her husband, Gregorio Valencia, on November 9, 1895, to one B. Sinsheimer, and assigned to the Andrews Banking Company, and the money loaned was used for the authorized purpose. The mortgage of November 9, 1895, was given to renew a former mortgage given by the same parties on December 2, 1889, which had been given to renew a mortgage on the same property executed to Sinsheimer by Gorgonia alone on December 4, 1883, while she was the wife of Juan Castillo. It is not disputed by defendants that the sheriff's deed vested in the estate of Mrs. Andrews whatever interest Gorgonia Valencia's estate had in the property; the claim being that, as to an undivided four-twelfths thereof, neither Gorgonia nor her estate ever had any interest. From July 5, 1860, to October 6, 1884, Juan Castillo and said Gorgonia were husband and wife. This relation was terminated on the last named date by the death of Juan. For at least 10 years next preceding his death, they, with their children, resided on this property. During this time, viz., on October 17, 1882, one Joaquin Dughi made and delivered to said Gorgonia, the wife, a deed purporting to grant, bargain, sell, and convey the property to her for the expressed consideration of $650. Accepting the theory most favorable to plaintiff, said Dughi was at the time of the execution of this deed the owner of the property. It is not intimated that the purchase price was not paid from community funds. The only evidence on the question is the deed itself. No conveyance of the property was ever made by Juan to his wife. Juan left six children, two of whom (Juanita and Ellnora) died before Gorgonia, never having attained the age of majority, married, or had issue. The other four children are defendants here. Letters of administration on the estate of said Juan were issued to Graciano Castillo, one of said children, who is both personally and as such administrator a defendant here, and said estate is still pending, unsettled and undistributed. From the time of Juan's death to her marriage with Gregorio Valencia, February 18, 1886, Gorgonia, with her children by Juan, continued to reside on this property. From the death of Gorgonia, December 27, 1895, her surviving husband, Gregorio, with her surviving children by Juan, except Graciano, and her children by Gregorio, continued to reside thereon.

If the property at the time of the death of Juan was community property, Gorgonia then succeeded to six-twelfths thereof as surviving wife, and subsequently to the two-twelfths of the children Juanita and Ellnora, who died pending administration of their father's estate, as hereinbefore specified, and the remaining four-twelfths belonged to the four surviving children of Juan. Plaintiff's claim that the estate of Gorgonia had any greater interest than an undivided two-thirds is necessarily based on the contention that the property must here be regarded as having constituted separate property of Gorgonia at the time of the death of Juan Castillo.

Upon the foregoing facts, it is clear that it must be held that the property was community property at the time of the death of Juan, October 6, 1884, and that the wife's interest therein up to that time was only such interest as she would succeed to upon his death. Prior to the adoption of the amendment of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219), to section 164 of the Civil Code, the presumption was that property conveyed to either husband or wife after their marriage by a conveyance other than a deed of gift was community property (see Nilson v. Sarment [Cal.] 96 Pac. 315, and cases there cited), and this presumption could be overcome only by a showing that the property was in fact acquired by the spouse in such a way as to make it separate property under the provisions of sections 162 and 163 of the Civil Code. As we have said, there was no attempt to make any such showing in this case, and the presumption that it was community property is therefore controlling. The amendment of March 19, 1889, to section 164 of the Civil Code, changed this presumption by adding to the section the words, "but whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property," and provided that such presumption should be conclusive in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for a valuable consideration. As to this amendment, it was said in Nilson v. Sarment, supra: "It is thoroughly settled that the amendment of 1889 is not retroactive, and has no application to property acquired by husband or wife before its enactment." This statement is fully supported by the authorities. Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 264, 33 Pac. 95; Gwynn v. Dierssen, 101 Cal. 563, 36 Pac. 103; Lewis v. Burns, 122 Cal. 358, 55 Pac. 132. There was no further change in the law until March 3, 1893, when section 164 was again amended. From what has been said, it is clear that up to this time the wife's only interest in the property was such as she had acquired under the laws of succession from her husband, Juan, and from her two children who had died pending the administration of his estate.

On March 3, 1893, section 164 of the Civil Code was again amended by the addition of the following: "And in cases where married women have conveyed real property, which they acquired prior to May nineteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty nine, the husbands, or their heirs or assigns, of said married women shall be barred from commencing any action to show that said real property was community, or to recover said real property from and after July first, eighteen hundred and ninety four." St. 1893, p. 71, c. 62. On March 4, 1897, this provision was amended in such a way as to make it applicable to future, as well as past conveyances, by inserting the words "or shall hereafter convey," and by providing that as to future "conveyances" the action must be commenced within "one year from the filing for record in the recorder's office of such conveyances. * * *" St. 1897, p. 63, c. 72. Neither of these amendments purported to change the presumption arising out of a conveyance made to a married woman prior to May, 1889, when the amendment to March, 1889, took effect, and both were simply statutes of limitation. It was said in Peiser v. Griffin, 125 Cal. 9, 13, 57 Pac. 690, speaking of the amendment of 1893: "This is a perfectly valid statute of limitations fixing the time within which an action to avoid such a past conveyance of the wife must be brought."

We do not consider it necessary to discuss certain constitutional objections made by defendants to these provisions, which it is said were not brought to the attention of the court in Peiser v. Griffin, supra, for we are of the opinion that neither is applicable under the facts of this case. We are satisfied that neither provision has any application to a case where the married woman has simply purported to mortgage property as security for a debt. The language of the provision is "where married women have conveyed real property," etc., "where married women have conveyed or shall hereafter convey real property," etc., and "as to conveyances," etc. The words "conveyed," "convey," and "conveyance" when used in reference to real property ordinarily import a transfer of the title. With us a mortgage is a mere lien, which transfers no title to the property subject to the lien. Civ. Code, §§ 2872, 2877, 2888. There is nothing in the language of section 164 of the Civil Code, as amended, to indicate that these words were used therein in a different sense. Plaintiff's counsel points to section 1215 of the Civil Code in support of his claim that a mortgage is a conveyance within the meaning of section 164 of the Civil Code, but, as was said in Stewart v. Powers, 98 Cal. 514, 518, 33 Pac. 486, "this section defines the term 'conveyance' only 'as used' in the recording act, and does not imply that a mortgage is in fact a conveyance of real property, but rather the contrary; for if it were a conveyance, and so regarded and understood, it need not have been included in the definition." We can find no warrant for extending the effect of this statute of limitations to make it include cases not fairly within the meaning of the language used. It must therefore be held that at the time of her death the wife had not conveyed the property, and that up to that time the statute had no application.

As we have said, there was a mortgage executed by the administrator of the estate of the deceased wife, under order of the court having jurisdiction of her estate for purposes of administration, a foreclosure thereof, and a sheriff's deed to plaintiff, as purchaser at the sale. It may well be doubted whether the amendments under consideration can be construed as applying to transactions of the legal representative of a wife, after her death. But, if we concede that they are applicable to such transactions, it cannot avail plaintiff. What we have said as to the mortgages executed by the wife is equally applicable to the mortgage executed by the administrator. If the sheriff's deed executed after sale on foreclosure of the mortgage is regarded as a conveyance by the wife, plaintiff is not in position to derive any benefit from this statute of limitation, for the statute had not run at the time of the commencement of this action. As to conveyances made after the amendment of 1897, the time prescribed when the husband, his heirs, or assigns would be barred was "from and after one year from the filing for record in the recorder's office of such conveyances respectively." It does not appear when this sheriff's deed was filed for record, but it does appear that it was not executed and delivered until April 15, 1905, and that the amended complaint in this action was filed within five months thereafter.

In view of our conclusion on these matters, it is unnecessary to consider other reasons advanced by defendants why the amendments of 1893 and 1897 are not applicable here. For the reasons stated, they do not bar defendants from showing that the property was community property of Juan Castillo at the time of his death, or from asserting their rights therein as such community property. It follows that the estate of Mrs. Andrews acquired no interest in the property by virtue of the foreclosure proceedings, and the deed based thereon, other than such interest as the surviving wife, Gorgonia, has acquired under the law of succession, viz., an undivided eight-twelfths; that the surviving children of said Juan and said Gorgonia, viz., defendants Angelita Castillo, Graciano Castillo, John Castillo, and Joseph Castillo, each own an undivided one-twelfth thereof, and the whole property is subject to administration in the matter of the estate of Juan Castillo, deceased.

In view of the findings of ownership of the property in the estate of Mrs. Andrews, and the right of possession thereto of the executor of her will, we do not feel warranted in directing a judgment in favor of defendants on the findings.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

154 Cal. 632

WELDON v. ROGERS et al. (L. A. 2,--1.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 14, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1225*)—AFFIRMANCE—LIABILITY ON UNDERTAKING.

An ex parte judgment against defendant on an undertaking given under Code Civ. Proc. § 942, to stay proceedings on his appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order for an execution on an old judgment, awarded on affirmance of the order, is void, where he did not sign the undertaking, no new proceeding or action was instituted against him, and no summons, notice, or other process was served upon him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1225.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1236*)—UNDERTAKINGS—JUDGMENTS—VALIDITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 942, authorizes an undertaking to stay proceedings on an appealed judgment or order directing the "payment of money," and provides for an ex parte judgment or order. Section 685 authorizes a court to allow a judgment to be carried into execution after the lapse of five years. The superior court, under section 685, ordered execution to issue on an old judgment against defendant, specifying the amount thereof, the amount of interest, and the total amount due. Defendant appealed from an order refusing to vacate such order and refusing to quash the execution, and furnished an undertaking under section 942 in double the amount of the judgment, providing that, on affirmance of the order appealed from, defendant would pay the "amount directed to be paid" by such order. Held, that the appeal was not from an order directing the "payment of money," and did not authorize an undertaking under section 942; the order allowing the execution being unauthorized so far as it purported to direct the payment of money, so that no judgment could properly be entered on the undertaking against the signers or against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4778-4784; Dec. Dig. § 1236.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 485*)—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

Under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 949, on the giving of an undertaking under section 941 on appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order allowing an execution on an old judgment, proceedings on the order were stayed so far as there could be any proceedings upon such order, but proceedings on the judgment and the execution were not, and could not be, stayed thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1237*)—UNDERTAKING FOR SUPERSEDEAS—HOW ENFORCED.

An undertaking on supersedeas ordered by the Supreme Court could be enforced by action only, and not by a summary judgment, without process or notice as specially provided in case of an undertaking given under Code Civ. Proc. § 942, on appeal from a money judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1237.*]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by Sophie B. Weldon, T. J. Weldon's executrix, against Ralph Rogers and others. From a judgment against defendant and his sureties on an undertaking upon appeal, they appeal. Reversed.

See, also, 151 Cal. 432, 90 Pac. 1062.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

McNutt & Hannon, for appellants. Louis Luckel, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeals are here presented from a judgment of the superior court, entered, ex parte, against Ralph Rogers, defendant in a former judgment, and Mabel Bailey Rogers and Hugh Glassell as sureties in an undertaking, given upon a former appeal in the cause for the purpose of securing a stay of proceedings. See Weldon v. Rogers, 151 Cal. 432, 90 Pac. 1062, decided in this court June 22, 1907. On April 2, 1891, a judgment was entered in the superior court for $3,979.15 in favor of T. J. Weldon against Ralph Rogers. This judgment remains unpaid. On April 10, 1905, on motion of the present respondent, who was then and is now acting as executrix of the estate of T. J. Weldon, deceased, an order was made in that cause the material part of which is as follows, to wit: "It is now therefore ordered that execution issue, and that the said judgment be enforced in favor of Sophie B. Weldon, executrix of the last will and testament of said T. J. Weldon, deceased, plaintiff herein, and against the defendant Ralph Rogers, for the sum of $3,979.15, with interest from April 2, 1891, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, now amounting to $7,879.44." Ralph Rogers moved the said court to set aside this order and recall and quash said execution, and on May 22, 1905, the court made an order denying said motion. From the latter order said Rogers appealed, giving the usual $300 undertaking on appeal, under section 941, Code Civ. Proc. Upon this undertaking, he applied to this court for a supersedeas staying proceedings on the judgment and execution aforesaid. On October 16, 1905, this court denied the said application. Thereafter, on October 23, 1905, the undertaking now in question, executed by Mabel Bailey Rogers and Hugh Glassell, but not by Ralph Rogers, was filed in the superior court. It is in double the amount of the aforesaid judgment, declares that it is given to stay proceedings on the order for the issuance of the execution and also on the order refusing to vacate the said order and recall the execution, and, as prescribed by section 942, Code Civ. Proc., it provides that if the order appealed from should be affirmed, and said Ralph Rogers should fail for 30 days after the filing of the remittitur to pay the "amount directed to be paid" by the "order appealed from," then judgment might be rendered against said sureties "for such amount," in favor of the plaintiff. The order referred to as the order appealed from was affirmed on June 22, 1907. On September 3, 1907, the superior court on motion of respondent, without notice, and on the supposed authority of this undertaking and of the provisions of section 942, Code Civ. Proc., entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff against Ralph Rogers, the defendant, and the two sureties aforesaid, for $0,202.32, being the amount of said original judgment of $3,979.15, and interest thereon to September 3, 1907. The present appeals are from this judgment; one appeal being by Ralph Rogers and the other a joint appeal by the two sureties.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The new judgment against the original defendant, Ralph Rogers, cannot be sustained on any theory. He did not sign the undertaking, no new proceeding or action had been instituted against him, and no summons, notice, or other process had been served upon him. The new judgment, as against him, was given without jurisdiction, and is not only erroneous, but wholly void. The judgment against the two sureties is also without support. Section 942, Code Civ. Proc., provides for an undertaking of the form here used and for an ex parte judgment thereon against the sureties only upon appeals "from a judgment or order directing the payment of money." The order appealed from on the previous appeal did not direct the payment of any money. It was purely negative in effect, merely denying the motion to vacate the former order and quash the execution. This former order, even if it can be considered as a part of the latter order so as to make the appeal include both, cannot properly be considered as an order directing the payment of money. So far as it purported to direct the payment of money, it was without authority. The superior court, when applied to ex parte for leave to have execution issued, as provided in section 685, Code Civ. Proc., had no power to direct the payment of money, but only to give leave that the former judgment be "carried into execution." The amount to be specified in such execution was to be determined, in the present case, solely by the terms of the judgment upon which it was to be founded, and such amount could not be enlarged or diminished by anything said by the court in an order made under section 685, given ex parte, and without the consent of the judgment defendant or notice to him. In so far as it purported to direct that the execution should be for a named amount, it was useless and void. For these reasons the former appeal cannot be considered as an appeal from an order directing the payment of money, and section 942 gave no authority for an undertaking thereon to stay the proceedings on the judgment or on the execution. It cannot be considered as a statutory undertaking upon which a judgment could be given as prescribed in that section. The judgment rendered in pursuance thereof was without authority and void. Powers v. Chabot, 93 Cal. 269, 28 Pac. 1070; McCallion v. Hibernia, etc., Soc., 98 Cal. 444, 33 Pac. 329; Central, etc., Co. v. Center, 107 Cal. 132, 40 Pac. 334; Reay v. Butler, 118 Cal. 113, 50 Pac. 375.

The case is practically the same as Carit v. Williams, 67 Cal. 580, 8 Pac. 93. There a motion to recall an execution on a money judgment was denied, and an appeal was taken from the order denying the motion, the undertaking on appeal for $300 was waived, as the law provides it may be, and this court was asked to stay the proceedings on the execution. The application was denied, the court saying: "The waiver of the undertaking is sufficient to stay any execution of the order appealed from, were any stay necessary. But it is manifestly insufficient to stay execution on the judgment referred to even if any such stay could be granted on an appeal from an order made after the judgment. This court has no authority under the statute for ordering any such stay. The stay of execution on a judgment for the payment of money is only allowed on an appeal from the judgment, and giving the undertaking in double the amount, etc., as required by the statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 942. Section 949 of the Code of Civil Procedure only refers to a stay of execution of the order of judgment appealed from in cases not provided for in sections 942, 943, 944, and 945. In this case there is no appeal from a judgment. The appeal is from an order made after the final judgment, denying Charles' motion for an order, for which no stay is requisite." Reay v. Butler, supra, and Credits Com. Co. v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 82, 73 Pac. 1009, are of similar effect, though not precisely the same in point of fact.

It is apparent that, under section 949, Code Civ. Proc., upon the giving of the $300 undertaking on the previous appeal, the proceedings on the order therein appealed from were stayed, so far as there could be any proceedings upon such an order, but the proceedings on the judgment and execution were not stayed, and could not be stayed by that undertaking. It is intimated in Carit v. Williams that this court, by virtue of its inherent power to make an appeal effectual, could order a supersedeas after requiring a sufficient bond from the appellant as security therefor. We express no doubt of this proposition, although, as it is not before us, we do not affirm it. The present undertaking was not given in pursuance of any such proceeding for a supersedeas from this court, and, if it had been so given, it could be enforced by action only, and not by a summary judgment without process or notice as specially provided in a case of an undertaking given under section 942, Code Civ. Proc. The cases of Fulton v. Hanna, 40 Cal. 278, Owen v. Pomona, etc., Co., 124 Cal. 332, 57 Pac. 71, Holland v. McDade, 125 Cal. 353, 58 Pac. 9, and Baldwin v. Superior Court, 125 Cal. 584, 58 Pac. 185, declare that on an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial, after a money judgment, an undertaking in double the amount of the judgment may be given under section 942, and that execution on the judgment will be stayed thereby pending such appeal. This is the sole exception to the rule, and it rests on the reasons which are pointed out in Holland v. McDade, supra, and Credits Com. Co. v. Superior Court, supra. These reasons are not applicable to an order such as that here involved, and this distinction is pointed out in the two decisions mentioned. There is no ground upon which the judgment can be upheld either against the original defendant or the sureties in the undertaking.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

9 Cal. App. 290

CRANE CO. v. DRYER et al. (Civ. 516.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 7, 1908.)

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 183*)—PARTNERSHIP AND INDIVIDUAL DEBTS—APPLICATION OF FIRM ASSETS.

The right to have partnership debts discharged out of the partnership property before the individual debts of the members of such partnership are thus discharged can be waived by the mutual consent of the partners, and creditors of such partnership have no right to the enforcement of their demands out of such partnership property as is affected by such waiver, and this right is not affected by Civ. Code, § 2405, providing that "each member of a partnership may require its property to be applied to the discharge of its debts, and has a lien upon the shares of the other partners for this purpose, and for the payment of the general balance, if any, to him."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 333; Dec. Dig. § 183.*]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 115*)—PREFERENCES.

Under Civ. Code, § 3432, providing that a debtor may pay one creditor in preference to another, or give to one creditor payment in security for his demand in preference to another, a debtor may prefer one creditor to another when such preference is not founded in or induced by motives which do not amount to a fraud on the rights of other persons or creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 370; Dec. Dig. § 115.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Crane Company against E. O. Dryer and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. D. Edwards, for appellant. J. R. Webb and S. L. Strother, for respondents.

HART, J. The defendants, E. O. Dryer and George Machen, constituted the firm of Dryer & Machen, engaged in the plumbing business at the city of Fresno during the years 1904, 1905, and 1906. On the 9th day of August, 1905, in consideration of and for the payment of an indebtedness due said firm, the firm of C. S. Pierce and others conveyed to George Machen, a member of the said first-mentioned firm, the lots involved in this action. On July 12, 1906, while the firm of Dryer & Machen was indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $1,240, said George Machen conveyed said lots to his father, W. W. Machen, one of the defendants herein. A note had been executed and delivered by Dryer & Machen to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,445.56, and in the month of September, 1906, the latter brought an action against the former on said note, and on the 13th day of October, 1906, judgment was rendered in said action in favor of the plaintiff herein and against said Dryer & Machen for the amount of said note. Immediately upon the entry of said judgment, execution thereon was issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff of Fresno county, who in January, 1907, returned said execution to the superior court without being satisfied either in whole or in part, the said return disclosing that said officer was unable to find any property belonging to Dryer & Machen out of which said judgment could be satisfied. The object of this action is to secure a decree of the court declaring and adjudging the conveyance of the lots in controversy by George Machen to his father, W. W. Machen, to be "fraudulent and void as to this plaintiff, as a firm creditor of said Dryer & Machen, and that the said property thereby conveyed be subject to plaintiff's execution upon its said judgment, and that plaintiff's claim thereto is superior and paramount to any claim of said W. W. Machen, or any individual creditor of any firm upon said property," etc. The defendants Dryer & Machen failed to answer the complaint, and, upon such default, judgment was ordered and entered against them. The court, however, gave the defendant W. W. Machen judgment, from which and an order denying it a new trial the plaintiff takes this appeal.

The complaint alleges that said George

Machen, "fraudulently and with intent to hinder, delay, and defeat the claims of this plaintiff as a firm creditor of said firm" of Dryer & Machen, "conveyed and transferred the legal title to said real estate to W. W. Machen, his own father, by deed of conveyance duly acknowledged and certified, so as to entitle it to be recorded, and it was duly filed and recorded about the same last-named date in the office of the county recorder for Fresno county, Cal.; that there was no other consideration for said conveyance than an alleged individual indebtedness of said George Machen to said W. W. Machen, and said firm and the members thereof were then disposing of and trying to dispose of their property in contemplation of insolvency and were then and are now insolvent, and have no property or assets out of which this plaintiff can have its judgment aforesaid satisfied," etc. It is further charged that the defendant W. W. Machen was fully aware of the facts and circumstances, as alleged in the complaint, leading to the conveyance of the real estate involved in this litigation to him by his son. W. W. Machen in his answer specifically denies the material averments of the complaint, and, in addition, asks the court, by way of affirmative relief, that he be reimbursed in a certain sum for expenses incurred by him in relation to the property, in the event the plaintiff establishes his right to the relief demanded by the complaint. The contention of the plaintiff is that the transfer of the property concerned in this dispute by George Machen to W. W. Machen, being in payment of the individual indebtedness of said George Machen, was and is at least a constructive fraud against the plaintiff as a partnership creditor of said firm of Dryer & Machen.

The evidence shows that the property in dispute was transferred to George Machen by Pierce et al. for the purpose of liquidating a debt due the firm of Dryer & Machen from the former, and that the said firm was the real owner of said property at the time it was conveyed to W. W. Machen by George Machen. The testimony of George Machen is to the effect that he was indebted to his father in an amount approximating the sum of $2,000, the same having been borrowed by him to put into the business of the firm of Dryer & Machen when it was formed; that he transferred the property to his father with the express consent of his partner, Dryer, and that, while the firm owed other persons, no one was pressing it for payment of bills due from it; that there was sufficient property of the firm remaining after said conveyance to his father to meet all outstanding claims against the firm. He testified that his father "wanted his money," and that "goods in the place," accounts due the firm, and other property belonging to the firm were enough to meet all the other obligations of the firm. He positively denied that he transferred the real estate to his father with a view of defrauding other creditors. E. O. Dryer, the other member of the firm, testified in part as follows: "The troubles of the firm were considerable about this time. They were crowding us for money. We were being pressed by creditors. Attachment suits were threatened. Disposing of our property was talked over. I and George Machen were figuring whether there could be some way to pay it out, whether there couldn't be, and how it would come out, and it was suggested, I believe, that George deed this property to somebody else and try to save it. * * * I couldn't say that W. W. Machen knew the exact condition of the firm. He knew we were financially distressed. I knew he knew that. It was talked over at the time he took the deed from George Machen. I was not present when the deed was made. I came to Ingersoll's office afterwards." T. D. Ingersoll, who drew the deed conveying the property to W. W. Machen, testified that previously thereto he had a conversation with E. O. Dryer and George Machen; that "they both said George had better deed that Effie street property to his father for money George got from him to put in the firm. The deed was drawn up in pursuance to instructions given me by Dryer and George Machen in the conversation just referred to, which was on the day before the execution of the deed, when Dryer and George Machen only were present, * * * and the deed was taken and acknowledged before Van Meter in the presence of Dryer." Immediately upon the execution of the deed and its acknowledgment before Van Meter, a notary, Ingersoll delivered the same to W. W. Machen in the presence of George Machen and Dryer. The grantee thereupon said to George Machen that he would "get the note and credit him with it." W. W. Machen testified that his son, George Machen, was indebted to him for money advanced to be put into the business of Dryer & Machen, that he desired the return of the money, and that his son gave him a deed to the property in dispute for the purpose of paying off said indebtedness. He testified that he knew nothing, except in a general way, of the firm's financial embarrassment, and that he took the property in good faith in payment of a debt due him from George and not with any intention of aiding said firm in hindering, delaying, or defrauding its creditors, and without any knowledge that said firm desired or intended to hinder or delay the payment of its just debts, if the members thereof had any such intention. Thus we have given a synopsis of all the evidence from which the court below found the facts of which the judgment is predicated.

The court found "that on the 12th of July, 1906, the property described in plaintiff's complaint stood in the name of George Machen, who held it in trust for said firm of Dryer & Machen"; "that on said 12th of July, 1906, said George Machen conveyed to the defendant W. W. Machen, by the consent and with the authority of E. O. Dryer, the other member of said firm of Dryer & Machen, the said property in plaintiff's complaint described, which said conveyance was not made with any fraudulent intent by George Machen to hinder, delay, or defraud the plaintiff or any other person as a firm creditor of said Dryer & Machen, but that said conveyance by said George Machen to W. W. Machen was made in good faith for a valuable consideration, to wit, an indebtedness owing by said George Machen to said W. W. Machen, and which said conveyance was made a long time prior to the date of the judgment of the plaintiff herein against said firm of Dryer & Machen"; "that at the time of said conveyance herein described said defendant W. W. Machen had no knowledge of the financial condition of said firm of Dryer & Machen, as to whether said firm was insolvent or not, or that it was indebted to plaintiff, and took said conveyance in good faith and for a valuable consideration, to wit, in payment of said indebtedness owing him by said defendant, George Machen." It is apparent, upon a mere inspection of the record, that the evidence abundantly supports the findings of the court. It is consequently clear that the property in dispute was conveyed by George Machen to his father with the consent and authority of Dryer, in settlement of an indebtedness due from the son to the father, and that said conveyance was not due to any desire or intention on the part of any of the parties to that transaction to hinder, delay, or defraud plaintiff or other creditors of the firm of Dryer & Machen.

The single question, then, for consideration, is whether the act of George Machen in conveying partnership property in payment of an individual indebtedness is, as to creditors of the firm to which said George Machen belongs, constructively fraudulent. Or, to put appellant's contention in another form, whether debts of a partnership must be discharged from the joint property before any portion of it can be applied to the individual debts of the partners.

The contention of the appellant, as thus stated, is evidently inspired by the provisions of section 2405 of the Civil Code. That section provides: "Each member of a partnership may require its property to be applied to the discharge of its debts, and has a lien upon the shares of the other partners for this purpose, and for the payment of the general balance if any to him." The authorities cited by counsel for appellant only go to the extent of reaffirming the rule as thus declared in our Civil Code. As applied to cases coming within the purview of that section of the Code, those authorities most assuredly state the law correctly. Undoubtedly the Code rule proceeds from and is therefore in perfect harmony with the soundest principles of equity; for what conceivable reason, unless one not founded in common sense, can be suggested why a member of a partnership should not be authorized to require and compel the application of the partnership property to the discharge of the partnership debts, in preference to the payment by such means of the individual debts of the members of such partnership? Indeed, it would be a distinctly singular and anomalous principle either of equity or of law which would sustain the act of a single member of a partnership in extinguishing his individual obligations out of the partnership effects against the protest and consent of his copartners. But it is well settled by the decisions of the courts that whether the partnership debts shall be discharged out of the partnership property before the individual debts of the members of such partnership are thus discharged, or vice versa, is a matter which rests primarily and entirely with the members of the partnership. In other words, the right to the application of partnership property to the payment of partnership debts is one exercisable alone by the individual partners. This being so, it follows that partners can, by mutual consent and agreement, waive such right, and, where that right has been waived or parted with by the joint, mutual act of the members of a partnership, creditors of such partnership no longer have a right to the enforcement of their demands out of such partnership property as is affected by such waiver. The equity of such creditors, in other words, is lost the moment the partners waive or destroy their right to have the firm debts discharged out of the partnership assets by their mutual agreement to first apply the same to the extinguishment of the individual debts of the members of the partnership, for the equity of the partnership creditors must be worked out through the medium of the equity of the partners. Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. Ed. 370; Smith v. Smith, 87 Iowa, 93, 54 N. W. 73, 43 Am. St. Rep. 359; Baker's Appeal, 21 Pa. 76, 59 Am. Dec. 754; Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 365, 16 S. W. 592, 27 Am. St. Rep. 350; Huiskamp v. Moline Wagon Co., 121 U. S. 310, 7 Sup. Ct. 905, 30 L. Ed. 971; Caldwell Bank & Trust Co. v. Porter et al. (Or.) 95 Pac. 1; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 238.

In Smith v. Smith, supra, the rule is thus stated: "The creditors of a firm have no lien on, or equity in, the partnership property. Therefore, with the consent of the partners, it may be applied to the payment of their individual debts, although the firm is insolvent. The partnership creditors are not entitled to set aside such payment as fraudulent as against them. * * * As the rule exists for the protection of the partnership, they may waive its benefits, and, when they have done this, the creditors have no ground of complaint." In the case of Ladd v. Griswold, 9 Ill. 25, 42 Am. Dec. 445, it is said: "The right in equity of the joint creditors to seek payment out of the partnership effects, to the exclusion of separate creditors of the partners, results solely from the right of the partners to have the joint estate thus applied. The rule is for the benefit of the partners themselves. The equity of the creditors is of a dependent, subordinate character, and has to be worked out and enforced through the medium of the equity of the partners—citing Story's Eq. § 676, and Story on Partnerships, §§ 360, 361. The partners may part with their right to have the joint property applied to the payment of the joint demands, and, when they do so, the equity of the creditor is at an end."

In the case at bar the evidence, as seen, shows, and the court finds, that the transaction resulting in the payment of George Machen's individual debt out of the partnership property took place about two months before the plaintiff brought this action; that said transaction was had and carried out with the express consent of the only other member of the firm; and that it was had in good faith and with no intention on the part of the members of the firm to defraud other creditors. It is plainly apparent that section 2405 of the Civil Code and the authorities cited by counsel for the appellant have no application to the facts as they were proved and found in the present case. The partners having waived their right to have so much of their partnership property as is involved here applied to the payment of an individual debt of a member of the partnership, the plaintiff as a creditor of the partnership, has no equity which it can enforce against said property. It may be added that there is no rule of law in this state forbidding a preference by a debtor of one creditor over another, when such preference is not founded in or induced by motives which would amount to a fraud on the rights of other persons or creditors. To the contrary, Civ. Code, § 3432, in express terms gives a debtor the right to pay one creditor in preference to another, or give to one creditor security for the payment of his demand in preference to another.

Some exceptions to the rulings of the court are urged, but they do not appear to be of sufficient importance to compel special notice.

The judgment and order are, for the reasons herein stated, affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 275

LAVENTHAL v. FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK. (Civ. 473.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Jan. 4, 1909.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 146*)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACTS IN GENERAL.

A policy is but a contract, and, like others, must be construed from the language used, and, when the terms are plain and unambiguous, the courts should hold the parties thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 294; Dec. Dig. § 146.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 524*)—ACCIDENT POLICY—CONSTRUCTION—TOTAL DISABILITY—IMMEDIATE DISABILITY—"IMMEDIATELY."

An accident policy which provides for a certain indemnity in the case of total disability by reason of an injury which shall "immediately" disable the insured does not cover such disability where the injury did not wholly disable the insured till 22 days after the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 524.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3403-3410.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Joseph J. Laventhal against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chickering & Gregory, for appellant. Otto Irving Wise and Louis Hirsch, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. Plaintiff recovered judgment for $1,475 upon an accident insurance policy. This appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll with a bill of exceptions.

On January 2, 1903, the defendant issued to plaintiff an accident insurance policy, which provided that the company "does insure the person described in said schedule [the plaintiff herein] for the period of one year from noon, standard time, the day this contract is dated, against disability or death resulting directly, and independently of all other causes, from bodily injury sustained through external, violent and accidental means. * * * (1) If said injuries shall immediately, continuously and wholly disable and prevent the insured from performing every and any kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay * * *. (3) If such injuries shall not wholly disable the insured, but shall prevent him from performing fully work essential to his duty or duties, the company will pay the insured * * *." On November 10, 1903, while the policy was still in force, the plaintiff received an injury while on a railroad train at San Jose, by being bruised in the abdomen by coming in contact with a suit case. He returned to San Francisco, and thereafter went as usual to the office of the company by which he was employed, and attended to his duties there until December 1, 1903, when he became totally disabled from the injury he had received, and thereafter could not leave his bed for 27 weeks. The complaint alleged that "in consequence of which said injuries he was totally disabled from performing any work whatsoever from and after the 1st day of December, 1903, and said total disability continued from said 1st day of December, 1903, to and including the 9th day of June, 1904, to wit, for a period of 27 weeks and 3 days." Among the special interrogatories submitted to the jury was the following: "How much time elapsed between the date of the accident complained of and the beginning of the continuous disability?" To the above interrogatory the jury answered: "22 days." The question, and the only question, in the case, is as to whether or not the defendant is liable under the total disability clause in the policy.

The policy is but a contract, and, like all other contracts, it must be construed from the language used. When the terms are plain and unambiguous, it is the duty of courts to hold the parties to such contract. The defendant agreed, in case the plaintiff by accident should receive a bodily injury, that, "if said injury shall immediately, continuously and wholly disable and prevent the insured from performing every and any kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, the company will pay. * * *" Plaintiff received a bodily injury. The injury, however, did not immediately and wholly disable and prevent the plaintiff from performing every duty pertaining to his occupation. The language is plain, and any one can at once see that the plaintiff was not immediately disabled and prevented from performing the duties or part of the duties pertaining to his occupation. The defendant had the right to make its liability depend upon the fact as to whether or not the plaintiff was immediately disabled by the injury from performing every duty pertaining to his occupation. It had the right to take the question out of the category of such uncertainties as might be raised by experts, or oral testimony as to whether or not the final total disability was caused by the injury or by other complications or conditions. It made its insurance policy with these conditions, and evidently fixed its rate or premium in accordance with the risk it assumed. To these conditions the plaintiff gave his assent when he accepted the policy. If he was not immediately disabled, he cannot in law or in morals hold the defendant liable. If we were to adopt the rule contended for here by plaintiff, it would place such a contract in the realm of uncertainty. If where 22 days elapsed before the injury finally overpowered and disabled the plaintiff we should hold that such disability was immediate, the same reasoning would apply if the period had been 50 days, and so on for months and perhaps years. It is said by medical writers that cases have been known where a slight injury received in youth, from which the patient apparently recovered, has been the proximate cause of death in old age. After days and months, and perhaps years, have elapsed, it is evident that the question as to whether or not the injury of itself finally wholly disabled the party would be a question, at least in many cases, difficult to determine. It might finally be solved in favor of the party who was most industrious in procuring witnesses, and particularly expert witnesses. We are of opinion that it is a much safer rule to hold the parties to the plain, unambiguous reading of their contract. The policy here contained a provision as to the liability for injuries which shall not wholly disable the assured; and this shows that the injuries insured against were of two classes.

The identically same provision in accident policies has been frequently construed by the highest courts of other states; and the great weight of authority is in favor of the conclusion we have reached in this case. One of the best considered cases is Williams v. Preferred Mut. Accident Ass'n, 91 Ga. 698, 17 S. E. 982. In that case the plaintiff was injured by a blow on the head caused by a restive horse which he was holding while the animal was being shod. The injury was at first quite trivial, but afterwards became serious, and just 30 days, or one month, after the injury, the plaintiff was taken to his bed and there confined for some time. The language of the policy was practically the same as in the present case, being "independently of all other causes, immediately, wholly and continuously disable * * * from transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation." The court held the company not liable, and said: "It would perhaps be going too far to say that in a policy like the present this word means precisely the same thing as 'instantly' or 'momentarily,' but it necessarily implies that the injury must be such that the insured cannot proceed regularly and in due course with his occupation; that he cannot go on with his work or business as if he had received no injury, and then, upon becoming worse, cease the transaction of his business or labor, and hold the company responsible for the loss of his time. It seems to us that there was excellent sense and reason in the employment of the words used in this policy to prevent liability on the part of the company under just such circumstances as are disclosed in this case; and we are quite sure that this was deliberately intended by the draftsman. It often happens that considerable difficulty arises in determining whether or not a particular thing is the proximate or remote cause of an injury and its consequences; and, to avoid this difficulty in the numerous and ever-varying cases which might arise, we think the company meant to have it understood that it would not be responsible for loss of time resulting from physical injury unless it was plain and manifest that the injury directly, alone, without delay, occasioned such loss of time, and that it would not be liable for loss of time which might result from other intervening causes taking effect after the injury was actually received."

The following additional cases are directly in point, and support the conclusion we have reached: Vess v. United Benevolent Society of America, 120 Ga. 411, 47 S. E. 942; Preferred Accident Ass'n of America v. Jones, 60 Ill. App. 106; Pepper v. Order of United Commercial Travelers, 113 Ky. 918, 69 S. W. 956; Merrill v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 91 Wis. 329, 64 N. W. 1039; Letherer v. Phoenix Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 145 Mich. 313, 108 N. W. 492; Letherer v. U. S. Health & Accident Ins. Co., 145 Mich. 310, 108 N. W. 491; Hagadorn v. Masonic Equitable Accident Ass'n, 59 App. Div. 321, 69 N. Y. Supp. 831; Continental Casualty Co. v. Wade (Tex.) 105 S. W. 35. The latter case was decided by the Supreme Court of Texas on November 13, 1907, and is the latest reported authority to which our attention has been called. The court gave to a similar provision of an accident policy the same construction that we have given it in this case, and that is given by the other cases cited herein.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 271

JOHN BREUNER CO. v. KING. (Civ. 391.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 5, 1908.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 47*)—DESCRIPTION.

A description of chattels mortgaged, both in the complaint and in the mortgage, as "all the furniture, upholstery, carpets, draperies, china ware and other household goods of every kind, located in" a specifically described building, was sufficient between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. § 47.*]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 79*)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage on the furniture in an apartment house, the defense was fraudulent representations by the mortgagee as to the amount of business conducted in the apartment house in which the property was installed, and defendant had testified as to the income and expenses of the business, evidence as to the source from which she secured the money which had been paid on the mortgage debt was inadmissible to show that the business had been conducted at a loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 567; Dec. Dig. § 79.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 383*)—DOCUMENTS—LETTERS—ADMISSION OF PART.

Where a part of a letter was admitted, but the balance was irrelevant to any issue in the case, defendant was not entitled to the admission thereof under Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, providing that, where part of an instrument is admitted by one party, the other shall be entitled to the admission of the balance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1676; Dec. Dig. § 383.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The exclusion of evidence as to the circumstances under which a letter was written was immaterial where the witness thereafter fully answered the question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4194-4196; Dec. Dig. § 1057.*]

5. CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 277*)—FORECLOSURE—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on furniture to secure a note given for the price, there was no allegation of misrepresentations made by plaintiff as to the value of the furniture, plaintiff's books showing the original cost of the furniture were irrelevant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 565; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by the John Breuner Company against Sara L. King. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Curtis Hillyer, for appellant. Rigby & Rigby, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage given by defendant to plaintiff. The case was tried before an advisory jury, a decision was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and a decree of foreclosure was entered. From the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial, the defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Appellant urges that the court erred in not sustaining her demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that the complaint is uncertain, in that it fails to sufficiently describe the property, either in the body of the complaint or in a copy of the mortgage attached thereto as an exhibit and made a part thereof. We cannot agree with this contention. A description of the chattels mortgaged is contained both in the complaint and in the mortgage, and is in the following terms: "All the furniture, upholstery, carpets, draperies, china ware and other household goods of every kind, located and contained in and about that certain building, in said City and County of San Francisco, known as the 'Haddon Hall Apartment House,' and also known as No. 951 Eddy street, said building being situated on the lot on the south side of Eddy street, 68 feet 9 inch front, 120 feet deep, and commencing 137½ feet easterly from the southeast corner of Gough and Eddy streets." This description shows where the property was located, and that it was all of a certain kind of property, and not that it was an indefinite part of it, which was in the building at the time the mortgage was executed. Under the authorities the description is ample—especially as this action is between the parties to the mortgage. Jones on Chattel Mortgages (5th Ed.) § 53 et seq.; 6 Cyc. p. 1022 et seq. The rule as to the description of personal property in chattel mortgages is thus stated in Cyc., supra: "As against third persons, the mortgage must point out the subject-matter so that the third person may identify the property covered by the aid of such inquiries as the instrument itself suggests. But, between the parties, it is only necessary to identify the chattels so that the mortgagee may say with a reasonable degree of certainty what property is subject to his lien."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The court committed no error in refusing to permit appellant to testify as to the source of the payments which she made on account of the note. Appellant in her answer alleged that respondent had misrepresented to her that the business conducted at Haddon Hall, an apartment house, in which this property was installed, had been when filled conducted at a profit of $600 per month, which amount, she claims, would have been sufficient to enable her to discharge the obligation assumed by her. It had already appeared that the appellant had made three payments on account of the principal of her indebtedness. The object of the question was doubtless, as claimed, to show that the alleged representations were false, and that the business was conducted at a loss. But the witness had already testified directly to this effect by showing the income and expenses of the business; and it is very questionable if this testimony would have been strengthened by showing the sources from which the witness obtained the money with which to make the payments in question. Indeed, it can hardly be said that there is any legitimate inference that a given business is unprofitable from the fact that funds are obtained elsewhere to meet notes given in payment of property used in such business.

No error was committed by the trial court with reference to the letter of appellant, the first part of which was admitted in evidence, being to the effect that, after being in possession of Haddon Hall for nearly two months, appellant did not desire to give it up. This evidence tended to disprove the alleged false representations as to the income and profit of the house, and was therefore admissible. On redirect examination appellant sought, so she claims, to introduce the remainder of the letter on the theory that, part of the letter having been admitted in evidence, she was entitled under section 1854, Code Civ. Proc., to have the entire letter go in. At this point there is some confusion in the record, and it really does not show that the remainder of the letter was offered in evidence; but, assuming that it was, yet inasmuch as it is not explanatory of the part admitted, and was not relevant to any issue in the case, the court was right in rejecting it. In this connection appellant was asked by her counsel a question calling for the circumstances under which the letter was written, to which question the court sustained an objection. Whether or not this ruling was error is immaterial, because subsequently the witness fully answered the question, and stated the circumstances under which the letter was written.

Appellant further claims that the court should have admitted in evidence the books of the respondent, offered by appellant, to show the original cost of the furniture. It is not one of the allegations of the answer that there were any misrepresentations made as to the value of the furniture. Therefore the contents of the books on this point were immaterial.

The evidence is sufficient to support the decision. The record discloses no error, and the judgment and order should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 279

PEOPLE v. LEWIS. (Cr. 80.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 6, 1908.)

1. RAPE (§ 19*)—LIABILITY OF PERSON NOT PRESENT.

In view of the statute (Pen. Code, §§ 30, 31, 971), which abrogates the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and provides that all persons concerned in committing a felony, whether they directly commit the act or aid or abet its commission, though not present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and no other facts need be alleged against such an accessory than are alleged against his principal, one charged with rape need not be shown to have been present in order to justify a conviction on evidence which otherwise clearly shows that he aided and abetted in the perpetration of the crime by another as effectually as if he had witnessed it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 59*)—PARTIES TO OFFENSES—"AID" AND "ABET."

The word "aid" does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the definition of the word "abet" includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel, and encouragement in the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 81; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 15, 289-291.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 371*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES—RAPE.

In a prosecution of defendant for rape of his stepdaughter who was under the age of consent, wherein it was claimed that he was an accessory before the fact, evidence of prior sexual intercourse between the parties in question, shown to have been instigated by defendant, and limited by the court "for the purpose of

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes showing plans and designs," was admissible as acts of lascivious conduct and sexual intercourse with defendant's knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 880; Dec. Dig. § 371.*]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 1*)—NECESSITY OF INDICTMENT OR PRESENTMENT.

It is within the power of the state to abolish the grand jury, and authorize procedure by information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

5. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 2*)—PROCEEDING BY INFORMATION DURING SESSION OF GRAND JURY.

Const. art. 1, § 8, provides that "offenses heretofore required to be presented by indictment shall be prosecuted by information after examination and commitment by a magistrate, or by indictment, with or without such examination and commitment as may be prescribed by law," and that "a grand jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county." Pen. Code, § 915, makes it the duty of the grand jury to "inquire into all public offenses committed or triable within the county, and present them to the court by indictment." Held, that there was nothing therein making it illegal to proceed by information when the jury is in session.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Frank Lewis was convicted of rape. From orders denying motions in arrest and for a new trial, and from the final judgment, he appeals. Affirmed.

Ross Campbell, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was charged in the information with the crime of rape upon a small child under the age of 16 years. The jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged. Defendant appeals from the order denying his motion in arrest of judgment, from the order denying his motion for a new trial, and from the final judgment of conviction.

1. Defendant was convicted as an accessory before the fact. The prosecutrix was the stepdaughter of defendant. There is no evidence that defendant had sexual intercourse with her, or that he was present at the commission of the crime, but there was abundant evidence that he aided and abetted its commission by one Alon Wheeler, a youth of about 17 years of age. Defendant's contention is that because he was not personally present when the crime was committed the evidence must be held to be insufficient to justify the verdict—citing People v. Schoedde, 126 Cal. 373, 58 Pac. 859. That was the case of prosecution for the crime of mayhem. The court held that, if the defendant was not present when the crime was committed, the verdict had not sufficient support, and under the evidence there was not "disclosed that aiding and abetting by defendant which would make him a principal in the crime." It was claimed by the people that, conceding that defendant did not actually participate in the commission of the crime, still he was an aider and abettor. The court said: "The general principle here contended for is sound, but its application to the facts of this case is wanting." It would seem, therefore, that the peculiar circumstances of the case took it out of the rule. The statute is plain and clear. It abrogates the distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and it provides that "all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet its commission, though not present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and no other facts need be alleged in any indictment or information against such an accessory than are required in an indictment or information against his principal." Pen. Code, §§ 971, 30, 31; People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 20 Pac. 36; People v. Nolan, 144 Cal. 79, 77 Pac. 774. The evidence was that defendant on several occasions solicited Wheeler to have sexual intercourse with the defendant's stepdaughter. He brought them together under circumstances calculated to arouse their animal passions, and to bring about his wicked design. He advised Wheeler to procure vaseline to be used in the act of coition, if found necessary, and he also procured medicated capsules or suppositories, and gave them to the girl and instructed her in Wheeler's presence how to use them to prevent conception. The evidence is altogether too indecent and revolting to be here recorded. It was said in People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 486, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50: "The word 'aid' does not imply guilty knowledge or felonious intent, whereas the definition of the word 'abet' includes knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the perpetrator and counsel and encouragement in the crime." The evidence here clearly shows that defendant both aided and abetted the perpetration of the crime as effectually as if he had witnessed it. To have been personally present as a witness of the act which he brought about would have but added one more to the many other disgusting features of the performance. People v. Nolan, supra, was a case where the precise point here contended for was raised. There the defendant was informed against as a principal jointly with others who were charged with robbery. The part played in the crime by defendant Nolan was in knowingly having given information as to where certain diamonds were to be found and how they might be successfully stolen. The judgment of conviction was sustained, although the defendant did not participate in the robbery.

2. The act charged in the information was alleged to have been committed in Sonoma county, of which the proof was sufficient. It is urged as error that the commission of a like prior offense between the prosecutrix and Wheeler was allowed to be proven over defendant's objection. There was evidence that about Christmas, 1907, defendant took his stepdaughter and Wheeler to San Francisco, as the evidence showed, in furtherance of his said design previously urged upon Wheeler. They occupied a small room in which was one bed, and all three slept in it. The second night they occupied a different room, in which were two beds. Defendant slept in one and Wheeler and the girl in the other. The conduct of the defendant there showed conclusively that it was in furtherance of his design that these two young people were taken to San Francisco by him, and the evidence as to what took place was limited by the court "for the purpose of showing plans and designs." The evidence was admissible as acts of lascivious conduct and sexual intercourse with defendant's knowledge, and were admissible whether committed before or after the particular act charged. People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463. It was shortly after their return from San Francisco that, under the direction and with the connivance of defendant, Wheeler and the prosecutrix renewed their sexual relations at defendant's home on which the information is based.

3. An instruction was asked by defendant and refused by the court to the effect that he could not be found guilty unless present at the time of the sexual intercourse charged. For the reasons already stated, the instruction was properly refused.

4. It is also contended that the information was filed while the grand jury was in session, and that under section 915 of the Penal Code it was the duty of the district attorney to lay the matter before that body, and he could not legally present an information at that time. It is within the power of the state to abolish the grand jury and authorize the procedure to punish crimes by information. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 292, 28 L. Ed. 232. The state may authorize the procedure to be by both indictment and information, and it is competent to adopt the latter while the grand jury is in session. Article 1, § 8, Const., provides as follows: "Offenses heretofore required to be presented by indictment shall be prosecuted by information, after examination and commitment by a magistrate, or by indictment, with or without such examination and commitment, as may be prescribed by law. A grand jury shall be drawn and summoned at least once a year in each county." Section 915 of the Penal Code makes it the duty of the grand jury to "inquire into all public offenses committed or triable within the county, and present them to the court by indictment." There is nothing in the Constitution or statute making it illegal to proceed by information when the grand jury is in session. The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

99 PACIFIC REPORTER

154 Cal. 688

RUDOLPH HERMAN CO. et al. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRAN-CISCO et al. (S. F. 4,612.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1908.)

1. BOUNDARIES (§ 20*)—DESCRIPTION—PUBLIC GROUNDS—CALL FOR SIDE OF HIGHWAY.

The legal eastern boundary of the Presidio military reservation was due north from a monument at the southeasterly corner thereof, but the land actually occupied by the military authorities was only that up to a certain fence somewhat west of the due north line, the land between it and the due north line being occupied by squatters. The United States, by Act Cong. May 9, 1876, c. 93, 19 Stat. 52, relinquished to the city of San Francisco as a street a tract commencing at the southeasterly corner of the reservation, thence due north, thence westerly to a point 80 feet westerly of the east line "as established by the United States authorities." Held, that the line referred to by the act as established by the authorities was the line of the old fence, there being no other line answering to that description.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 128; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

2. BOUNDARIES (§ 48*)—OF MILITARY RESER-VATION—AUTHORITY OF MILITARY OFFICERS.

The commandant of a military reservation owned by the United States could fix the line of his occupation at any point within the legal limits of the reservation, and whether such line was on the legal boundary was immaterial to persons whose rights did not depend upon the accuracy of the true boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 239; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

3. DEDICATION (§ 64*)—STATUTORY DEDICA-TION OF STREET—DIVERSION.

A part of a military reservation relinquished to the city of San Francisco for a street and dedicated for that purpose forever by Act Cong. May 9, 1876, c. 93, 19 Stat. 52, was effectually dedicated as a street, and the city could not alienate it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dedication, Cent. Dig. § 108; Dec. Dig. § 64.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Suit by the Rudolph Herman Company and another against the City and County of San Francisco and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appealed. Affirmed.

Francis J. Heney, C. A. S. Frost, and Heney & Cobb, for appellants. Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Thomas E. Hayden, Asst. City Atty., for respondents.

SHAW, J. The officers of the city and county of San Francisco were about to remove the obstructions upon the lands described in the complaint so as to make them fit for use as a public street, claiming that the same constituted a part of Lyon street in the city. It is alleged that the lands were the property of plaintiff, Rudolph Herman, who was in possession, the corporation plaintiff being the owner of an interest in remainder. The action was to restrain the defendants from entering upon said premises and from opening it as a public street. Judgment went for the defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal upon the judgment roll. An agreed statement of the evidence was adopted by the court below as its findings.

The land in controversy is claimed by the defendants to be a portion of Lyon street lying north of the northerly line of Lewis street and south of the waters of the bay, and adjoining the easterly line of the United States military reservation known as the "Presidio." The claim of the plaintiffs is that the true line of the Presidio reservation is situated a considerable distance westerly of the inclosure and possession of the military authorities, that the true line of Lyon street is immediately adjoining the true line of the Presidio and extending 80 feet east thereof, and that, if the Presidio and street are so located, the land claimed by them is not a part of Lyon street, but is a part of the lands ceded to the city by the United States government by the act of Congress of May 9, 1876, c. 93, 19 Stat. 52. The accuracy of this contention is the sole point to be decided in the case. A somewhat extended statement of the facts is necessary to a clear understanding of the question.

On November 6, 1850, President Fillmore made an order reserving for military purposes a tract including with the present Presidio reservation the lands lying between it and the Ft. Mason reservation. One Dexter R. Wright was then pressing a claim under an alleged Mexican grant to a large tract of land covering all of the lands reserved and considerable of the adjoining lands. This claim was afterwards adjudged to be invalid. General Riley, at that time in command of the military post at San Francisco, considered it of sufficient importance to enter into negotiations on behalf of the United States with him for a settlement of his claim as far as it affected the Presidio reservation. A provisional agreement was made between them whereby the military occupation was to be withdrawn from all the land lying easterly of a line drawn parallel with Larkin street in San Francisco and extending on said course northerly to the bay from a certain cannon planted by Capt. Keyes on May 17, 1850, on the top of the hill, near the present southeastern corner of the Presidio reservation. This agreement was reported by General Riley to the War Department, and it was thereupon disapproved and rejected by the Secretary of War. No further action was ever taken regarding it. While it was pending in the War Department, General Riley withdrew possession of the United States from the territory situated east of the line parallel with Larkin street, as that line was then supposed to be located, and a fence was erected on said supposed line. In the meantime it had been reported to the President that the original reservation contained more land than was necessary for military purposes, and that squatters were in possession of some of the land lying easterly of the present reservation. On December 31, 1851, the President issued another executive order changing the former order by declaring that there was reserved for the United States for military purposes on the San Francisco peninsula "all the land north of a line running in a westerly direction from the southeastern corner of the Presidio tract to the southern extremity of a pond lying between Fort Point and Point Lobos, and passing through the middle of said pond and its outlet to the channel of entrance from the ocean." The southeastern corner of the Presidio tract had then been established as the point where the cannon had been planted by Capt. Keyes as aforesaid. The line described in the order was the southern boundary of the Presidio tract as established by the previous order. The order of 1851 was understood, as its words properly interpreted should be understood, to fix, as the easterly boundary of the reservation, a line extending from the said cannon planted as the southeastern corner of the Presidio tract, due north to the bay shore. Thereafter, until the enactment of the act of Congress of May 9, 1876, this line constituted the legal boundary line of the Presidio, on the easterly side. The line was never laid off or designated by any monuments. The actual occupation of the military authorities extended east only to the line of the fence aforesaid. Private persons, presumably understanding that this was the extent of the limits claimed by the United States, entered upon the intervening lands lying east of the fence and west of the due north line, claiming right thereto. Various surveys were made from time to time by different engineers of the United States, some acting under the authority of the Interior Department and some acting under the authority of the War Department, but no authoritative location of the true line of the military reservation was made. In 1870 a survey by Lieut. Wheeler of the United States army disclosed the fact that the fence was not built on a line parallel with Larkin street, which was on a course running north 9° 15' west, but was on a course running north 7° 30' west. The matter had been reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, and on May 9, 1876, Congress passed an act for the purpose of relinquishing the land not claimed by the military authorities in San Francisco as a part of the military reservation, and of enabling the persons in possession of the lands east of the fence to obtain title to their lands. By this act it was declared that all the right and title of the United States to the portion of the Presidio reservation therein described was relinquished to the city of San Francisco and its successors "for the benefit of persons who, if the said land had not been reserved for public use, would have been entitled thereto" under City Ordinance No. 800 and the act of the Legislature of California of March 27, 1868. The boundaries of the tract relinquished, as described in the act, was as follows: "Commencing at the south-easterly corner of said Presidio or Fort Point reservation, and thence running in a direct line due north to the shore line of the bay of San Francisco, thence westerly along the said shore line to a point eighty feet westerly of the easterly line of the said Presidio, or Fort Point reservation, as established by the United States authorities, said eighty feet being relinquished for a public highway or street, named Lyon street; thence southerly to a point on the southerly line of said reservation, where the west line of Lyon street intersects said line; thence easterly to the point of commencement, to conform as near as possible to the plan of the city map of the streets of San Francisco outside of reservation, said plan being now on file in the office of the War Department of the city of Washington: Provided, that Lyon street shall be extended to the bay of San Francisco, eighty feet wide, and is hereby dedicated for a public highway and street forever." It will be observed that the easterly line of the Presidio reservation according to this declaration was to be a line 80 feet westerly of the easterly line thereof "as established by the United States authorities." The entire case depends upon the interpretation to be given to this phrase.

It is claimed on the part of the appellant that by reason of the agreement between General Riley and Wright regarding the boundary line to which the military occupation should extend, and certain correspondence and reports on the subject, the true line established by the military authorities was a line parallel with Larkin street—that is, a line running northerly from the point where the cannon was planted to the bay shore on a course north $9^{\circ} 15'$ west—and that this was the line intended to be fixed as the boundary by the said act of Congress.

The facts stated in the findings show that this line never was established by the United States authorities. General Riley did make an attempt to establish such a line in pursuance of his agreement with Wright. But he was without authority to make any final determination of the matter. He reported the agreement to the War Department, with his recommendation, and the proposition was disapproved. The correspondence between the respective army officers and the reports made by them, in several instances, refer to the "line parallel with Larkin street" as the eastern boundary of the Presidio, but that line was never marked out or observed, and there was no change ever made either in the legal boundary or in the line of actual occupation and possession. The legal boundary remained the due north line running northerly from the cannon to the bay shore, and the line of possession continued to extend to the fence aforesaid, the military authorities occupying all the space westerly of the fence, and squatters and claimants occupying the lands between the fence and the due north line fixed by presidential order. This was the condition of affairs when the act of 1876 was passed. Although the fence was not the true legal boundary, it was manifestly then well known as the actual visible line of the military occupation, and in that sense it was the easterly line of the reservation established by the United States authorities in charge and possession. The language of the act shows that by the designation of an easterly line of the Presidio reservation "established by the United States authorities," lying westerly of the true legal line thereof, some line was there intended other than the true line. There was no other line answering the description of a line established by the United States authorities, except the line of this old fence, the line actually established and maintained as the boundary of their possession by the military authorities in command of the Presidio. This, therefore, must have been the line referred to in the act as the landmark 80 feet west of which the new line was to be run.

This construction of the act of 1876 was the one adopted by the authorities charged with the execution of the act. The military authorities in charge of the Presidio reservation, in accordance with instructions from the War Department, immediately thereafter took down the old fence and erected a new fence as such boundary, placing it on a line beginning on the bay shore 80 feet westerly of the old fence line, and running to the point where the westerly line of Lyon street intersected the southerly line of the Presidio reservation some 110 feet westerly from the said cannon set as the southeast corner of the reservation, and from that time until the present the line so fixed and the fence so erected has marked the eastern boundary of the Presidio reservation, and the possession of the United States has extended easterly to that point and no further. The Interior Department caused a survey to be made establishing the line of this fence, and thereafter, under its recommendation, a patent was issued to the city of San Francisco in accordance with the act of 1876, granting all the lands included in the original reservation and extending westerly to this line, but not beyond. It is true, there were a number of preliminary surveys, one of which attempted to fix as the boundary a line on a course parallel with Larkin street, and one of which assumed that the only line established by the United States authorities was the due north line fixed by the presidential order of 1851. There were also varying decisions of a preliminary character made by the Commissioner of the Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior concerning the true interpretation of the act of 1876. But the final decision of the Secretary of the Interior was that the "line established by the United States authorities" therein mentioned was the line of the old fence above referred to, and a patent was issued in accordance with that decision. The authorities of the War Department contended from the first that this old fence was the easterly line of the Presidio reservation referred to in the act of 1876, and their contention was finally acceded to by the Interior Department.

At the time the old fence was located and established, the entire property was within the reservation of the United States, the legal line thereof being situated some distance easterly of the line of the fence. It was therefore entirely within the power of the commandant of the Presidio to establish the line of his occupation at any point within the reservation and westerly of the true line. His superior officers might countermand his orders and compel him to change his line, but no private individual occupying lands within the legal lines of the military reservation would have any right to dispute his authority in establishing the line where the fence was located. It appears with reasonable certainty that the intention was to locate this fence on a line parallel with Larkin street, but by some mistake it was not correctly located. If private persons had any rights depending upon the accuracy of this location, it may be conceded that they would have a right to dispute its accuracy; but they had none. The land all belonged to the United States, and the question whether it was located on a true parallel with Larkin street, or on some line supposed to be so, but not actually so, was a matter of no concern to mere squatters, whether outside or inside the legal bounds of the Presidio. They would have no right to a resurvey or inquiry to determine whether the fence line which Congress referred to was or was not originally located by the subordinate officers on the precise course directed by their superiors. Its actual course was the course intended by Congress.

The strip of land 80 feet wide, immediately east of the new line located in pursuance of the act of 1876, was effectually dedicated as a public street, and could not be alienated by the city. The city had ample authority to clear obstructions from this territory, and open it up so as to make it passable for public travel. The injunction was properly refused.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 759

BONE v. HAYES et al. (S. F. 4534.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

On appeal from an order denying a new trial, only such matters as are made grounds upon which the trial court was authorized to act will be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3476-3481; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 18*)—GROUNDS—ERRONEOUS RULING ON DEMURRER.

Erroneous overruling of a demurrer to a complaint is not a ground for a motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 27; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 101*) — INVOLUNTARY TRUST — "TRUSTEE."

Under Civ. Code, § 2219, making one who voluntarily assumes a relation of personal confidence with another a trustee, and, under section 2229, prohibiting use of trust property by the trustee for his own benefit, if defendant, in purchasing bonds as decedent's agent and with decedent's money, received from the sellers, in consideration of the purchase, a stock bonus and did not account for it to decedent, he was chargeable with it as trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 152; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7128-7133, 7822.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 867*)—REVIEW.

Where a cause of action is sufficiently pleaded as to one defendant, its insufficiency as to another defendant or defects of form cannot be considered on plaintiff's appeal from an order denying a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3478; Dec. Dig. § 867.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 472*) — BONDS—"UNDERWRITING"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Corporate bonds are "underwritten" where one buys them from the corporation guaranteeing their sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 472.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 75*)—PRESUMPTIONS—FAILURE TO OFFER EVIDENCE.

When evidence tends to prove a material fact imposing a liability on a party, and he can produce evidence rebutting the case made against him if it is not founded on fact, but refuses to do so, it must be presumed that the evidence, if produced, would operate to his prejudice and support his adversary, especially where one charged with suspicious or apparently dishonorable conduct has an opportunity to explain it and fails to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 95; Dec. Dig. § 75.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 999*)—REVIEW—ISSUES OF FACT.

The Supreme Court cannot on appeal make an original finding on an issue of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3912, 3913; Dec. Dig. § 999.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1001*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The findings of a trial court are conclusive on appeal to the Supreme Court, unless that court can say as a matter of law that they are unsupported.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3928-3934; Dec. Dig. § 1001.*]

9. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 989*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

In determining whether the evidence supports findings below, the Supreme Court, like the trial court, must be guided by rules of law governing the effect of the production or withholding of particular evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3897; Dec. Dig. § 989.*]

10. TRUSTS (§ 289*)—TRUSTEES—DUTY.

Trustees must render to their beneficiaries a full account of their dealings with the trust fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 408; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

11. TRUSTS (§ 325*)—NEGLIGENT KEEPING OF ACCOUNTS—EFFECT.

Where a trustee has negligently failed to keep true accounts or has refused to account, all presumptions are against him on a settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 483; Dec. Dig. § 325.*]

12. TRUSTS (§ 332*)—TRUSTEES—ACCOUNTING—SUFFICIENCY.

That an agent employed to buy bonds denied that he received any bonus in the transaction did not meet his duty to give his principal complete and satisfactory information respecting his dealings with the trust estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 495; Dec. Dig. § 332.*]

13. TRUSTS (§ 110*)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to show that one employed to buy bonds obtained for himself a secret profit in the way of a stock bonus, which could and should have been obtained for his principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

14. TRUSTS (§ 110*)—FRAUD OF TRUSTEE—EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION.

Though, in a suit to charge an agent as trustee of stock received as a bonus in a purchase of bonds for his principal, the burden of proof is on plaintiff, equity will not, to save the agent from liability, strain the evidence for a possible ground of exculpation, where he has not suggested one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

15. TRUSTS (§ 108*)—INVOLUNTARY TRUSTS—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to charge an agent as trustee of stock received as a bonus in a purchase of bonds for his principal, plaintiff can show the terms on which bonds were sold to other purchasers, after showing that all the bonds were disposed of according to a particular plan.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco. J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Charles Bone, Charles Main's administrator, against Mary E. Hayes, Thomas R. Hayes' executrix, and others. From an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Joseph M. Nougues and M. J. Waldheimer (Geo. W. Towle, Jr., of counsel), for appellant. W. J. Bartnett, Marcel E. Cerf, and Charles W. Slack, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This action was begun by Charles Main against Thomas R. Hayes, individually and as executor of the will of C. E. Hayes, deceased, to compel the transfer to plaintiff of 300 shares of the stock of the Standard Portland Cement Company, issued to Thomas R. Hayes, and a like number issued to C. E. Hayes. The cement company was made a party defendant for the purpose of preventing a transfer of the stock pending the litigation.

Plaintiff's amended complaint contained three counts. The first alleged that on September 29, 1902, the defendant Thomas R. Hayes, acting as plaintiff's agent, purchased for plaintiff 15 bonds of the Standard Portland Company, of the par value of $1,000 each. In consideration of the purchase, which is alleged to have been made with moneys of plaintiff to the amount of $15,000 theretofore intrusted to Thomas R. Hayes, a bonus of 300 shares of the capital stock of the Standard Portland Cement Company was delivered by the sellers of the bonds, but not as a gift or gratuity to Thomas R. Hayes or to C. E. Hayes, his son. Both Thomas R. and C. E. Hayes knew that payment for the bonds was made with the moneys of Main. Thomas R. Hayes accounted to plaintiff for the bonds, but never accounted for or delivered to him the 300 shares of stock. It is alleged that, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, Thomas R. Hayes had 200 of the 300 shares issued and delivered to himself, the other 100 shares being, by the direction of C. E. Hayes, issued and delivered to said C. E. Hayes. On the death of C. E. Hayes, Thomas R. Hayes became executor of his will. He has refused to comply with plaintiff's demands upon him, individually, that he turn over the 200 shares issued to him, and, as executor, that he turn over the 100 shares issued to his son, C. E. Hayes.

The second and third counts are of the same general character, being based upon similar transactions occurring at different times. The second alleges a purchase of 5 bonds on October 4, 1902, and the receipt of a bonus of 200 shares of stock, 100 shares being issued to Thomas R. Hayes, and 100 to C. E. Hayes. The third sets forth a purchase of 5 bonds, and the issuance of 100 shares of stock to C. E. Hayes. The transaction relied on in this count took place in January, 1903.

The defendants filed separate answers, raising issues as to most of the material allegations of the complaint. The court found that the purchases of bonds, as alleged in the complaint, had been made by Thomas R. Hayes as agent of plaintiff and with plaintiff's money intrusted to him, and that

C. E. Hayes knew that payment for the bonds had been so made. It found that Thomas R. Hayes had, at the times alleged by plaintiff, caused to be issued and delivered to himself various certificates aggregating 300 shares of stock of the cement company, and that C. E. Hayes had likewise had issued to himself certificates for 300 shares. It was found, however, that said shares of stock were not delivered by the sellers of the bonds in consideration of the purchase of the bonds or as a bonus to Thomas R. Hayes or to C. E. Hayes. Upon these findings judgment was entered in favor of defendants. The plaintiff appealed from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Since the taking of this appeal, both Main and Thomas R. Hayes have died, and personal representatives have been substituted for them as parties plaintiff and defendant respectively.

The points urged by appellant on this appeal are, first, that the evidence was insufficient to justify the findings in favor of defendants, and, second, that the court erred in excluding certain evidence offered by plaintiff.

The respondents object to a consideration of the evidence on the ground that the amended complaint was not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to relief against any of the defendants. In making this objection, they recognize the well-settled rule that, on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, the appellate court may consider only such matters "as are made grounds upon which the superior court is authorized to grant or deny the motion." Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 Pac. 234; Crescent Feather Co. v. United Upholsterers' Union (Cal.) 95 Pac. 871, and cases cited. The erroneous overruling of a demurrer to the complaint is not one of those matters. It is argued, however, that insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding will be ground for reversal only where the finding relates to a material issue (McCourtney v. Fortune, 57 Cal. 619; Brisson v. Brisson, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186), and that the failure to state a cause of action may be looked into to determine whether the pleading tendered any material issue upon which a finding was required. If the rule precluding, on an appeal from an order denying a new trial, a review of the rulings upon demurrers, be regarded as subject to this modification, it is plain that the amended complaint here cannot be said to be wanting in averment of facts showing a liability on the part, at least, of Thomas R. Hayes. The gist of the claim against this defendant is that he, purchasing bonds as agent for Main, and with Main's money, received from the sellers, in consideration of the purchase, a bonus of shares of stock, and that he did not account to his principal for these shares. If he did so receive the stock, he was, on elementary principles, chargeable with it as trustee. Civ. Code, §§ 2219, 2229. Whether enough is alleged to impose on C. E. Hayes an obligation toward Main as involuntary trustee of trust property taken with notice of its character is of no consequence in this connection. Upon a new trial, leave to amend the complaint may, if deemed necessary, be granted. But a cause of action being set forth as against one defendant, neither its insufficiency as against another, nor any defects of form, can be considered on this appeal.

Did the evidence justify the finding that the shares coming to Thomas R. and C. E. Hayes were not received by the former as a bonus on the bond purchase? The plaintiff showed, at the trial, through the testimony of Thomas R. Hayes himself, that said Hayes, on September 29, 1902, purchased for Main 15 bonds of the Standard Portland Cement Company, and paid for the same by two checks for $10,000 and $5,000, respectively, each made payable to the order of C. E. Hayes, and signed "Charles Main, by Hayes." These checks were signed by Thomas R. Hayes as Main's agent. On October 4, 1902, there was a similar purchase of 5 bonds, and on January 8, 1903, a third of 5 bonds. These were paid for by checks, one for $5000, and the other for $3,056.66, both signed "Charles Main, by Hayes," and payable to the order of the Standard Portland Cement Company. Judge F. W. Henshaw, one of the directors of the cement company, testified that the corporation had authorized an issue of 500 $1,000 bonds. The issue was "underwritten" by William G. Henshaw and W. J. Dingee; that is, Henshaw and Dingee bought the bonds and guaranteed their sale. With the bonds they received from the cement company 10,000 shares of the stock of the corporation, on the understanding that this stock, or so much thereof as might be needed, was to be given to purchasers of bonds as a bonus to induce the purchase, at the ratio of not more than 20 shares of stock to each $1,000 bond. Any stock not so used was to be returned to the treasury of the corporation. None was in fact returned.

It appeared that Mr. Dingee was absent at the time of the sale of these bonds to Thomas R. Hayes. Mr. W. G. Henshaw, who had personal knowledge of the transaction, was out of the jurisdiction at the time of the trial, and his testimony had not been taken. All that plaintiff could offer, in addition to what has been stated regarding the general method adopted by the corporation in disposing of its bonds, and the showing that Thomas R. Hayes had purchased bonds for plaintiff, was evidence of the receipt of shares of stock by Thomas R. and C. E. Hayes. In this connection it was made to appear that on September 29, 1902, two certificates for 100 shares each were issued to Thomas R. Hayes, and one for 100 shares to C. E. Hayes; on October 4, 1902, 100 shares to Thomas R., and 100 to C. E. Hayes; on January 9, 1903, 100 shares to C. E. Hayes. Each of these issues, except the last, occurred upon the very day upon which Thomas R. Hayes had drawn a check in payment for bonds bought by him for Main. The last issue of stock was dated one day after the payment for bonds. The number of shares issued to Thomas R. and C. E. Hayes on September 29, 1902 (i. e., 300), was in the ratio of 20 shares to each bond purchased on that date. So of the shares issued in January, 1903.

The defendants offered no testimony, but submitted the case on the showing made by plaintiff. Here we have an agent or trustee purchasing bonds for his principal. Three separate purchases are made. The bonds are held for sale by parties who have been furnished with shares of stock to be given as a bonus, or part consideration, to persons who may purchase the bonds. On each of the three occasions upon which purchases are made for his principal by the agent, we find an issue of stock, corresponding, at least in two cases, to the amount of the bonus which the sellers were authorized to give, made to the agent, or to his son, who had knowledge of the agency. That, upon a consideration of all these circumstances, a court or jury would have been justified in drawing the inference that the stock had been given to Thomas R. Hayes as a bonus accompanying the purchase of bonds for his principal, can hardly be questioned. And the probability that the fact was as is claimed by plaintiff is immeasurably strengthened by the failure of Thomas R. Hayes, who was present at the trial, to testify in his own behalf. A prima facie case having been made against him, it would have been a simple matter for him to explain the exact nature of the transaction, if there was any possible explanation consistent with a due execution of his trust. "It is a well-settled rule that when the evidence tends to prove a material fact which imposes a liability on a party, and he has it in his power to produce evidence which from its very nature must overthrow the case made against him if it is not founded on fact, and he refuses to produce such evidence, the presumption arises that the evidence, if produced, would operate to his prejudice, and support the case of his adversary." Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 7; Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Elliott, 102 Fed. 96, 102, 42 C. A. 188; Hos-tetter Co. v. Gallagher Stores (C. C.) 142 Fed. 208; Neilson v. Betts, L. R. 5 H. L. 1, 20; Goodwin v. McGehee, 15 Ala. 232; Jeffrey v. United Order, etc., 97 Me. 176, 53 Atl. 1102; Smith v. Whitman, 6 Allen (Mass.) 562; Ernst v. Crosby, 140 N. Y. 364, 35 N. E. 603. This principle applies with, perhaps, greater force where a party charged with conduct which is apparently suspicious or dishonorable has an opportunity to explain it, but fails to do so. 1 Moore on Facts, 566; Bryant v. Fink, 75 Iowa, 516, 39 N. W. 820;

Whitney v. Rose, 43 Mich. 27, 4 N. W. 557; Montgomery v. Beecher (N. J. Ch.) 31 Atl. 451; N. Y., etc., Ferry Co. v. Moore, 102 N. Y. 667, 6 N. E. 293; Nelson v. N. Y., 131 N. Y. 4, 29 N. E. 814; McConkey v. Cockey, 69 Md. 286, 14 Atl. 405. "Silence under such circumstances," says the Court of Appeals of Maryland in Keller v. Gill, 92 Md. 190, 48 Atl. 69, "is little less than a formal confession of guilt, and a court of equity cannot be expected to say that the charges are unfounded or that the evidence is untrue, when there is nothing in the record to refute either, and when the parties charged with the fraud have failed to repel it by their own testimony." It is no doubt true that these are primarily rules to guide the jury or the trial court in passing, in the first instance, on the issues of fact. This court is not, on appeal, to make an original finding on any such issue. The conclusions on controverted matters of fact reached in the court below must stand here, unless we can say, as matter of law, that they are without substantial support in the evidence. But, in reading the evidence with a view to ascertaining its sufficiency, this court, like the trial court, must necessarily be guided by the means furnished by the law for measuring the effect of the production or withholding of certain evidence.

In addition to what we have said, it is to be noted that Thomas R. Hayes was a trustee for Main, and that he is here sought to be charged with the proceeds of the property (money) intrusted to him. The plaintiff asserts that certain shares of stock received by Hayes were a part of such proceeds. Trustees are under an obligation to render to their beneficiaries a full account of all their dealings with the trust fund (3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1063; 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. [2d Ed.] 1076), and where there has been a negligent failure to keep true accounts, or a refusal to account, all presumptions will be against the trustee upon a settlement (Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. 432, 440; Blauvelt v. Ackerman, 23 N. J. Eq. 495; Landis v. Scott, 32 Pa. 495). Here there was nothing in the nature of an accounting beyond the bare denial by Thomas R. Hayes, before the commencement of the action and again in his answer, that he had received any bonus. This was not a compliance with his obligation, which was to give to his beneficiary complete and satisfactory information of his dealings with the trust estate. 2 Beach on Trusts, § 522; In re Fish [1893], 2 Ch. 413, 426; Ottley v. Gilby, 8 Beav. 602.

Upon the whole case, we are satisfied that the evidence produced by plaintiff tended so directly to show an improper use, by Thomas R. Hayes, of his fiduciary powers, that, in the absence of any explanation from him, the finding that he had not violated his duty is without substantial support. The only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn from the facts appearing in this record is that Hayes, charged with the obligation of investing Main's funds, so contrived as to obtain for himself a secret profit which could and should have been obtained for his principal. Although the burden of proof be upon the plaintiff, a court of equity should not, in order to save the defendant from liability, strain the evidence in order to find a possible ground of exculpation, where the accused trustee has not seen fit to suggest one.

These views necessitate the reversal of the order appealed from. Of the alleged errors of law, it will be sufficient, for the purposes of a new trial, to say that, in support of the contention that the sale of bonds to Hayes carried a stock bonus, it would be proper, after a showing that all of the bonds issued were disposed of according to a certain plan or method, to admit testimony regarding the terms on which bonds had been sold to other purchasers. While, ordinarily, evidence that a certain contract was made with A, is not admissible to show that a similar contract was made with B., it has repeatedly been held that such evidence may, in the discretion of the court, be allowed, where the circumstances indicate a strong probability that the course followed in one instance would be followed in others. 1 Wigmore, Ev. § 377, and cases cited; Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 88 Pac. 380.

The order denying a new trial is reversed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 768

MADISON et al. v. OCTAVE OIL CO. et al.
(S. F. 4,823.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1908.)

1. PLEADING (§ 129*)—COMPLAINT—DEFAULT OF ANSWER—EFFECT.

A failure to answer a complaint confesses the truth of all the allegations of the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 270; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 114*)—WAIVER OF LEGAL RIGHT.

A legal right may be waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 171*)—ERRORS REVIEWABLE—QUESTIONS RAISED FOR THE FIRST TIME ON APPEAL.

A party who has proceeded in the trial court in a manner inconsistent with an intent to assert a right, to which he might be entitled, will not on appeal be permitted to shift his position and claim for the first time a benefit which he has rejected at all prior stages of the proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1053; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

4. JUDGMENT (§ 114*)—DEFAULT—WAIVER.

A complaint sought to restrain defendant from interfering with plaintiff in doing assessment work on a mineral claim, and prayed that his title be quieted. Defendant answered denying the complaint, and filed a cross-complaint alleging ownership of the premises, subject to the title of the United States, and sought to quiet title against the claim of plaintiff. The default of plaintiff to the cross-complaint was entered. Subsequently he filed an amended complaint, alleging ownership subject to the title of the United States, and prayed that he be declared the owner of the property and be put in possession thereof. Defendant desired time in which to answer, with the understanding that the trial should proceed, until the answer could be prepared, on the theory that the amended complaint should be deemed denied. The trial proceeded on the issues so raised, and no reference was made to the default. During the trial, defendant filed an answer denying many of the allegations of the amended complaint and set up affirmative matter as a defense. Held, that defendant waived the right to a default judgment on the cross-complaint, and the court might render judgment for plaintiff on the amended complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 164; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

5. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 48*)—"MINERAL"—"MINERAL LANDS."

Gypsum is a mineral, and lands containing it are mineral lands, within the federal statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4513-4516; vol. 8, p. 7722.]

6. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 2*)—MINERAL LANDS—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—"LANDS VALUABLE FOR MINERALS."

Under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2318, 2319 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1423, 1424), reserving from sale lands valuable for minerals, and opening for exploration and purchase all valuable mineral deposits in the lands of the United States, it is not enough to render lands valuable for minerals that there is some trace of minerals, but there must be minerals in such quantities as to justify the expenditure of effort to extract them; but it is not necessary that minerals of sufficient amount and value to allow immediate profitable working be shown to exist in the land, and it is enough if the vein or deposit has a present or prospective commercial value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

7. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 2*)—MINERAL LANDS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a finding that lands were mineral lands within Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2318, 2319 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1423, 1424), authorizing a valid location on the lands as a mineral claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

A conflict of evidence presents no question for the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3935; Dec. Dig. § 1002.*]

9. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 23*)—LOCATION—FORFEITURE.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426), providing that, on failure to perform the required assessment work by the locator of a mining claim, the claim shall be open to relocation, provided the original locator has not resumed work on the claim after such failure and before relocation, a mere failure to comply with the statutory requirement does not terminate the right of the locator, but the sole effect of the failure is to throw the land open to location by others, and, in the absence of such other location, the original claimant's right to resume work and to hold his claim remains, and the estate of the original claimant is not divested until there has been a peaceable entry for the purpose of relocation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-59; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

10. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 23*)—LOCATION—FORFEITURE.

One who entered on a mining claim of another during the year within which the latter might do the required assessment work, and who held possession thereof adversely to the latter, could not object that the latter had not performed the annual labor required by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-59; Dec. Dig. § 23.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by James Madison and another against the Octave Oil Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Everts & Ewing and N. C. Coldwell, for appellants. L. L. Cory, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiffs recovered judgment in an action involving the title and the right of possession of a 40-acre tract of land in Fresno county. The defendants appeal from the judgment, on a record including a bill of exceptions.

The original complaint alleged that on January 1, 1903, the plaintiffs made a valid location of the land in controversy as a mineral placer claim; that in February, 1904, other parties, including some of the defendants, attempted to locate the same claim. The plaintiffs, it was alleged, made several attempts to go upon said claim and do the necessary assessment work for the year 1904, but were forcibly ejected by the defendants. The relief sought was an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with plaintiffs in the performance of the annual assessment work for 1904; and, further, that plaintiffs' title be quieted. The defendants Octave Oil Company and O'Donnell answered, denying many of the material allegations of the complaint. With the answer there was filed, on behalf of the oil company, a cross-complaint, alleging that said corporation was the owner, subject only to the paramount title of the United States, and entitled to the possession of the 40 acres in dispute, and seeking to quiet its title against the adverse claims of the plaintiffs. The default of plaintiffs to this cross-complaint was entered on February 24, 1906.

Subsequently the plaintiffs filed an amended complaint, which, like the cross-complaint above mentioned, was a simple complaint to quiet title and recover possession. It alleged ownership (subject to the title of the United States) and a right of possession in plaintiffs, averred an ouster by defendants on February 1, 1904, and prayed that plaintiffs be declared the owners of the property and be put in possession thereof.

This amended complaint was filed on February 26, 1906, after the case had been called for trial. Plaintiffs having asked leave to file it, counsel for defendants stated that he had no objection, but that, inasmuch as it "changed the cause of action," he desired time to answer, on the understanding that the trial should then go on, and that, until an answer could be prepared, the allegations of the amended complaint should be deemed denied. No reference was made to the default which had been entered. The trial proceeded on the issues so raised. Before it was concluded, the defendants filed an answer, denying many of the allegations of the amended complaint, and setting up affirmative matter as a defense. The court found that all the allegations of the amended complaint were true.

It is now argued by appellant Octave Oil Company that it was entitled to a judgment upon plaintiffs' default to the cross-complaint. That a default to a complaint confesses the truth of all of its allegations is, of course, elementary. McGregor v. Shaw, 11 Cal. 47; Rowe v. Table Mountain Water Co., 10 Cal. 441; Himmelman v. Spanagel, 39 Cal. 401; Hutchings v. Ebeler, 46 Cal. 557. But it is equally elementary that a legal right may be waived. Where a party has proceeded in the lower court in a manner inconsistent with an intent to assert a right to which he might be entitled, he will not, on appeal, be permitted to shift his position, and claim, for the first time, a benefit which he has rejected at all prior stages of the proceeding. The amended complaint and the cross-complaint presented substantially the same issues. The sole question was whether the plaintiffs or the defendants owned the land and were entitled to its possession. A judgment in favor of the oil company on its cross-complaint would have so disposed of this question as to render it impossible to give to plaintiffs any relief on their amended complaint, and to make futile a trial of the issues tendered by that complaint. If the oil company had intended to stand upon the rights conferred upon it by the default, its natural and proper course would have been to demand judgment in its favor, and object to the filing of the amended complaint. It did neither of these things, but voluntarily proceeded to a trial of the very issues which it now claims had already been determined in its favor. This conduct must be treated as a waiver and abandonment of its cross-complaint and of the default.

The land in dispute was a part of the public domain of the United States. For proof of their title, the plaintiffs relied on a location of the same as a placer mining claim, and proved compliance with the statutory requirements. It is contended by appellants that there had been no such discovery of mineral as would justify the location under the laws of the United States. The claim in question was located for respondents on January 1, 1903, by Albert Walter Albrecht. He testified that at that time he found upon the land a deposit of gypsum, and that he located the claim for gypsum. Other witnesses testified to the extent of the deposit, one saying that it was 100 feet long, 20 feet in width, and several feet in depth; another that it covered 60 by 200 feet, and that there were from 300 to 500 tons in sight at one place; another that the cropping was 120 or 130 feet long and 2 feet thick. Several witnesses who had had experience in mining for gypsum expressed the belief that the deposit was sufficient in quantity to justify a reasonable man in locating and working the claim for gypsum.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

That gypsum is a mineral, and that lands containing it are mineral lands, within the meaning of the statutes of the United States, are propositions that are not disputed by the appellants. 1 Lindley, Mines, § 97. The argument is, however, that the evidence failed to show a valuable mineral deposit within the meaning of the federal laws. Section 2318, Rev. St. U. S. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1423), reserves from sale lands valuable for minerals, while section 2319 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1424), opens for exploration and purchase all valuable mineral deposits in lands belonging to the United States. Under these statutes it is not enough that there be some trace or indication of mineral in the land. There must be minerals "in such quantity as to justify the expenditure of effort to extract them." Deffeback v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 6 Sup. Ct. 95, 29 L. Ed. 423. See, also, Montana Cent. Ry. Co. v. Migeon (C. C.) 68 Fed. 811; Davis, Admr. v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 11 Sup. Ct. 628, 35 L. Ed. 238; United States v. Iron Silver M. Co., 128 U. S. 673, 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 32 L. Ed. 571. It is not necessary, however, that mineral of sufficient amount and value to allow immediate profitable working be shown to exist in the land. It is enough if the vein or deposit "has a present or prospective commercial value." Mont. Cent. Ry. Co. v. Migeon, supra.

Clearly the evidence above recited was ample to justify the trial court in finding that there had been a discovery of a valuable mineral deposit. There was testimony of contrary tendency, but a conflict of evidence presents no question for the appellate court. The appellants contend that the land had in fact been located by respondents on account of the oil which it might contain, and that the showing that it held gypsum was a mere subterfuge. This, however, was a matter to be determined by the trial court, and there was certainly no lack of evidence tending to support the conclusion reached.

The only other point made by appellants is that the court erred in striking out the special defense set up in the answer. The allegations of this part of the pleading were that the Octave Oil Company had, since the 1st day of February, 1904, been in the actual and exclusive possession of the land in controversy; that plaintiffs' claim of title was by virtue of an alleged location under the laws of the United States, made on January 1, 1903, and that plaintiffs had not performed work or made improvements to the amount of $100 upon the land during the years 1903 and 1904, nor during the year 1905. The defendants do not, in their pleading, claim under a subsequent, conflicting location. They rely solely on actual possession, taken after the posting and recording of plaintiffs' notice of location. The authorities are clear to the effect that a failure to do the assessment work does not create a forfeiture in favor of one occupying the position of defendants. The statute which requires that "one hundred dollars' worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made" declares that, "upon a failure to comply with these conditions, the claim or mine upon which such failure occurred shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made; provided, that the original locators, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, have not resumed work upon the claim after such failure and before such location." Rev. St. U. S. § 2324 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426). It is not provided that a mere failure to comply with the statutory requirement shall terminate the locator's right; the sole effect of such failure is to throw the land open to location by others, and, in the absence of such other location, the original claimant's right to resume work and to hold his claim remains. See McCormick v. Baldwin, 104 Cal. 227, 37 Pac. 903; Emerson v. McWhirter, 133 Cal. 510, 65 Pac. 1036. "While a claim is subject to relocation for failure to perform the requisite annual labor, no forfeiture is worked, and the estate of the locator is not divested until there has been a peaceable entry for the purpose of relocation. The right of the original claimant is terminated only by the entry of a new one." 2 Lindley, Mines, § 645; Beals v. Cone, 27 Colo. 473, 62 Pac. 948, 958, 83 Am. St. Rep. 92; McCarthy v. Speed, 11 S. D. 362, 77 N. W. 590. (There may, of course, be an abandonment of a location, but no question of abandonment is here presented.)

But beyond all this, the respondents had all of the year 1904 within which to do the annual work. Act Jan. 22, 1880, c. 9, 21 Stat. 61 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1426). It is admitted by the pleadings, in fact, affirmatively alleged in the answer itself, that the defendants took possession of the claim in February, 1904, and have held such possession, adversely to the plaintiffs, ever since. The defendants, even if claiming under an adverse location, could not be heard to object that plaintiffs did not do the annual labor required by law while they (defendants) remained in adverse possession of the claim. Mills v. Fletcher, 100 Cal. 142, 34 Pac. 637; Trevaskis v. Peard, 111 Cal. 599, 44 Pac. 246.

It follows that the facts specially pleaded stated no defense, and that the court did not err in striking out this part of the answer.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(154 Cal. 785)

MILLER & LUX v. KERN COUNTY LAND CO. (S. F. 4,818.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1909.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 247*)—IRRIGATION DITCH—RIGHT OF WAY—COMPLAINT.

Where a complaint for violation of plaintiff's right to the use of an irrigation ditch showed a continuous trespass and invasion of the right to which plaintiff had succeeded, the complaint was not demurrable for failure to allege that plaintiff was the owner of the right of way, the gate, and canal at the time of the alleged violation of its rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 247*)—IRRIGATION DITCH—PAROL LICENSE—COMPLAINT.

Where a complaint for violation of plaintiff's right to maintain an irrigation ditch on defendant's land, after pleading a written agreement conferring on plaintiff's predecessors such right of way, alleged that defendant's agents co-operated in laying out the lines and locating a canal to conduct the water over defendant's land, and that plaintiff's ditch was constructed openly, with defendant's knowledge, and that defendant's officers encouraged the construction, such facts warranted an inference that plaintiff relied on a parol license to maintain the canal, and did not intend to limit its rights to those acquired under the written contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 247.*]

3. ESTOPPEL (§ 93*)—ESTOPPEL IN PAIS—PAROL LICENSE.

Where defendant's officers, knowing that plaintiff's assignors intended to lay out an irrigation canal across defendant's land, assented to, aided, and encouraged the performance of the work, on which plaintiff's assignors expended considerable money, defendant was thereafter estopped to deny the granting of a parol license for such canal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 264-275; Dec. Dig. § 93.*]

4. LICENSES (§ 59*)—IRRIGATION DITCH—PAROL LICENSE—REVOCATION.

Where defendant granted plaintiff's assignors a parol license to construct an irrigation canal over defendant's land, and plaintiff's assignors entered and expended a large sum of money in the construction of the canal, a license to maintain it was irrevocable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Licenses, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 59.*]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Miller & Lux, a corporation, against the Kern County Land Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Page, McCutchen & Knight, for appellant. Houghton & Houghton and E. F. Treadwell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appeal is from the judgment, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The essential allegations of the complaint are that the copartnership of Miller & Lux, James B. Haggin, and others, owned lands, and conflicting claims to land, and water rights, and conflicting claims to water rights, on Kern river; that in adjustment of the litigation which had sprung up because of their hostile interests, a written agreement was entered into; that one of the purposes to be accomplished by the agreement was the supplying water to all the lands of Miller & Lux; that to this end Buena Vista lake was to be made into a reservoir for the storing of water, and this was done; that an easement was granted in the agreement by James B. Haggin for the reasonable use of his lands for the purpose of taking water to the lands of Miller & Lux. In 1892 James B. Haggin conveyed his lands, with all the water rights appurtenant thereto, to the defendant corporation, and, in turn, the plaintiff corporation succeeded to all the rights of Miller & Lux, copartners. The complaint then proceeds, and here we quote in extenso: "That in the month of April, 1894, said Henry Miller, acting as surviving partner aforesaid, being desirous of irrigating said 4,000 acres of land with water from said lake or reservoir, notified defendant of his intention to locate and construct a gate and canal over and upon the north half of said section 30 for said purpose, whereupon, under its direction, the duly authorized agents of defendant, having power to act in the premises, accompanied said Henry Miller and his employes to said reservoir, and co-operated and assisted him in laying out the lines and surveying and locating a canal upon the north half of said section 30 for the purpose of carrying or conducting water from said lake or reservoir to said 4,000 acres of land; that thereafter, in May, 1894, said Henry Miller, as such surviving partner, commenced the work of constructing the gate and canal so located and laid out, and continued said work until August, 1894, when said gate and canal were completed; that said canal is nearly one mile in length, and the cost and expense of constructing the same and the gate thereto is about $3,000; that defendant knew said work was in progress from the time it was commenced until the completion of said canal and said gate, and stood by and made no objection thereto, but, on the contrary, by its acts and conduct, encouraged said Henry Miller, acting as such surviving partner, to proceed with the same and construct said canal and gate; that after the completion thereof, and the gate thereto, said canal was used by said Henry Miller, as such surviving partner, to carry and conduct water from said Buena Vista lake or reservoir to said 4,000 acres of land, for the irrigation thereof, and for other purposes, until in the month of February, 1897, defendant illegally, wrongfully, stealthily, and in the nighttime constructed a dam in and across said canal near its junction with said lake or reservoir, and thereafter to the present day, with force and arms, has prevented said Henry Miller and plaintiff from removing said dam and from using said gate and canal." Plaintiff sought a decree entitling it to the use of the gate and canal, and restraining the defendant from interfering with their use, and a further judgment of $25,000 damages for injuries sustained. After trial, the court's findings were in favor of the allegations of the complaint, saying that it found against the allegation that the agreement between the original parties conveyed, or purported to convey, to plaintiff or its grantor any right of way for a ditch or canal over the land of the defendant. It did find, however, facts in accordance with the allegations of the complaint, from which it concluded that a parol license to construct and maintain the gate and canal had been given by defendant to plaintiff's predecessor.

Upon appeal it is urged that defendant's demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, because of the complaint's failure to allege that the plaintiff was the owner of the right of way for gate and canal at the time of the alleged violation of its right to the use thereof. Such an allegation, under the circumstances of this case, was not, however, necessary. Appellant's reliance in this regard is upon the class of cases illustrated by Vanalstine v. Whelan, 135 Cal. 232, 67 Pac. 125, by which class of cases it is well settled that it is fatal to an action of claim and delivery if the complaint contains no averment of ownership and right of possession at the time of the commencement of the action. But such a rule does not apply to a case of this character, where the complaint shows a continuous trespass and invasion of the right to which the plaintiff has succeeded. Cooper v. Taylor, 15 N. J. Law, 455; Terpening v. Gallup, 8 Iowa, 74. Plaintiff, it appears, actually acquired its title and all of the rights of Miller & Lux, copartners, in June, 1897, and the continuance of the asserted trespass after that date is both alleged and established.

The second ground of demurrer that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that the allegations are insufficient to show the giving of a parol license, or of the reliance upon a parol license by plaintiff in the expenditure of its money, is not without merit. It is urged, with much force, that the pleader's theory presented by his complaint is that of a right under a written agreement, and that it does violence to the language of the complaint to wrench it from its obvious import to discover therein reliance upon parol license. But we think it may be fairly said that the complaint shows something more than a mere reliance upon the legal right asserted under the agreement. Thus it is averred that defendant's agents accompanied Miller and his employees to the reservoir and co-operated and assisted them in laying out the lines and surveying and locating the canal for the purpose of conducting this water over defendant's land; that Miller constructed the work openly, and not only with the knowledge of the defendant, who stood by and made no objection thereto, but, moreover, encouraged Miller to proceed with the construction. We think that, by fair intendment, it thus appears from the complaint that the assent of the defendant was obtained under circumstances amounting to a parol license, and if, by fair intendment, these facts can be derived from the complaint, it will be held sufficient against general demurrer. Anderson v. Bank of Lassen, 140 Cal. 695, 74 Pac. 287.

From another point of view the complaint is equally impregnable against attack upon demurrer. The allegations above quoted, with others which the complaint contains, may be treated, and they are sufficient when so treated, as a pleading of estoppel in pais. The findings in support of these allegations establish that the defendant, knowing the purpose and nature of the work about to be done by plaintiff's grantor, assented to, aided and encouraged him in, the performance of this work, upon which was expended a considerable sum of money. Here are clearly present all the facts necessary to establish such an estoppel. And thus, by this estoppel, defendant is forbidden to deny the granting of the parol license. The evidence is sufficient to support these findings.

The principal contention upon appeal is that this court should recede from the view which it adopted and expressed in Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, and should adopt the contrary view that a parol license, regardless of its nature, is always revocable at the will of the licensor. This question was duly considered in Stoner v. Zucker, supra, the conflict in authority was recognized, and the conclusion there expressed deliberately adopted. We perceive no reason for receding from that conclusion.

For these reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

I dissent: BEATTY, C. J.

154 Cal. 775

STATE COMMISSION IN LUNACY v. WELCH, County Treasurer. (S. F. 4785.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1908.)

1. STATUTES (§ 231*)—CONSTRUCTION—ADOPTION OF CONSTRUCTION OF PRIOR STATUTES.

Where a provision of the practice act (St. 1851, p. 53, c. 5, § 19) is enacted into a subsequent Code in precisely the same language, the construction given the prior statute must govern as to the subsequent Code provision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 312; Dec. Dig. § 231.*]

2. VENUE (§ 11*)—CHANGE OF VENUE—STATUTES—PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Pol. Code, § 3866, makes it the duty of a county treasurer to go to S. county and there settle with the state for state moneys collected. Code Civ. Proc. § 393, declares that certain actions must be tried in the county where the cause or some portion thereof arose, and includes in subdivision 2 actions against a public officer for acts done by virtue of his office, and section 395, declares generally that an action must be tried in the county in which defendant resides at the time of the action. A suit was commenced in A. county against a county treasurer, residing in S. B. county to compel an accounting for money received in his official capacity under sections 2192, 2193, Pol. Code, requiring each county to pay $10 for each person committed to the home of the feeble minded, to the state and account for it under section 3866. Defendant county treasurer moved for change of venue to S. B. county, and plaintiff contended that S. county was the place of trial, and that defendant waived objection to A. county by moving to transfer to S. B. county. Held, that the motion should be granted, though the breach of duty occurred in S. county, since subdivision 2, section 393, applies only to affirmative acts of an officer by which in the execution of process or otherwise he interferes with the personal or property rights of third persons, and hence section 395 controls.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by the State Commission in Lunacy against John Welch, as Treasurer of San Benito County, for the recovery of moneys collected. From an order denying a motion to change the place of trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

H. W. Scott and Briggs & Hulna, for appellant. John W. Stetson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion of the defendant for a change of the place of trial.

The action was begun in the superior court of Alameda county. It is a proceeding in mandamus against the defendant, as treasurer of San Benito county, to compel him, as such treasurer, to pay to the state treasurer the sum of $1,460, alleged to be due the state from the defendant as treasurer of San Benito county, on account of children committed from said county to the California Home for Feeble Minded Children. The defendant resides in San Benito county. He asks for a change of venue to that county on the ground that he resided there when the action was begun. The general rule, as stated in section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is that an action must be tried in the county in which the defendant resides at the commencement of the action, and, unless this case falls within some of the statutory exceptions to this rule, the motion should have been granted. The plaintiff's claim is that it falls within the class described in section 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declaring that certain actions "must be tried in the county where the cause, or some part thereof, arose." Subdivision 2 places within this class all actions "against a public officer * * * for an act done by him in virtue of his office." Section 3866 of the Political Code provides as follows: "The treasurers of all the counties or cities and counties of this state must, between the fifteenth and thirtieth days of December and May of each year, proceed to the state capitol and settle in full with the controller of state, and pay over in cash to the treasurer of state, all funds belonging to the state which have come into their hands, as county treasurers, before the close of business on and including the first Monday of said months." Section 2192 of the Political Code requires each county to pay to the state treasury $10 per month for each person committed from such county to the home for the feeble minded. By section 2193 of the Political Code the county auditors are required to include in their report to the state controller in the months of May and December the amount due from the county to the state on account of such commitments, and it is made the duty of the county treasurer, "at the time of the settlement with the state in such months," to pay said amount to the state treasurer. This means that the county treasurer must take the money or its equivalent with him to Sacramento and there pay it over to the state treasurer at the capitol. This duty must be performed in Sacramento county, and, if there is a failure of the treasurer while there to pay the money due, that breach of duty takes place in Sacramento. The complaint alleges that the defendant failed, neglected, and refused to pay said money to the state treasurer. It does not aver that he did not proceed to Sacramento, as the law requires, but merely that he failed, neglected, and refused to make the payment.

From this the plaintiff argues that the cause of action arose where the breach of duty must have occurred, namely, in Sacramento county, and that that county is the proper place for the trial of the action. To the suggestion that in any event Alameda county is not the proper place of trial under the statute, plaintiff answers that the cause may be begun and tried in that county or any county, if no proper and valid objection is made, that the mere fact that it should have been begun and tried in Sacramento county is no ground for transferring it to San Benito county, which is no more the lawful county than Alameda, and that the application is to change the venue to San Benito county and not to Sacramento county. This answer fully meets and disposes of the suggestion, based, as it is, on the assumption that Sacramento is the proper county for trial. This assumption, however, is contrary to the previous decision of this court in regard to the proper construction of the section in question. Under these decisions the clause of section 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon which the plaintiff relies, does not apply to the present case. The old practice act (St. 1851, p. 53, c. 5, § 19) contained a provision in regard to change of venue in precisely the same language as that of subdivision 2, section 393, above quoted. With regard to this provision it was held that it "applies only to affirmative acts of the officer, by which, in the execution of process, or otherwise, he interferes with the property or rights of third persons, and not to mere omissions or neglect of official duty." McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 420, 70 Am. Dec. 655. With this interpretation thus fixed by that decision, the Legislature in 1872 re-enacted the same provision in the Code of Civil Procedure. This implies that the Legislature intended it to have the same meaning in the new enactment as it had received before in the practice act. Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 356. The construction of section 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure was before this court in Bonestell, etc., Co. v. Curry, 153 Cal. 418, 95 Pac. 887. That was an action begun in the city and county of San Francisco against Curry, as Secretary of State, and Zellerbach & Sons, to whom Curry had officially awarded a contract for paper to use in the state printer's office. The suit was to enjoin further action in pursuance of the contract. Zellerbach & Sons resided in San Francisco. A motion was made to change the venue to Sacramento county on the ground that the case came within the purview of section 393 and must be tried in that county, notwithstanding the fact that some of the defendants actually resided in San Francisco. The court followed McMillan v. Richards, supra, and held that the language of subdivision 2 "contemplates only such affirmative acts of an officer as directly interfere with the personal rights or property of the person complaining, such as wrongful arrests, trespass, conversion," etc., and that the acts enjoined were not of that character. From this it follows that, although the neglect and refusal to perform the duty of paying over the money to the state treasurer occurred in Sacramento county, and is a breach of duty which constitutes a cause of action against the defendant, yet it is not an action which, under section 393, must be tried in that county, but one which, under section 395, is triable in the county in which the defendant resided when it was begun. The case does not come within any exception to this latter rule, and the motion should have been granted.

The order is reversed.

154 Cal. 709

STANSBURY v. POINDEXTER.

(L. A. 1908.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 330*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — CONTRACTS — DETERRING BIDDERS.

A contract between a city street superintendent and a contractor for grading and graveling a street, which contained specifications that all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work, from any unforeseen obstruction from the action of the elements, or for any act or omission of the contractor, or any one employed by him not authorized by the agreement, should be sustained by the contractor, was void as tending to increase the cost of the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 854, 871; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 330*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS — CONTRACTS — VALIDITY — DETERRING BIDDERS.

That the bidders on the work did not increase their bids on account of such restrictions did not obviate the objection, since some persons may have been deterred from bidding on account of the restrictions who would have otherwise presented lower bids than any of those submitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 854, 871; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Charles Stansbury against R. W. Poindexter. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Scarborough & Bowen, for appellant. Long & Baker, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an action by a contractor upon his claim for work performed upon Normandie avenue, Los Angeles, adjacent to defendant's property. The contract, assessment, and lien were declared invalid by the superior court, and judgment was given for the defendant. The contract between the street superintendent and appellant provided that Normandie avenue should be graded and graveled "in accordance with the plans and profile on file at the office of the city engineer, and specifications for the construction of graveled streets on file in the office of the city clerk, said specifications being numbered 68," and that curbing should be laid "in accordance with specifications for constructing redwood curbs on file in the office of the city clerk, said specifications being numbered 52." In each of said specifications the following language is used: "All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under this agreement, or from any unforeseen obstruction or difficulties which may be encountered in the prosecution of the same, or from the action of the elements, or from encumbrances on the lines of the work, or for any act or omission on the part of the contractor, or any person or agent employed by him not authorized by this agreement, shall be sustained by the contractor."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Practically the same provision was declared fatal to the validity of the ordinance authorizing certain street work, considered in the case of Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 664, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213, and that case is conclusive of the question presented here. There is no merit in appellant's point that he was denied opportunity of showing, by all who presented bids to the city council for the work, that the specifications quoted had not operated to increase the amount of their bids. This objection leaves out of consideration the fact that some bidders may have been deterred from offering to do the work at all by reason of the unlawful restrictions contained in the proposed contract. Such persons may have concluded very properly that they could not afford to do the work in view of the burdens imposed, and, without such burdens, they might have been prepared to present lower bids than those filed by their more daring competitors.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 774

GALVIN et al. v. FANNEN et al. (S. F. 4,824.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 864*)—REVIEW—APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL.

On appeal upon the judgment roll alone, if the findings are within the issues and support the judgment, it will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3459; Dec. Dig. § 864.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 706*)—PROCEEDINGS IN RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

There being nothing in the transcript to support an appeal from an order denying a new trial, and the record containing no bill of exceptions, the order cannot be reviewed and will be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2944; Dec. Dig. § 706.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by E. M. Galvin and others against John J. Fannen and others. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. M. Galvin, Frank McGowan, and Robert Ash, for appellants. Garoutte & Goodwin, Geo. C. Ross, and John J. Barrett, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought by plaintiffs against John Fannen and James Maguire, administrator of the estate of Bridget McDermott, deceased, to quiet title to certain land. Judgment passed for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal from this judgment, and from the order dismissing their motion for a new trial. The appeal from the judgment is upon the judgment roll alone. The findings are within the issues joined by the pleadings, and fully support the judgment. This appeal, therefore, is without merit.

There is nothing in the transcript to support the appeal from the order dismissing the motion for a new trial. It appears from the records of this court that appellants made an effort here by mandate to compel the settlement of a bill of exceptions by the trial court, but their application for mandate was refused. Galvin v. Superior Court (Cal.) 94 Pac. 423. So the appeal from the order is also without merit.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 716

UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO v. STATE. (Sac. 1,570.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908. Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1909.)

1. PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONCLUSIONS—ALLEGATIONS CONSTITUTING.

Allegations that the amounts due on bonds sued on are properly chargeable against the state, that the money paid for the bonds was advanced to the state at its request upon its written contract to repay, and that the state sold the bonds as a purely commercial transaction, are conclusions, and hence not entitled to weight in considering the sufficiency of the pleading as an allegation of facts importing a liability of the defendant state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 13; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 214*)—ADMISSION BY DEMURRER.

Allegations of a pleading must be taken as true on demurrer thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 525, 526; Dec. Dig. § 214.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 372*)—SPECIAL IMPROVEMENTS—UNDISCHARGED COST—CITY'S LIABILITY.

A provision in a contract for a local improvement that the city shall not be liable for the cost precludes recovery against the city if the special assessments for any reason fail to discharge the cost; the city not being liable in any event unless the contract is its contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 906, 907; Dec. Dig. § 372.*]

4. STATES (§ 166*)—LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS—BONDS—STATE'S LIABILITY.

Where there has been a failure to pay special improvement bonds out of a special assessment fund as contemplated by law, the state is not liable thereon unless the issuance of the bonds constituted a contract to which the state was a party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 158; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

5. STATES (§ 107*)—LIABILITY ON CONTRACTS.

A state is as liable for breach of its contract with a person as an individual contractor would be, though not suable without its consent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 105; Dec. Dig. § 107.*]

6. STATES (§ 166*)—LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS—FAILURE TO LEVY ASSESSMENTS—LIABILITY OF STATE.

Under Act April 1, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 911, c. 726), authorizing a street improvement in San Francisco to be paid for by special assessments and authorizing the issuance of bonds, the failure of the board of public works to levy and collect assessments to discharge the bonds as required by the act was the default of officers in administering governmental functions, for which the state is not liable, in the absence of legislative provision binding it; the injured person's remedy being to compel the board to perform its duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 158; Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 745½*)—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ACTS OF OFFICERS—NATURE.

The functions of officers charged with duties in opening streets, etc., are as truly governmental as those of ordinary executive and judicial officers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1568, 1569; Dec. Dig. § 745½.*]

8. STATUTES (§ 233*)—CONSTRUCTION—GENERAL WORDS.

General words in a statute respecting a state are not to be construed as imposing liability on the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 314; Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by the Union Trust Company of San Francisco against the State of California. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. W. Holladay and E. B. Holladay, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George A. Sturtevant, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to recover from the state of California the sum of $855,000 claimed to be due as the principal of 855 bonds, and a further sum of $1,121,010 for accrued interest. The defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the case now comes up on plaintiff's appeal from the ensuing judgment in favor of defendant.

The bonds in question are of the class known as "Montgomery Avenue Bonds." They were issued under the terms of an act of the Legislature entitled "An act to open and establish a public street in the city and county of San Francisco to be called Montgomery Avenue, and to take private lands therefor," approved April 1, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 911, c. 726). The act provides for the taking and dedication of a strip of land in the city and county of San Francisco for an open and public street to be known as "Montgomery Avenue." The strip described is one running diagonally through a number of the then existing streets of the city and the intervening blocks. It is provided that the value of the land taken for the avenue and the damages to the improvements thereon or adjacent thereto and injured thereby, and all other expenses incidental to the taking and the opening of the avenue, shall be considered to be the cost of opening the avenue, and shall be assessed upon certain described lands, declared by the act to be benefited by the proposed improvement. Section 5 provides that, whenever the owners of a majority in frontage of the property described as benefited by the opening of the avenue shall petition the mayor for the opening of the avenue a board of public works, as created by the act, to consist of the mayor, the tax collector, and the surveyor of the city and county of San Francisco, shall proceed to organize for the carrying out of the objects of the act. Said board of works, having adopted the requisite surveys, plans, maps, etc., shall proceed to ascertain and determine and set down in a written report the description and actual cash value of the several lots included in the lands taken for said avenue, and the amount of damage thereby occasioned to the property along the said line and within the course of said avenue. The board is also required to determine and separately state in the report a description of the several subdivisions of land included in the district declared to be benefited by the improvements, and to set down opposite the description of each lot the amount in which, according to the judgment of the board, said lot has been or will be benefited by reason of the opening of said avenue. Provision is made for the inspection of such report by parties interested, and the board is authorized to apply to the county court for confirmation of the report. When, by the confirmation of such report, the damages, costs, and expenses of opening said avenue have been fixed, the board is directed to "cause to be prepared and issued bonds in sums of not less than $1000 each for such an amount as shall be necessary to discharge and pay all damages, costs and expenses as aforesaid. Said bonds shall be known and designated as the 'Montgomery Avenue Bonds'; shall be payable in thirty years from their date unless sooner redeemed as in this act provided, and shall bear interest at six per cent. per annum payable at the office of the treasurer of said city and county." Persons to whom damages are awarded are authorized to take bonds in lieu of damages, and bonds not so taken are to be sold by the mayor, auditor, and treasurer of the city and county to the highest bidders. All money arising from the sale of the bonds is to be paid to the treasurer of the city and county, to be kept in a fund known as the "Montgomery Avenue Fund." Section 11 of the act provides for the annual levy, assessment, and collection of a tax upon the benefited lands sufficient to pay interest on the bonds as the same mature. The moneys so collected are to be paid over to the treasurer as a part of the Montgomery avenue fund, and to be paid out by him on the coupons attached to the bonds as they from time to time become due. The act further provides that there shall be levied, assessed, and collected annually, commencing with the year 1880, upon the same lands, a tax of 1 per cent. upon each $100 valuation, which shall constitute a sinking fund for the redemption of said bonds. These moneys when collected are also to be paid into the Montgomery avenue fund, and are to be used for the redemption of the bonds whenever the treasurer shall have $10,000 or more in said sinking fund. Section 24 of the act reads as follows: "It is hereby expressly provided that the city and county of San Francisco shall not in any event whatever be liable for the payment of the bonds, nor any part thereof provided to be issued under this act, and any person purchasing said bonds, or otherwise becoming the owner of any bond or bonds, accepts the same upon that express stipulation and understanding."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

The complaint before us alleges the performance of all of the acts necessary to authorize the issuance of the bonds in question. It is averred that the actual owners of more than a majority in frontage of the property, described in the act as benefited, did petition the mayor upon June 18, 1872, requesting and demanding the opening of said Montgomery avenue. The board of works thereupon organized and did all of the acts and things required of them by the act. They made their report and presented it to the county court for confirmation, and the county court did on the 11th day of November, 1872, make its order approving and confirming said report. The damages, costs, and expenses arising from or incidental to the opening of said avenue having been fixed, the board of works caused to be regularly prepared, executed, and issued 1,579 Montgomery avenue bonds in the sum of $1,000,000. Each of said bonds (except as to number) was in the following form:

"State of California.

"Board of Public Works

"(Number 13.)

"City and County of San Francisco

"(Vignette.)

"$1000. Montgomery Avenue Bond. $1000.

"In Conformity with an Act passed by the People of the State of California represented in Senate and Assembly, entitled an Act to open and establish a public street in the City and County of San Francisco, to be called Montgomery Avenue and to take private lands therefor. Approved April 1, 1872.

"The Treasurer of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, will pay at his office in said city and county to the holder hereof One Thousand Dollars in United States Gold Coin, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually in like gold coin upon surrender of the corresponding coupons and that the principal sum is redeemable within thirty years from the date of these presents. It being understood and agreed that this Bond may be redeemed by said Treasurer as provided in said above mentioned Act of the legislature of the State of California. In witness whereof, the Mayor, the Tax Collector and City and County Surveyor of said City and County of San Francisco, composing a board of public works have respectively signed these presents and the President of the Board of Public Works has signed the annexed coupons as of the first day of January, 1873.

William Alvord,

"President of the Board of Public Works and Mayor of the City and County of San Francisco.

"Alexander Austin,

"Tax Collector and member of said Board of Public Works.

"Richard H. Stretch,

"City and County Surveyor and member of said Board of Public Works.

"M. A. B."

Annexed to each of the bonds was a series of coupons for semiannual interest, reading (except as to number and dates) as follows:

"($30.)

Board of Public Works.

"(Coupon No. 60.)

"The Treasurer of the City and County of San Francisco will pay bearer at his office Thirty Dollars on Bond No. 13. Due 1st January, 1903. Montgomery Ave.

"M. A. B. Bond.

Wm. Alvord.

"President of Board of Public Works."

Some of the bonds were issued and delivered to the owners of lands taken for the avenue in payment for the damages sustained by them. Others were sold to the highest bidders pursuant to the terms of the act, and the proceeds of the sales were applied to the payment of the damages occasioned to the owners of the lands taken or damaged by the opening of the avenue and for other expenses of said opening. The proceeds of the bonds so issued paid and satisfied the entire cost of opening said avenue, and the board of works did open said Montgomery avenue as a public street according to the requirements of the statute. On the 21st day of September, 1874, the said board of public works transferred the avenue so opened to the municipal authorities of the city and county of San Francisco for use as an open public street, and it has ever since been maintained and kept by said municipal authorities as a street of said city and county. Since the fiscal year 1880-1881, the said city and county has never levied or assessed taxes on the lands described in the act as benefited by the improvement to pay the interest on said bonds, or to create a sinking fund for the redemption of said bonds. There is no money in the Montgomery avenue fund for the purpose of paying either the interest due on said bonds, or as a sinking fund to redeem the principal, and none of said bonds have in fact been redeemed or paid. The plaintiff purchased for value, and is the bona fide holder and owner of, 855 of said Montgomery avenue bonds and 37,367 coupons of $30 each. The prayer of the complaint is that the plaintiff have judgment against the state of California for the amount due upon said bonds and coupons, and further judgment for accruing interest upon said bonds until judgment.

By the terms of an act passed in 1893 (St. 1893, p. 57, c. 45), the state has permitted the prosecution of suits against it by persons "having claims on contract or for negligence," and the plaintiff, claiming to have a cause of action for the breach of a contract made by the state, relies on this act. The contention of the defendant, adopted by the court below in sustaining the demurrer and entering judgment, was and is that these bonds and the act authorizing their issuance created no contractual liability on the part of the state of California. If any such liability was created, it must be found in the terms of the act and of the instruments issued under its authority. We have, therefore, in summarizing the complaint, omitted various averments of legal conclusions drawn by the plaintiff from the transactions above set forth. For example it is alleged that the amounts due upon the bonds and coupons are justly, lawfully, and properly chargeable against and payable by the state of California to this plaintiff; that "the money paid for said bonds * * * was advanced to said state at its own request upon its written contract that it should be repaid"; that said "state sought and bargained for the money which it received and took in exchange for its said bonds, and it sold its said bonds as a purely commercial transaction." All of these are statements of conclusions, which, if properly drawn, would follow as matter of law from the facts alleged, and are not in themselves entitled to any weight in considering the sufficiency of the pleading as a declaration of facts importing a liability on the part of the defendant.

No payment of interest on these bonds (to say nothing of the principal) has been made for many years before the commencement of this action, and this is, of course, not the first time that litigation has arisen involving the act of 1872 and the obligations issued in consequence of the act. Before proceeding to an examination of the particular questions here presented, it may be well to briefly refer to former cases dealing with the act for the opening of Montgomery avenue.

Doyle v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353, was an application for a writ of prohibition. The petitioners were the owners of a lot of land within the benefited district, as defined by the act, and they sought to prohibit the tax collector of the city and county from collecting an assessment which had been levied against their land (and other property similarly situated) to meet the coupons which would fall due during the year 1874. The principal contention of the petitioners was that the act provided for a tax and was void because such tax was not levied in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution of 1849, then in force. Judgment of dismissal was affirmed on appeal, this court holding that the act called for the levy of an "assessment," not a tax, and that the constitutional provisions relied on had no application.

Mulligan v. Smith, 59 Cal. 206, was an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The action was ejectment, and plaintiff relied upon a deed from the tax collector, made upon a sale of benefited land for nonpayment of an assessment. The trial court found that the petition of property owners, provided by the act to be filed with the mayor, had not in fact been signed by a majority of the owners in frontage as required by the statute. This finding was held to be sustained by the evidence, and this court concluded, as had the court below, that the filing of a petition signed by the requisite number of owners was a condition precedent, without which the board of works never acquired power to open the avenue or to perform any of the duties imposed upon them. The order denying a new trial was affirmed.

In Liebman v. City and County of San Francisco (C. C.) 11 Sawy. 158, 24 Fed. 705, an action was brought in the United States Circuit Court by a bondholder against the city and county to recover the amount of 20 interest coupons. The defendant's motion to exclude all evidence in support of the complaint was granted. Separate opinions were delivered by Mr. Justice Field and Judge Sawyer, both agreeing that the bonds authorized by the act were not obligations upon which the city and county was in any way liable. This conclusion was based upon a reading of the entire statute, and particularly of section 24, above quoted. The view declared by this court in Mulligan v. Smith, i. e., that no valid proceedings could be had in the absence of a petition signed by a majority in frontage of the property owners, was expressly approved, and the opinion of Mr. Justice Field was, at least in part, based on the failure of the complaint to allege compliance with this condition.

These decisions in the state and federal courts—the one holding that, under the facts shown, a binding assessment could not be levied, and the other that in no event could the city be made liable on bonds issued—seem to have terminated all efforts to compel the payment of the bonds and coupons until, after the passage of the act permitting the state to be sued, this action was instituted. If the facts here alleged were in accordance with what was found by the trial court in Mulligan v. Smith, it would necessarily follow, from the law as there declared, that the board of works never acquired jurisdiction to issue any bonds, and that no liability was created by their issue. As is clearly shown in the Liebman Case, the bonds contain no such recitals of the due performance of conditions precedent as could operate as an estoppel, in favor of bona fide holders, to deny want of power to issue the instruments. But in this complaint it is specifically alleged that the actual owners of more than a majority in frontage of the benefited property did petition the mayor in writing for the opening of Montgomery avenue. On demurrer this allegation must of course be taken as true. So that, while in previous cases the question was as to the rights of parties (whether bondholders or owners of land sought to be assessed), where it appeared that the statutory steps preliminary to the opening of the avenue, the issuance of bonds, and the levy of assessments had not been taken, we have here to decide the status of bonds issued after a full performance of all the acts upon which the right to issue said bonds depended. The bonds not having been paid, it is sought to compel their payment by the state, which, it is claimed, was a party to the contract created by their sale and purchase.

If we correctly understand the position of the appellant, it is not claimed that the state of California directly and in terms promised to pay the amounts evidenced by the bonds and coupons to the holders thereof. Indeed, the provisions of the statute and of the bonds themselves preclude any such contention. The state of California is not named on the face of the bonds as the obligor undertaking the performance of any obligation. The bonds are issued by the board of public works, and are signed by the members of the board. The only direct promise stated in them is that the treasurer of the city and county of San Francisco will pay a stated sum to the holder, and even this promise is not unconditional, but is qualified by the clause "in conformity with an act * * * entitled an act to open and establish a public street * * * to be called Montgomery Avenue. * * *" "Read in connection with what follows," says Mr. Justice Field, in speaking of this clause, "it imports that the treasurer will pay the amount designated in accordance with the act—that is, out of the fund to be provided by it—and that the holder can look to no other source of payment." Liebman v. San Francisco, supra. This view comports with the entire scheme of the act, which contemplates, not the creation of an indebtedness to be paid by funds raised by a general taxation of property in the city or the state, but the creation of a special improvement district and the payment of the cost of the proposed improvement by means of assessments levied exclusively on lands within this district. These lands, which, in the contemplation of the Legislature, would be benefited by the opening of the avenue, were to be made to pay, to the extent of the benefit received, the expense incurred in such opening. It was not anticipated, by the framers of the law, that any other source of payment would or could be resorted to.

The argument of appellant is, however, that the state, by authorizing the issue of bonds, and providing that funds should be raised in a certain manner for their payment, entered into a contract with holders of the bonds that the method prescribed for raising such funds would be followed, and that it is liable for the damage occasioned to the holders by the failure of the proper officers, from whatever cause, to levy and collect the necessary assessments. "We claim," as counsel for appellant state the position in their brief, "that the state, through its agents, borrowed money from us under the form of a sale of negotiable bonds. That by reason of the negligence and fault of the state agents the money to pay the bonds as promised was not provided, and that therefore the state, as principal, is liable to the same extent as any private person would be." It has often been held, although the cases dealing with the subject are not all in accord, that where a city, to pay the cost of a local improvement, issues bonds payable only out of assessments to be levied and collected by the city from property owners, and the right to collect the assessments is lost through the negligence of the city, action may be brought by the bondholders directly against the city for the amount of their loss. The rule has been applied even in cases of contracts or bonds providing specifically that the city should in no event be liable. Gable v. Altoona, 200 Pa. 15, 49 Atl. 367; Dime Dep. & Dis. Bank v. Scranton, 208 Pa. 383, 57 Atl. 770; Barber Asphalt P. Co. v. City of Harrisburg, 64 Fed. 283, 12 C. C. A. 100, 29 L. R. A. 401. See, Hitchcock v. Galveston, 96 U. S. 341, 24 L. Ed. 659. So far as this state is concerned, it must be taken to be settled that a provision in the contract that the city shall not be liable will prevent any recovery against such city if the assessments, for any reason, fail to discharge the cost of the work. McBean v. San Bernardino, 96 Cal. 183, 31 Pac. 49; Conlin v. Board of Supervisors, 99 Cal. 17, 33 Pac. 753, 21 L. R. A. 474, 37 Am. St. Rep. 17; Connolly v. City and County of San Francisco (Cal.) 33 Pac. 1109. What would be the rule in the absence of such express provision is a question which has not been before this court. "The cases on the subject," says Judge Dillon (Mun. Corp. § 482), "are conflicting," adding his own view as follows: "The right to a general judgment should, in our opinion, be limited, in any event, to cases where the corporation can afterwards reimburse itself by an assessment. For why should all be taxed for the failure of the council to do its duty in a case where the contractor has a plain remedy, by mandamus, to compel the council to make the necessary assessments and proceed in the collection thereof with the requisite diligence?" The query just suggested is decidedly apposite here. If, as is alleged in the complaint, everything had been done which was requisite to vest in the authorities of the city and county the right, and to impose upon them the duty, of levying and collecting assessments in order to discharge the principal and interest on these bonds, it is difficult to see why the bondholders have not enforced compliance with this duty. Himmelman v. Cofran, 36 Cal. 411; Town of Tipton v. Jones, 77 Ind. 307; Tone v. Mayor, 70 N. Y. 157; German Am. Bank v. Spokane, 17 Wash. 315, 47 Pac. 1103, 49 Pac. 542, 38 L. R. A. 259; Whalen v. La Crosse, 16 Wis. 288. Their failure to do so would, if this action can be sustained, result in transferring the burden from the owners of property in the benefited district, where the statute designed it to fall, to the general treasury, supplied by taxes upon all property owners in the state.

But, whatever may be the true rule as to the liability of municipalities for the cost of improvements intended to be paid out of assessments on specific property, it is clear that such liability cannot exist unless the contract under which work was done or money advanced was the contract of the municipality sought to be charged. So here, where there has been a failure to pay the bonds in the manner contemplated, there can be no obligation on the part of the state unless the issuance of the bonds constituted a contract to which the state was a party. It is at this point that the argument of the appellant fails. As has been pointed out, there is nothing on the face of the bonds purporting to make the state an obligor, and the statute makes it clear that the Legislature never contemplated that payment was to be made in any manner other than by assessments on the benefited property. Section 24 was inserted in order to guard against any possible implication that there might be liability on the part of the city, which was to receive the benefit of the improvements when completed. It would seem that this was the only liability considered to be possible. That no similar provision specifically exempting the state was declared, does not appear to us to indicate any more than that the creation of liability on the part of the state was not within the scope of the legislative consideration. Section 24 was intended to make clear the purpose of limiting the means of payment to the proceeds of assessments, not to impose a liability on the state, or to shift one from the city to the state.

Much importance is attached by appellant to the opinion of Judge Sawyer in Liebman v. San Francisco, and particularly to that portion of it in which he says, in construing the statute, that "the state has undertaken to do this work through the instrumentalities chosen by itself." Similarly, in the same case, Mr. Justice Field says that the board of works "is made the agent of the state to carry out a public improvement directed by its statute, and not the agent of the city and county." But, conceding that the board of works and the other officers mentioned in the act became the agents of the state, it by no means follows that the state authorized them to bind it to pay the cost of the work, or to make the state liable for their failure to raise, in the manner provided by the statute, the funds necessary for the payment of the bonds. That the state, when making a contract with an individual, is liable (though not suable without its consent) for a breach of its agreement in like manner as an individual contractor, is not to be disputed. People v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 549; Carr v. State, 127 Ind. 204, 26 N. E. 778, 11 L. R. A. 370, 22 Am. St. Rep. 624; Chapman v. State, 104 Cal. 690, 38 Pac. 457, 43 Am. St. Rep. 158. In the Chapman Case the state was held liable for the value of coal which it had received for storage on one of its wharves. Through the negligence of the state's agents and officers the wharf broke and the coal was lost. The decision went on the ground that the state, in undertaking the business of a wharfinger for hire, and making a contract as such, agreed to be bound "to the same extent as a private person engaged in conducting the business of a wharfinger would be under a similar contract." The court recognizes, however, that liability in such cases must rest upon the making of a contract by the state, and that, "in the absence of a statute voluntarily assuming such liability, the state is not liable in damages for the negligent acts of its officers while engaged in discharging ordinary official duties pertaining to the administration of the government of the state." Gibbons v. United States, 8 Wall. 269, 19 L. Ed. 453; Lewis v. State, 96 N. Y. 74, 48 Am. Rep. 607; Clodfelter v. State, 86 N. C. 51, 41 Am. Rep. 440. No liability for the failure of the proper officers to levy and collect the assessments necessary to discharge the Montgomery avenue bonds can be imposed upon the state, if those officers, while agents of the state, were merely agents charged with governmental functions. In other words, there is no liability if the state, in authorizing the doing of the things contemplated by this statute, was acting in its sovereign capacity. Whether it was so acting is a question depending upon the construction of the act itself. The opening of streets and the condemnation of the necessary lands, together with provision for payment of the costs and expenses, are among the most familiar governmental powers. Officers charged with duties in connection with such undertakings, are exercising on behalf of the state, governmental functions in as true a sense as are the ordinary executive and judicial officers. In passing legislation providing that a street may be opened, the state's position is in no degree analogous to that assumed by it when it offers wharves or warehouses to the public, to be used for hire. All public corporations exercising governmental functions within a limited portion of the state—counties, cities, towns, reclamation districts, irrigation districts—are agencies of the state, just as the board of works created by this act is such agency. Each of the corporations named is given power to order public work to be done and to provide for its payment, yet it has never been supposed that, merely because such authority is conferred by the Legislature, the state makes itself liable for the failure of such corporations to comply with their contracts. The act here in question authorizes the making of contracts; but while power to make them is derived from the state, it is not provided, expressly or by implication, that they shall be made in the name or on behalf of the state. It is not necessary to resort to the well-settled rule that general words in a statute are not to be construed as imposing a liability on the state (Molineux v. State, 109 Cal. 378, 42 Pac. 34, 50 Am. St. Rep. 49; Sav. & L. Soc. v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 356, 63 Pac. 665; S. F. L. & C. Co. v. State, 141 Cal. 354, 74 Pac. 1047), for we do not find in this statute any language evidencing an intent to make the state a party to the contract created by the issuance and sale of the bonds. That contract was the limited one expressed on the face of the instruments. The failure to perform it was, on the facts here alleged, the default of officers in the administration of governmental functions, and, in the absence of a legislative provision binding the state to respond for such default, the injured parties were bound to seek their remedy by compelling the delinquent officials to perform their duty.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

154 Cal. 730

FRANK v. STATE. (Sac. 1,573.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908. Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1909.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by Max Frank against the State of California. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Rothchild (S. W. and E. B. Holladay, of counsel), for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George R. Sturtevant, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the state.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, as holder of 65 Montgomery avenue bonds and 2,975 coupons, sues to recover the amount of said bonds and coupons from the state of California. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant upon the sustaining of its demurrer to the complaint.

The complaint is in all substantial particulars identical with that in Union Trust Company of San Francisco v. State of California (Sacramento, No. 1,570, decided this day) 99 Pac. 183, and for the reasons stated in the opinion in that case it must be held that the complaint fails to state a cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

154 Cal. 744

PECK v. FOX. (L. A. 2,091.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908.)

TAXATION (§ 770*)—TAX DEEDS—VALIDITY—CURATIVE ACTS—OPERATION.

St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59, validating tax deeds made to the state, otherwise invalid for failing to recite the correct date when the right of redemption expires, etc., operates retroactively, and validates a deed previously executed and otherwise invalid for failing to recite the time of the expiration of the right to redeem as required by Pol. Code, § 3771, as amended by St. 1895, p. 327, c. 218, and operates to vest the title to the property in the state as of the date of the deed, and validates the title of an individual obtaining title from the state prior to the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1538; Dec. Dig. § 770.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Action by John H. Peck against Edwin R. Fox. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

L. M. Fall, for appellant. E. R. Fox, in pro. per. O. B. Carter, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title to a lot in San Pedro, Los Angeles county. Plaintiff obtained judgment, and, from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Upon the trial it was stipulated that the title of defendant was based upon a sale of the lot made to the state of California on July 3, 1895, for delinquent state and county taxes of the year 1894; on two deeds made by the tax collector of Los Angeles county to the state in pursuance of said sale, one undated, but recorded on July 16, 1900, and the other executed on December 12, 1902, and which was made to correct the first deed to the state under said sale of July 3, 1895; on a deed from the county tax collector on behalf of the state of California to defendant made on March 1, 1902, and a second correction deed to the state by the tax collector of Los Angeles county, dated December 31, 1903, but not recorded. It was further stipulated that the title to the property was in plaintiff, unless by virtue of the tax sale, and said deeds to the state, and the deed from the state to him, title was established in the defendant. The various tax deeds referred to in the stipulation were introduced in evidence, and the court declared the deeds to the state to be invalid, and hence the deed to defendant from the state based thereon also void.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes Cal. Rep. 98-101 P.—17

The decision of the court was doubtless based upon the failure of the tax collector in the original deed to the state to recite therein, as required by the provisions of section 3771 of the Political Code, as amended March 28, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 327, c. 218), the time when the right of the owner of the land to redeem from the sale had expired, the court holding that for this failure said original deed to the state was void, and hence the state had no title to the property when, on March 1, 1902, it conveyed it to the defendant. When this action was tried in the superior court, the case of Baird v. Monroe et al., 150 Cal. 561, 89 Pac. 352, had not been decided by this court. That action involved the effect to be given to the validating act of February 28, 1903, as to certificates of tax sales and tax deeds executed to the state for property sold and deeded thereto for nonpayment of taxes. St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59. The act in terms confirmed, validated, and legalized all tax sales and tax deeds made to the state which would have been otherwise invalid for failure to recite, among other things, when the right of redemption would expire, or whether it had expired, and it was held that the act operated retroactively. The effect of this construction of the act was, as applied to the present case, to render the original deed to the state by the tax collector, made prior to the sale by the state to the defendant, as valid and legal as if all matters concerning redemption had been stated therein as required by section 3771 of the Political Code as amended. Under this curative act, and its retrospective effect, the deed to the state was validated and legalized as of the date when it was executed by the tax collector, so that, while prior to the curative act, such deeds, for failing to make the required recitals, were void, under the curative act they were rendered legal and valid as of the date of their execution by the tax collector.

It is insisted, however, by respondent, that the fact that the validating act operates retroactively cannot aid in sustaining the deed by the state to the defendant, because that deed was made by the state to him before the validating act went into effect. In other words, he insists that as the deed to defendant by the state was made on March 1, 1902, when it had no title, and before the passage of the validating act, such deed by it was inoperative to vest any title to the lot in defendant, and any subsequent or additional title which the state acquired by virtue of the validating act could not inure to the benefit of the title of defendant. Baird v. Monroe et al. did not involve this point, as in that case it was admitted that one of the defendants had regularly succeeded to the title, if the tax proceeding there involved could be sustained. But the contention of respondent has been in principle decided against him in the subsequent case of Fox v. Townsend, 152 Cal. 51, 55, 91 Pac. 1004, 1007. There the point was that certain correction deeds made to the state by the tax collector, after the state had parted with title to the land, could not aid the title of the purchaser from it. In answer to this claim, it was there said: "Nor do we perceive any force in the objections that the correction deeds to the state were made after the state had parted with the title. No reason is discernible why the state, like a private individual, may not obtain a proper correction deed for the betterment of the title to property which it has conveyed, and, if this be done after conveyance, why, as in the case of an individual, it should not serve to perfect the title granted." In principle there can be no difference in the effect of the validating act as far as feeding and perfecting the title of a purchaser from the state before its passage, and a correction deed to the state subsequently made, which it is held has that effect. They both operate to do so.

It was held in Baird v. Monroe that, at the expiration of the five years from the date of the sale to the state, the state was entitled to a deed; it was then equitably the owner of the property. If, therefore, the deed from the tax collector, which the law requires shall be made by him to the state, is ineffectual to convey to it the legal title by reason of the admission of certain necessary recitals, its equitable title still exists, and when a validating act has confirmed and legalized the original deed to the state, the title so acquired inures to the benefit of a purchaser from the state taking his conveyance prior to the passage of the act.

In the case of Schamblin v. Means, 6 Cal. App. 261, 265, 91 Pac. 1020, 1022, this precise question was involved, and, following the doctrine as laid down in Fox v. Townsend, supra, it was said: "The state, at the end of the five-year period of redemption, acquired an equitable title to the property by a deed which was subsequently confirmed and made valid. There was no right or property taken away from the appellant or his predecessor in title, as the absolute right of redemption expired at the end of the five-year period. Taking the view, however, that the curative act operated to make good only the title to the state as of the date of its passage, such additionally acquired title went to feed and validate the title of defendant."

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to pass upon the validity of the correction deeds to the state made subsequent to the sale of the lot by the state to defendant. The validating act operated to vest title to the property in the state as of the date when the originally defective deed to it was made, and, as the title inured to the benefit of defendant under his conveyance from the state, any consideration of the correction deeds becomes unimportant. The curative act validated the original defective conveyance to the state, vested in it the title to the lot in question as of the date of the original deed by the tax collector to it, and the title so validated inured to the benefit of defendant independent of any correction deeds.

In this view, the conclusion reached by the trial court against the validity of the title of defendant, asserted under the deed by the state to him of March 1, 1902, was erroneous, and the order denying the motion for a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

154 Cal. 735

SHERWOOD et al. v. WALLIN et al.
(S. F. 4829.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 383*) — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—EFFECT.

Under the law of West Virginia, providing that, when a resolution of stockholders increasing the capital stock of a corporation has been certified to the Secretary of State, he shall issue a certificate reciting the resolution, and declaring the action to be authorized by law, which certificate shall be received in all courts as evidence of the change and of authority to effect the same, the certificate of the Secretary was at least prima facie evidence of the giving of the notice required by law as to the meeting of the stockholders for the purpose of increasing the stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1664; Dec. Dig. § 383.*]

2. NOTICE (§ 11*)—NOTICE BY PUBLICATION—SUFFICIENCY.

A requirement that a notice be published for a designated number of weeks in some newspaper published in the county is fully satisfied by a publication once each week for the designated number of weeks in a daily newspaper published in the county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Notice, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

3. NOTICE (§ 11*)—NOTICE BY PUBLICATION—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—COMPLIANCE.

The law of West Virginia requiring corporations organized thereunder who desire to increase their capital stock to give notice by advertisement published at least two weeks before such action in some newspaper published in the county was satisfied by two publications, once in each week for two successive weeks, in a daily newspaper, the first publication being more than two weeks prior to the day noticed for the meeting of the stockholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Notice, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 289*).

The owner of stock standing in his name on the books of the corporation is entitled to have a certificate therefor issued to him, and a certificate legally issued by de facto officers of the corporation entitles him to vote at a corporate meeting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1242; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 289*)—DE FACTO DIRECTORS—POWERS—ASSESSMENTS ON CAPITAL STOCK.

A de facto board of directors of a corporation may exercise the powers of a de jure board in the matter of levying assessments on the capital stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1242; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 289*)—DE FACTO DIRECTORS—POWERS.

A de facto board of directors of a corporation may legally call a special meeting of stockholders for the purpose of increasing capital stock, where under the by-laws such call may be made at any time by a majority of the board of directors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1242; Dec. Dig. § 289.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by L. M. Sherwood and another against Frank A. Wallin and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Purcell Rowe (Jordan, Rowe & Brann, of counsel), for appellants. Edwin L. Forster and Robert R. Moody, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action instituted by two stockholders of the Golden Key Mining Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of West Virginia, and having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco in this state, wherein all of its property is situate and all of its business is done and all of its stockholders reside, against such corporation and numerous stockholders thereof. The object of the action was to obtain relief by way of injunction and otherwise from certain acts of the defendants, other than the corporation, alleged to have been done by said defendants in the furtherance of a conspiracy to deprive plaintiffs of their rights as the owners and holders of a majority of the capital stock of the corporation. Among other acts assailed was one of March 4, 1903, purporting to increase the capital stock of the corporation from 100,000 shares, of the par value of $1 per share, to 200,000 shares of the same par value per share. The only defendants served with summons or who appeared in the action were the corporation and Messrs. Wallin, Nauman, and A. W. McQueen. The trial court found against all allegations of conspiracy, and no complaint is made as to these findings. It did find that a certain so-called equalizing issue of capital stock amounting to 10,980 shares, issued under a resolution of May 8, 1900, was invalid, and so decreed by its judgment, and as to this no complaint is made. Otherwise its judgment was in favor of defendants. Plaintiffs have appealed from this judgment, assailing only the conclusion of the trial court as to the validity of the proceedings for the increase of the capital stock from 100,000 to 200,000 shares, which increase the court found to be regular, legal, and valid.

Under the laws of West Virginia in force at the time of the attempted action, any corporation might "by resolution at any general or special meeting of the stockholders, * * * make such reduction or increase in the number of shares of its capital stock, or the par value of each share, as may be decided upon by said stockholders, a majority of the stock * * * being represented by the holders thereof at such meeting in person or by proxy and voting therefor; provided that notice be given by advertisement published at least two weeks before such action in some newspaper of general circulation printed in the county wherein the principal office of such corporation is located, if such office be within this state; and if such office be not within this state, then in some newspaper printed at the capital of this state, of the intention to offer such resolution." The law further provided that, when such a change shall have been made, the president of the corporation shall certify the resolution to the Secretary of State, who shall issue to the corporation a certificate reciting the resolution and declaring the action to be authorized by law, which certificate shall be received in all courts and places as evidence of the change and of the authority to effect the same. The by-laws of the corporation provided that a special meeting of the stockholders might be called at any time "by a majority of the board of directors," and that at all meetings of stockholders a majority of the shares of stock, whether present in person or by proxy, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

A finding of the trial court which is not assailed establishes the fact to be that defendants Wallin, Nauman, and McQueen, and their associates, have ever since March 12, 1901, constituted the de facto board of directors of such corporation, having possession of all the records and property thereof, and performing all the functions of directors and officers, under an election attempted to be had on March 12, 1901. It is further established by an unassailed finding that in February, 1903, said de facto board issued a call for a meeting of the stockholders to be held on March 4, 1903, for the purpose of so increasing the capital stock. The court found that due notice of this meeting was given in the manner required by the laws of West Virginia, and that at the meeting of the stockholders held at the time noticed "there was present and acting throughout a quorum of stockholders." It is as to these two matters only that the claim is made that the findings are not supported by the evidence.

The finding of due notice of the meeting, which means no more than that the advertisement required by the statute was given in all respects as required thereby, was undoubtedly correct in view of the evidence. The certificate of the Secretary of State of West Virginia was, under the statute, at least prima facie evidence of the giving of the notice required by the law. The evidence introduced by plaintiffs to destroy the effect of the certificate showed nothing at variance therewith. It appeared therefrom that the notice was published in the Charleston Daily News, a newspaper printed and published daily in the state of West Virginia, in two issues thereof, to wit, on February 10, 1903, and on February 17, 1903, "and no more." It is urged that publication in a daily paper, such as the Charleston Daily News, should have been made daily for 14 days. There is nothing in the statute under consideration specifying the kind of newspaper with respect to frequency of issue, or requiring the notice to be published for the prescribed time as often as the paper is issued during such times. The requirement is simply that the advertisement be published "at least two weeks before such action in some newspaper," etc. It is settled in this state that a requirement that a notice be published for a designated number of weeks in some newspaper published in the county is fully satisfied by a publication once each week, for the designated number of weeks, in a daily newspaper published in the county. People v. Reclamation District, 121 Cal. 522, 524, 50 Pac. 1068, 53 Pac. 1085; Chapman v. Zoberlein, 152 Cal. 216, 92 Pac. 188, 190. Presumably, the law in this respect is the same in West Virginia. It may be assumed that the language of the statute is such as to require a publication once a week for two weeks before the day noticed for the meeting. As has been seen, the first publication was on February 10, 1903, more than two weeks before the time fixed for the meeting. The two publications, one each week, constituted a publication for two weeks, just as in Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 515, 38 Pac. 900, a publication for fourteen consecutive days constituted a required publication of "at least two weeks," and the requisite period of two weeks had fully elapsed prior to the day noticed for the meeting. See, also, State v. Yellow Jacket, etc., M. Co., 5 Nev. 415.

As to the finding that there was a quorum of stockholders present at the meeting of March 4, 1903: In order to constitute a quorum, it was necessary that more than 44,510 shares should be present and represented. The records of the corporation showed that 56,055 shares were represented at the meeting. This did not include any of the equalizing issue of 10,980 shares held by the court to be illegal. In order to make up said 56,055 shares, however, it was necessary to count 17,500 shares represented and voted by Frank A. Wallin, which stood on the books of the corporation in his name. The claim is that this should not have been counted, for the reason, as we understand the contention of learned counsel for plaintiffs, that Wallin had no valid certificate therefor, in that the certificate held by him was not signed by the president and secretary of the corporation, and the by-laws provided, "No certificate of stock shall be valid unless signed by both the president and secretary and sealed with the corporate seal." By the bill of exceptions the following is made to appear: Wallin had acquired this stock from Geo. W. Mann prior to March 12, 1901, on which day the stock stood on the books in the name of Mann. On the last-named day the de facto board of directors organized by the election of Wallin as president and one Cowherd as secretary. Immediately thereafter Wallin surrendered the certificate for 17,500 shares in the name of Mann, and the same was canceled and a new certificate therefor, signed by Wallin as president and Cowherd as secretary, was issued to Wallin, and an entry of the transfer made on the records of the corporation. There was no other act or proceeding in relation to this certificate until the shares were voted at the meeting of March 4, 1903. Up to the time of the meeting of March 12, 1901, plaintiff L. M. Sherwood was the duly elected, qualified, and acting president of the corporation, having been elected in June, 1900, and the by-laws provided that the officers of the corporation should hold their respective offices for one year, and until their successors are chosen and qualified. It is urged that, at the time of the issuance of this certificate, Mr. Sherwood was the de jure president of the corporation, and that the certificate, not being signed by him, is ineffectual for any purpose. So far as the record available on this appeal shows, Wallin was the owner of this stock, and the same stood in his name on the books of the corporation. Under these circumstances he was entitled to have the certificate therefor issued to him. The issuance of such certificate was a mere ministerial act which the officers of the corporation were bound to perform in the exercise of the routine duties of their offices. If we assume that such issuance was essential to Wallin's right to vote the stock at the meeting of March 4, 1903 (see, however, Clark and Marshall on Priv. Corps. §§ 378b, 653a and 653b), we have no doubt that the certificate must be held to have been legally issued by the de facto officers. The claim of plaintiffs that there was no quorum present at the meeting of March 4, 1903, is based wholly on the claim as to these 17,500 shares. From what we have said, it follows that the finding is fully sustained.

The only other point made on this appeal is that the special stockholders' meeting of March 4, 1903, was not legally called, for the reason, shown on the face of the findings, that it was called by those who were found to be only the de facto board of directors. A valid call for the special meeting of the stockholders was essential to the validity of the proceedings for the increase of the capital stock. Under the by-laws, such a call could be made at any time by a majority of the board of directors. Did the de facto board of directors have this power? We can conceive of no good reason why it should be held that they did not. They, under the well-recognized definition of de facto officers of corporations and the other specific facts found by the court, were the persons who for nearly two years had actually held office as directors, with the consent of the corporation, and, under color of an election, had exercised all the functions of such offices, and were in peaceful possession as such directors of all the corporate property. See 3 Clark and Marshall on Priv. Corps. § 662. There is nothing in the findings to indicate that their assumption of the office of directors was not acquiesced in by all of the stockholders, and, under the findings, they must be held to have been possessed of all the power of de facto directors. It is conceded that such a de facto board may legally perform such acts as are within the scope of the corporation's business. In 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. (2d. Ed.) p. 778, we find it stated that as a general rule the acts of de facto officers of a corporation, within the power of the offices they assume to hold, are valid and binding on the corporation. In 10 Cyc. 755, it is declared that, as a general rule, such acts are deemed valid in respect to third persons, the corporation, the shareholders, and the directors themselves. It is settled in this state, in accord with the great weight of authority, that a de facto board of directors of a corporation may exercise the powers of a de jure board in the matter of levying assessments on the capital stock. San Joaquin L. & W. Co. v. Beecher, 101 Cal. 70, 80, 35 Pac. 349. See, also, 3 Clark and Marshall on Priv. Corps. §§ 499b, 662. The principle which upholds the action of de facto officers of corporations has been held to apply to the calling of a meeting for the election of officers. See 10 Cyc. 325; Smith v. Erb, 4 Gill (Md.) 437; Commonwealth v. Smith, 45 Pa. 59. It is difficult to see why the rule does not apply in the matter of calling a special meeting of the stockholders to consider and act upon any matter pertaining to the corporation, as to which, under the law, the stockholders may act at a special meeting. The calling of such a meeting is the performance of the most ordinary of the duties devolving on corporation directors, and the only effect thereof is to enable the stockholders themselves to determine in the manner provided by law as to matters affecting the corporation and their interests therein, the board of directors being simply the machinery by which the stockholders may be legally brought together.

It appears to have been held in Re Wheeler, 2 Abb. Prac., N. S. (N. Y.) 361, that where the statute required that every director should be a stockholder, and that notice of a stockholders' meeting to effect an increase of the capital stock should be signed by a majority of the directors, and the notice was signed by four out of the seven acting as directors, but one of the three so signing was not a stockholder, the subsequent vote for the increase of stock was illegal. This is the only case cited which is at all against the view we have stated. No point appears to have been made in that case as to the power of this acting director as a director de facto, it appearing to be assumed that, if he was not a director de jure, he was altogether without power as a director at all. This view is opposed to the rule declared in this state in San Jose Savings Bank v. Sierra, etc., Co., 63 Cal. 179, where it was held that a director who had ceased to be a stockholder continued to be a director de facto until ousted in a direct proceeding. See, also, Balfour-Guthrie Co. v. Woodworth, 124 Cal. 169, 173, 56 Pac. 891; Mining Co. v. Anglo-Cal. Bank, 104 U. S. 192, 26 L. Ed. 707. We are of the opinion that the call for the special meeting must be held, upon the findings, to have been valid, and the meeting held in pursuance thereof to have been a legal meeting.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

154 Cal. 710

GERMAN SAVINGS & LOAN SOCIETY v. McLELLAN. (S. F. 4533.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS (§ 10*)—ESSENTIALS—MEETING OF MINDS.

There can be no contract without a meeting of minds and mutuality of agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 32*) — REQUISITES—CLEAR UNDERSTANDING.

A contract will not be specifically enforced unless there has been a clear mutual understanding and mutuality of assent to the terms of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 89; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 80*)—CONTRACT TO CONVEY—MUTUALITY OF UNDERSTANDING—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence respecting a contract to convey land held to show want of mutuality of understanding concerning a spring to be reserved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 135; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Action by the German Savings & Loan Society against W. S. McLellan. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Goodfellow & Eells, for appellant. W. S. McLellan, in pro. per.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action commenced March 7, 1899, to quiet plaintiff's title to a tract of land in Contra Costa county, containing some 261.33 acres. Plaintiff is the owner thereof except in so far as its title is affected by an alleged parol contract of sale set up in defendant's cross-complaint, under which it is alleged he entered into and remains in possession, and as to which he seeks specific performance. The issues made by the cross-complaint and plaintiff's answer were tried by the court with an advisory jury, findings of the jury in favor of the defendant were adopted by the court, and a decree of specific performance was given on October 3, 1899, as to the land, "save and except the small pipe spring further from the house shall be retained to plaintiff, with privilege of running the water through pipes over the land, conveyed to tanks prepared to receive such water and to carry such water from said tanks." On October 2, 1905, an order was made denying a motion for a new trial. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for new trial.

For the purposes of this appeal, it is necessary to consider but one point. The property in question was a part of a tract of land owned by plaintiff, known as the "Hemme Ranch," which had been subdivided into smaller subdivisions for purposes of sale, and a map thereof showing such subdivisions, numbered as lots, had been made. Lots 32, 33, 34, and 35, with an area of 73.70 acres, comprised what is called the "orchard tract," lot 30 adjoining this on the northeast contained 33½ acres of farming land, and lot 28, southwest, west, and northwest of the orchard, contained 254.06 acres of hill and pasture land. There was on the orchard tract and about 100 yards from the house thereon a valuable spring, known as the "large" or "main" spring, which was connected by pipes with tanks owned by plaintiff situated on the Hemme ranch, and the water of this spring, which was the main supply of such tanks, was used by various persons holding under plaintiff, including any occupant of the orchard tract. The testimony indicated that there was also a small undeveloped spring on this tract, some 200 yards or more from the house; but there was some evidence on the part of defendant that there was in fact no real spring there, and the jury in response to the question, "How many springs were there on the property in question near the house?" answered, "One." In the southeasterly corner of lot 28, in accordance with defendant's testimony, about one-fourth of a mile from the house, there was a developed spring, very much smaller than the one in the orchard, but sufficient, defendant testified, "for farming purposes for one or two families." There was some slight testimony which indicates that this spring was also connected by pipes with the tanks. Defendant first examined this property in the early part of October, 1899, being shown it by Mr. Harrison, plaintiff's agent in charge, who was without any authority, so far as appears, to make any definite arrangements. Whatever definite arrangements were made were had with Mr. Tourny, secretary of plaintiff, at plaintiff's bank in San Francisco. After some preliminary meetings Mr. Tourny and defendant apparently reached an understanding on October 20, 1899, that defendant was to purchase, for a consideration as to which there is some dispute and which is not material on the point we are discussing, the orchard tract, lot 30 (the farming land), and the portion of lot 28 lying south of a line then roughly drawn on the map by them across said lot, which would include the spring thereon. It is undisputed that it was understood that plaintiff was to reserve one spring, the tanks, and the right to conduct water to the tanks through the pipes on the land to be sold. The question here is what spring was so intended to be reserved. Defendant then gave to Mr. Tourny his wife's check for $440.89 on account of the $2,000 to be paid on delivery of the deed, the remainder of the purchase price to be secured by mortgage. A survey was to be made to obtain the description of the portion of lot 28 to be conveyed, and, pending such survey and preparation of the necessary deed and mortgage, defendant went into possession of the premises on November 13th. He expended thereon something in the neighborhood of $1,000 in farming operations and in improving the house. When it came to the matter of executing the papers in December, 1899, it was discovered that there was a misunderstanding as to which spring was to be reserved, and negotiations were at once broken off, and this litigation immediately followed. The check given by defendant has never been cashed, and plaintiff offered to return it both in December, 1899, and on the trial. No resolution was ever adopted by plaintiff's board of directors authorizing any sale of any property to defendant until the succeeding February. This February resolution was excluded from evidence on objection of defendant, but Mr. Tourny testified that it correctly stated the terms of the agreement between himself and defendant, which means, of course, that it stated them in accord with his version of those terms, which is entirely at variance with defendant's statement as to the terms.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The jury specifically found that plaintiff, as part of the sale referred to in the cross-complaint, sold to defendant "the large spring nearest the dwelling house," that Tourny in making his memorandum hereinafter described referred to such large spring, that Tourny was not bargaining to give defendant the small spring, and that at the time the check was given the minds of both defendant and Tourny were agreed upon the small spring as the one to be reserved. While the evidence may have been sufficient to support a finding that defendant understood that he was to have the spring nearest to the house, which was the main or large spring, we can find nothing therein warranting a conclusion that Tourny, representing the plaintiff, was negotiating upon any other theory than that the plaintiff was to reserve that spring from the transfer, and that the most that plaintiff was willing to concede in regard to it was that defendant might use water therefrom in common with other persons occupying land purchased from or held under plaintiff.

The evidence establishes very clearly that, when the matter of the springs was first talked of, the representatives of plaintiff desired to retain all the springs, allowing defendant simply to use water therefrom in common with other purchasers and occupants, but that defendant objected to such an arrangement, and that finally it was understood that he should take all but one spring. When the arrangement was finally made between Tourny and defendant, on October 20th, Tourny had not personally seen the property, and his knowledge of the location of the springs was obtained entirely from Harrison over the telephone. Tourny testified that Harrison told him over the telephone about the springs, that there were two, and that the larger one where the main supply of water came from would have to be retained by the bank, but that the defendant might use water therefrom; that he received this information in the presence of defendant, making a memorandum of the terms of the agreement as he did so, and informing defendant as to the message; that he also said to defendant, "I would give you this spring if I could, but Mr. Harrison tells me it is needed here for the ranch; we can't do without it; we must have this water." In this written memorandum of the terms of the agreement then made by Tourny, which was introduced in evidence by defendant, appears the following: "Agt. for spring (small spring near house to go to purchaser other spring to be retained & privilege given to remove tanks to suitable elevation.)" There is really nothing substantial in defendant's testimony, which was the only other evidence as to the arrangement on this matter between Tourny and defendant, that conflicts with this testimony of Tourny as to his understanding in regard to which spring was to be reserved. It is true that on his direct examination defendant testified that Tourny had said to him, "We will sell you the spring next to the house." But his cross-examination demonstrated that whatever was said by Tourny relative to the spring near or nearest to the house was based upon the assumption, known to defendant, that it was not the largest or main spring, and that it was the desire and intention of plaintiff not to convey the main spring. In his deposition read on such cross-examination, and acknowledged by him to be correct, he said: "He told me that he would sell me the spring nearest the house; that they reserved the spring on the hill for themselves; and he said the spring on the hill was the largest spring, and that they reserved that for themselves. * * * I told him I wanted the largest spring. I thought I was entitled to it, buying the land, and he said, 'No,' that Harrison said that they must keep the largest spring." In no place did he deny that Tourny consistently insisted that the largest spring—the main spring—was to be reserved, and the defendant was to have the small spring. The following is an example of his cross-examination: "Q. Did he tell you also that you were to have the smaller of the two springs, the smallest spring of the two? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now you are claiming the bigger one, ain't you? A. I know nothing about the bigger one. Q. I say the one you are claiming now is the bigger one? A. I believe it is. Q. You are claiming now what he didn't intend to give you? A. I am claiming what he sold me. Q. You are not claiming what he intended to sell you? A. I don't know what he intended to sell me. I know what I believe he intended to sell me." On redirect examination he said: "He didn't say the smaller spring of the two. He said I would have that spring which was the smaller spring; the one nearest the house was the one he was selling me." Whatever may have been defendant's idea as to which of the two springs was the larger, the one in the orchard or the one on lot 28, we can see no warrant in the evidence as to what transpired between the parties for the conclusion that Tourny, acting for the plaintiff, was willing to part with what was in fact the larger spring, whether it was the spring nearest the house or not, or for any assumption on the part of defendant from what Tourny said that he was to have the spring nearer the house, if it was, in fact, the larger spring. He was informed in the plainest and most unequivocal terms that the largest spring must be reserved. The words "small" and "large" as used in describing the springs cannot, under the circumstances, be entirely disregarded. Therefore, assuming that defendant believed that he was bargaining for the spring nearest the house, it is manifest from what was said that Tourny intended to reserve what was in fact the larger spring, and that the minds of the two did not meet as to the particular spring to be reserved.

There can be no contract unless the minds of the parties have met and mutually agreed. Equity requires as a condition of specific performance a clear mutual understanding and a positive assent on both sides as to the terms of the contract. See 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 21; Cortelyou's Appeal, 102 Pa. 576; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 526; Wristen v. Bowles, 82 Cal. 84, 22 Pac. 1136. The evidence of the oral negotiations between Tourny and defendant does not furnish support for a conclusion that there was any such mutual understanding in the matter of the spring to be reserved, and this was a most material part of their proposed contract.

Our views upon the question thus discussed render it unnecessary to consider any of the many other objections made by plaintiff to the specific performance of this alleged contract.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

(154 Cal. 695)

BOLLINGER v. BOLLINGER et al.
(S. F. 4305.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1908.)

1. PARTIES (§ 76*)—WANT OF CAPACITY TO SUE—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

In a suit by executors of a deceased child of a grantor to establish a trust in land conveyed by the grantor, the complaint alleged the conveyance by the grantor in trust for himself for life, and at his death for distribution among his children, the death of the child subsequent to the death of the grantor, the appointment and qualification of the executors, and averred that the letters testamentary had not been suspended or revoked, and that the executors were the duly qualified and acting executors. On the trial, it appeared that prior to the filing of the complaint a decree distributing the estate of the deceased child had been entered, but not discharging the executors. Held, that the objection that the executors were not entitled to recover was an objection to their legal capacity to sue, and was waived under Code Civ. Proc. § 434, because not taken advantage of by demurrer or answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Dec. Dig. § 76.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 396*)—COMPLAINT—FINDINGS—VARIANCE.

The complaint, in a suit by executors of a deceased child of the grantor to establish a trust in land conveyed by the grantor, alleged the conveyance by the grantor in trust for himself until his death, and then for distribution among his children, and averred the death of the child subsequent to the death of the grantor, and that the child was entitled to one-fifth of the property on the death of the grantor. The court found that on the death of the grantor the child was entitled under the trust to one-fifth of the property remaining in the hands of the grantee as trustee. Held, that the variance between the complaint and the findings was immaterial, within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 469, 470, providing that a variance between the pleading and the proof shall not be deemed material unless it actually misleads the adverse party, and that where the variance is not material the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 935; Dec. Dig. § 396.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 44*)—PAROL TRUSTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

To prove a trust by parol under a conveyance absolute in terms, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 68; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1010*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Whether the evidence in a suit to establish a parol trust under a conveyance absolute in terms is clear, satisfactory, and convincing, must be determined by the trial court, and its determination will be accepted by the court on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3979; Dec. Dig. § 1010.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 44*)—PAROL TRUSTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to establish a parol trust in land conveyed by a deed absolute in terms, and the purposes, subject-matter, and beneficiaries thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 66; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 230*)—ADMISSIONS—DECLARATIONS OF GRANTOR AFTER EXECUTION OF CONVEYANCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Declarations of a grantor in a deed purporting to convey the absolute title to the grantee, made after the conveyance, and in the absence of the grantee to the effect that the conveyance was made in trust and that the grantee held the property in trust, are inadmissible to establish the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 835-851; Dec. Dig. § 230.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 404*)—IMPEACHMENT—PROOF OF CONTRADICTIONARY STATEMENTS.

Where a witness called by a party to prove a fact failed to give any evidence in support of the fact and gave no affirmative testimony, the party was not entitled to prove that the witness had made statements establishing the fact, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052, authorizing a party producing a witness to contradict him by other evidence, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1272; Dec. Dig. § 404.*]

8. ACTION (§ 50*)—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES.

A cause of action charging that the grantee in a deed obtained the deed by undue influence and fraud, prosecuted after the death of the grantor for the benefit of his heirs and devisees, and a cause of action charging that the grantee received title to the premises conveyed under an express trust for the benefit of the children of the grantor, prosecuted by the executors of a deceased child of the grantor after the death of the grantor, are improperly joined as against a demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 511, 512; Dec. Dig. § 50.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by Mary A. L. Bollinger against George Y. Bollinger and others, in which William Pullan and another, individually and as executors of Mary C. Pullan, deceased, filed a cross-complaint against defendants and plaintiff. From a judgment for plaintiffs in the cross-complaint, defendant George Y. Bollinger appeals. Reversed and remanded.

The following opinion in the above-entitled cause was handed down by Hall, J., in the District Court of Appeal of the First appellate district, in which Cooper, P. J., and Kerrigan, J., concurred:

"This action was brought by plaintiff, Mary A. L. Bollinger, to have it decreed that certain property conveyed by the late husband of plaintiff, Christian Bollinger (now deceased), to George Y. Bollinger, without consideration, was community property of plaintiff and her late husband, and that George Y. Bollinger holds one-half thereof in trust for plaintiff, etc., etc.

"Plaintiff made not only George Y. Bollinger, who is a son of Christian Bollinger, defendant, but also made the other children of Christian Bollinger, and William Pullan and George Pullan, as executors of the will of Mary C. Pullan, a daughter of Christian Bollinger, who died subsequently to his decease, and the children and certain grandchildren of said Mary C. Pullan, defendants.

"Answers were made to plaintiff's complaint by George Y. Bollinger as well as by others of the defendants, and upon the trial the findings and judgment were against plaintiff, and no appeal has been taken by her or her representatives (she having died after the commencement of the action).

"William Pullan and George Pullan, individually and as executors of the will of Mary C. Pullan, besides answering plaintiff's complaint, filed a cross-complaint against defendant George Y. Bollinger, to which they also made all the other defendants as well as the plaintiff defendants, by which they sought to have it decreed that the same transfers of said property by Christian Bollinger to defendant George Y. Bollinger were obtained through the undue influence and fraud of said George Y. Bollinger, and that ever since said transfers he has held the legal title to the property transferred in trust for Christian Bollinger until his death, and that therefrom he has held and now holds the legal title to one-fifth of said property in trust for cross-complainants, and that he be compelled to transfer one-fifth thereof to said cross-complainants.

"Upon the trial of the issues made by said cross-complaint and the answer thereto of George Y. Bollinger, William and George Pullan, as executors of the will of Mary C. Pullan, recovered judgment to the effect that George Y. Bollinger holds in trust for said executors of the will of Mary C. Pullan one-fifth of certain property therein described, and directing transfer thereof accordingly.

"From this judgment, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, said George Y. Bollinger has appealed.

"(1) Appellant contends that reversible error was committed by the court in overruling his demurrer to respondents' cross-complaint. The cross-complaint contains two counts, and the demurrer is to each count. Appellant discovers in each count four distinct causes of action, to wit, (1) an alleged cause of action for undue influence exercised by George Y. Bollinger over Christian Bollinger; (2) an alleged cause of action for defrauding Christian Bollinger by George Y. Bollinger; (3) an alleged cause of action for defrauding the surviving children and the children of the deceased child of Christian Bollinger by George Y. Bollinger; and (4) an alleged cause of action to enforce a trust in favor of the surviving children and the children of the deceased child of Christian Bollinger.

"It is claimed that the two first alleged causes of action are actions that might have been brought by Christian Bollinger in his lifetime, and on his death passed to his estate, while the last two are actions in favor of his children, and in which his estate has no interest, and for this reason that said actions are improperly joined.

"It is certain that the cross-complaint does contain some allegations pointing to an action in favor of Christian Bollinger's estate; but on the trial of the action the court found against the allegations of the cross-complainant in this regard, and found such facts as support an action to establish and enforce a trust in favor of the children of Christian Bollinger, of whom Mary C. Pullan, respondents' testatrix, was one at the time of his death, and the decree enforces the trust in favor of the respondents as executors of her will only.

"The facts alleged and found bring the case, as to the rights of Mary C. Pullan, upon the death of Christian Bollinger, clearly within the rule laid down in Brisson v. Brisson, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Id., 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 26 Pac. 599, 22 Am. St. Rep. 268; Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171.

"The prayer of the cross-complaint sought only to enforce a trust in one-fifth of the property conveyed, as a right that inured to Mary C. Pullan upon the death of Christian Bollinger and the repudiation of the trust by appellant.

"As before stated, the court found against the allegations of the cross-complaint and in favor of the appellant upon the matters tending to support actions in favor of the estate of Christian Bollinger. Under these circumstances we think it clear that appellant could not have been injured by the ruling of the court upon the demurrer, even though such ruling may have been erroneous. Judgment should not be reversed for errors that do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 475; Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183, 9 Pac. 176, 12 Pac. 449; Angell v. Hopkins, 79 Cal. 181, 21 Pac. 729; Hirshfeld v. Weill, 121 Cal. 13, 53 Pac. 402.

"(2) Upon the trial it was shown that, prior to the filing of the cross-complaint, the decree of distribution of the estate of Mary C. Pullan, deceased, had been made and entered. By this decree her estate, described as consisting of $1,688.30, was distributed to her legatees. The decree also contained the words: 'And any other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to the said estate, or in which the said estate may have any interest, be and the same is hereby distributed as follows,' etc., etc. The receipts of the distributees, acknowledging in general terms the receipt of the property of the estate in accordance with the decree, were also in evidence. It is not contended, however, that the legatees did receive the property in this action sued for, or that the executors have ever been discharged. It is insisted, however, that the evidence above mentioned showed that respondents, as executors of the estate of Mary C. Pullan, are not entitled to recover.

"This objection, we think, goes to the legal capacity of the respondents to sue, and should have been taken by the answer in order to avail appellants.

"The cause of action alleged and found was one that belonged to Mary C. Pullan at the time of her death, and upon her death passed to her estate. The cross-complaint alleged the death of Mary C. Pullan subsequent to the death of Christian Bollinger, and the due appointment and qualification of respondents as the executors of her will, and the issuance to them of letters testamentary, and 'that said letters have not been suspended, revoked, or discharged, and that cross-complainants are still the duly qualified and acting executors of the estate of Mary C. Pullan, deceased.' These allegations support the right of respondents to maintain this action for the benefit of the estate. They are not denied, and therefore stand admitted, and no affirmative matter is alleged to countervail the effect of said allegations.

"Under these admitted allegations respondents were entitled to sue to enforce any right belonging to the estate of Mary C. Pullan. The objection, not having been taken by demurrer or answer, must be deemed to have been waived. Code Civ. Proc. § 434. The motion for nonsuit on this ground was properly denied.

"In what we have just said, however, we are not to be understood as indicating that the executors may not enforce by suit rights of the estate to property held adversely, after the entry of the decree of distribution but before actual delivery under such decree to the distributees. An examination of the cases cited by appellant to sustain his contention discloses that in each case the executor had actually delivered the property to heir or legatee. Prior to such delivery it would seem that the executors have the right to possess all the property of the estate as against all the world save the distributees. But in the condition of the pleadings it is not necessary for us to decide the point on this appeal.

"(3) We are asked to reverse the judgment for the reason that the terms and beneficiaries of the trust found are not in accordance with the allegations of the cross-complaint.

"It is substantially alleged in the cross-complaint that appellant agreed with and represented to his father, Christian Bollinger, that, if he would deed and transfer his property to appellant, he would simply hold the legal title to said property, and that upon the death of said Christian Bollinger he would immediately divide all of said property among the children of said Christian Bollinger, or the representatives of any deceased child, share and share alike, to wit, one-fifth of said property to each child, and make and give good and sufficient deeds of conveyance of the real property, and transfers of the personal property, to each of the said children or their representatives, in the proportions aforesaid.

"The transfers and conveyances to appellant were accordingly made, but appellant, after the death of his father, to wit, about January 1, 1901, for the first time denied and repudiated the trust.

"The court found that the appellant solicited and urged his father, Christian Bollinger, to transfer his property to him, and that if he would so transfer said property he, said George Y. Bollinger, would manage the same with ability, integrity, and honesty, and that he would hold the same in trust upon certain terms and for certain purposes, which are specifically set out in the finding, 'and in the event of the death of Christian Bollinger before the death of Mary A. L. Bollinger, all of said property then remaining in his hands, and all its accumulations then remaining in his hands, under said trust should immediately vest in and become the property of said David A. Bollinger, said Emma Bare, said Elizabeth C. Bare, said Mary C. Pullan, and said George Y. Bollinger, an undivided one-fifth to each, and that said George Y. Bollinger would in that event execute to said David A. Bollinger, Emma Bare, Elizabeth C. Bare, Mary C. Pullan, and George Y. Bollinger proper conveyances of said property and its said accumulations, vested as aforesaid an undivided one-fifth to each.'

"The Mary A. L. Bollinger mentioned in the finding was the wife of Christian Bollinger, and the five other persons mentioned therein are the five children of said Christian.

"In point of fact, as appears by the allegations and admissions of the pleadings, Christian Bollinger did die before his wife, Mary A. L. Bollinger. It was only upon the death of Christian Bollinger that Mary C. Pullan would be entitled to any of the property, or to enforce any trust therein under the allegations of the cross-complaint. It is the trust for her benefit alone that is sought to be enforced in this action, and the terms and trusts upon which the property was held prior to the death of Christian Bollinger are and were immaterial to her or her cause of action.

"Upon the death of Christian Bollinger, under the trust as found Mary C. Pullan was entitled to one-fifth of the property then remaining in the hands of the trustee. Under the trust as alleged she was entitled to one-fifth of the trust property upon the death of Christian Bollinger. The trust found in her favor is within the terms of the trust as alleged. The finding corresponds in substance with the allegations so far as they affect the rights of Mary C. Pullan, or her estate, against appellant. In other words, the variance between the findings and the allegations is as to matters that do not affect the judgment or the rights of the parties. The legal result as to the respective rights of appellant and respondents is the same in either case. We think the variance immaterial, and one that could not have misled appellant to his prejudice, especially in view of the fact that he denied the existence of any trust, and claimed the property as his own. Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

"Where the variance is not material, as provided in the last section, the court may direct the fact to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment.' Code Civ. Proc. § 470.

"See, also, Carter v. Rhodes, 135 Cal. 46, 66 Pac. 985; Began v. O'Reilly, 32 Cal. 11; Davis v. Baugh, 59 Cal. 568; Herman v. Hecht, 116 Cal. 553, 48 Pac. 611; Stockton, etc., Works v. Glen Falls Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 53 Pac. 565; Duke v. Huntington, 130 Cal. 272, 62 Pac. 510; Foster v. Carr, 135 Cal. 83, 67 Pac. 43.

"(4) The general objection urged that the evidence in proof of the trust was erroneously admitted is practically disposed of by what we have said upon the preceding point. Some of the evidence tended to prove terms of the trust not alleged, but none thus proved are inconsistent with the trust alleged and found in favor of the children upon the death of Christian Bollinger. Much of the testimony went to general admissions made by George Y. Bollinger, after the death of his father, to the effect that he held the property 'in trust,' and 'in trust for the children,' and the like. All of this was corroborative of the direct evidence given in the deposition of David A. Bollinger tending to prove a trust in favor of Mary C. Pullan as one of the children of Christian Bollinger, which was enforceable by her executors on her death.

"(5) It is next urged that the evidence is insufficient to establish any trust, and appellant invokes the rule that, to prove a trust by parol under conveyances absolute in terms, the evidence must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. The rule invoked is amply supported by authority, and is founded in sound reason. But its proper application, where there is substantial evidence to support the existence of a trust, must be left largely to the trial court. As was said in Harris v. Harris, 136 Cal. 379, 69 Pac. 23: 'Whether the evidence in any particular case is of this character' (clear, satisfactory, and convincing) 'must be determined by the trial court, and its determination thereon will be accepted by this court as conclusive.' See, also, Sherman v. Sandel, 106 Cal. 373, 39 Pac. 797.

"In the case at bar Christian Bollinger was at the date of the transfer 79 years of age, and so illiterate that he could neither read nor write—not even sign his own name. He had five children, of whom appellant, then 37 years of age, was one. He had on three prior occasions made equal divisions of property among his five children, to the aggregate amount of $57,750. By his will, dated March 12, 1890, he had devised to his wife one-half of a block of land, including his dwelling, situate in the town of Santa Clara, and all the rest of his property in equal shares to his five children. H. M. Leonard, then his business agent, and appellant were appointed executors to serve without bonds. By a codicil dated July 26, 1893, the appointment of Leonard as executor was revoked, and appellant was appointed sole executor, to serve without bonds. This will was never revoked. By the transfers now in question, made in March, 1895, Christian Bollinger conveyed to appellant, without consideration, property of the face value of upwards of $45,000, and stripped himself of all he owned save his residence in the town of Santa Clara.

"The facts above set forth conclusively appear from the record.

"There is evidence that prior to the transfer in question appellant had in important transactions acted as his father's agent. He had demanded and obtained for his father, from Leonard, who had theretofore been the agent of his father, the sum of $5,000, and kept it for several days, and then paid it over to his father. He had also loaned $8,000 for his father, secured by a mortgage of the Quivey ranch. In this transaction the borrower dealt only with appellant, as agent of Christian Bollinger.

"There is evidence that on the day all the transfers save one were made appellant met his father, Christian Bollinger, and informed him that his wife (who was not the mother of his children) intended to sue him for a divorce, and represented to him that, if he would deed to appellant his property, appellant would hold it for him (Christian Bollinger), and, on Christian Bollinger's death, deed it to Christian Bollinger's children, one-fifth to each, and if Mrs. Bollinger (Christian Bollinger's wife) should die before him to deed it back to him (Christian Bollinger). The above is clearly the effect of the testimony of David Bollinger, although not stated in his exact words. The witness further testified that Christian Bollinger replied 'Very well,' and on the same day went to an attorney's office with appellant, and made all the transfers in question, save one, which was of land, and made about three weeks later.

"While appellant in his answer alleges that he 'has always denied and repudiated any trust whatever concerning any property conveyed or transferred to him by the said Christian Bollinger,' and 'that he now claims title to such of the said property as was conveyed and transferred to him by said Christian Bollinger from the several dates of conveyance and transfer,' he testified that he accounted to his father for large sums collected on the notes transferred, and always gave him money whenever requested so to do. There is evidence of admissions and statements of appellant, made after the death of Christian Bollinger, that he held the property conveyed in trust for his brother and sisters.

"The evidence was sufficient to establish a trust, and the purposes, subject-matter, and beneficiaries thereof.

"(6) We now come to the consideration of some rulings made by the court during the trial which were erroneous, and of such a character as to necessitate a new trial. As before stated, the deeds and transfers claimed by respondents to have been made in trust are upon their face absolute. Over the repeated objections and exceptions of appellant, respondents were allowed to prove statements of Christian Bollinger, made after the execution of such deeds and transfers, and not in the presence of appellant, to the effect that such transfers were made in trust, and that appellant held the property in trust. As very clearly appears from a dialogue that took place between the court and counsel for respondents, these declarations of Christian Bollinger, the grantor, were offered and received as evidence tending to show a trust. In answer to a query from counsel for appellant concerning the scope of the evidence of the declarations of Christian Bollinger, the court said:

"I am satisfied * * * you can offer them for the purpose of showing a trust. Counsel for Respondents: Yes, sir. The Court: That is all you offer them for? Counsel for Respondents: That is what I offer them for, and that is what they are in here for. The Court: And I shall so receive them."

"It is well settled that declarations of a grantor, made after the execution of his conveyance, cannot be received to disparage his deed. Fischer v. Bergson, 49 Cal. 294; Walden v. Purvis, 73 Cal. 518, 15 Pac. 91; Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Ord v. Ord, 99 Cal. 523, 34 Pac. 83; Hyde v. Buckner, 108 Cal. 522, 41 Pac. 416; Smith v. Mason, 122 Cal. 426, 55 Pac. 143.

"In the case at bar the deeds and conveyances were on their face absolute, and purported to convey an absolute title to appellant. It was his contention that they did convey such title. Respondents, on the other hand, maintained that the conveyances were in trust, and did not convey absolute title. This was the primary issue in the case. The declarations of Christian Bollinger were admitted by the court as evidence to disparage his own deed, and this action of the court, under the authorities above cited, necessitates a retrial of this action.

"The court also erred in permitting respondents to prove that David E. Bare, a witness called by respondents, had made statements to the effect that George Y. Bollinger (appellant) had admitted that he held the property in trust, and also other statements as to declarations made by Christian Bollinger. The manifest purpose of calling the witness was to prove that he had heard appellant admit that he held the property in trust, and also to prove declarations of Christian Bollinger tending to show confidence in his son, the appellant; but the witness denied that he had heard appellant say anything about the property transferred to him, or that he had heard the declarations attributed to Christian Bollinger. In other words, the witness gave no affirmative testimony, but simply failed to give expected testimony that would have supported respondents' contention, if it had been given.

"The court, over the objection and exception of appellant, permitted respondents to prove that the witness had made statements to two different witnesses to the effect that he had heard appellant say that he was holding the property in trust for his brother and sisters, and also that he told of the declarations and acts of Christian Bollinger tending to show confidence in his son, the appellant.

"That these rulings were erroneous has been established by a long and consistent line of authorities in this state. People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384; People v. De Witt, 68 Cal. 584, 10 Pac. 212; People v. Wallace, 89 Cal. 158, 26 Pac. 650; People v. Mitchell, 94 Cal. 550, 29 Pac. 1106; Estate of Kennedy, 104 Cal. 429, 38 Pac. 93; Hyde v. Buckner, 108 Cal. 522, 41 Pac. 416; People v. Conkling, 111 Cal. 616, 44 Pac. 314; People v. Crespi, 115 Cal. 50, 46 Pac. 863; People v. Godwin, 123 Cal. 374, 55 Pac. 1059; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101.

"The contention of respondents that the evidence was admissible under section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure is answered by the language used in People v. Creeks, supra: "That such testimony is not authorized by the provisions of sections 2049 and 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure was squarely held in People v. De Witt, 68 Cal. 584, 10 Pac. 212. The decisions of this court uniformly hold such testimony objectionable."

"In People v. Creeks, supra, and in Estate of Kennedy, supra, a new trial was ordered solely because of such a ruling as is here complained of.

"For the reasons above noted, the judgment and order must be reversed, and it is so ordered."

Charles W. Slack and V. A. Scheller, for appellant. Nicholas Bowden, for respondent Mary A. L. Bollinger. E. E. Cothran, for other respondent.

HENSHAW, J. A rehearing of the cause was ordered by this court for the further consideration of the question discussed in subdivision 1 of the opinion above quoted, and, in particular, of the following matter:

"It is claimed that the two first alleged causes of action are actions that might have been brought by Christian Bollinger in his lifetime, and on his death passed to his estate, while the last two are actions in favor of his children, and in which his estate has no interest; and for this reason that said actions are improperly joined. It is certain that the cross-complaint does contain some allegations pointing to an action in favor of Christian Bollinger's estate; but on the trial of the action the court found against the allegations of the cross-complainant in this regard, and found such facts as support an action to establish and enforce a trust in favor of the children of Christian Bollinger, of whom Mary C. Pullan, respondents' testatrix, was one at the time of his death, and the decree enforces the trust in favor of the respondents as executors of her will only.

"The prayer of the cross-complaint sought only to enforce a trust in one-fifth of the property conveyed, as a right that inured to Mary C. Pullan upon the death of Christian Bollinger and the repudiation of the trust by appellant.

"As before stated, the court found against the allegations of the cross-complaint and in favor of the appellant upon the matters tending to support actions in favor of the estate of Christian Bollinger. Under these circumstances we think it clear that appellant could not have been injured by the ruling of the court upon the demurrer, even though such ruling may have been erroneous. Judgment should not be reversed for errors that do not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 475; Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183, 9 Pac. 176, 12 Pac. 449; Angell v. Hopkins, 79 Cal. 181, 21 Pac. 729; Hirshfeld v. Weill, 121 Cal. 13, 53 Pac. 402."

It is insisted by appellant that, at least, two causes of action, which by no possibility may be joined in the same complaint, were in this complaint improperly joined; that a demurrer was directed to this defect in the pleading, and that it should have been sustained. The first of these causes of action charges that George Y. Bollinger obtained the property from his father by the exercise of undue influence and fraud upon him. This cause of action, the father being dead, is a cause of action to the prosecution of which the deceased's personal representatives succeed, and the recovery would be on behalf of the estate, its heirs and devisees. The second distinct cause of action charges that George Y. Bollinger received title to the property under an express trust for the benefit (with others) of Mary C. Pullan. This cause of action charges, not upon the ground of fraud or undue influence, but upon the express trust deliberately entered into and subsequently repudiated by the trustee. A favorable judgment under this cause of action would not be for the benefit of the estate of Christian Bollinger, deceased, but for the benefit of the cestuis que trust. That this position of appellant is sound may not be gainsaid. Indeed, it is conceded in the opinion of the learned judge of the Court of Appeal. He concludes the error to be without injury because the court actually found against the cause of action sounding in fraud, and in favor of the cause of action to declare the trust, and, this being so, he concludes that the error of the trial court was without injury to appellant. Such would, indeed, be the case, and the view of the Court of Appeal upon the matter would be perfectly sound, if the ultimate outcome of the litigation had been an affirmance instead of a reversal. But, for the reasons expressed in the opinion (with which reasons we are in full accord), the judgment and order appealed from were reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial. It may not be foretold what new evidence may be presented upon the new trial, and it may not be said that no injury will be worked to appellant if, upon this new trial, he is called upon to defend against two causes of action thus admittedly improperly joined. It follows, therefore, that the demurrer should have been sustained.

In all other respects the opinion and conclusion of the Court of Appeal is hereby adopted and affirmed. As to the demurrer, it is ordered that the cause be reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer, with leave to the pleader to amend and elect upon which cause of action he will stand.

The judgment and order are reversed and the cause remanded, for proceedings in conformity with the foregoing.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

154 Cal. 743

PEOPLE v. FALLON. (Cr. 1503, 1504.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 207*)—JURISDICTION.

Police judges in the city and county of San Francisco have power to sit as magistrates;

Pen. Code, § 808, including, in its enumeration of those who are magistrates, police magistrates in cities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 413, 414, 418, 440, 472-475; Dec. Dig. § 207.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 104*)—SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

The act commonly designated as the "Burnt Record Act" (Laws Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 73, c. 55), authorizing the restoration of lost or destroyed records, is not special legislation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 116; Dec. Dig. § 104.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

The People against Thomas P. Fallon. Defendant appeals from orders, and petitions for stay. Orders affirmed; petition denied.

See, also, 149 Cal. 287, 86 Pac. 689.

John L. Guilfoyle, Jr., and Frank V. Cornish, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Wm. H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., and John O'Gara, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People.

PER CURIAM. These are two appeals taken from orders in the above-entitled cause, the first from an order fixing the date of execution, the second from an order restoring the destroyed records in the case. Without deciding the preliminary objections to the hearing of these appeals, as that the order fixing the date of execution is not appealable under section 1227 of the Penal Code, and that the point presented may not be heard upon this appeal because not taken advantage of by motion to set aside the information, we come directly to a consideration of these appeals upon the merits.

Upon the first appeal it is contended that police judges in the city and county of San Francisco have not the power to sit as magistrates—a power conferred upon them by section 808 of the Penal Code. This proposition is too obviously without merit to require discussion.

The single proposition presented upon the second appeal, that the act authorizing the restoration of lost or destroyed records, commonly designated the "Burnt Record Act" (Laws Ex. Sess. 1906, p. 73, c. 55), is special legislation, is also without merit.

For which reasons the orders appealed from are affirmed.

The petition for stay of proceedings is denied, and the remittitur is ordered to issue forthwith.

154 Cal. 731

MITCHELL v. CALIFORNIA & O. S. S. CO. (S. F. 5,003.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 21, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 373*)—REQUISITES FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—BOND—NECESSITY.

St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410, § 941a, provides that an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court and District Court of Appeal by filing with the court in which the judgment or order was entered a notice of appeal therefrom, no service of the notice nor bond for costs on appeal being required. The act did not repeal the former method requiring service of notice of appeal and filing of a bond for costs, and did not provide for an election of one of the methods. Held, that the act established a new and alternative method, and it is sufficient if an appeal is perfected under either method; and hence, though a party did not file a sufficient undertaking for costs, as required by the old method, but filed his notice of appeal which was sufficient under the new method, the appellate court obtained jurisdiction, though the party intended to pursue the old method.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 373.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 243*)—CONSTRUCTION—REMEDIES AND PROCEDURE—STATUTES AIDING APPEALS.

Statutes making provisions in aid of appeals are to be liberally construed and applied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 324; Dec. Dig. § 243.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 12*)—FORM OF REMEDY—ELECTION OF REMEDY.

The rule that, where there is more than one remedy for a review, a party must elect the one under which he will proceed and is bound by his election, was not applicable, since an appeal was the only remedy given, though two methods for asserting it were provided.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 39-46; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by James Mitchell against the California & Oregon Steamship Company. From orders granting plaintiff's motion to vacate an order extending defendant's time for serving its statement on motion for a new trial, and denying defendant's motion to be relieved under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, from plaintiff's objection to the settlement of the statement, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss. Denied.

W. F. Williamson, for appellant. Costello & Costello, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal by defendant from what is claimed to be two orders of court, one granting the motion of plaintiff to vacate and set aside an order made by the court extending the time of defendant to serve its statement on motion for a new trial, and the other denying the motion of defendant to be relieved, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., from the objection of plaintiff to the settlement of the proposed statement on motion for a new trial, on the ground that it had not been served within time. Both these orders were embraced within a single minute order of the court.

On the assumption that the appeal is taken from two separate and distinct orders, respondent moves to dismiss it, because but one undertaking on appeal for costs was filed, and this did not distinctly refer to either appeal. Centerville, etc., Co. v. Bachold, 109 Cal. 113, 41 Pac. 813; Matter of Heydenfeldt, 119

Cal. 347, 51 Pac. 543; Wadleigh v. Phelps, 147 Cal. 141, 81 Pac. 418.

Appellant insists that what is asserted to be two orders is really but a single order; that the only proceeding before the court in which the minute order appealed from was made was the application of appellant for relief, under which he conceded the invalidity of the order extending time which the respondent had moved to set aside for want of jurisdiction in the court to make it; admitted that the objection on that ground was good, confessed default with reference to service of his statement, and asked to be relieved from it; and that the denial of this relief was the real and only effect of the minute order. We do not deem it necessary to consider the argument of the respective counsel as to the real effect of what are apparently two orders, because, in the light of existing legislation providing different methods in which appeals may be taken, if the steps which were taken on the appeal here are sufficient under either method, that is all that is required to give this court jurisdiction of it.

The notice of appeal from the order complained of was filed on December 11, 1907. The order was made and entered on December 7, 1907. The Legislature in 1907 passed an act (St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410) which was in effect when the appeal herein was taken, establishing a new and alternative method of appeal. This act did not repeal the old and prevailing method requiring service and filing of the notice of appeal and the filing of a bond for costs on appeal in order to have a perfected appeal, vesting in this court jurisdiction to entertain it. While the Legislature accomplished by this new and alternative method a radical change and a wholesome reform in the method which it permitted might be adopted in taking future appeals, it did not abolish the old method, for, doubtless, the prudential reason, among others, that some questions might arise as to the constitutionality of the act permitting the new method of appeal. But the act did supply a more simplified method. It established a new and alternative method whereby appeals might be taken to the Supreme Court and District Court of Appeal, by providing, in section 941a of the act, that an appeal might be taken to such courts by simply filing with the court in which the judgment, order, or decree were entered a notice of appeal therefrom. The effect of such filing is declared by the act to be that "it shall, without further action on the part of the appellant, transfer the cause for decision and determination to the higher court." No service of the notice of appeal is required. In fact, it is expressly dispensed with. Neither is there any provision requiring the giving of a bond for costs on appeal. This act was recently declared by this court, on a motion to dismiss an appeal taken under it, and where the constitutionality of the act was involved, to be constitutional. Estate of George S. McPhee, deceased—Corrigan v. McPhee (Cal.)—97 Pac. 878. And it was likewise there held that the act did not require the giving of a bond for costs on appeal, and it was unnecessary to give any. So that, under the act, this court acquires jurisdiction of an appeal by the filing of the notice of the appeal alone.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The act, as we say, provided, without destroying the old method, a reform in the method of appeal, and all statutes making provisions in aid of appeals are to be liberally construed and applied. The Legislature left to a litigant desiring to appeal the right to adopt either method he saw fit, and, if an appeal that is taken can be sustained by an appellate court under either method providing for it, it should be done. The appeal of the appellant here can be so sustained, and there is no reason why it should not be. Conceding that the appellant undertook to perfect his appeal under the old method, if he has not perfected it because that method, as a jurisdictional prerequisite to our entertaining it, required the filing of an undertaking for costs on appeal, that should not conclude him from asserting that, tested by the requirements of the new and alternative method, he has perfected it. There is nothing in the act which requires the appellant to make an election as to the method which he shall adopt in taking his appeal, or which concludes him from insisting that he has perfected an appeal under the new method, even if he has unsuccessfully attempted to make a good service of notice, or filed an insufficient cost bond according to the requirements of the old. That this appeal was perfected under the new method there can be no question. Appellant filed his notice, and that was all that was required to perfect it.

The position of the respondent on this motion is based entirely on his claim that, as two methods of appeal were open to appellant, he was driven to an election as to which one he would adopt and proceed under. There is nothing in this position. The simple question is, has the appellant perfected an appeal under either method? If he has, that is the end of the inquiry. If he has perfected an appeal tested by the new method, it is unimportant whether he unsuccessfully attempted to file a sufficient cost bond in addition to serving his notice, neither of which the new method requires. It was entirely voluntary on his part whether, as matter of precaution, he should do so or not, and his appeal is not imperiled because in an attempt at cautiousness he has erred in some matter of procedure which he might have omitted and his appeal still be good. If the appeal would otherwise be good by simply filing the notice of appeal, any unsuccessful attempt to take steps required in the old method, and not required by the new, will be deemed unimportant and of no legal significance as affecting the appeal.

Respondent, upon his claim that appellant was driven to an election of one of two methods of appeal which the law provided he might adopt, insists that the rule to be applied is that, where the party has more than one remedy for a review in a particular case, he must elect the one under which he will proceed, and is bound by his election. Without conceding the inflexibility of the rule as asserted by respondent, it is sufficient to say that there is no question here of two or more remedies provided for a review. There is but one remedy—an appeal—for which the Legislature has provided two methods under which it may be asserted. The methods are not mutually exclusive, and the old method includes the only thing which is essential in the new towards perfecting an appeal, namely, the filing of the notice. When a motion to dismiss an appeal is made on the ground that the court has not obtained jurisdiction, it only looks to ascertain that fact. If an appeal may be perfected in two methods, it only ascertains if it has been perfected under either. Here, under one method, it is provided that an appeal is perfected by simply filing a notice of appeal. When, upon examining the transcript, it is found that it shows a notice of appeal properly filed, which is sufficient ipso facto under the new and alternative method to perfect the appeal, the court will look no further, but will treat a failure to serve the notice or give a cost bond, or an error in attempting to do so, which might have been fatal to the appeal under the old method, as matter of no legal consequence.

It appearing that the appellant perfected its appeal by the filing of a proper notice of appeal under the new and alternative method, the motion to dismiss is denied.

We concur: SHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

154 Cal. 748

QUIST v. HILL et al. (S. F. 4,821.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 22, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1909.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 414*)—PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER—NOTICE OF APPEAL—PERSONS ENTITLED.

Where plaintiffs sued their employer, a contractor, and the owner of the property on which they worked, and secured a personal judgment against the contractor, from which no appeal was taken, and a lien on the property for their wages, the judgment providing that the proceeds of the sale of the lien property should be applied to the payment of the personal judgment against the contractor, on appeal by the owner it was unnecessary, under Code Civ. Proc. § 940, providing that an appeal is taken by filing notice of appeal with the court and serving a similar notice on the adverse party,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes to serve notice of the appeal upon the contractor, since a reversal would not injuriously affect him, though the judgment was made a lien on the property for payment of the personal judgment against him, as he was primarily liable, and the owners would have an action over against him if they paid his debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2137, 2138; Dec. Dig. § 414.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 2*)—GROUNDS—FINDINGS CONTRARY TO LAW.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, defining a new trial as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court, where the case was tried on an agreed statement of facts which the parties stipulated was to be considered as the court's findings in the case, a motion for new trial would not lie on the ground that the decision was contrary to law, as that point could only be raised on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4788-4790.]

3. NEW TRIAL (§ 2*)—GROUNDS—DEFECTS IN FINDING—STIPULATED FINDING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, defining a "new trial" as a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court where the case was tried on an agreed statement of facts which the parties stipulated were to be considered the court's findings, a new trial for the purpose of re-examining a question of fact could not be had on any ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 783*)—DISMISSAL—AGREED FINDINGS.

Though a motion for new trial was properly denied where the case was tried on agreed facts, which the parties stipulated should be considered as the findings of the court, on appeal from the order denying the motion, the proper course is to affirm the order, and not to dismiss the appeal therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3125; Dec. Dig. § 783.*]

5. LIENS (§ 8*)—ARTISAN'S LIEN—EFFECT OF STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 3052, giving any person who makes, alters, etc., any article of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor a lien thereon for his work and labor, and authorizing him to retain possession until payment of its charges and to sell it upon notice if the charges are not paid within two months, though extending the right to a lien to all persons named, and providing for its enforcement by sale, which did not exist at common law, is otherwise merely declaratory of the common law, and the lien can only be asserted in the same cases that it could at common law, and the right thereto must be interpreted by common-law principles.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

6. LIENS (§ 1*)—ARTISAN'S LIEN—RIGHT—COMMON LAW.

At common law, the right to a lien for work done on an article could only be asserted by one having exclusive possession of the article, and who had done the work thereon under contract with the owner, or one authorized by him to contract for the work, privity of contract being essential, and a mere employé or servant of the person contracting with the owner did not have such possession as would entitle him to a lien.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

7. LIENS (§ 1*)—PERSONS ENTITLED—LABORERS—ARTISAN'S LIEN—"LEGAL POSSESSOR."

Civ. Code, § 3052, gives to any person who makes, alters, etc., any article of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor a lien thereon for his charges, and gives him the right to possession until payment, or, if the charges are not paid within two months, the right to sell it to satisfy his charges. Defendants engaged another to peel tanbark from trees on their land and deliver it at a certain place, and the latter hired plaintiffs to do the work, but abandoned the contract after doing part of the work, leaving plaintiffs partly unpaid. No contractual relations existed between defendants and plaintiffs. Held, that plaintiffs were not entitled to a lien for their wages on bark peeled by them remaining on defendants' land, either at common law or under the statute, they not having the required possession of the property and not having contracted with defendants, nor was the contractor the "legal possessor" of the property within the statute so as to give them a lien under their contract with him, the legal possessor contemplated by the statute being one with original authority to contract for the work, such as a pledgee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

8. LIENS (§ 16*)—RIGHT—LOSS—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

One agreeing to peel bark from trees and deliver it at a certain place, payment to be made upon delivery and acceptance, by abandoning the work before a part of the bark was delivered, waived his right to a lien thereon for doing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 8-16; Dec. Dig. § 16.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Charles Quist against H. Hill and A. E. Hill and others, in which part of defendants filed a cross-complaint for a personal judgment against one of defendants and to establish a lien for work on property of the defendants named. From a judgment for plaintiff and for the cross-complainants, establishing the lien claimed, and from an order denying a new trial the Hills appealed. Reversed and remanded.

McNab & Hirsch, for appellants. Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas and Robert Duncan, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff against A. W. Sandman and the Hills and others to obtain a personal judgment against Sandman and to enforce a lien upon some 235 cords of tanbark, the property of the Hills. All the other defendants except Sandman and the Hills filed cross-complaints asking a personal judgment against Sandman and also asserting liens against the tanbark similar to those asserted by the plaintiff. The claims asserted by the plaintiff and cross-complainants were for labor in cutting and drawing the tanbark from the trees on the premises of the Hills, under their employment for that purpose by Sandman, who had entered into a contract with the Hills to do the peeling and delivery of the bark. Sandman made default. The Hills appeared and resisted the assertion of a lien on their property. The cause was submitted on an agreed statement of facts, and the court gave the plaintiff and the cross-complainants personal judgment against the defendant Sandman, and a further judgment establishing their asserted liens against the bark, and directing its sale by the sheriff to satisfy their lien claims. The defendants Hill appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. Sandman was not served with notice of this appeal.

It is insisted by the respondents that both these appeals should be dismissed, and have moved to that effect. They insist that the appeal from the judgment should be dismissed because the defendant Sandman, who had the contract with the Hills to cut and deliver the bark, and who employed the respondents to do the work thereof, and against whom they obtained a personal judgment, should have been served with the notice of appeal from the judgment. Their claim is that he was an adverse party whose interest would be injuriously affected by a reversal of the judgment establishing and enforcing the lien, and hence, under section 940 of the Code of Civil Procedure, should have been served with the notice of appeal. We do not think this point has any force. Though the judgment against Sandman was a personal judgment for the full amount of the several claims of respondents, he has not appealed from it. That judgment fixed a primary liability on his part to respondents. It is true that by another part of the judgment liens are established against the property of the appellants Hill in favor of respondents, but the judgment establishing them is separate and distinct from the personal judgment against Sandman, and a matter in which the latter has no interest and which does not affect him, unless it can be said that that portion of the judgment providing that the proceeds of the sale of appellants' property, on which the lien is fixed, shall be paid on the personal judgment obtained against him, is a legal advantage of which he will be deprived if the judgment establishing the lien is reversed. It is the claim of respondent that Sandman has this legal advantage and benefit. It is insisted by them that as Sandman is interested in having the judgment sustained, so as to have the proceeds of the sale of the property of the appellants Hill, upon which the lien of respondents was fixed, applied towards the satisfaction of the personal judgment against himself, he is therefore a party who would be injured by a reversal of the judgment, and hence should have been served with notice of appeal. We do not, however, think that Sandman comes within the class of aggrieved parties upon whom it is necessary to serve such notice. While it would appear on the face of the judgment, superficially considered, that he would be injuriously affected by a reversal of it, yet when his legal rights under the judgment as an entirety are considered it is obvious that it can have no such effect.

As we have seen, Sandman was personally responsible to the respondents for whatever claims they had for their services in cutting the bark. Any right which they could assert against the property of the appellants Hill, if such right existed at all, was conferred by law and consisted of a right to subject the property of the Hills to a lien for their services. The primary obligation to respondents, however, was upon Sandman, and respondents obtained a personal judgment against him for the full amount of their claim. Any lien which the law gave to respondents upon the property of appellants Hill was for the benefit of respondents, and not for the advantage of Sandman. In legal effect this judgment, in as far as it enforced the lien against the property of the Hills and directed a sale and the application of the proceeds toward the satisfaction of the judgment obtained against Sandman was of no benefit to the latter so as to make the reversal of the judgment injurious to him. Sandman had no legal right to have the property of the appellants Hill subjected to the payment of his indebtedness to the respondents. The primary personal obligation was on him to pay the respondents for their labor. The law, if it gave them a lien at all, created it for the benefit of the respondents because he had failed to perform his obligation to them. If the judgment here involved were reversed, it could only be reversed so far as it established a lien on the property of the appellants. The personal judgment against Sandman, not being appealed from, would remain after reversal as it had stood before, subject to enforcement at any time on execution at the instance of respondents. Reversing that judgment in so far as it established a lien, which is the only question involved on this appeal, could not affect the personal judgment against Sandman. Nor could such reversal injuriously affect Sandman because thereby Sandman would be deprived of a lien against appellants' property. It would in law be no injury to him, because, had the judgment as far as it established the lien been affirmed, and the property to which the lien attached been sold under the judgment, the Hills would have their action over against Sandman to recover from him the amount which their property had had to contribute to the payment of his personal judgment and primary liability to the respondents. All that the reversal would amount to as far as Sandman is concerned would be that the Hills, as against him, would not be forced to take such action, nor Sandman be subjected to it. Under such circumstances, and where it is apparent that no legal benefit could accrue to Sandman under the judgment establishing the lien, it cannot be said that the reversal of the judgment as a lien would injuriously affect him, and hence he was not a party upon whom notice of appeal should be served.

See, on this proposition generally, Mannix v. Tryon, 152 Cal. 38, 91 Pac. 983. The notice to dismiss the appeal from the judgment is denied.

Respondents likewise move to dismiss the appeal from the order denying the motion of appellants for a new trial. Their point is that as the case was submitted to the trial court for disposition on an agreed statement of facts, which facts it was also stipulated by the parties were to be considered as the findings of the court in the case, a motion for a new trial would not lie. We are satisfied that the point that under such circumstances a party cannot demand a new trial is correct. The statement of facts in the case at bar constituted by stipulation the findings of the court. It is not, and under the stipulation as to facts could not be, claimed that the findings are not sustained by the evidence, because the findings consist of the agreed facts themselves. "A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after trial and decision. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 656. It is quite obvious that where it is stipulated between parties as to what the facts in the controversy are, and that those facts shall constitute the findings, there is no room for demanding a new trial. It would be idle to grant a new trial and re-examine a question of fact when there has not only been no controversy over any issue of fact, but where the facts are expressly agreed upon. Neither under the circumstances could the appellants be heard to demand a new trial, as they did, on the ground that the decision of the court was against law. That point could only be availed of on appeal. In re Doyle, 73 Cal. 565, 570, 15 Pac. 125; Swift v. Occidental Mining Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700. The trial court correctly denied the motion for a new trial, but the proper course here is not to dismiss the appeal therefrom, but to affirm the order of the lower court denying the motion for a new trial, which we do. Quist v. Hill (Cal.) 95 Pac. 658.

Having disposed of these preliminary motions, we now proceed to a consideration of the appeal on its merits. From the facts as they were stipulated upon the trial and which constitute the findings of the court, it appears that the defendants Hill, as owners of a tract of timber land in Mendocino county, entered into a written agreement with the defendant A. W. Sandman, by which the latter was to peel, from the trees on said land, all the tanbark which would go a certain measurement, and deliver it at a landing known as Munroe landing, in said county. The Hills agreed to pay Sandman $9.50 per cord for peeling and delivering said bark at the landing; settlement to be made when each 50 cords thereof were delivered and accepted by the Munroe Lumber Company. Sandman entered upon the performance of his contract and employed the plaintiff and the cross-complainants as laborers to peel the bark for him.

He delivered 119½ cords at the landing, for which he was fully paid by the Hills, and then abandoned his contract. At the time Sandman abandoned the contract he left on the premises of the Hills where the peeling was being done the quantity of tanbark which plaintiff and the cross-complainants as employees of Sandman had peeled and for which he had not paid them, and of which, since it has been peeled, they had been in possession on the land of the Hills. The Hills had not employed the plaintiff or cross-complainants and had no notice of any claim of lien by them until this action to foreclose them was brought, although they knew, in a general way, that plaintiff and cross-complainants were peeling said bark for Sandman. Upon these facts agreed to as findings, and upon additional admissions by the parties as to the amounts due from Sandman to plaintiff and the cross-complainants for their labor in peeling the bark, the court awarded a personal judgment in their favor against Sandman, and also decreed a lien in their favor upon the bark remaining in their possession, and directed its enforcement by sale. The only point on this appeal on the merits is as to whether the respondents were entitled to any lien against the tanbark in question and which it is conceded was the property of the appellants Hill.

Respondents base their claim to a lien upon section 3052 of the Civil Code, which provides that a person "who makes, alters or repairs any article of personal property, at the request of the owner, or legal possessor of the property, has a lien upon the same for his reasonable charges for the work done and materials furnished, and may retain the possession of the same until the charges are paid. If not paid within two months after the work is done the person may proceed to sell the property at public auction upon giving ten days' public notice of the sale," etc. As far as the first part of the section which we have quoted is concerned, it simply declares the common-law rule as to the right of a mechanic or artisan performing labor on an article of personal property to a lien thereon dependent on possession for payment for his service. While at common law the right to a lien extended to a large class of persons, it was the intention of the Legislature by the Code provision to extend its application so that any person who had altered or repaired any article of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor thereof should have the benefit of a lien. It was intended also by the Code provision to provide for a method of enforcing the lien which did not exist at common law because at common law no lien on a chattel for work done or materials furnished gave a right to a sale of the chattel for the enforcement of the lien. Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, § 784. But while the Code has extended the right to a lien in general to all persons performing the prescribed labor concerning an article of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor thereof, it is in other respects but declaratory of the common-law rule, and the right to a lien must be governed by the same rules which prevailed at common law. It can only be asserted under the same circumstances and conditions as it could be asserted at common law, and the right to do so must be interpreted in accordance with common-law principles.

Now as to the common-law rule: It will be observed that there was no contract between the Hills and the respondents for the peeling of the bark against which the latter assert their lien. They were not the employes of the Hills. The Hills had made their contract directly with Sandman for the work, and Sandman had employed the respondents to do the labor for him. They were the employes of Sandman and could only look to him for payment of their wages upon his personal contract therefor. Under these circumstances, the respondents would have no lien upon the property of the Hills at common law, and, as the Code section is but declaratory of that law, could have no lien under it. At common law the right to a lien existed only in favor of the person who had done the work directly under a contract with the owner of the article of personal property upon which it had been expended, or where it had been done by agreement with some one authorized by the owner to contract with the person to do the work. Privity of contract between the owner of the chattel and the mechanic was an essential prerequisite to support the claim of lien. It did not lie in favor of an employé or servant of the person who had contracted with the owner to do it. The only security which the employé performing service on a chattel had was the personal responsibility of his employer on the contract of hiring. In speaking of the right to such a lien at common law, it is tersely said in Jones on Liens (because the principle is not open to question) that "the lien belongs strictly to the person who has contracted with the owner to do the work. A servant or journeyman or subcontractor of such person has no lien." Jones on Liens, vol. 1, p. 737. The rule is stated to the same effect in Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, §§ 768, 772, and in Story on Bailments, § 440. It is also declared to be the rule at common law by the decisions. Hollingsworth v. Dow, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 228; Quillian v. Central R. R., etc., Co., 52 Ga. 374; Jacobs v. Knapp, 50 N. H. 71; Globe Works v. Wright, 106 Mass. 207; Wright v. Terry, 23 Fla. 160, 2 South. 6; Landry v. Blanchard, 16 La. Ann. 173. A right to a lien could only be asserted at common law where the mechanic or artisan had the exclusive possession of the thing with reference to which he had performed labor and against which he asserted his lien. It cannot be said that an employé ever has that possession. It can only be in the person with whom the owner directly contracts. Whatever possession an employé of such contractor may have is but the possession of his employer. While it is true that in the instant case the respondents as bark peelers under their employment by Sandman had some possession of the bark, it was simply such a possession as any employé would have of the property with respect to which his employer had agreed to perform services. It was no different than the possession which the employes of a machinist would have of a machine which their employer had agreed to construct or repair, or which any other employes working for their employer would have of the property concerning which the employer had contracted with the owner to do work. It would be simply a possession incident to the performance of their duties upon the thing under the direction of their employer and for him, and their possession would be but the possession of their employer.

The Hills were not indebted to the respondents in any way, nor had they even placed them in possession of their property. As to the respondents, their contract was with Sandman, and he was responsible to them for the payment of their wages. He alone was given possession by the Hills of the property upon which the bark was peeled and upon which respondents assert a lien; but, whatever sort of possession the respondents had or obtained of the peeled bark, it was at all times subordinate to that of Sandman. Their possession of it was simply that of employes and was not that exclusive and unconditional possession which is necessary in order to constitute the basis of a lien. Of course, the respondents are not asserting a right to hold the tanbark for the benefit of any lien which Sandman might have upon it because the latter under his contract could have no lien. He had waived it under his agreement, which provided that he was only to be paid for the bark after it was delivered and accepted by the Munroe Lumber Company. His agreement to deliver the bark before payment conclusively negatives any right in him to retain possession of it until payment. The respondents assert an independent right in themselves as against the Hills to a lien upon the property of the latter with whom they never had any contract and possession of whose property was never in them, but in Sandman. This it is clear under the authorities they are not entitled to do. At common law they could assert no lien and no greater right is given them under the Code provision in that respect than they could have asserted at common law.

We are cited by respondents to no authority which sanctions the right of an employé at common law to assert a lien against the property of one who has contracted with his employer to perform work or furnish materials in the making or repairing of a chattel. They rely here in support of such asserted right upon the case of Douglass v. McFarland (decided by this court) 92 Cal. 656, 28 Pac. 637, and on Holderman v. Manier, 104 Ind. 118, 3 N. E. 811; Haughton v. Bush, 101 Mich. 267, 59 N. W. 621; Palmer v. Tucker, 45 Me. 316; Phillips v. Freyer, 80 Mich. 254, 45 N. W. 81. But none of these cases support the right of an employé of a contractor to a lien against the property of the owner. The case of Douglass v. McFarland, the only one we need particularly refer to, involved the right of the plaintiff there to retain the possession of certain redwood railroad ties and shakes which he had manufactured on the land of one Harney under a contract with the latter to do so. He asserted a lien upon the property and sought to retain possession until the amount due him for manufacturing the ties and shakes should be paid. It was held under the same section upon which respondent relies (Civ. Code, § 3052) that plaintiff had a lien on the property and a right to retain the possession of it until his lien was discharged; but it will be observed that the assertion of the lien in the case cited was by the contractor himself, and not by an employé. There is nothing in the case militating against the general rule that an employé of a contractor has no lien. It is simply in harmony with the rule that the contractor alone has the lien. The cases cited by respondent from other jurisdictions were also cases where the lien was sustained but on behalf of the parties directly contracting with the owner for the labor upon the article made or repaired. None of them were actions brought by an employé of the contractor against the owner.

Respondents insist, however, that under the terms of the section their employment by Sandman was sufficient to give them a lien on the property of the Hills because Sandman was the "legal possessor of the property" and in possession of the tanbark when the services upon it were performed. But Sandman's possession of the land under the contract with the Hills to peel the tanbark from the trees thereon did not constitute him a "legal possessor of the property" so as to bind the property of the Hills. What is meant by the term "legal possessor of the property" in the section is one who has the right by virtue of his possession to originally contract with reference to the manufacture, alteration, or repair thereof, such as, for example, a lessee or pledgee of the property; some one having a possession coupled with a right of property so that he can contract with reference to it respecting any of the matters enumerated in the section. Sandman was not such a legal possessor. His possession was only a qualified one—simply for the purpose of peeling and delivering the bark. He was not a "legal possessor of the property" in any sense under the Code section so as to confer upon respondents under their employment by him of a right to assert a lien against it.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

9 Cal. App. 283

O'BRIEN v. BIG CASINO GOLD MINING CO. (Civ. 479.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 7, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 173*)—REVIEW—CONTENTIONS NOT CONSIDERED BELOW.

Where a defense was not urged at trial and no evidence was offered to support it, it will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1079; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 667*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—RIGHT TO DEFEND—DESIGNATING AGENT FOR SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Under Civ. Code, § 405, requiring foreign corporations to file with the Secretary of State the name of some person within the state upon whom service may be made, and section 406, prohibiting corporations not complying with the statute from maintaining or defending any action if the proof in an action against a foreign corporation did not show that it had complied with the statute, it could not plead the statute of limitations as a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2590; Dec. Dig. § 667.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 631*)—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—RIGHTS.

As a general rule, it is only by comity that foreign corporations can exist and transact business in states other than that in which they were incorporated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2490; Dec. Dig. § 631.*]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 88*)—ABSENCE WHEN ACTION ACCRUES—CORPORATIONS.

Foreign corporations come within the provisions of statutes which prevent the running of limitations in favor of absent debtors while they are without the jurisdiction of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 463; Dec. Dig. § 88.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 237*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—OPENING UP CASE.

Though counsel of defendant foreign corporation did not know at the time of trial that the corporation had designated some one within the state on whom process could be served, as required by statute, but did discover that fact before decision, and the defect having been pointed out by plaintiff's brief submitted after oral argument, defendant cannot complain of the refusal of the court to open the case after decision to supply such evidence, where it did not move to open the case at the first opportunity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 237.*]

6. TRIAL (§ 71*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—OPENING UP CASE.

Though counsel for defendant foreign corporation did not know that the corporation had designated a person on whom process could be served, as required by statute, and did not learn of it until the evidence was in, the only defense being the statute of limitations, and the requirement of the statute as to such designation being

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes absolute, it was within the trial court's discretion to refuse to open up the case after decision to permit defendant to show that it had filed the statutory designation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 167; Dec. Dig. § 71.*]

7. NEW TRIAL (§ 91*)—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

For the same reason, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 184-187; Dec. Dig. § 91.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Richard O'Brien against the Big Casino Gold Mining Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appealed. Affirmed.

F. W. Street and H. M. Street, for appellant. E. W. Holland, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $500, alleged to be due him from the defendant, on an account stated, for services performed in the capacity of superintendent of the mining operations of the corporation. The answer, after denying the alleged indebtedness, sets up as a special defense the bar of the statute of limitations (section 339, Code Civ. Proc.), and also the further defense that, by reason of the alleged carelessness and negligence of the plaintiff as superintendent of defendant's properties, the latter suffered the loss, through robbery, of the product of a pocket of gold found in defendant's mine, of the alleged value of more than $3,000, and that defendant had therefore sustained damages in the sum of $3,000 because of such alleged carelessness and culpable negligence of plaintiff. The last mentioned defense was not pressed at the trial, no evidence having been offered in its support, and therefore further consideration of the same may be dismissed. The cause was tried by the court, a jury having been waived by both parties, and judgment awarded the plaintiff for the sum sued for. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying the defendant a new trial.

The principal point urged by the appellant on this appeal is that the respondent's right of action was at the time of the filing of his complaint barred by the provisions of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prescribing a limitation of two years within which an action may be commenced upon a contract, obligation, or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing, etc. No serious effort, which could properly be interposed under the issues tendered by the pleadings, seems to have been made to dispute the validity and correctness of plaintiff's claim. The contention of the plaintiff in response to the special plea in bar is twofold, to wit: First, that the defendant rendered to the plaintiff an account stated in writing before the same or the original account from which the account stated originated was barred by the statute; secondly, that the defendant, being a foreign corporation doing business in this state, failed to show at the trial that it had filed with the Secretary of State a designation of some person residing within the state upon whom process issued by authority of or under any law of this state may be served (section 405, Civ. Code), and that, therefore, the defendant cannot invoke the benefit of the laws of this state limiting the time for the commencement of civil actions (section 406, Civ. Code). We think the second point made by the respondent is a conclusive answer to appellant's contention that the finding of the court against the defendant's plea of the statute of limitations is unwarranted and unsustained by the record.

The complaint alleges that the defendant "was and now is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Washington, and transacting and carrying on business in the county of Tuolumne, state of California." The answer expressly admits said allegation to be true. Under the terms of section 405 of the Civil Code it was, as already indicated, the duty of the defendant, as a foreign corporation, to file with the Secretary of State a designation of some person residing within the state upon whom process issued by authority of or under any law of this state may be served, and that failure to do as thus required deprives it, under the provisions of section 406 of said Code, of the right to invoke or claim any benefit under the statute of limitations of this state. Therefore, the defendant having failed to produce any proof addressed to that point, the court below was not only justified in finding, but required to find against it on the plea of the statute. Pierce v. Southern Pacific Co., 120 Cal. 156 et seq., 47 Pac. 874, 52 Pac. 302, 40 L. R. A. 350. In that case, referring to the provisions of sections 405 and 406 of the Civil Code, the Supreme Court says: "It being admitted that defendant was a corporation organized under the laws of another state, compliance with the foregoing statute became a necessary fact to be proven as a predicate to its right to avail itself of the benefit of the statute of limitations. [Italics ours.] This it failed to do, and hence the court did not err in its finding against its defense of the statute of limitations. * * * The statute, then, is not a limitation upon the right of foreign corporations to avail themselves of our statute of limitations, but it confers that right, subject only to the condition prescribed." It may be stated as a general rule that foreign corporations may, by comity only, transact business in states other than the one by virtue of the laws of which they exist. They are, therefore, citizens, so to speak, of the state by whose laws they are created, and, except by comity, have no legal existence elsewhere, and consequently they in principle come within the provisions of those statutes which make a saving as to absent debtors in favor of whom, so long as they remain without the jurisdiction of the state, the law of limitations does not run. Wood on Limitations, § 250. The consequence of this rule is, as before declared, that foreign corporations, when attempting to claim the benefit of our statute of limitations, are required, as a necessary prerequisite to the exercise of that right, to not only meet the demands of the law by virtue of which alone they may avail themselves of the privilege of transacting business in this state, but must prove the fact at the trial. Omission to make such proof is, as seen, fatal to their right to claim the benefit of the statute. The court's finding against the defendant on its special plea in bar was therefore sustained by the total failure of proof on this point.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

On the motion for a new trial, and as one of the grounds therefor, appellant's attorney presented an affidavit, made by himself, alleging that he was not aware at the time of the trial that the designation required by section 405 of the Civil Code had been filed with the Secretary of State until after the court below had rendered its decision in this action, and that "defendant and deponent, its counsel, was taken by surprise in the said point so raised by counsel for plaintiff in his brief (the cause having been, after oral argument before the trial court, submitted on briefs), and at said time, the taking of evidence in said cause having closed, the surprise was one which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against." Accompanying said affidavit, and made a part thereof, is a copy of the designation required by our statute, certified as a true copy by the Secretary of State. The appellant, after being apprised of the necessity of proof upon the point under consideration, which information was received before the court handed down its decision, made no move to have the case opened for the purpose of showing the fact of the filing of the necessary designation; the court having tried the case without a jury. This it should have done, although we do not think the refusal of the court to open up the case for that purpose would involve an abuse of discretion in a case where, as here, the only defense sought to be established is purely technical and not addressed to the merits, and consequently not in furtherance of justice, and the evidence claimed to be "newly discovered" is made by the law indispensably necessary to the establishment of such defense. For the same reason the court's order denying defendant a new trial represents the exercise of a discretion with which we may not properly interfere.

We have deemed it unnecessary to review the evidence upon the merits of the case, because, as before observed, no question is raised by appellant of its sufficiency to sustain the finding of the court that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum for which judgment was given.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURRELL, J.

9 Cal. App. 288

BURRELL v. COLLINS. (Civ. 427.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 7, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 843*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS CONSIDERED—QUESTIONS NOT NECESSARY.

Where plaintiff claimed that property sold under execution belonged to him, and sued to recover its value on that ground, as well as because of irregularities in the sale, any irregularity in the sale is immaterial and need not be considered on appeal, as, if plaintiff owned it, he could recover for its conversion, and, if not, the irregularity did not concern him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3331; Dec. Dig. § 843.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 62*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SCOPE OF EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY

In an action against the sheriff for conversion of cattle sold under execution against B., where plaintiff simply claimed the cattle as his own, but defendant justified on the ground that they belonged to B., and introduced evidence of B.'s ownership, it was error to exclude a question asked by plaintiff of B. whether the cattle sold belonged to him on the ground that it was not proper evidence in rebuttal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

3. TRIAL (§ 62*)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SCOPE OF EVIDENCE IN REBUTTAL.

Where a question to a witness was proper to elicit evidence in rebuttal of defendant's evidence that the answer might have been favorable to defendant, or, if unfavorable, the court might have been justified in disregarding it, would not justify excluding the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 149; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by M. W. Burrell against J. D. Collins. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appealed. Judgment and order reversed.

R. W. Miller, for appellant. Everts & Ewing, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to recover the value of a certain number of cattle alleged to have been the property of plaintiff and converted by defendant. The cattle were taken by defendant as sheriff of Fresno county under a writ of attachment issued out of the superior court of said county in the case of W. R. Smith et al. v. E. J. Burrell, and they were afterwards sold as the property of said E. J. Burrell under a writ of execution against the defendant in said cause.

Two issues are presented by the pleadings, to wit, the ownership of the property and the conversion of the same by defendant. The latter contends that the cattle belonged to E. J. Burrell and were legally sold under said writ of execution, while plaintiff insists, not only that he is the owner of the property, but also that the record shows an irregularity in the sale, as no proof was made of the judgment upon which the execution was issued. But it is clear that the only controversy of importance here is as to the ownership of the property, because, if it belonged to plaintiff, the admitted taking by defendant was a conversion, and, if plaintiff was not the owner, it is no concern of his whether the property was regularly or irregularly taken. There is sufficient evidence disclosed by the record to justify the finding that the property belonged to said E. J. Burrell, but we cannot avoid the conclusion that the trial court committed prejudicial error in its ruling in relation to certain offered evidence directed to the issue of ownership. The said E. J. Burrell was called by plaintiff as a witness in rebuttal, and, after stating that he was the party defendant in the suit of Smith v. Burrell and that certain cattle were sold under an execution issued against him, he was asked this question: "Were the cattle levied upon by the execution and sold at the sheriff's sale in the suit of Smith et al. v. Burrell your cattle?" The court sustained an objection that "it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial and not rebuttal testimony." In this we think the court erred. Plaintiff in his case in chief did not anticipate the defense, but offered evidence in support of the allegations of his complaint and rested. Defendant sought to justify his action upon the ground that the property belonged to E. J. Burrell and introduced evidence to that effect. This was new matter brought out by the defendant, and, while the effect of it was to disprove the ownership of plaintiff, it was directed to a specific affirmative fact which in rebuttal the plaintiff had a right to controvert, not simply to fortify his own allegation, but to overcome the showing made by defendant. E. J. Burrell was not called as a witness by defendant, but the whole defense rested upon the showing made that he was the owner and no one was in as good a position to testify concerning this as himself. It may be that the answer would have been favorable to defendant, or, if unfavorable, that the court would have been entirely justified in disregarding it, but such considerations cannot excuse the ruling. Plaintiff had a right to have the question answered and the answer considered the same as though the issue had been tried by a jury.

We find no other prejudicial error, but, for the reason stated, the judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

154 Cal. 778

SHATTUCK & DESMOND WAREHOUSE
CO. v. GILLELEN. (L. A. 2,228.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 23, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 244*) — LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS — STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION.
— "STOCKHOLDER."

Under Civ. Code, § 322, defining the term "stockholder" as applying not only to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such, but also to every equitable owner of stock, etc., a pledgee of corporate stock, who allows himself to appear on the books of the corporation as the owner of the stock, is a "stockholder," within the section, and within Const. art. 12, § 3, making stockholders individually liable for corporate debts; but a pledgee of stock, who directs the secretary of the corporation to issue to him a new certificate in his name as pledgee, is not a stockholder because the secretary, without the knowledge of the pledgee, entered his name on the corporate books as a stockholder and issued stock in his name as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 974, 975; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6667, 6668; vol. 8, p. 780±.]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 244*)—STOCKHOLDERS.

Where the indorsement on corporate stock pledged to secure a loan purports to transfer the stock absolutely to the pledgee who delivers the same to the secretary of the corporation, with instructions to issue to him a new certificate in his name as pledgee, the secretary is not warranted in issuing a certificate to the pledgee in his name as absolute owner and making entry on the books of the corporation as though such pledgee is the absolute owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 974, 975; Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 424*) — PAROL EVIDENCE —
VARYING TERMS OF INSTRUMENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

The rule forbidding parol evidence to vary or alter the terms of a written contract, as established by Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, applies only as between the parties to a contract, their representatives or successors in interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1967; Dec. Dig. § 424.*]

4. PLEDGES (§ 16*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING
TERMS OF INSTRUMENT—ADMISSIBILITY.

The parties to an apparent absolute transfer of property, real or personal, may always show by parol that the transfer was made solely by way of security, and that the transaction was a mortgage or pledge, and hence, where the indorsement on corporate stock pledged to secure a loan purported to transfer the same absolutely to the pledgee, the pledgee, in an action by a creditor of the corporation to enforce stock liability, could show by parol that he was a mere pledgee of the stock, and that the issue of a new certificate to him as owner and the entry of his name as owner on the corporate books was in violation of his instructions and without his knowledge.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 16;* Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2136.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by the Shattuck & Desmond Warehouse Company against Warren Gillelen. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar A. Trippet, for appellant. Borden & Carhart, for respondent.

ANGELOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment for defendant and an order denying a motion for a new trial. The action is one brought upon a note given on April 15, 1902, to one E. S. Shattuck by the Ivanpah Smelting Company (a corporation), and transferred to plaintiff, to recover from the defendant his proportionate liability as a stockholder of said Ivanpah Smelting Company; it being alleged that when the indebtedness to evidence which said note was given was created, and at the time of the giving of said note, defendant was the owner, and appeared on the books of said corporation as the owner, of 908 shares of the 954 shares of the corporate stock subscribed for.

The principal portion of the indebtedness evidenced by the note grew out of a contract entered into between Shattuck and the Ivanpah Smelting Company on February 1, 1902, under which Shattuck was to furnish the company men, wagons, and horses for at least six months at $75 per day. Between that date and April 15, 1902, there had become due under this contract and for certain merchandise and services furnished and rendered outside thereof, less credits amounting to $429.43, the sum of $3,041.16, and on April 15, 1902, the contract was abrogated by the parties, with the understanding that Shattuck should be allowed $4,450 in addition to what was due, as liquidated damages for the failure of the company to complete its contract. These two amounts, the $3,041.16 due, and the $4,450 allowance for damages, make up the amount of the note, $7,491.16. There is some question whether this compromise as to damages and the giving of the note therefor was in fact authorized by the corporation, but we may assume for the purposes of this decision that it was.

The trial court found that defendant was not a stockholder of the Ivanpah Smelting Company at any time prior to February 11, 1904, when he acquired title to said 908 shares by purchase at a judicial sale in proceedings to foreclose a pledge. It further found the probative facts upon which it based its conclusion that he was not a stockholder within the meaning of our constitutional and statutory provisions relative to the liability of stockholders of corporations for the debts thereof. There is no material difference between the facts so found, and the facts stated in the opinion of this court in Welch v. Gillelen, 147 Cal. 571, 82 Pac. 248, a similar action by a creditor of the Ivanpah Smelting Company against this defendant, on account of his alleged ownership of these shares of stock. Briefly stated, these facts are as follows: Defendant never, in fact, owned any portion of this stock prior to his purchase thereof in the year 1904. From some time in the year 1901 to the time of such purchase he held it purely by way of pledge, to secure the payment of money advanced by him to the owners for the purchase thereof by them. One Blaisdell and one Sisson were the owners; the certificates therefor being issued to Blaisdell. At the time that the stock was so pledged to him, the certificates therefor were indorsed and delivered by Blaisdell to defendant; the indorsement not showing that the transaction was only a pledge. Defendant retained these certificates until February 27, 1902, when, Blaisdell having died, defendant, on Sisson's request, for the purpose of having the record show the real transaction between defendant and the owners, deposited the pledged certificates with the secretary of the company with the direction to said secretary to issue to him a new certificate in his name as pledgee, which implied, of course, a direction that the secretary should also make a proper entry on the books of the corporation of the fact that he held the stock as pledgee, as the court found. The secretary, in violation of these instructions, and without any authority in that behalf, and without the knowledge of defendant, issued a new certificate for this stock to the defendant, which on its face showed him to be the owner thereof, and made an entry in the record books of the company which likewise showed him to be the owner, instead of a mere pledgee. This certificate was receipted for by an employé of defendant and taken to defendant, who at once discovered the error therein. He immediately went to the secretary, and demanded that his previous instructions be complied with. The secretary never refused to rectify the matter, but put the defendant off on the plea that the matter could not be rectified in the absence of the vice president of the company, and that the matter would be attended to as soon as the signature of the vice president could be obtained. Defendant frequently thereafter renewed his said demands on the secretary, receiving like responses, until on May 15, 1902, in compliance with a written demand made by defendant's attorneys, the matter was remedied by a cancellation of the certificate, the issuance of a new certificate to defendant as pledgee, and the making of an entry on the books of the company showing defendant to be the holder of this stock as a pledgee only. While retaining the erroneous certificate during all this time, defendant never acquiesced therein, and never did any act asserting a stockholder's right in the corporation. Previous to April 15, 1902, Shattuck had no information tending to lead him to believe that defendant appeared on the books of the corporation as the owner of this stock, but discovered that fact on the last-named day before accepting the note. There was absolutely nothing to indicate that defendant had any reason to suspect that Shattuck had such knowledge, or relied thereon at all in any of his transactions with the corporation. Upon these facts the trial court concluded that defendant was not liable as a stockholder for the payment of said note or any part thereof, and that, as to plaintiff and its assignor, he was not guilty of such laches or of such conduct as would estop him in this action to deny his true relation to the stock held by him.

As we have said, there is no material difference between the facts of this case and those of Welch v. Gillelen, supra. The real effort of learned counsel for appellant appears to us to be to induce a modification of the views expressed by the court in that case as to the law applicable to these facts. An examination of the authorities relied on by counsel in this behalf discloses to us no satisfactory reason for any such modification. The rule invoked by him, which is thoroughly established by the decisions of this court, that, under section 322 of our Civil Code, a pledgee, who allows himself to appear upon the books of a corporation as the owner of the pledged stock, is to be deemed to be the owner thereof for all the purposes of section 3, art. 12, of the Constitution, and section 322, Civ. Code (see Hurlburt v. Arthur, 140 Cal. 103, 73 Pac. 734, 98 Am. St. Rep. 17; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158) is fully recognized by that decision. The provision of section 322, Civ. Code, in this regard, as construed in Hurlburt v. Arthur, supra, is that the term "stockholder" as used therein applies "to such persons as appear by the books of the corporation to be such," and that stock held as collateral security, etc., does not make the holder a stockholder except when he appears by the books to be such. This rule, we say, is fully recognized in Welch v. Gillelen, supra; but it is further held, in accord with what appears to us to be the only rational construction of the section, that the language "such persons as appear by the books," etc., must be limited to persons who knowingly or voluntarily permit their names to appear as stockholders. Upon this point we quote from the opinion: "The general construction of the section in question contended for by appellant, if it were sustained, would necessarily preclude one from showing that while upon the face of the corporate books he appeared to be a stockholder, yet in fact he was not; that he had never owned or subscribed for any stock or authorized the issuance of any to him by the corporation. A construction which would lead to this result cannot seriously be considered. The relation of a stockholder to a corporation is one of contract, either express or implied. It only exists when a party has either expressly consented to become a stockholder, or his conduct is such that in law his consent will be implied. He cannot be made a stockholder and liable to the creditors of a corporation without his consent, simply because an officer of the corporation has without authority, or in direct violation of his instructions, entered his name upon the books of the corporation as a stockholder and caused stock to be issued in his name as such. Nor does entry of his name in the books as a stockholder preclude him from showing that in fact he was not a stockholder, and that the issuance of stock in his name was unauthorized." The decisions relied on by the appellant in that case were shown to be cases where the party asserting that he was not a stockholder had either knowingly and voluntarily assumed that position upon the books of the corporation, or, if he had not originally done so, had by his subsequent conduct estopped himself from denying the relationship.

What is said in Welch v. Gillelen, supra, on the question of laches in failing to have made a change of the entries in the books of the corporation after discovery of the error committed by the secretary in issuing the certificate, is equally applicable here. The sum of this was that under the circumstances defendant proceeded with all reasonable diligence to have the matter rectified, until it was so rectified on May 15, 1902.

Learned counsel for appellant appears to maintain that, in view of the indorsement on the back of the pledged certificates, signed by Blaisdell, purporting to transfer them absolutely to defendant, the secretary of the corporation was bound to treat the transaction as a transfer of the ownership of the stock, and issue a certificate and make an entry on the books as though it were such a transfer, and that defendant by the delivery to the secretary of such certificate so indorsed directed the doing of just what the secretary did. We are unable to assent to this. The indorsements did not necessarily mean that defendant was taking the title other than as a mere pledgee. See Hall v. Cayot, 141 Cal. 13, 17, 74 Pac. 299. Taking them as showing on their face an absolute transfer of the stock by Blaisdell to defendant, the rule forbidding parol evidence to vary or alter the terms of a written contract (section 1856, Code Civ. Proc.) has no application: (1) Because that rule applies only as between the parties to a contract, their representatives or successors in interest (Dunn v. Price, 112 Cal. 46, 44 Pac. 354); and (2) because it is always open even to the parties to what purports to be an absolute transfer of property, real or personal, to show by parol that the transfer was made solely by way of security, and that the transaction was in fact a mortgage or pledge. The secretary of the corporation was not warranted in assuming, in the face of the positive instructions of defendant, that the transaction between Blaisdell and defendant was anything more than a pledge, he had no right in view of those directions to issue a new certificate to defendant as owner and to make it appear on the books of the corporation that he was such owner, and defendant was fully warranted in assuming that his instructions would be followed and that no such certificate would be issued and no such entry made.

We find nothing in the record that will warrant us in holding that the trial court erred in concluding that defendant was not estopped by his conduct to show his true relation to this stock. There was nothing in Shattuck's acts or in any circumstance of which defendant had knowledge tending to indicate to defendant that Shattuck was dealing with the corporation under the belief that he (defendant) was a stockholder, and he never said or did anything calculated to mislead Shattuck in that regard.

There is no other matter discussed in the briefs that requires notice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

154 Cal. 798

TAYLOR v. McCOWEN. (S. F. 4,235.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1908.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 21, 1909.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 459*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—AMBIGUITY—EXPLANATION.

A distribution decree following the terms of a will distributed certain land to A. for life, on condition that she should continue to reside thereon for life, and if she removed permanently therefrom, the lands should become the absolute property of "Albion M. Taylor of Lowell, Mass." Held, that evidence that no person named Albion M. Taylor had ever lived in Lowell, Mass., but that testatrix had a nephew residing there named Albion C. Taylor whom she had visited, and who was the person intended, was not objectionable as a collateral attack on the decree, but was admissible to remove an ambiguity therein by showing that there was a person on whom it could operate on the termination of the estate of the first taker.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2114; Dec. Dig. § 459.*]

2. WILLS (§ 488*)—LATENT AMBIGUITY.

A latent ambiguity may arise in a will, either when it names a person as the object of a gift or a thing as the subject of it, and there are two persons or things that answer the name or description, or when the will contains a misdescription of the object or subject, as where there is no such person or thing in existence, or if in existence is not the one intended, or the thing does not belong to testator.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1024; Dec. Dig. § 488.*]

3. WILLS (§ 463*)—AMBIGUITY—MISDESCRIPTION—CORRECTION.

Where an ambiguity in a will consists of a misdescription, and such misdescription can be stricken, and enough remain to identify the person or thing, the court will deal with it in that way, or if it is an obvious mistake, will read it as if corrected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 982; Dec. Dig. § 463.*]

4. WILLS (§ 488*)—LATENT AMBIGUITY—EVIDENCE.

Where there is a latent ambiguity in a will, evidence is admissible to show the condition of testator's family, estate, and surroundings at the time of making the will, in order to explain the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1024, 1033-1036; Dec. Dig. § 488.*]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 37*)—MISTAKE.

Where an action was brought to enforce a right under a distribution decree, and to explain a latent ambiguity therein, and not to change or alter the decree for mistake, it was not within Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, barring proceedings for relief because of mistake after three years from the time the cause of action accrues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. WILLS (§ 624*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONDITIONAL LIMITATION.

Civ. Code, § 778, declares that a remainder may be limited on a contingency, the happening of which will abridge or determine the precedent estate, and such remainder shall be deemed a conditional limitation. Section 773 provides that a fee may be limited on a contingency which must happen, if at all, within the period prescribed in the title. Held that, where testator bequeathed land to A. for life, and on her death to her heirs, but that, if A. should not reside on the land for her natural life, the land should become the absolute property of T., A.'s estate was not based on a condition subsequent, but was subject to a conditional limitation, so that on her removal from the land in her lifetime, the property vested in T. at once, without entry or suit to establish title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1446; Dec. Dig. § 624.*]

7. WILLS (§ 601*)—DISTRIBUTION DECREE—CONSTRUCTION.

Where a decree, carrying into effect the provisions of a will, distributed certain land to A. for life, remainder to her heirs on condition that she should reside on the land for life, and should she remove permanently therefrom in her lifetime, then the lands should become the property of T., the condition was not void as repugnant to A.'s estate in fee previously created therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1340-1350; Dec. Dig. § 601.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§ 601*)—IDENTITY—SUFFICIENCY—DISTRIBUTION DECREE—AMBIGUITY.

In an action to determine adverse claims to a tract of land, evidence held to support a finding that the decree of distribution providing that the property should become the absolute property of Albion M. Taylor of Lowell, Mass., intended to designate Albion C. Taylor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2458; Dec. Dig. § 601.*]

9. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 113*)—EVIDENCE—ASSESSMENT ROLLS.

In an action to determine adverse claims to a tract of land, assessment rolls on which the property was entered were properly admitted to show that the common source had acquired title by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 113.*]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Where both parties claimed under a common source, defendant was not prejudiced by evidence showing that the common source acquired title by adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

11. EVIDENCE (§ 291*)—DECLARATIONS—RELATIONSHIP.

Evidence that testatrix, under whom both parties claimed title, declared that she had a nephew named Albion C. Taylor, who resided in Lowell, Mass., was admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 4, providing that the act or declaration of a deceased person in respect to the relationship of any person related by blood or marriage to her is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1150; Dec. Dig. § 291.*]

12. WILLS (§ 489*)—EVIDENCE TO AID CONSTRUCTION—IDENTITY OF PERSONS.

Evidence as to the existence and identity of the person named in a distribution decree, and in a will, entitled to an estate subject to a conditional limitation, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 1041; Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by John Taylor, as administrator of the estate of Albion C. Taylor, deceased, against Hale McCowen. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McNab & Hirsch and T. B. Pond, for appellant. T. L. Carothers, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to determine adverse claims to a tract of land. Judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff, and an order was made denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. Thereupon the defendant appealed from the judgment, and also from the order.

Both parties claim under one Adaline S. Budd, who died on January 10, 1892, seised of the property in question. Upon the distribution of her estate in pursuance of the terms of her will the lands in question were distributed "to Charlotte Budd Armstrong for the term of her natural life, and upon her death to become the property of her heirs at law. Upon the condition that the said Charlotte Budd Armstrong shall continue to reside upon said lands for the period of her natural life, and should the said Charlotte Budd Armstrong remove permanently from said lands during the period of her lifetime, then and in that case, the said lands shall become the absolute property of Albion M. Taylor, of Lowell, Mass." This decree was made on June 7, 1893. The will contained, in addition to the conditions mentioned in the decree, the provision that the said Charlotte Budd Armstrong should take up her residence upon said tract of land within one year from the date of the death of the deceased, Mrs. Budd, and that, if she failed to take up her residence on the land within said year, or if she should remove from said land during her natural life, then the property should "become the property absolutely of my nephew Albion M. Taylor, of Lowell, Massachusetts." Within a year after the death of Mrs. Budd Charlotte Budd Armstrong took up her residence upon said land, and continued to reside thereon until April 28, 1899, when she permanently removed from said land, and sold and conveyed her interest in the same to the defendant, Hale McCowen. On August 7, 1903, a deed was executed by a person under the name of Albion M. Taylor, which, upon its face, states that he was formerly of Lowell, Mass., and a nephew of Adaline S. Budd, deceased, and the same Albion M. Taylor referred to in the last will of said Adaline S. Budd, whereby the said Taylor by quitclaim conveyed the said property to the defendant. The court found that the said Adaline S. Budd devised the property in question, upon the happening of the condition aforesaid to "Albion C. Taylor of Lowell, Massachusetts, a nephew of said Adaline S. Budd, he being named and designated in said will as Albion M. Taylor"; that Mrs. Budd had no nephew of the name of Albion M. Taylor, and never had, and that the insertion of his name in the will was a mistake in giving the name to the scrivener who drew the will, and that Albion C. Taylor was a nephew of Mrs. Budd, and that at the time she made her will he resided in Lowell, Mass., and afterward died in that city. With respect to the decree of distribution, the court found that it also declared that the property, upon the happening of the condition therein mentioned, should become "the absolute property of said Albion C. Taylor, of Lowell, Mass., who was therein designated through mistake, as above found, as Albion M. Taylor."

1. The first contention of the defendant is that the evidence and findings relating to the alleged mistake in naming Albion C. Taylor as Albion M. Taylor in the will, and especially in the decree of distribution, was an unlawful and unauthorized collateral attack upon the final judgment of the superior court in making the distribution. Many authorities are cited upon the proposition that a judgment of a court cannot be changed or modified by parol evidence showing a mistake in its terms. This proposition need not be controverted. It may be conceded that, if the judgment appealed from had the effect of grafting, upon the decree of distribution, terms which it did not contain, and contrary to its intent and effect, it would be erroneous. Such, however, is not the effect of the judgment, nor was this the object of the plaintiff in this case. The case presents the familiar instance of a latent ambiguity. The decree of distribution, which is the final statement of the rights of the parties under the will, declares that, in the event there set forth, the land should become the property of Albion M. Taylor, of Lowell, Mass. It is alleged that no person named Albion M. Taylor had ever lived in Lowell, Mass.; that the decree was founded upon a will which declared that the Albion M. Taylor there intended was the nephew of the testatrix, and that he lived in Lowell, Mass., at the time of the execution of the will. It appears, therefore, if there were no explanation, that there was no person in existence to take under the decree; that is, that there was a latent ambiguity whereby the decree appeared to be inoperative. In further explanation it is shown that the testatrix had a nephew, whose name was Albion C. Taylor, and who resided in Lowell, Mass., and that she had no nephew named Albion M. Taylor. This does not in any respect change the terms of the decree of distribution, but simply points out the person intended to be described therein, and removes the ambiguity in the decree by showing that there is a person upon whom it can operate. The true rule is stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Patch v. White, 117 U. S. 210, 217, 6 Sup. Ct. 617, 29 L. Ed. 860, as follows: "It is settled doctrine that, as a latent ambiguity is only disclosed by extrinsic evidence, it may be removed by extrinsic evidence. Such an ambiguity may arise upon a will, either when it names a person as the object of a gift, or a thing as the subject of it, and there are two persons or things that answer the name or description; or, secondly, it may arise when the will contains a misdescription of the object or subject, as where there is no such person or thing in existence, or, if in existence, the person is not the one intended, or the thing does not belong to the testator. * * * Where it consists of a misdescription, * * * if the misdescription can be struck out and enough remain in the will to identify the person or thing, the court will deal with it in that way, or, if it is an obvious mistake, will read it as if corrected. The ambiguity in the latter case consists in the repugnancy between the manifest intent of the will and the misdescription of the donee or the subject of the gift. In such a case evidence is always admissible to show the condition of the testator's family and estate, and the circumstances by which he was surrounded at the time of making his will." A decree of distribution is no more immune against explanation of a latent ambiguity than is a will, and the same rule which the court, in the case cited, applied to an ambiguous will is applicable, under like circumstances, to an ambiguous decree or judgment. This may easily be illustrated by the case of a judgment for money against, we will say, John Smith. An execution being issued against the defendant, the sheriff seizes the property of a man named John Smith in satisfaction of the judgment, said John Smith being an entire stranger to the proceeding, and not the person served with process in the action. No one would for a moment contend that in such a case the man whose property was seized could not go to court, and by parol and extrinsic evidence show that, although his name was John Smith, he was not the particular John Smith named in the judgment. Such a proceeding would not be an attack upon the judgment, nor would it in any respect change or modify it. It would merely point out the person to whom the judgment was directed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

2. Defendant further contends that the cause is barred by the provisions of subdivision 4, § 338, Code Civ. Proc. This subdivision provides that an action for relief on the ground of mistake must be begun within three years after the cause of action accrues. This contention is founded upon the same misconception of the nature of the case as that upon which the last-mentioned point was based. This is not an action to obtain relief on the ground of mistake in the decree of distribution, but is an action to enforce rights under that decree. The effect of the proceeding is not to change or alter that decree, but to enforce it according to its true intent and meaning. Subdivision 4, § 338, has no application.

3. The next objection is that the suit involves the adjudication of a forfeiture of the estate of Charlotte Budd Armstrong in an action in equity. This, it is claimed, cannot be done; the proposition asserted being that "it is a universal rule in equity never to enforce either a penalty or a forfeiture." Numerous authorities are cited to this effect. It is claimed that the plaintiff was required to establish the fact that Charlotte Budd Armstrong by removing from the land had forfeited her estate, that it is necessary for him to begin an action for that express purpose, or to terminate her estate by an entry, and that until he has done so he cannot go into equity and quiet the title of his intestate to the said land which, according to defendant's contention, could only vest in his intestate by reason of the forfeiture. This objection assumes that the estate of Mrs. Armstrong was an estate upon condition subsequent, which can only be divested by an entry for condition broken, or by a judgment at law. The estate which by the terms of the decree was vested in Mrs. Armstrong was not an estate upon condition, but a conditional limitation. The happening of the condition does not, in contemplation of law, in a case such as that before us, operate to forfeit the estate given to the first taker, but merely to determine it; that is, to bring it to an end. Section 778, Civ. Code, is as follows: "A remainder may be limited on a contingency which, in case it should happen, will operate to abridge or determine the precedent estate; and every such remainder is to be deemed a conditional limitation." Section 773 declares that "a fee may be limited upon a contingency, which, if it should occur, must happen within the period prescribed in this title." The latter clause describes precisely the estate herein created in the intestate of the plaintiff.

The distinction between conditional limitations, contingent remainders, and estates upon condition subsequent, and the different consequences as to the taking effect of the subsequent estate, is clearly set forth in Washburn on Real Property (6th Ed.) vol. 2, § 1640, as follows: "If an estate is limited to A. until B. return from Rome, and after B. return to C., the limitation is a contingent remainder, and good as such. But if the estate had been limited to A., which would be for life if no words of inheritance were annexed, provided that if B. return from Rome, the estate should go to C., the limitation, though expressly the same in effect as the first, would be, not a remainder, but a conditional limitation. In the one case if C.'s estate comes into effect at all, it is after the prior estate had terminated by the natural expiration of the time for which it was limited, whereas in the other C.'s estate, if it took effect, came in and displaced the prior estate before its natural termination, and took its place as a substitute therefor. Then, again, though the estate of A. is a conditional one, liable to be defeated by the happening of a contingent event, it is not a case of condition at the common law, where to determine an estate for a breach of it required an entry by the grantor or his heirs, who thereby regained the estate originally parted with; but it is a case where the estate is wholly parted with by the grantor, no interest being left in him, and passes at once, upon the happening of the event, to him to whom it is limited. That contingent event, when it happens, is the limitation of the first estate granted; and the estate, instead of going back to the original grantor, goes over, eo instanti, and without any act but that of the law, to the party named in the very gift itself of the estate as the one to take it in that event." See, also, to the same effect 1 Wash. R. P. (6th Ed.) § 165; 2 Wash. R. P. (6th Ed.) § 970; 4 Kent, Com. 127; Miller v. Levi, 44 N. Y. 494; Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 160; Coppage v. Alexander's Heirs, 41 Ky. (2 B. Mon.) 313, 38 Am. Dec. 153; Jewell v. Pierce, 120 Cal. 83, 52 Pac. 132. The latter case is practically the same as the case at bar, and although the point here made was not raised, the suit to quiet title was treated by the court as a proper method of establishing a title in the owner of the subsequent estate. In the present case, therefore, no proceeding for a forfeiture, or by way of re-entry for condition broken, was required as a condition precedent to a suit in equity to establish title. The estate of Mrs. Armstrong terminated, eo instanti, upon her removal from the land, and that of the plaintiff's intestate immediately vested as a legal estate in possession.

4. There is no merit in the point that the condition annexed to Mrs. Armstrong's estate in the decree of distribution is void because it is repugnant to her estate in fee therein previously created. Even if the ruling applying to grants by an individual is also applicable to a decree, the entire provision must be considered in order to ascertain the intention and effect, and, so considered, the conditions expressed in the decree constitute a limitation, and not a repugnant provision. Pavkovich v. Southern Pacific Co., 150 Cal. 46, 87 Pac. 1097, and cases there cited.

5. It is earnestly contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the decree of distribution provided that the property in question should become "the absolute property of Albion C. Taylor, of Lowell, Mass., who was therein designated through mistake, as above found, as Albion M. Taylor." We think this contention is also untenable. The evidence showed that Albion C. Taylor died in 1901; that he was then upwards of 60 years of age, and had resided in Lowell practically all of his life; that he had a brother named Albion R. Taylor, who was older than he, and who died when quite young, many years prior to the making of the will in question; that the testatrix, Mrs. Budd, had visited the family long after the death of Albion R. Taylor, and was fully aware of the fact that he was dead, and that she had no nephew in Lowell, Mass., or elsewhere, of the name of Albion R. Taylor, and no nephew named Albion Taylor, except said nephew Albion C. Taylor, and his son of the same name. It also appeared that no person of the name of Albion M. Taylor ever resided in Lowell, Mass. This evidence was clearly sufficient to show that the person intended by the decree was the same person as that intended by the will, and that this person was no other than Albion C. Taylor, the plaintiff's intestate. The decree identified the person intended by giving the first name as Albion, the last name as Taylor, and the middle initial as "M.," and by the fact that he lived in Lowell, Mass. The extrinsic evidence showed that the decree could not have intended Albion M. Taylor, since no such person existed. This created a latent ambiguity; and, in order to show the person who was really intended, it was proper to prove the additional facts that the testatrix had a nephew named Albion C. Taylor, and that he resided in Lowell, Mass., at the time the will was made and at the time of the decree of distribution, and from this the court properly inferred that the Albion C. Taylor who was her nephew, and who resided in Lowell, Mass., was the person referred to in the decree.

6. Several errors of law are assigned by the appellant, none of which we think is well taken. The assessment rolls were properly introduced in evidence for the purpose of showing that Adaline S. Budd had acquired title to the property by adverse possession. This appears to be the only purpose for which the rolls were admitted and it will not be presumed that the court considered them for any improper purpose. Furthermore as both parties claim under the will of Adaline S. Budd, the evidence could have caused no prejudice to the appellant, even if it had been technically inadmissible. The declarations of Mrs. Budd to Mary McCowen to the effect that she had a nephew named Albion C. Taylor, who resided in Lowell, Mass., was properly admitted under section 1870, Code Civ. Proc. subd. 4, which provides that on a trial there may be proved "the act or declaration, verbal or written, of a deceased person in respect to the relationship * * * of any person related by blood or marriage to such deceased person." The other specifications relate to the evidence introduced for the purpose of showing the facts in regard to the existence and identity of the person named Taylor, mentioned in the decree and in the will in question. There can be no question but that this evidence was admissible for that purpose under the authorities heretofore cited.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; SLOSS, J.
HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

154 Cal. 789

CHASE v. SUPERIOR COURT et al.
(S. F. 5,052.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 24, 1908.)

1. VENUE (§ 78*)—CHANGE—ORDER.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 939, an appeal from an order changing the place of trial of a cause must be taken within 60 days after the entry or filing of the order. Held, that since, for the purposes of appeal, the entry of an order changing the venue of a cause is a final disposition of the cause on the part of the court making such order, it must be considered as final in that court for all other purposes, including the divestiture of the court's jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 136; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

2. VENUE (§ 78*)—ORDER OF CHANGE—EFFECT ON JURISDICTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 399, provides that, when an order is made changing the venue of a cause, the clerk of court must transmit the pleadings and papers therein to the clerk of the court to which it is transferred, and the court to which such action is transferred has and exercises over the same the like jurisdiction as if it had been originally commenced therein. Section 837, relating to change of venue in justices' courts, provides that, "from the time the order changing the place of trial is made, the court to which the action is thereby transferred has the same jurisdiction over it as though it had been commenced in such court." Held that, on making an unconditional order changing the place of trial, the court making the same loses jurisdiction and has no power afterward to vacate such order for failure of the party obtaining the order to pay the fees of the clerk of the court to which the cause was transferred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 136; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

3. COSTS (§ 155*)—CHANGING PLACE FOR TRIAL—LIABILITY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 399, provides that the costs and fees on a change of venue and of filing papers anew must be paid by the party at whose instance the change was made. Held that though the action was brought in the wrong county, and the party applying therefor is entitled to a change of venue, he is liable for the costs of transfer, including the entry fees of the court to which the change is made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 577; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

4. VENUE (§ 80*)—COSTS OF TRANSFER—JURISDICTION OF COURT TO ENFORCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 399, providing that, on the transfer of a cause to another court for trial, the court to which the transfer is made "has and exercises over the same the like jurisdiction as if it had been originally commenced therein," the liability of the person applying for the transfer for costs and fees in filing the papers anew must be enforced in such court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

In Bank. Original application by J. A. Chase for a writ of prohibition against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and John Hunt, Judge. Writ allowed.

A. H. Jarman, for petitioner. Nagle & Nagle, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This application for a writ of prohibition was originally presented to the District Court of Appeal for the First Appellate District. After judgment in that court, ordering a writ to issue as prayed by the petitioner, the proceeding, upon motion of the respondents, was ordered transferred to this court for hearing and determination.

In the District Court of Appeal the following opinion, prepared by COOPER, P. J., was filed:

"The verified petition for a writ of prohibition shows that in July, 1906, F. A. Bliss brought an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against the petitioner as defendant. In the following September, upon the demand of petitioner, the said superior court duly made an order, changing the place of trial of said action from the city and county of San Francisco to Santa Clara county; that being the county in which the defendant in said action resided at the time of the commencement thereof. The petitioner paid the fees of the clerk of the superior court of San Francisco and the charges for transferring said pleadings and records in said case to the county of Santa Clara, but neglected to pay the fees of the clerk of Santa Clara county demanded for filing the said papers in said cause with said clerk after they had been so transferred. In October, 1907, the attorney for the plaintiff in said action filed an affidavit in the superior court of San Francisco, setting forth the fact that more than one year had elapsed since the said superior court made the order transferring the said case, and that this petitioner had during all of said time neglected and refused to pay the costs and fees required by law to be paid to the clerk of Santa Clara county, which affidavit was accompanied by the certificate of the county clerk of Santa Clara county to the effect that his legal fees for filing said papers had not been paid. Upon this showing an order to show cause was issued out of the superior court of San Francisco, and served upon petitioner's attorneys. The said superior court, in January, 1908, after notice and hearing, made an order vacating and setting aside the order made in September, 1906, changing the place of trial on the ground that this petitioner had, for more than one year, neglected and refused to pay the fees for filing said papers in Santa Clara county, and at the same time directed that said records and papers be recalled and restored to the superior court of San Francisco, and further made an order denying the said motion of petitioner for a change of the place of trial. The defendant interposed a demurrer to the petition upon the ground that the facts therein stated do not show that the petitioner is entitled to the relief prayed for. On the argument of the case it was agreed that the facts stated in the petition are substantially correct, and that the whole matter might be determined upon the record as it now stands.

"It is claimed that by the unconditional order of transfer the superior court of San Francisco lost jurisdiction, and hence it had no power afterwards to vacate the order changing the place of trial, or to entertain any further jurisdiction in the case. It is provided in the Code of Civil Procedure (section 399) as follows: 'When an order is made transferring an action or proceeding for trial the clerk of the court or justice of the peace must transmit the pleadings and papers therein to the clerk or justice of the court to which it is transferred. The costs and fees thereof, and of filing the papers anew, must be paid by the party at whose instance the order was made. The court to which an action or proceeding is transferred has and exercises over the same the like jurisdiction as if it had been originally commenced therein.' The question in the case is as to when the action was transferred, or, in other words, was the transfer in fact completed by the order made by the court? The Code provides that the court to which the action is transferred 'has and exercises over the same the like jurisdiction as if it had been originally commenced therein.' We are of the opinion that the action was transferred to Santa Clara county when the order was finally made and entered in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. There must be a moment of time when the court transferring the case loses jurisdiction, and the court to which it is transferred acquires jurisdiction. When the court to which the action is transferred acquires jurisdiction, the court which made the order transferring it has no power to make any further order in the premises. The Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 395) expressly provides that the kind of an action brought against petitioner 'must be brought in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action.' Such action may, however, be tried in any county unless the defendant, at the time he appears, files an affidavit of merits and demands in writing that it be tried in the proper county. Section 396. The Code makes no provision as to inserting a condition in the order, nor does it provide that the order becomes void for a failure to pay the costs. It makes it the duty of the party at whose instance the order was made to pay the costs of filing the papers anew, but that is the extent of the provision. It may be a hardship upon the party who was sued in the wrong county to compel him to go to such county, file his notice, affidavit, and demand in writing in order to get the case transferred to the county of his residence, where it should have been commenced in the first place, and then, in addition to this, to pay the clerk's fees for filing the papers anew in the county to which it is transferred. It is really making the defendant who has been sued in the wrong county pay the clerk's fees of plaintiff for filing the papers anew in the proper county, but such is the statute. It is not our business in this proceeding to suggest the method of enforcing it, but it is sufficient to say that the statute does not provide that the order may be vacated and set aside by the court which made it if such costs are not paid. The order changing the place of trial having been made and entered in the clerk's office of the superior court of San Francisco, and the custody of the papers and records having passed from the clerk of the city and county of San Francisco to the clerk of Santa Clara county, the superior court of San Francisco had no further duty to perform, and no authority to compel the payment of costs in Santa Clara county. The superior court of Santa Clara county was the court in which to enforce the payment of costs by petitioner.

"In Hatch v. Galvin, 50 Cal. 441, the action was brought against defendant to recover damages for having, as justice of the peace, rendered judgment and issued execution in an action in which he had no jurisdiction, because he, as such justice, had duly made an order changing the place of trial to the court of one Squire, a justice of the peace for the same township. It was held that the action would lie, and that, by the order changing the place of trial, the justice's court by which the order was made lost jurisdiction. In the opinion it is said: 'The order thus entered vested jurisdiction in the court of the said Abner C. Squire, and necessarily put an end to the jurisdiction of the defendant over the case. Section 837 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "From the time the order changing the place of trial is made the court to which the action is thereby transferred has the same jurisdiction over it as though it had been commenced in such court." The granting of the order therefore left the court held by the defendant with no other jurisdiction over the cause than it would have had if the action had been originally commenced in the court to which it was thereby transferred; that is to say, with absolutely no jurisdiction to try or determine it.'

"In People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093, it was claimed that the county in which an order, changing the place of trial, was made, retained jurisdiction because the papers and records of the case were sent to the county to which the case had been transferred, instead of sending copies, as required by the Penal Code. The court there said: 'We are of the opinion, under the language of our statute, that the superior court of Santa Clara county acquired jurisdiction of the cause by reason of the making and entry of the order of removal. The statute provides that an order must be made transferring the action, and when such an order is legally made the court making it has no jurisdiction to proceed further in the cause so long, at least, as that order remains unrevoked. The certified copies to be forwarded to the court to which the action has been transferred are the evidence of the order of transfer, and of the proceedings in the court from which the transfer has been made.'

"In Brown v. Gilmore's Executors, 8 Md. 322, it is said: 'The order for removal transfers the jurisdiction, and from that moment the case in legal contemplation is in the court to which it is removed, whether the papers have actually been transmitted from one court to the other or not.'

"In State ex rel. Gibson v. Lay, 128 Mo. 609, 29 S. W. 999, it is said: 'There can be no serious question but that as soon as the order granting the change of venue was entered of record the circuit court of Vernan county no longer had jurisdiction of the cause, and that, by such order, the jurisdiction was conferred upon the circuit court of Henry county, and that it was from that time on pending in that county.'

"In Fisk v. Albany R. Co., 41 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 365, it is said: 'Where an order is made changing the place of trial in a cause to another county, the change is effected at once. The transfer of the papers is a subsequent clerical duty.'

"The recent case of Cunningham v. Current R. Company, 165 Mo. 270, 65 S. W. 556, is directly in point here. There the statute required the party, at whose instance a change of venue is granted, to deposit with the clerk the sum of $10. Upon motion an order was made changing the venue from the county in which the action was brought to Texas county. The defendant, who had asked for and procured the order, failed to deposit the $10 as the statute provided that he must do, and the clerk did not make out and transmit the record. The trial court, at its next term, set aside the order for the reason that the defendant had failed to deposit the $10 as required by the statute, and proceeded to try the case, giving judgment for the plaintiff. The judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court and held void for the reason that the court, after making the order granting the change of venue, had no further jurisdiction. The opinion is by Chief Justice Burgess, and it is there said: 'While the statute required that the defendant, when it made application for the change of venue, deposit with its application with the clerk of the court $10, which it failed to do, the court did not for that reason lose jurisdiction over the case; and its order granting the change of venue to Texas county was not absolutely void but irregular, and could not, of course, be set aside at a subsequent term of the court after the order was made, for the obvious reason that it had lost jurisdiction of the cause by reason of the order changing the venue.' The court there quoted from State v. Taylor, 132 Mo. 286, 33 S. W. 1145, where the same statute was construed, in which case the court said: 'The deposit of $10 by the defendant with its application for a change of venue was not a condition precedent to the entertainment of the application, nor to the power of the court to grant it. Therefore its failure to do so did not render the order void, and as it had no power to set the order aside at a subsequent term, it was without authority to try the case the venue of which had been transferred to another court. Our conclusion is that the court was without authority to try the case.' See further to the same effect: State v. Taylor, 132 Mo. 286, 33 S. W. 1145; Farr v. Fuller, 12 Iowa, 83; Fatt v. Fatt, 78 Wis. 633, 48 N. W. 52; Mills v. National Fire Ins. Co., 92 Wis. 90, 65 N. W. 730; State v. Hopper, 71 Mo. 425; Goodhue v. People, 94 Ill. 37; Ryburn v. Pryor, 10 Ark. 417.

"The case of Armstrong v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 412, is not in conflict with what has been said. It was there held that an order granting a motion for a change of venue, upon the condition of payment of certain costs which had accrued in the county in which the order was made, was in effect denying the motion unless the costs be first paid. The court expressly said: 'It is not necessary to decide whether the superior court would have power to set aside a final order changing the place of trial.'

"It is ordered that the demurrer to the petition be overruled, and that the alternative writ heretofore granted be made absolute."

Further consideration of the question involved has led us to the conviction that the views expressed in the foregoing opinion are correct. A few words may, however, be added to what is there said. An order changing the place of trial is appealable, and the appeal therefrom must be taken within 60 days after the entry or filing of the order. Code Civ. Proc. § 939. For purposes of appeal therefore such order, when entered or filed, is a final and absolute disposition, on the part of the court making it, of the motion for change of venue, and it must be regarded as final (in that court) for all purposes, unless there be attached to it some condition which is to be complied with before the transfer shall become effective. A condition of this character may be expressed in the order itself, as was the case in Armstrong v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 412, or it may be implied from the terms of the statute authorizing the change. Some of the justices of this court, in directing that this proceeding be heard here, were of the opinion that the provision of section 399, requiring the moving party to pay certain costs, might be construed as importing into the order a condition making the transfer contingent upon such payment within a reasonable time. A more careful examination of the statute has, however, satisfied us that to so hold would be equivalent to writing a new provision into the statute, instead of interpreting what is written in it. The Code provides that, "when an order is made transferring an action or proceeding," the pleadings and papers must be transmitted to the clerk or justice of the court to which it is transferred, and the costs and fees of filing in the new court paid. Throughout the statutory provisions we find the two words "transfer" and "transmit"; the former referring to the order of the court, which removes the case from the jurisdiction of one court to that of the other, and the latter to the ministerial duty of the clerk in physically forwarding the papers. The court in which the action was commenced has ended its duty, i. e., that of transferring the cause, before any obligation to pay costs or fees arises, and we can find in the statute nothing which makes the effectiveness of the order conditional upon compliance by the moving party with the obligation imposed upon him by section 399. The sections of the Code dealing with transfers from justices' courts (Code Civ. Proc. § 833 et seq.) likewise contain provisions requiring the transmission of the papers and the payment of costs by the moving party. The ruling of this court in Hatch v. Galvin, 50 Cal. 441, that the entry of the order ends the jurisdiction of the justice making it, seems to apply equally to a transfer from one superior court to another. It is true that section 837 provides that, "from the time the order changing the place of trial is made, the court to which the action is thereby transferred has the same jurisdiction over it as though it had been commenced in such court," while section 399, which, on its face, refers to both superior and justices' courts, merely provides that the court "to which an action or proceeding is transferred has and exercises over the same the like jurisdiction as if it had been originally commenced therein." But, if, as above suggested, the "transfer" is effected by the order, rather than by the transmission and filing of the papers, there is no substantial difference in this respect between the sections. Furthermore, since both sections 399 and 837 purport to deal with transfers from justices' courts, they should, if possible, be given a construction which will make them harmonize.

The respondents quote statements of two text-writers to the effect that the failure to pay the required costs renders all prior proceedings of no effect, and enables the court in which the action was commenced to resume jurisdiction. An examination of the cases cited in support of this declaration shows, however, that in each case, with perhaps one exception, the statute under consideration provides, either expressly or by strong implication, that a failure to pay the costs within a given or reasonable time shall have the effect of vacating the order of transfer.

It may be added that the view here adopted does not, as respondents suggest, leave it within the power of the moving party to permanently prevent a trial of the action by his failure to comply with the statutory duty imposed upon him. If the jurisdiction is by the order of transfer vested in the superior court of the county to which the action is transferred, that court has ample power to deal with a failure to comply with the statutory requirements, although the papers have not actually been filed there.

For these reasons it is ordered that a peremptory writ of prohibition issue as prayed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

BEATTY, C. J. I concur in the judgment, not without some doubt, as to the construction given to the statute, but the more readily because it directs attention to an inconvenience or hardship which deserves consideration by the Legislature. It seems to me a most unjust law which requires the defendant in a case like this to pay the costs of removing a cause to the proper county for trial. The necessity for the proceeding arises from the fault of the plaintiff, and he should not only prepay all the costs incident to the removal, but he should not be allowed to recover those particular items of cost upon recovering judgment on the merits. When the action has been commenced in the proper county, and the venue is changed on motion of either party on account of local prejudice, disqualification of the judge, or for the convenience of witnesses, the moving party is justly chargeable in the first instance with the costs involved in the change; but this rule should not be applied to the defendant who merely insists upon a clear right of which the plaintiff has sought to deprive him. The statute needs amendment.

155 Cal. 30

GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 5,060.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 436*)—TAKING DEPOSITIONS PENDING APPEAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 946, providing that, notwithstanding an appeal and a stay of proceedings, the superior court may proceed on any other matter embraced in the action and not affected by the appeal, and section 1049, providing that an action is pending from its commencement until final determination on appeal, and sections 2020 and 2021, providing that the deposition of a witness out of the state may be taken at any time after the service of the summons or the appearance of defendant, etc., the superior court has jurisdiction pending an appeal to order a commission to take the deposition of a nonresident witness for use on a new trial on the reversal of the judgment on it appearing that such witness is the only witness on a material point, and is under sentence of death in a sister state, though such sentence is subsequently commuted to life imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2191; Dec. Dig. § 436.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 436*)—TAKING DEPOSITIONS PENDING APPEAL—APPLICATION.

On an application for a commission to take the deposition of a nonresident witness pending an appeal, for use on a new trial on a reversal of the judgment, the issue is not whether the testimony of such witness will be material to the issues already tried, but whether it will be material on a new trial and under such an amendment to the pleading as the circumstances of the case will warrant the court in allowing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2191; Dec. Dig. § 436.*]

3. MANDAMUS (§ 40*)—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS—DEPOSITIONS.

Since it does not rest in the discretion of the trial court to refuse a commission to take the deposition of a nonresident witness in the cases defined by the Code, mandamus lies to compel the court to issue a commission in a proper case before judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 85; Dec. Dig. § 40.*]

4. MANDAMUS (§ 4*)—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Where the trial court improperly refuses to issue a commission to take the deposition of a nonresident witness pending an appeal for use on a new trial in the event of a reversal, mandamus will lie to compel the issuance of a commission; an appeal from the order denying the application being an inadequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

In Bank. Application for mandamus by the Gas & Electric Company against the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco and Thomas F. Graham, as judge thereof, to compel the issuance of a commission to take the testimony of a nonresident. Peremptory writ issued.

Page, McCutchen & Knight, for petitioner. Samuel M. Shortridge, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. This is a proceeding by mandamus to compel the issuance of a commission to take the testimony of one Harry Orchard alias Barry—a prisoner confined in the penitentiary of Idaho—in order that his deposition may be used upon a new trial of an action in which the petitioner is defendant. The cause has been submitted upon the demurrer and answer filed by the judge of the superior court in response to our alternative writ.

The material facts to be considered are that on and prior to the 17th of November, 1904, the petitioner was supplying gas to a building in San Francisco which on that day was partially destroyed by a sudden explosion. Walter H. Linforth, the owner of the building, commenced an action against the petitioner for damages, alleging that the explosion had been caused by the ignition of gas which had escaped from the pipes of the corporation by reason of its negligence in failing to inspect them and keep them in proper repair. Afterwards the cause, being at issue, was tried by a jury and a verdict rendered in favor of Linforth for $10,800, upon which judgment was entered on October 4, 1905. On December 4, 1905, petitioner appealed from that judgment, and its appeal is still pending in this court. All the records in the case were destroyed in the great fire of April, 1906, but they were subsequently restored, and in March, 1907, petitioner's motion for a new trial was denied. Its appeal from that order also is still pending in this court. The motion for a new trial was based partly upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, which, as set forth in the affidavits, embraced, among other things, a statement that said Harry Orchard would testify, in effect, that he had blown up Linforth's house with a dynamite bomb in an attempt to assassinate one Bradley, who, on the 17th of November, 1904, was an occupant of the premises. At that time Orchard was, as he still is, confined in the penitentiary at Boise, Idaho. In March, 1908, he was sentenced to be executed for murder on May 15th, but he was afterwards reprieved and his sentence finally commuted to life imprisonment. On April 24, 1908, and prior to such commutation, a proceeding was commenced in the superior court, before the Honorable Thomas F. Graham, to obtain Orchard's deposition for use upon a new trial of Linforth's suit, if it should be remanded for a new trial by this court. On the objection of Linforth, the superior court refused to issue a commission to take the deposition upon the ground that neither the court, nor judge had any jurisdiction to grant the application. On May 2d another application was made to the same court to perpetuate the testimony of Orchard, under section 2083 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, which application was also denied, whereupon the present proceeding was commenced.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Various objections are urged on behalf of Mr. Linforth and the respondent to the award of a peremptory writ. So far as those objections relate to the proceedings under section 2083 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure to perpetuate testimony, they require no consideration, since the petitioner is not seeking any review of the order denying that application. The fact that it was made and denied seems to have been stated in the petition for no other purpose than to show that all the remedies available to the petitioner in the superior court had been fruitlessly invoked before this proceeding was instituted here, which, as above stated, looks only to the issuance of a commission to take the testimony of the witness in a pending action, pursuant to section 2020 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. To the granting of this relief it is objected, in the first place, that the order of the superior court denying petitioner's motion for a commission was an order made after final judgment in the action of Linforth v. Gas Company, and as such is reviewable on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 963), and, since appeal is a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, that mandamus will not lie (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086). This position assumes that the superior court had jurisdiction to make the order sought (if the law warrants such an order) and that its ruling upon the motion was reviewable for error. It is stated, however, that the order was denied upon the ground of want of jurisdiction, and, if that view is correct, an appeal would have been fruitless. The only possible remedy for the petitioner would have been an original proceeding in this court where the cause was pending on appeal. It is necessary, we think, to determine this question of jurisdiction in the first place; and we have no doubt that if, upon a proper construction of section 2020 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure they apply to a case like this, in which the issues of fact have been decided, and their retrial is contingent upon a reversal by this court of the judgment of the superior court, the jurisdiction to order a commission resides in that court. It is expressly provided (Code Civ. Proc. § 946) that notwithstanding the perfection of an appeal to this court, and the stay of all proceedings upon the judgment or order appealed from, and matters embraced therein, the superior court may nevertheless "proceed upon any other matter embraced in the action and not affected by the order appealed from." It seems very plain that, if the same statute which contains this provision has also provided that one or both parties to a pending appeal may take depositions with a view to the new trial which may be awarded, the right to do so is not a matter affected by the judgment or order appealed from, and that it rests with the Superior Court to order the commission if it may be ordered at all.

What, then, is the proper construction of sections 2020 and 2021 of the Code of Civil Procedure which prescribe the time for taking depositions? They say in plain terms that the deposition of a witness out of the state, in all cases and of a witness in the state in certain enumerated cases, may be taken in an action at any time after the service of the summons or the appearance of the defendant. This language is very sweeping and comprehensive, and clearly includes, if taken literally, all the time that an action is pending, that is to say, all the time from service of summons or the appearance of the defendant until "its final determination upon appeal or until the time for appeal has passed unless the judgment is sooner satisfied (Code Civ. Proc. § 1049)." But it is contended that this language of the Code must be limited by construction to the time before verdict or findings upon the issues of fact; for, it is said, after verdict or findings there is no issue of fact to be tried, and therefore no occasion for the taking of depositions. It may be answered to this objection that in case of an action it is not requisite that an issue of fact should have arisen in order to authorize the taking of depositions. As soon as the summons has been served, either party may commence the taking of depositions relevant to any possible issue that may arise upon a denial of the allegations of the complaint or upon the allegation of new matter in the answer, and there is perhaps some significance in the distinction made by the statute in this particular between actions and special proceedings. Clearly, therefore, the existence of an actual, as distinguished from a potential, issue of fact, is not, by the terms of the statute, made a conclusive test of the right to take depositions de bene esse. On the contrary, it is, as we have seen, broad enough in its express terms to include this very case, and, if it is to be construed in a narrower sense, the reasons for that construction must be sought in the policy which prompted its enactment. The Code provisions in respect to this matter, like other Code provisions, were designed to simplify procedure—to promote the ends of justice by enabling litigants to protect their substantial rights by simpler, speedier, and more efficacious means. Among the most important rights of a litigant is that of securing the evidence by which the justice of his claim or defense may be established, and when there is but a single witness upon a material point, or the witnesses are old and infirm, or without the jurisdiction, the necessity of taking their depositions is apparent. It was therefore an important part of what has been called the auxiliary jurisdiction of courts of equity to provide for the perpetuation of testimony in view of anticipated litigation, as well as for the taking of depositions de bene esse in causes actually at issue. The proceeding in such cases was by bill, and involved the long and tedious procedure of a suit in equity. Relief also was cautiously administered, and the chancellors in later times hesitated to award a commission in a case for which an exact precedent could not be found, although it clearly appeared to fall within the principal upon which the jurisdiction was originally founded. Anonymous, 19, Vesey, Jr., 319-334 (Eng. Reprint, 536), and 1 Pomeroy's Equity (3d Ed.) § 210 et seq.

This was the situation when our Codes came to be enacted, and it very clearly appears that it was the intention of the Legislature, not only to provide a simple statutory proceeding by which litigants, actual or expectant, could secure all the relief formerly afforded by courts of equity, but even ampler relief, and upon easier terms. Prof. Pomeroy states in the sections above cited that the same liberal extension of the remedy has been made by act of Parliament in England. This disposition to amplify the remedy is plainly apparent in the provisions of our Code, both with respect to the proceeding to perpetuate testimony and the right to take depositions de bene esse, and, in view of this tendency of legislation, it seems clear to us that in any case which falls at once within the principle upon which the jurisdiction in equity was founded, and the letter of the statute, the right to take a deposition must be upheld. The equitable principle referred to is manifest in the instances in which the proceeding to perpetuate testimony was allowed, viz., when there was but a single witness to a fact material in expected litigation, or when a witness was past 70, or dangerously ill. The proceeding was allowed; that is to say, when there was danger that the evidence might be lost by the death of the witness, and that notwithstanding there was no pending issue of fact. When a cause was actually at issue, commissions were allowed for the examination of witnesses who were without the jurisdiction, because that was the only means by which their testimony could be secured. When in this case application was made to the superior court for a commission to take the deposition of Orchard, it showed the existence of two facts, either of which would have constituted on equitable principles a sufficient ground for perpetuating his testimony for use in expected litigation. He was, in the first place, the only witness upon a material point, and he was to be executed within a short time—a stronger case, as it seems to us, than age or illness. There was also some reason to expect that the case of Linforth v. Gas Co. might be retried. On principle there does not seem to be any valid distinction between a case on appeal from an order denying a new trial, and a case in which an action may never be commenced. The difference is one of degree, and not of kind. In either case, the issue may or may not come to be tried, and under our statute it is plain that the proceeding to perpetuate testimony would lie in cases involving even a remoter possibility that the testimony would ever be required than there is in the average of appealed cases that there will be a reversal. The reason, therefore, for taking Orchard's deposition in this case, was not less cogent than in ordinary cases in equity, and the rule of our statute is more liberal than the rule in equity. The pertinency of this discussion of the rules governing the procedure for the perpetuation of testimony appears from the fact that one at least of the grounds upon which testimony was allowed to be taken in perpetuum is made by our statute a ground for taking the deposition of a witness de bene esse, viz.: "When the witness is the only one who can establish facts or a fact material to the issue." Code Civ. Proc. § 2021, subd. 6. Orchard was the only witness by whom the petitioner could hope to prove that Linforth's house was damaged by an explosion of dynamite and not by an explosion of gas, and, moreover, it appeared that he was soon to die. His testimony was therefore as clearly within the reason as within the letter of the law, which, as we have seen, allows the testimony of such a witness, whether within or without the state, to "be taken in an action at any time after the service of the summons or the appearance of the defendant."

The only substantial argument against this construction of statute is that it enables a contentious litigant to subject the successful party to an action to great and unnecessary expense in the taking of depositions pending a frivolous appeal. This objection, however, does not seem to have been deemed by the Legislature sufficiently grave to prevent the enactment of a statute which easily admits of the same abuses, even when restricted in its application to pending issues, and to controversies which may never reach an issue. There seems also to be less reason to apprehend the inconveniences suggested when it is remembered that the party taking depositions in a case like this must pay the costs of the proceeding without hope of recovering them back except in the event of a reversal of the judgment or order, and not then unless the final judgment is in his favor. Moreover, the respondent may, in case of an appeal manifestly frivolous, ignore the whole proceeding to take new depositions, or, if he deems it unsafe to omit the employment of counsel to attend and cross-examine, he may invoke the power of this court to impose an adequate penalty, on affirmance of the judgment, to recompense him for the unnecessary expense to which he has been subjected in consequence of a frivolous appeal. In view of these considerations, it is not to be feared that a liberal construction of the Code provisions in question will result in serious abuses.

We have been cited by counsel to only two cases in which the precise point here involved has been decided, and they are in apparent conflict. In McColl v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co., 44 Howard's Pr. 465, the Court of Appeals of New York decided (Grover J., dissenting, and Rapallo, J., not voting), that under the statute of that state the Supreme Court had no authority to issue a commission to take the deposition of a foreign witness in a case pending on appeal. The decision went altogether upon provisions of their statute which do not appear in ours, and upon the presumption that there would be no new trial. It was conceded that it might be in furtherance of justice to extend the statute so as to embrace such cases, but the court said it was to be considered that it would subject the prevailing party to additional expense. In Long v. Straus, 124 Ind. 84, 24 N. E. 664, the Supreme Court of Indiana said: "It is also argued that, as the cause was pending in this court at the time the deposition was taken, it should have been suppressed. There is no strength in this position. The appellees had a right to take depositions to preserve testimony at any time, and the fact that the case was pending on appeal did not deprive them of this right. They were not bound to take the risk of losing the testimony, but had there been no opportunity for using it they would have been compelled to pay the costs of securing it." The statute under which this decision was made is not cited, and we are ignorant of its terms, but it can scarcely have been more liberal than our own. And however this may be—whether the terms of the Indiana statute were plain and mandatory or of doubtful construction—one thing is certain, that the policy of the law is very clearly vindicated in a few words. In the cases to which the law applies each party must take some risk. The party desiring the testimony must take the deposition or run the risk of losing it. The opposing party, if the depositions are taken, must incur the expense of employing counsel to cross-examine, or take the risk of ignoring the proceeding. If the condition of the cause is such that the respondent is not willing to take the risk of an ex parte deposition, the appellant should not be compelled to take the risk of losing the testimony altogether. And, if the position of the parties is reversed and it is the respondent who desires the testimony, the argument in his favor is still stronger.

Our conclusion is that the right of the petitioner to take the deposition of Orchard is plain, unless it be a valid objection, as contended by respondent, that the answer of the petitioner in the damage suit raises no issue as to the cause of the explosion by which Linforth's house was damaged. The answer, it is said, makes no denial that the explosion was caused by the ignition of escaping gas. It is true that the answer fails to make a direct issue upon this point, but it does make a very plain issue upon the alleged negligence of the corporation in allowing gas to escape from its pipes. This question of negligence is certainly material. The mere fact of the explosion, otherwise unexplained, would perhaps justify the inference of escaping gas—an essential step in the proof of negligence, and Orchard's testimony, if believed, would refute the theory of a gas explosion.

But, aside from this, the real question is not whether Orchard's testimony would be material to the issues which were tried, but whether it will be material on a new trial, and under such an amendment to the answer as the circumstances of the case would warrant the court in allowing. As to the question of remedy, we think the petitioner is entitled to the writ of mandamus. That would be the only remedy for the refusal of a commission in a proper case before judgment, and there can be no doubt that it would lie, because it does not rest in the discretion of the trial court or judge to refuse a commission in the cases defined by the Code. Conceding that, in cases such as this, the order denying the application for a commission is appealable, that does not seem to be a sufficient reason for holding that remedy exclusive. It would be entirely inadequate in most cases, as it would have been in this, but for the fact that Orchard's sentence has been commuted. And, moreover, the order remanding the cause if it had been reviewed upon appeal would be in substance a peremptory mandate.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ issue as prayed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; LORIGAN, J.

155 Cal. 15

CLUTE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (S. F. 5,038.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 488*)—SUPERSEDEAS—EFFECT AS STAY OF INJUNCTION.

While an injunction which merely preserves the status quo is not suspended by an appeal, a mandatory injunction compelling affirmative action by defendant cannot be enforced pending a duly perfected appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2278; Dec. Dig. § 488.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 5*)—NATURE—MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

Where defendant was in possession of a hotel, claiming to hold as manager for the corporate owner and denying plaintiff's right to represent the corporation, an injunction in a suit

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes by plaintiff restraining defendant from representing himself as manager of the corporation, and from interfering with, or attempting to direct or control, the employes of the corporation, in effect compelled defendant to surrender his exclusive possession and was mandatory, and that the corporate owner, and not defendant, its alleged agent, had possession in law, was immaterial in determining whether the injunction was mandatory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

3. INJUNCTION (§ 5*) — NATURE — MANDATORY INJUNCTION.

If an injunction compels one affirmatively to surrender a possession which, under the facts alleged by him, he is entitled to hold, it is mandatory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

4. INJUNCTION (§ 220*)—VIOLATION AND PUNISHMENT—WRIT VIOLATED—PENDENCY OF STAY.

Where a mandatory injunction was in effect an order requiring defendant to deliver possession of a hotel and its contents, so that an undertaking was necessary to stay execution pending appeal, as provided for by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 945, requiring such undertakings where the order appealed from directs the delivery of possession of personalty and realty, and defendant requested the trial court to fix the amount of the undertaking, he should have been given an opportunity to do so, before contempt proceedings were taken against him for violating the injunction pending appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 442; Dec. Dig. § 220.*]

In Bank. Application for writ of review by E. R. Clute and others against the Superior Court in and for the City and County of San Francisco and another to stay proceedings under an injunction pending an appeal therefrom. Judgment for petitioners, ordering proceedings stayed upon the filing of an undertaking.

Jas. Alva Watt and Thos. H. Breeze, for petitioners. A. L. Weil, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. The petitioners, having been by the superior court adjudged guilty of contempt, and ordered committed to the county jail for a term of 48 hours, applied to this court for a writ of review. The alleged contempt consisted in the violation of a temporary injunction, the execution of which had, as was claimed by petitioners, been stayed by an appeal. This court, being of the opinion that supersedeas, rather than certiorari, was the writ applicable to the case, issued an order to show cause why such writ of supersedeas should not issue, in the meantime staying all proceedings on the order appealed from. The action in which the injunction had issued was commenced in the name of Pacific Grand Hotel & Investment Company, a corporation conducting the Pacific Grand Hotel at San Francisco, against E. R. Clute, one of the petitioners herein. The complaint alleges that Clute was on January 3, 1908, elected treasurer and appointed manager of plaintiff; that on April 3, 1908, he was, by a vote of the board of directors, at a meeting duly held, removed from the office of treasurer and the position of manager. It is alleged that, notwithstanding his removal, Clute still claims to be treasurer and manager, and withholds from the corporation its books, property, and money, and threatens to continue to do so. The prayer of the complaint is that defendant be required to account for funds received or disbursed by him on account of the corporation; that he be required to surrender all corporate books, records, and property to the secretary of the corporation; and that he be enjoined from holding himself out as manager or treasurer or from interfering with the guests or employes of the corporation. Following an order to show cause why an injunction should not issue, the court made an order directing that, upon plaintiff filing an undertaking in the sum of $2,000, a writ of injunction issue restraining the defendant Clute from collecting any moneys of the corporation or disbursing the same except on the written order of the president and secretary, also restraining him from representing himself as manager and treasurer of the corporation and "from interfering with, or directing, or attempting to direct or control the employes of said corporation." A writ of injunction, in accordance with the order, was issued and filed. Upon a showing to the court by affidavit that Clute and his co-petitioners, who were acting under him, had prevented one Hickman, an employe of the corporation, from entering the office of the hotel or taking possession of the keys of the various rooms, or of the books, an order to show cause why said petitioners should not be punished for contempt was issued. The hearing resulted in the commitment above referred to. In the contempt proceedings, it was made to appear to the court, and it is not here disputed, that prior to the alleged violation of the injunction Clute had duly taken an appeal to this court from the order directing the injunction to issue. On that appeal he had filed a $300 undertaking, in due form.

Upon the question whether that injunction was mandatory or purely prohibitory, the present application depends; for it is thoroughly settled that, while an injunction which merely has the effect of preserving the subject of the litigation in statu quo is not suspended by an appeal (Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130; Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44; Swift v. Shepard, 64 Cal. 423, 1 Pac. 493; Dewey v. Superior Court, 81 Cal. 64, 22 Pac. 333; Rogers v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 183, 58 Pac. 452), a mandatory injunction—i. e., one which compels affirmative action by the defendant—cannot be enforced pending a duly perfected appeal (Foster v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 279, 47 Pac. 58; Mark v. Superior Court, 129 Cal. 1, 61 Pac. 436; Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580;

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Stewart v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 543, 35 Pac. 156, 563). If an injunction, though couched in terms of prohibition, is mandatory in effect, a proceeding by the court issuing it to punish a violation as a contempt is in the nature of process for the enforcement of the affirmative feature of the writ. It may be likened to an execution, and, if the enforcement of the injunction has been stayed by an appeal, a writ of supersedeas may properly be issued by the appellate court to arrest further action by the court below. Tyler v. Presley, 72 Cal. 290, 13 Pac. 856, and Dulin v. Pacific W. & C. Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 Pac. 123, relied on by respondent, decide nothing in conflict with this view. Both cases dealt with judgments which were operative without any action by the court in which they had been rendered. All that was held was that supersedeas was not applicable to such self-executing judgments.

At the hearing of the present application all the allegations of the petition were admitted to be true. Upon the facts set forth we think it clear that the injunction in question was mandatory. If Clute was in the actual possession of the hotel and the personal property in it, an order punishing him for preventing another person from entering and taking charge of the books, keys, and other property could have no other purpose or effect than to compel him to turn over his possession to such other, or at least to surrender his theretofore exclusive possession. It appears from the record that Clute, while in the actual management and control of the hotel, never asserted any ownership or possession in his own right, but claimed to be entitled to possession as manager of the corporation. It is accordingly contended by the respondent that as the possession of the servant is, in law, merely that of his master, an order directing the employé to deliver to his employer the latter's property works no change in the possession. The corporation, it is argued, was at all times entitled to the possession and in the actual possession of the hotel and its contents, and a surrender of the custody by one employé to another authorized to receive it leaves the status of the property, so far as possession is concerned, unaltered. But this argument fails to take into account the very point that was in dispute in the court below. While the parties seeking to oust Clute claimed to represent the corporation, it appears that he disputed their right and authority to act for it. His answer to the complaint, and the showing made by him in response to the application for an injunction, show that his contention at all times was that the persons who had assumed to remove him as treasurer and manager, and had caused suit to be instituted against him in the name of the Pacific Grand Hotel & Investment Company, were not in fact directors of the corporation, and that accordingly he, and not the parties whom he was, by the injunction, required to admit to possession and control of the hotel, represented the company. If his contention was correct, the effect of the order appealed from was to require the possession of the corporate property to be transferred from the corporation itself to strangers. The status of the parties, at the time the injunction was issued, was this: Clute, claiming to hold on behalf of the corporation, was resisting a right of entry claimed by persons who, as he asserted, had no authority from the corporation to take possession. An order turning over the control of the property from him to the other claimants would certainly, if executed, operate to change that status. The injunction was, therefore, mandatory in effect, and this regardless of the fact that, in law, the corporation, rather than Clute, may be said to have been in possession. It is therefore unimportant that the court inserted in its order of commitment a finding that Clute was not in possession of the hotel or its contents. For the purpose of determining the effect of this injunction as mandatory or prohibitory, we must consider the result of an enforcement of the writ on the position of the defendant, as asserted in the court below. If the injunction compels him affirmatively to surrender a position which he holds, and which, upon the facts alleged by him, he is entitled to hold, it is mandatory.

The point is made by respondent that, if the order for an injunction be construed according to Clute's contention, it is an order requiring the delivery of real and personal property, and its enforcement cannot be stayed on appeal, unless the appellant gives a bond in an amount to be fixed by the court. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 943, 945. While it is not alleged that any such bond was given, it was shown by Clute in the contempt proceedings, without contradiction, that he had requested the court below to fix the amount of an undertaking to stay proceedings. Under the views herein stated, it was the duty of the court to comply with this request, and until, by such compliance, the appellant had been enabled to take the steps necessary to procure a stay, no contempt proceedings against him should have been entertained.

It is ordered that all proceedings on the order appealed from be stayed for a period of five days after notice to the appellant that the respondent has fixed the amount of an undertaking to stay execution, and that, if a good and sufficient undertaking, approved by the court, be filed within said five days, all such proceedings be further stayed during the pendency of the appeal.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

(155 Cal. 21)

SAN JOAQUIN & KINGS RIVER CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. v. STANISLAUS COUNTY et al. (S. F. 4,798.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1908.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 257*)—IRRIGATION COMPANIES—ESTABLISHED RATES—ANNULMENT—SUITS IN EQUITY—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Act March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 97, c. 115), § 6, provides that, at any time after the establishment of water rates under the law by any board of supervisors in the state, the same may be established anew or abrogated in whole or in part by such board, to take effect not less than one year after the first establishment upon the written petition of the inhabitants or of any persons, companies, or corporations, the rates of whose appropriated waters have been already established. Held, that an irrigation company whose rates were established by a county board of supervisors could not after the expiration of one year after the original establishment of such rates sue in equity for redress against the rates established without first resorting to the board of supervisors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 257.*]

2. EQUITY (§ 43*)—DEFENSES—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW—ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNALS.

Parties who are afforded by statute an adequate relief by application to a legislative or administrative municipal body must seek that relief from such body before being permitted to maintain an equitable action therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. § 121; Dec. Dig. § 43.*]

3. COURTS (§ 92*)—OBITER DICTUM.

Dictum is not always to be disregarded, as a correct principle of law may be announced in a given case which it may not be necessary to there apply because of other principles on which the case may be disposed of, and it loses none of its force as law where the court recognizes it as a correct principle upon which it might have disposed of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 335; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 216*)—PARTICULAR USES OR PURPOSES—WATER SUPPLY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The provision of Act March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 95, c. 115), that the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution in this state shall be a public use and subject to regulation and control, is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 216.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 2*)—PARTICULAR USES OR PURPOSES—WATER SUPPLY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under the provision of Act March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 95, c. 115), that the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution in the state shall be a public use, a company furnishing appropriated water for irrigation purposes has only the constitutional right that its property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, viz., a fair return on the reasonable value of the property at the time it is being used for the public benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 3-12; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

6. PLEADING (§ 225*)—DEMURRER—LEAVE TO AMEND.

Where a complaint is defective for failure to allege a condition precedent which it is conceded has not been complied with, it is proper to sustain a demurrer thereto without leave to amend.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 575; Dec. Dig. § 225.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin & Kings River Canal & Irrigation Company against the county of Stanislaus and others. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short, Garret W. McEnerney, and W. B. Treadwell, for appellant. Geo. W. Jones, Frank Kauke, and L. J. Maddux, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. Plaintiff is a corporation engaged in furnishing water for irrigation purposes in the counties of Fresno, Merced, and Stanislaus, and brought this action in the superior court of Fresno county against the county of Stanislaus and the counties of Fresno and Merced, and the boards of supervisors of said three counties respectively, to have declared null and void certain orders of said boards establishing the maximum rates to be paid plaintiff by the inhabitants of each county for water for irrigation of lands therein. All the defendants demurred to the complaint, and their demurrers being sustained without leave to amend, and judgment being entered thereon against plaintiff, it appeals therefrom.

Referring to those portions of the complaint pertinent for consideration, it is alleged that the plaintiff organized as a corporation in 1871 for the purpose of constructing canals for irrigation purposes, and that since its incorporation it had been engaged in the business of appropriating water for irrigation, sale, rental, and distribution; that it owned and maintained a system of canals and waterworks therefor, heading in the San Joaquin river in Fresno county, and running through Fresno and Merced counties into Stanislaus county, furnishing water through said canals to the inhabitants of said counties of Fresno, Merced, and Stanislaus for irrigation; and that the works used in the appropriation and furnishing of said water to the inhabitants of said counties were of an actual and proper cost of not less than \$1,019,763.97. The complaint then sets forth specifically certain proceedings of the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county taken under the act of the Legislature of March 12, 1885, for the purpose of establishing water rates to be charged by plaintiff, and it is alleged that on June 24, 1896, said board estimated the value of plaintiff's canals, ditches, and other property used in the appropriation and furnishing of said water at the sum of \$337,000, and the annual reasonable expenses of plaintiff to be the sum of \$22,000, and thereupon made an order fixing certain specified rates for water to be paid by the inhabitants of said county for irrigation purposes, and which the complaint proceeds to declare "then were, and ever since have been, grossly unfair and unreasonable, and such that, if rates were fixed by the boards of supervisors of Fresno and Merced in due proportion to the rates so fixed by said board of supervisors of said county of Stanislaus, the net annual receipts and profits thereof to the plaintiff could not possibly amount to 6 per cent., nor to more than $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. upon the value of its said property actually used and useful to the appropriation and furnishing of said water." The complaint then proceeds to allege similar proceedings by the board of supervisors of Merced and Fresno counties in the year 1904, an estimation by said boards of the value of plaintiff's canals, ditches, etc., to be \$832,681.20, and its annual expenses relating thereto, \$34,943.65, and the fixing of certain water rates to be charged in said counties for irrigation.

It is not alleged that these latter rates of the counties of Merced and Fresno were unreasonable, considered by themselves. It is, however, alleged "that the rates so fixed by the said boards of supervisors of the said counties of Stanislaus, Merced, and Fresno, taken as a whole, are grossly unfair and unreasonable, and will not and cannot insure to the plaintiff, or permit it to receive, net annual receipts and profits in said business of 6 per cent. upon the value of its said canal and other property actually used and useful to the appropriation and furnishing of said water to the inhabitants of said counties, nor more than two per cent. upon said value."

The prayer of the complaint is that the orders establishing said water rates made by the boards of supervisors of the three counties be declared void and the defendants enjoined from attempting to put in force or enforcing the rates established by them. The action was commenced on July 28, 1904.

The act of March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 95, c. 115), under which the rates of which plaintiff complains were established by the boards of supervisors of the several counties sued herein, after providing that the use of all water in this state for irrigation, sale, rental, or distribution is a public use, declares that the right to collect the rates therefor shall be regulated and controlled in the different counties of the state by the boards of supervisors thereof. The act provides special proceedings to be taken by said boards for that purpose upon the petition of 25 inhabitants who are taxpayers of any county in which said waters are distributed, provides for a hearing upon the petition after public notice; an estimation of the value of canals, etc., belonging to the person, company, association, or corporation whose franchise is to be regulated and controlled; an estimate of the annual reasonable expenses, etc., of such person, company, association, or corporation, including the cost of repairs, management and operating of such works; and requires the board of supervisors of the county thereupon to fix the maximum rate at which such firm, company, association, or corporation shall sell, rent, or distribute any appropriated water to any of the inhabitants of the county. In fixing such rates it is provided that, as near as may be, they shall be so adjusted that the net annual receipts and profits of the sale or distribution of such waters to the firm, company, association, or corporation appropriating and distributing them shall be not less than 6 nor more than 18 per cent. upon the value of the canals, etc. It is further provided that the rates as originally fixed shall be binding and conclusive for not less than one year next after their establishment, and until established anew or abrogated, as the act further provides they may subsequently be.

As to the establishing anew or abrogating of such original rates, the act then proceeds, by section 6 thereof, to declare as follows: "At any time after the establishment of such water rates by any board of supervisors of this state, the same may be established anew, or abrogated in whole or in part by such board, to take effect not less than one year next after such first establishment, but subject to said limitation of one year, to take effect immediately in the following manner: Upon the written petition of inhabitants as hereinbefore provided, or upon the written petition of any of the persons, companies, associations or corporations, the rates and compensations of whose appropriated waters have already been fixed and regulated, and are still subject to such regulation by any board of supervisors of this state, as in this act provided; and upon the like publication or posting of such petition and notice, and for the like period of time as hereinbefore provided, such board of supervisors shall proceed anew, in the manner hereinbefore provided, to fix and establish the water rates for such person, company, association, or corporation, or any number of them, in the same manner as if such rates had not been previously established, and may, upon the petition of such inhabitants, but not otherwise, abrogate any and all existing rates theretofore established by such board." We quote at length this latter section of the act because it was made the basis of the decision of the superior court in sustaining the demurrers of defendants to the complaint. In doing so, that court held that, before plaintiff was entitled to invoke the aid of a court of equity to have annulled the order of the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county, it should have appeared from the complaint that plaintiff had exhausted all other remedies; that as the rates originally fixed by the board of supervisors of that county had been in force for more than a year—in fact for many years—before this action was commenced, and as section six quoted provided that under these circumstances plaintiff might apply to have the rates originally fixed changed or established anew, it was the duty of plaintiff to first apply to the board of supervisors for such re-establishment of rates, and permit said board to readjust and correct them if for any reason they were unjust or unreasonable, before it could appeal to a court of equity to annul them as originally fixed.

It will be observed from the allegations of the complaint that the order of the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county, originally fixing rates for irrigation and other purposes to be charged by plaintiff to the inhabitants of Stanislaus county, was made in June, 1896. This action was not brought until July, 1904. It is apparent, too, from the allegations of the complaint, referring particularly to those portions which we have quoted above, that the gravamen of the complaint of plaintiff is only as to the rates established by the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county in 1896. It is alleged that the rates then established by the board of supervisors of that county are so grossly unfair and unreasonable that, if the same rates were fixed by the boards of Supervisors of Merced and Fresno in proportion to those fixed by the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county, the net profits to plaintiff could not amount to the minimum of 6 per cent. fixed by the act, nor to more than one and one-fourth per cent. on the value of the property of plaintiff. It is not complained that the rates fixed by the boards of supervisors of the counties of Fresno and Merced in 1904 are unfair or unreasonable of themselves, but only that the rates fixed by those counties, taken in connection with those fixed by the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county, are as a whole unreasonable and unjust to such an extent that the statutory minimum of 6 per cent. is reduced to less than 2 per cent. So that the unfair and unreasonable rates of which plaintiff complains are primarily, and, it may be said, exclusively the rates established by the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county, and not those established by the boards of supervisors of Merced and Fresno counties. But, if the rates of Stanislaus county were unfair and unreasonable, plaintiff had, under section 6 of the act, ample opportunity to have them changed or modified in the first instance by application to the board of supervisors of that county without at all applying to a court of equity for redress.

While it is true that under the act the rates as originally established by the board of supervisors of a county are binding and conclusive for not less than one year, said board must at any time after one year, upon petition by the inhabitants of the county establishing such rates, or by any person or corporation affected thereby, proceed to establish them anew, and in doing so proceed as if they had not been previously established. Once a board had originally established the rates, it was powerless to change them unless upon such petition. The rates originally established by the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county, and of which the plaintiff complained, had been in force for almost eight years when this action attacking the order establishing them was commenced. Of course, during the year after they were established, as the statute made such rates unalterable by the board of supervisors under any circumstances, so as to be effective until the expiration of a year, plaintiff, on their original establishment, or at any time during the year, if it wished to attack them as being unreasonable, would have had to bring an action in equity to set them aside or annul them. During that period it could have no other redress. But after the year had expired, under the provisions of section 6, by simple petition to the board of supervisors plaintiff could have had the matter of the reasonableness of such rates re-examined, and the board, if satisfied that for any reason those rates as originally established were not just, could have fixed reasonable and just ones. It was the very purpose of section 6 to permit a re-examination or change of previously established rates, to give any person or corporation, against whom such established rates operated, an opportunity to obtain the very relief which plaintiff seeks to obtain in this action; and we think that as the statute afforded it a remedy and redress by appeal to the board of supervisors at the time when this action was brought, and for many years previously, it should have exhausted this remedy before it was entitled to appeal to a court of equity to annul the order of the board. It is the general rule that a party must exhaust all his legal remedies before he is entitled to redress in a court of equity. While this rule has application to legal remedies enforceable in an action at law, we perceive no good reason why the general principle may not be extended so as to require parties who are afforded by statute an opportunity to obtain adequate relief by application to a legislative or administrative municipal body, like a board of supervisors, with reference to the very matter of which they complain in an action in equity, to seek that relief from such body before being permitted to maintain an equitable action for the purpose.

In a case involving a consideration of the very statute here in question, and addressing itself to the terms of section 6 thereof, the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized this principle. It there said: "Coming now to the merits, the first thing to be noticed is that the ordinance complained of took effect in November, 1897, and that after a year from that date the appellant was free to apply for a modification of the rates. It did not do so. There is no allegation or suggestion that the board is corrupt or that it purposes and intends, without regard to evidence, to adhere to unjust rates so as to destroy or impair the value of the appellant's works. Under such circumstances, the question arises whether this is much more than a moot case, in view of the principles adverted to in Tennessee v. Condon, 189 U. S. 64, 23 Sup. Ct. 579, 47 L. Ed. 709, or at least whether the appellant should be required to exhaust its other remedies before coming into court. In any event, the limited effect of the ordinance must be taken into account when we are called on to declare it such a flagrant attack upon the rights of property under the guise of regulation, as to compel the court to say that the rates prescribed will necessarily have the effect to deny just compensation for private property taken for public use." San Diego, etc., Co. v. Jasper, 189 U. S. 441, 23 Sup. Ct. 571, 47 L. Ed. 892.

It is claimed by counsel for appellant that this statement of the Supreme Court of the United States was simply dictum, as far as the disposition of that case was concerned. Conceding this to be true, it does not follow that the dictum of a court is always and at all times to be discarded. A correct principle of law may be announced in a given case, although it may not be necessary to there apply it, because of other principles upon which the case then under consideration may be disposed of. It was not necessary for the Supreme Court of the United States to apply the principle under discussion in the case in which it was announced because the matter was disposed of for other reasons. It is recognized by that court, however, as a correct principle upon which it might have disposed of it, and it loses nothing of its force as such because it was not applied. That the principle is a correct, and just one is obvious on slight reflection. No question can be made but that the act of 1885, in so far as it provides that the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution in this state should be a public use and subject to regulation and control, is valid. San Diego, etc., Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 19 Sup. Ct. 804, 43 L. Ed. 1154. All that the plaintiff is constitutionally entitled to under it is that its property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; a fair return on the reasonable value of its property at the time it is being used for the public benefit. San Diego, etc., Co. v. National City, supra.

This fair compensation under the terms of the act of 1885 it is the duty of the board of supervisors to establish by just and reasonable rates. If it does not do so originally, as the act makes the rates first established unalterable for at least a year, a court of equity may be resorted to at once by the aggrieved person or corporation to have the order establishing them declared void because unreasonable. All, however, that a court of equity can decree is that the established rates are unreasonable and restrain their collection. It has no power to establish rates or to restrain the board of supervisors from again fixing them. So that nothing is accomplished by the court in equity except to annul the order in question. As far as the board of supervisors is concerned, it may again proceed to establish them. It has the exclusive power to do so, and, when the limitation of one year has expired, the person, company, or corporation in the exercise of the public use may apply to have the original rates changed or modified if they are deemed unreasonable. As the board of supervisors is the only tribunal which can establish them at all, and as the person or corporation exercising the public use is subject to be controlled by the rates as established when reasonable, it is only proper that such person or corporation should be required to resort to the board for any relief which it is competent to give in order that reasonable rates may be established as the act contemplates. Had the plaintiff petitioned the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county to fix rates anew, as the act permitted might be done, plaintiff would have obtained all the relief to which, under the act, it would have been entitled had the rates originally established been in fact unreasonable, without any necessity of appealing to a court of equity to annul such original rates. The superior court properly sustained the demurrers because the complaint failed to allege such an application before commencing the present action.

Appellant further complains because the court, in sustaining the demurrers, refused it leave to amend the complaint. It is conceded here that in fact plaintiff made no application to the board of supervisors of Stanislaus county for a modification or change of the original order establishing rates, or for the establishment of rates anew before commencing this suit. Hence the complaint was incapable of amendment in this radical particular, and the refusal of the court to permit plaintiff to do so furnishes no ground for complaint.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

155 Cal. 39

Ex parte KELLY. (Cr. 1,500.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 30, 1908.)

PARDON (§ 14*) — CONDITIONS — SUBSEQUENT OFFENSE—SERVING PRIOR SENTENCE.

A convict was pardoned on condition that if, after his discharge, he should commit a felony, the commutation of sentence should be void, and, in addition to the penalty assessed for the subsequent felony, he should serve so much of the sentence of his original conviction as he had not served at the time of the discharge. After the term of his original conviction had expired and after entries were made on the prison records showing the expiration of the sentence, he was convicted of a felony and sentenced to prison, and, upon the expiration of that sentence, was detained by the warden by reason of the condition in the pardon. Held, that the detention was lawful, as the Governor, having the absolute constitutional right to pardon, except in cases of prior conviction, had the right to annex the condition.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pardon, Cent. Dig. § 28; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

Habeas corpus by Frank Kelly to secure his release from prison. Writ denied, and prisoner remanded to custody.

BEATTY, C. J. In April, 1897, the petitioner was sentenced to a term of 15 years' imprisonment in the Folsom state prison for the crime of burglary. Under the law allowing credits for good conduct—all of which he earned during the period of his confinement—his term would have expired on the 14th day of September, 1906. He was, however, discharged from the prison on May 15, 1905, in obedience to a conditional pardon or commutation of his sentence by Governor Pardee. The condition of his release was stated in the proviso: "That if, after said day of discharge, said Frank Kelly shall be convicted of any felony, this commutation of sentence shall become void, and, in addition to the penalty which may be imposed for said felony, he shall be compelled to serve so much of the sentence upon his aforesaid original conviction as he had not served at the time of his discharge under these presents." In January, 1907, the petitioner was again convicted of a felony upon which he was sentenced to a new term of two years' imprisonment at Folsom. This term, less the credits earned and allowed under the statute, had fully expired, but the petitioner was still detained by the warden of the prison, when he commenced this proceeding. The return to the writ shows that there is no warrant for his further detention except the enforcement of the condition stated in the above-quoted proviso of the Governor's commutation.

The prisoner was not represented by counsel at the hearing, but contended in his own behalf that the condition annexed to the commutation of his first sentence became inoperative from and after the 14th day of September, 1906, the date when that sentence expired by law, and when, in fact, its expiration was regularly entered in the records of the prison. He does not, as I understand his argument, question the power of the Governor, in granting a commutation of a sentence of imprisonment, to annex a condition subsequent, violation of which within the unsatisfied portion of his term, will work a forfeiture, but he insists that after the full term has expired such a condition is also at an end.

This question, so far as I am advised, is entirely new. No authorities are cited, and I know of none. Regarded as an original proposition it seems reasonable to say that since the power of the Governor to grant pardons and commutations is absolute under the Constitution, except in cases of prior conviction, the power to annex to a pardon or commutation any reasonable condition, prior or subsequent, is implied upon the principle that the greater includes the less. No consideration of public policy stands in the way of this conclusion, for such action by the Governor is in perfect harmony with the policy of the parole system in force in this state, and is a useful and beneficial application of that policy to the class of cases in which the Governor would be willing to exercise clemency if he could exact some security for the future good behavior of the prisoner.

I think the present detention of petitioner is not unlawful, and he is therefore remanded to the custody of the warden at Folsom.

155 Cal. 41

HUNKINS-WILLIS LIME & CEMENT CO.
v. LOS ANGELES WAREHOUSE CO.

(L. A. 2,190.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1908.)

SALES (§ 22*)—REQUISITES AND VALIDITY—
PROPOSALS AND ACCEPTANCE.

Defendant's agent wired to plaintiff an inquiry whether it would take an order for a specified number of barrels of cement on the same terms as those stated to a third person named, and defendant wired back an acceptance, provided the order was received in time to order that day from the mills, but further stated that the defendant was unknown and must wire reference or security, and the same day wired again, stating that on investigation, defendant's responsibility was satisfactory, and defendant's agent again wired, placing the order for the cement, and stating that particulars by letter would be sent. Plaintiff immediately wrote to defendant's agent stating that the price given the third person was a stenographic error, and that the price was higher than that communicated to the third person, and on the following day plaintiff again wrote defendant's agent that it had booked the order at the price specified in the letter of the day before. In reply defendant's agent wired, stating that he understood the price to be that given the third person, and that he could buy it for less than the new price claimed and therefore canceled his order. Held, that there was no contract, as there was no meeting of the minds of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the Hunkins-Willis Lime & Cement Company against the Los Angeles Warehouse Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. W. Freeman and A. D. Laughlin, for appellant. D. P. Hatch, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Action for breach of contract. Judgment was for plaintiff. Defendant appeals from the judgment and order denying a new trial. The alleged contract was evidenced by certain telegrams and letters between Mr. Charles F. Whittlesey, who was appellant's agent, and the respondent. So much of the correspondence as is pertinent is as follows:

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

"Los Angeles, Calif. May 9th, 1906. Hunkins-Willis Lime and Cement Co., St. Louis. Will you take order for seven thousand barrels cement Los Angeles delivery same terms as for Wentworth, Pasadena. Charles F. Whittlesey."

"May 10th, 1906. Chas. F. Whittlesey, Los Angeles, Cal. Will accept your order basis our today's wire to General Wentworth provided order received in time enabling us wire order mills today. Mill prices advance tomorrow. You unknown. Wire reference or security. Rush answer. Hunkins-Willis L. & C. Co."

"May 11th, 1906. Chas. F. Whittlesey, Los Angeles, Cal. Our investigation your responsibility satisfactory. Have arranged with mills extending time acceptance to today. Wire order. Hunkins-Willis L. & C. Co."

"Los Angeles, Calif. 11. Hunkins-Willis L. & C. Co., St. Louis, Mo. Your wire eleventh place order for seven thousand barrels particulars by letter today. Charles F. Whittlesey."

On May 11th a letter was sent by respondent to Mr. Charles F. Whittlesey, of which the following is in part a copy:

"May 11th, 1906.

"Mr. Chas. F. Whittlesey, Architect, Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: Referring to wires exchanged and enclosing herewith confirmation of our wires to you. In explanation of our first wire would state that in our proposition to Gen. Wentworth there was a stenographic error which, however, does not affect the results, but we thought it best to have the matter clearly understood, hence wired Gen. Wentworth and are to-day in receipt of his answer, which is satisfactory. We will furnish you from one car up to 20,000 bbls., subject to prior sale, of Atlas Portland cement delivered in car load lots on track at your city at $3.85 per bbl. in cloth bags, which price includes the charge for the bags. Four bags or 380 lbs. equal a barrel. On return of the bags to the mills a credit of 7½ cts. each is allowed thus making the net price of the cement $3.55 per barrel, not considering the freight to be paid for the return of the empty bags, a trivial sum. * * * Our proposition is good for any quantity you require as above stated, shipments to be made as desired by you prior to Oct. 1st, in as nearly equal monthly quantities as possible. Since wiring you early this a. m. we have arranged with our mills so as to extend time of acceptance up to and including the 15th. Referring to our first wires as to reference. You were entirely unknown to us, but investigation since has resulted satisfactorily and would feel honored to open business relations with your good self. Earnestly hoping to have the pleasure of serving you, we are, Yours truly, Hunkins-Willis L. & C. Co.

"P. S. Terms and other conditions as per reverse side of first sheet of this letter."

It is not necessary to quote the conditions mentioned, as they are the same as those appearing in the letter to Gen. Wentworth to which reference was made. The letter to Gen. Wentworth, dated May 3, 1906, contained practically the same terms as those appearing in the letter of May 12th just quoted above, with the exception of a statement that the net price of the cement would be about $3.46 per barrel. This was obviously a mistake in calculation, and on May 10th had been corrected by the Hunkins-Willis Company by a telegram to Gen. Wentworth as follows: "Our proposition third three eighty-five including sacks, thirty cents barrel rebate when sacks returned mills. Net three fifty-five instead of three forty-six. Latter stenographic error."

On May 12, 1906, respondent sent the following letter to Mr. Whittlesey: "Mr. Chas. F. Whittlesey, Los Angeles, Calif.—Dear Sir: We received last P. M. wire reading: 'Your wire 11th. Place order for 7,000 bbls. Particulars by letter today.' In explanation we have booked your order for 7,000 bbls. of Atlas Portland cement. Price, terms and conditions as per our letter of the 11th. We are very glad indeed to have the pleasure of serving you and you can rest assured that preferred attention will be given to your orders. We now await your shipping instructions. Respt. Hunkins-Willis L. & C. Co."

A telegram to the same effect was sent on the same day. Mr. Whittlesey was also informed by wire on May 17th that the letter mentioned in his telegram of the 11th had not been received. On May 19th Mr. Whittlesey wired the respondent as follows: "Los Angeles, Calif. May 19. Hunkins-Willis Lime and Cement Co., St. Louis, Mo. Your letter received. Understood your price Wentworth three forty six. Can buy here less than three fifty. Cancel order for seven thousand. Chas. F. Whittlesey."

The respondent corporation refused to cancel the order, and shipped 1,080 barrels of cement to Los Angeles. This shipment was declined and no more cement was sent. Judgment was given for the loss caused by demurrage and cost of resale of this shipment and as to the remaining 5,920 barrels, in accordance with the provision of section 3311 of the Civil Code. Appellant contends that there was no meeting of the minds of the alleged contracting parties, while respondent's position is that Mr. Whittlesey's telegram of the 11th, "Your wire eleventh place order for seven thousand barrels particulars by letter to-day," and the respondent's letter of the same day, together with its telegram of the day following: "Wire received. Order booked. We await letter particulars"—constitute the closing acts in the contract. We find ourselves unable to agree with this view. Ignoring the final sentence of Mr. Whittlesey's telegram "particulars by letter to-day," there

Is abundant evidence in respondent's own telegram and letter that the contract was not considered complete. The former communication advised Mr. Whittlesey that the order was booked—not accepted—and referred to the expected letter of particulars, while the latter contains this very significant language: "Referring to our first wires as to reference. You were entirely unknown to us, but investigation since has resulted satisfactorily and we would feel honored to open business relations with your good self. Earnestly hoping to have the pleasure of serving you, we are," etc. There was not that meeting of the minds of the parties which must take place before a contract is complete. Upon this subject, in the case of Four Oil Co. v. United Oil Producers, 145 Cal. 624, 79 Pac. 366, 68 L. R. A. 226, Mr. Justice Henshaw used the following language: "The rules for determining whether or not a proposal and acceptance constitute a binding contract are well settled, and by this court have been expressed in the following language: 'To constitute a binding contract made in this form (letters) there must be a proposal squarely assented to. If the acceptance be not unqualified, or go not to the actual thing proposed, then there is no binding contract. 1 Wharton on Contracts, § 4. A proposal to accept, or an acceptance based upon terms varying from those offered, is a rejection of the offer. National Bank v. Hall, 101 U. S. 43, 51, 25 L. Ed. 822. An offer imposes no obligation unless it is accepted upon the terms upon which it was made. Tilley v. County of Cook, 103 U. S. 161, 26 L. Ed. 374. An acceptance must be absolute and unqualified. A qualified acceptance is a new proposal. Civ. Code, § 1585.' Wristen v. Bowles, 82 Cal. 84, 82 Pac. 1136." That there was not here a "proposal squarely assented to" seems too obvious to require further argument.

It follows that the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

155 Cal. 1

SIERRA COUNTY v. NEVADA COUNTY.
(Sac. 1,339.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1908.)

1. COUNTIES (§ 8*) — ESTABLISHMENT OF BOUNDARIES.

Where a part of the boundary line of a county as defined by statute begins at the source of a stream and follows that stream down to its junction with another stream, the location of the line is so doubtful that its exact situation is a question of fact; for, while what are boundaries is matter of law, where they are is a matter of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 38*) — WHAT CONSTITUTES A "WATER COURSE."

A water course does not lose its character as such because under certain conditions its channel becomes dry in places, as a water course consists of bed, banks, and water; and, if there is a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, in a definite channel having a bed and banks, and usually discharging itself into some other body of water, it is a "water course," although it does not flow continuously.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 30; Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7410-7413, 7833.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1011*)—QUESTIONS OF FACT—FINDINGS—BOUNDARY OF COUNTY.

Where the location of a county boundary line is a question of fact, and the evidence is conflicting, the finding of the court as to its location cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983-3989; Dec. Dig. § 1011.*]

4. COUNTIES (§ 8*) — ESTABLISHMENT OF BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action to establish the boundary line between two counties, considered, and held to support the findings of the court that the source of a certain river, which was the starting point of a disputed county boundary, was certain snow-fed springs, and not a subterranean lake several miles lower down the stream.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

5. COUNTIES (§ 8*) — ESTABLISHMENT OF BOUNDARIES—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

In an action between two counties to establish the location of the boundary line between them, the exercise of jurisdiction by one of the counties, by levying taxes in the disputed territory, was admitted, and the right was asserted to exercise such jurisdiction. The location of the boundary was uncertain, and its determination depended upon the construing of the statute defining such boundary. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to maintain an action in equity to determine the location of the line.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

6. COUNTIES (§ 8*) — ESTABLISHMENT OF BOUNDARIES—EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.

Pol. Code, §§ 3969-3972, provide that if common boundaries and common corners of counties are not adequately marked by natural objects or lines, or by surveys lawfully made, they must be established by surveys jointly made by the surveyors of the counties affected thereby, to be approved by the boards of supervisors of such counties, or by a survey by the surveyor general, on application of the board of supervisors of any county affected, and that if the first mode is adopted, and the boards of supervisors do not agree, the surveyors must make a report to the surveyor general with surveys, maps, notes, and explanations touching disputed points, and that if from such data the surveyor general can collate a satisfactory description, he must establish the common boundaries and corners, but if the data is insufficient, he must cause surveys to be made, and when approved by him, such surveys shall establish the common boundaries and corners, and that all surveys finally approved under these sections are conclusive as to the location of the lines and corners included therein. Held, that the remedy provided in these sections can only be availed of where the language of an act defining a boundary is clear, and that, where the exact location of the boundary is left in doubt, or where it requires the interpretation of a court to ascertain what is meant by the language of the statute, an action in equity may be brought to ascertain the exact location of disputed corners and boundary lines.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

7. STATUTES (§ 176*) — CONSTRUCTION—JUDICIAL AUTHORITY.

The construction and interpretation of language used in a statute are matters exclusively for the courts, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1858, 1859, providing that in the construction of a statute a judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or substance contained therein, and to ascertain the intention of the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 255; Dec. Dig. § 176.*]

8. WORDS AND PHRASES—"SOURCE OF STREAM."

The term "source of stream" is defined by the new Revised Encyclopedic Dictionary as "the spring or fountain head from which its supply of water proceeds; any collection of water within or upon the surface of the earth from which a stream originates."

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. D. Goodwin, Judge.

Action by the County of Sierra against the County of Nevada. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. L. Jones, Dist. Atty., and Thos. S. Ford, for appellant. W. I. Redding, Dist. Atty., Frank R. Wehe (Solinsky & Wehe, of counsel), for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought in the superior court of Plumas county by the county of Sierra against the county of Nevada, for the purpose of securing an injunction against the exercise, by the latter county, of jurisdiction over certain territory claimed by the former, the main point in the controversy, however, being as to the location of the boundary line running east and west which divides Sierra county on the north from Nevada county on the south. The complaint alleged that the true southern boundary of the territory of Sierra county, lying between said county and the territory which constitutes the county of Nevada as established by law, has since the year 1874 been, and still is, as the statute of that year (Pol. Code, § 3921) established the same to be, as follows: "Thence south on said state line [state of Nevada] to the northeast corner of Nevada county, a point east of the source of the South fork of the Middle Yuba river, thence west to the source of, and down the South fork and Middle Yuba river to a point ten miles above the mouth of the latter." The complaint then designated the particular location of said boundary line by reference to United States government surveys, and then alleged that the county of Nevada had been for some years past encroaching on the jurisdiction of Sierra county, over portions of its territory north of its boundary line, and was claiming jurisdiction over a strip of land north of said boundary about 25.56 miles in length and averaging 1.22 miles in width, and containing over 31.29 square miles, and had actually attempted to exercise jurisdiction within said strip by the levying and collection of taxes therein, and in divers other ways; that no survey fixing the line between said counties could be had until the disputed boundary was settled; that plaintiff had no adequate remedy at law, and on account of such proceedings on the part of Nevada county, and in order to avoid a multiplicity of suits among the persons occupying said disputed territory, the right to equitable redress had arisen. The prayer was that the disputed boundary be established by the court to be as claimed by the plaintiff, and that Nevada county be enjoined from asserting jurisdiction over the territory north of said boundary line. The answer of Nevada county expressly admitted that the true boundary line between the counties was as averred in the complaint, namely, from the state line "west to the source of the South fork of the Middle Yuba river and down the South fork and Middle Yuba river to a point ten miles above the mouth of the latter," but expressly denied that the location of the boundary line with reference to the government surveys was as described in the complaint, but on the contrary, alleged four distinct lines, widely separated from each other, and all different from the line claimed by Sierra county, and each of which lines Nevada county alleged was the true east and west line, and hence the true boundary line between the counties. The trial court found the true boundary line to be as alleged by Sierra county, and particularly described in the complaint by reference to United States government surveys, and entered a decree so establishing it, and enjoined Nevada county from exercising any jurisdiction or governmental power over any territory north of said established line. Nevada county appeals from the judgment, bringing up the evidence on a bill of exceptions, in an attack upon the findings of the court.

It will be observed that the act of 1874 (Pol. Code, § 3921) in designating the southern boundary line of Sierra county fixes its point of commencement on the state line (state of Nevada) at a point east of the "source of the South fork of the Middle Yuba river, thence west to the source of and down the South fork and Middle Yuba river." The main contention between the counties in the trial court was as to the location of the point described as the "source of the South fork of the Middle Yuba river" and the location of the South fork itself. It was agreed between them that the true boundary line between the counties was a line running westerly from the state line to the source of the South fork, and down the channel of that stream to the junction of the Middle Yuba, but the main contention was as to where was the source of the South fork, and where was the South fork of the Middle Yuba located.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It was the contention of the respondent, and the court so found, that the source of the South fork consisted of several springs in the Sierra Nevada Mountains; that the waters therefrom collect and form into a stream, which runs down to the middle of the main valley or depression and watershed in a general northwesterly course in a well-defined natural channel, with bed and banks, until it emptied into the Middle Yuba river, and that the stream, taking its source in said springs and emptying into the Middle Yuba, was the South fork of that river. From the source of the South fork, as fixed by the court, to where its water emptied into the Middle Yuba river is about eight miles.

While the contention of the appellant was against this claim of respondent, and while it alleged that the South fork took its source at several other points than as claimed by respondent and found by the court, its principal claim, and that to which its evidence was practically addressed, was that the true source of the South fork was in a lake, which was designated by the witnesses for appellant as "English Lake," and which was many miles westerly from the source established by the findings of the court. This body of water, which, when speaking as of the time of its existence, is characterized as a lake, was located about three miles above the junction of what is conceded to be part of the South fork with the Middle Yuba, and about five miles down stream from the source of what the court found was the South fork of the Middle Yuba. This body of water, designated as "English Lake," was not a natural lake, but simply an artificial reservoir. It appears that about three miles above the mouth of the South fork that stream in its unrestrained condition runs through a narrow gorge in the mountains. At some date, not earlier than 1861, the Milton Water Company, for the purpose of impounding and appropriating the waters of the South fork and its tributaries, and conveying them to another watershed, built a dam across the South fork, where it passed through the gorge. This dam was 130 feet in height, and was known as the "English dam." The high mountain ranges through which the South fork takes its course separate just above where the dam was constructed, leaving a small valley between, known as "Musco Valley," and which is located on the north side of the South fork stream. When the dam was constructed, its effect was to back the waters of the South fork up its channel to the southeast some 9,000 feet, or nearly two miles, in the valley, and for a width of some 1,800 feet. This body of water was called English lake, and it is claimed by appellant that this large body of water, which existed in 1874, when the Legislature fixed the southern boundary of Sierra county, must be deemed to have been meant as the source of the South fork of the Middle Yuba river. The dam which held this water broke in 1883, the immense body of water was precipitated into the canyons and valleys below, and the dam was not thereafter rebuilt. Aside from the fact that this reservoir with its large body of water was in existence in 1874, when the act establishing the southern boundary of Sierra county was passed, and independent of it, it is further contended by appellant that in prehistoric times a large subterranean glacial lake covered the floor of the Musco valley; that by glacial deposits its basin became gradually filled with loose stone, gravel, boulders, and other deposits, but that, notwithstanding this, it still constituted a large subterranean glacial lake, all the waters of the stream of the basin centering to it, and losing themselves within it, the water sinking beneath the surface and filling it; that across the foot of this lake ran an impenetrable dyke of metamorphic rock, forming a barrier over which the overflow water found an outlet and flowed into the channel of the South fork below the lake, and that this glacial lake constituted the only true source of the South fork of the Middle Yuba river; and that the stream making out from said lake and emptying into the Middle Yuba constituted the true and only South fork of the Middle Yuba.

We mention this contention of the respective parties as to what constituted the source of and the South fork, not for the purpose of examining in detail the evidence which was addressed to their respective claims, but to show how divergent were these claims as to what constituted the South fork and its source. It is not for us to determine what constituted the South fork of the Middle Yuba river, or where its source was. That was a matter for the trial court. All that we are called on to consider is whether as to those matters the findings of the trial court are sustained by the evidence, and that they were, we think, is not open to serious question. "What are boundaries is matter of law, and where they are is matter of fact." White v. Spreckels, 75 Cal. 610, 616, 17 Pac. 715, 717. What the southern boundary of Sierra county is, is declared in the statute, but where that boundary is, is not so definitely stated, either as to what constitutes the South fork, or where its source is, so that they can be ascertained without evidence addressed particularly to their establishment. Here the statute simply designated the South fork of the Middle Yuba river, from its source to its junction with the Middle Yuba river, and a line from its source to the state line, as the southern boundary. It does not designate where or what the source is, but leaves that matter to be determined, as it can only be, from the testimony of witnesses speaking from actual examination of the ground, those who, having sufficient knowledge and experience to so determine, had carefully examined the various water courses, one of which would constitute the South fork, and after ascertaining which one did so constitute it, had followed it up to the point of its origin; had examined the physical conditions which would establish the fact of where the source was. When the boundary line of a county is designated by mere indefinite reference to the source of a stream as the point from which a line is to be projected as part of the boundary, and the south fork of a main river as another part, the designation is so doubtful and uncertain that no court can say, as a matter of law, where the boundaries are. Under such circumstances, the whereabouts of the boundaries is a question of fact. Neither does the statute define the South fork. A stream may have several branches tending in a southerly direction, and superficial observers might disagree as to what branch in reality constituted the south fork, so that it would be necessary to make an actual traverse of the streams and examination of the topography of the country through which they pass in order to determine as a fact which was the main southerly branch, and hence which was the south fork. Reynolds v. West, 1 Cal. 322; Taylor v. Fomby, 116 Ala. 621, 22 South. 910; Johnson v. Archibald, 78 Tex. 96, 14 S. W. 266, 22 Am. St. Rep. 27; Reynolds v. McArthur, 2 Pet. 417, 7 L. Ed. 470; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 39 U. S. 210, 10 L. Ed. 423; Marsh v. Richardson, 106 N. C. 539, 11 S. E. 522.

The record in the case before us shows that by abundant evidence, consisting of surveys, a topographical model, photographic views, and the testimony of witnesses, some of whom had actually traversed the channel of the stream, claimed by the respondent to be the South fork, to its source, the court was fully warranted in finding that the South fork and its source were as contended for by respondent. The evidence showed that the South fork of the Middle Yuba river took its source from a number of springs near the summit of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, which were fed by almost perpetual snows, and flowed thence from the southeast to the northwest between two high mountain ridges, which came together on the southeast and formed the entire watershed of that stream; that its waters were derived solely from the melting snows, which fell to a great depth on the surrounding mountains during the winter; that it was a torrential stream during the spring and early summer; that its course, which extended about eight miles, was through a continuous channel extending from the source down to and through what is called the "English reservoir" to its junction with the Middle Yuba river, the channel having bed and banks and water wash well defined, and having a width in places of as much as 18 feet, and in other places being as narrow as 8 feet. It is true the evidence shows that towards the end of every dry season, and when the waters fall in the stream, there are places in the channel of this South fork above the reservoir which are dry, but a water course does not lose its character as such because in dry seasons, or under certain climatic conditions, its channel may become dry in places. In fact the channel is also dry at times in that portion of the South fork below the reservoir, and which appellant contends is the true and only South fork. As said by Angel on Water Courses: "A water course consists of bed, banks, and water, yet the water need not flow continually; and there are many water courses which are sometimes dry. * * * It need not be shown to flow continually as stated above, and it may at times be dry; but they must have well-defined and substantial existence. * * *" Angel on Water Courses, §§ 3, 4. "There must be a stream usually flowing in a particular direction, but it need not flow continuously. It may sometimes be dry. It must flow in a definite channel, having a bed, sides, or banks, and usually discharge itself into some other stream of body of water." Hoyt v. City of Hudson, 27 Wis. 656, 9 Am. Rep. 473. Many other authorities might be cited to the same effect. It is hardly necessary to pursue this matter further. It being a question of fact for the determination of the trial court as to where the southern boundary of Sierra county was located, and the evidence being at least conflicting on the point, the finding of the court, as to the source and location of the South fork arising out of that conflict in favor of respondent, Sierra county, cannot be disturbed on appeal. There was ample evidence, as believed by the court, to sustain the finding made in that respect, and it is therefore not open to challenge.

As far as the claim of appellant is concerned that the English reservoir, or the glacial lake which we have described, should have been found to be the source of the South fork, and that the South fork consisted only of that portion of the stream below the lake, it is entirely without merit. When the Legislature of 1856 (St. 1856, p. 143, c. 122) defined the northern boundary line of Nevada county, which constituted the southern boundary line of Sierra county, it defined it as "thence up said Middle Yuba river to the mouth of the South fork of the same; thence up said South fork to its source; thence due east to the eastern line of the state." From that date until now, and irrespective of other changes which have been made in the boundaries of Sierra county, its southern line has always been defined by the Legislature as in effect a line produced from the east line of the state due west to the source of the South fork, and from said source thence down the stream to its junction with the Middle Yuba river, etc. When the act of 1856 was passed defining the southern boundary of Sierra county, there was no reservoir nor lake known as English lake or reservoir. That reservoir was not built earlier than 1861, and in the nature of things it is to be assumed, and in fact the expert evidence so discloses, that what is called the glacial lake was fully filled up with débris from the surrounding mountains at that time and covered with a deep alluvial deposit. There is no evidence that there was a lake at that time; that is, that is contained any surface water. It must be assumed that the Legislature had full knowledge respecting those matters concerning which it was legislating; that in fixing the boundaries of counties in 1856 by reference to streams, it knew the locality, trend, and source of such streams. If there had been, in the common acceptance of that term, any lake, as contended for by appellant, on the site where the English reservoir was subsequently established, the Legislature must have known it, and, knowing it, if it had intended it to be considered as the source of the South fork, would undoubtedly have so designated it by name. Or, if in 1874 it had intended the English reservoir, which was then in existence, to be deemed the source of the South fork, it would have said so. The fact that it did not is persuasive evidence that it was not intended that the assumed lake, or actual reservoir, was intended to be designated as the source of the South fork, but the source was intended to be where the Legislature must be conclusively presumed to have known it was, namely, the snow-fed springs of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, some five miles above the dam, in which springs the South fork had its origin as a stream, and from there took its course down to and through the assumed lake, or through the reservoir, and continued its course to the junction of the Middle Yuba. It takes that course now through the site of the reservoir, in a well-defined channel, and from the nature of things must have taken that course before the reservoir was constructed. It is true that when the act of 1874, establishing the southern boundary of Sierra county, was passed the reservoir was in existence, and it held its waters backed up in the channel of the South fork for almost two miles. But this could not make the South fork any the less the boundary line between the two counties. That channel, having been defined by the Legislature as the boundary, could not be changed or obliterated by erecting the English dam across it and backing up the waters of the stream. It still remained the channel of the South fork and the boundary line as fixed by the Legislature. This English reservoir, instead of being the source of the South fork, as claimed by appellant to exist only from below the dam to the Middle Yuba river, was but an incident to the main stream—the South fork—flowing from its source to the Middle Yuba rivers. The waters gathered in the reservoir were from the South fork and its tributaries, as that stream flowed in its channel towards and through the gorge where the dam was built. The creation of the reservoir was effected by blocking the channel at a point where the stream would otherwise naturally flow beyond it. But it was none the less the natural channel of the South fork because by artificial means waters were accumulated and spread out and covered the original channel. We are satisfied that the claim of appellant that the finding of the court that the source, and the location of the South fork of the Middle Yuba, as claimed in the complaint of plaintiff, was not justified by the evidence is not well taken.

It is insisted, however, by appellant that, even should we conclude that the evidence was sufficient to justify the trial court in its finding as to the source and location of the South fork, still the judgment should be reversed, because the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision of the court to the effect that respondent was entitled to equitable relief against appellant, and because, further, it is claimed there was no evidence to sustain equity in favor of respondent. We have heretofore stated the allegations of the complaint which were made the basis for equitable relief. The court found such allegations to be true. This was warranted under the pleadings, because, while appellant insists that these allegations were denied by the answer, our examination of that pleading discloses that they were not. There was no denial that Nevada county had attempted, and was attempting, to exercise jurisdiction by the levying and collecting of taxes in the territory which the court found was part of Sierra county. In fact it admitted by the answer that it so claimed jurisdiction over the territory north of the line alleged by respondent to be its true southern boundary, because it was claimed as territory belonging to Nevada county. The admission of the exercise of jurisdiction, and the assertion of the right to exercise it in the territory claimed to belong to Sierra county, coupled with the fact of the uncertainty and dispute between the counties as to the true boundary line, and the necessity of construing the statute defining such boundary in order to determine its location, shows sufficient equity to entitle the respondent to maintain the action against appellant. Wetherbee v. Dunn, 36 Cal. 253; Beatty v. Dixon, 56 Cal. 619. Counsel for appellant cite us to no authority supporting their claim to the contrary.

It is further claimed by appellant that respondent was not entitled to equitable relief because it had an adequate remedy at law; it being insisted in that respect that the law provides a special legal remedy for the determination of the disputed boundary line under sections 3969–3972 of the Political Code. These sections provide that, when common boundaries and common corners of counties are not adequately marked by natural objects or lines, or by surveys lawfully made, they must be established by surveys jointly made by the surveyors of the counties affected thereby, to be approved by the boards of supervisors of such counties, or by a survey made by the surveyor general on application of the board of supervisors of any county affected thereby. If the first mode is adopted, and the boards of supervisors do not agree, the surveyors must make a report to the surveyor general with surveys, maps, notes, and explanations touching disputed points. If from such data the surveyor general can collate a satisfactory description, he must finally determine and establish the common boundaries and corners. If the data is insufficient for that purpose, he must cause surveys to be made, and when approved by him, such surveys establish such common boundaries and corners. All surveys finally approved under the provisions of the sections are conclusive ascertainment of lines and corners included therein. No official survey of the boundary between the two litigating counties has ever been made. It must be conceded that counties have a right to sue and be sued, and that the superior court has jurisdiction in all cases in equity, and that this is an action in equity, but it is insisted by the appellant that under the provisions of the Code to which we have referred, a mode is fixed by the Legislature whereby the boundaries of counties must be ascertained; that this legal remedy must be exhausted before the matter of conflicting boundaries can be presented for judicial determination in a court of equity. People ex rel. Borrell v. Boggs, 56 Cal. 648. In the case cited it appears that the action was brought by a taxpayer against the tax collector of Napa county, to recover money paid for taxes under protest; his claim being that the property assessed was in Sonoma county, and not in Napa county. The boundary line between the two counties had been approved by the surveyor general. Plaintiff attempted to prove that the approved survey by the surveyor general was erroneous, but the trial court refused to admit the testimony, holding the action of the surveyor general regarding it conclusive. This court approved the judgment, holding to the same view. The point was there made that section 3972, declaring the approval by the surveyor general conclusive, was unconstitutional, as investing that officer with judicial power. In answer to this it was said: "We do not think that the functions exercised by him are judicial in their character. He is not, under that section, to decide what is the law. The Legislature had already, in regard to the boundary between the two counties, fixed the law, viz., that the summit of the dividing ridge should be the dividing line. We think, it was competent for the Legislature to direct its officer to go upon the ground and run his lines along that ridge, and in doing so he was acting merely in a ministerial capacity; and we think that it was competent for the Legislature to declare that the lines so run—that is, the location of the boundary line upon the ground—should be thereby defined and fixed."

But it is obvious that the question presented in the case at bar, and the matter before the court in the case cited, call for the application of different principles of law. In the case cited the court grounded its conclusion on the fact that the statute defining the boundary had fixed the boundary line of the counties as the summit of the dividing ridge, and that the act, which the Code section directed the surveyor general to do with reference to the establishment of said boundary, was simply to go on the ground and in his ministerial capacity run his lines along the ridge. Of course, where the Legislature has fixed a boundary along a ridge, a well-defined course readily determinable and ascertainable, there is no action on the part of the surveyor general called for but to run his survey line thereon on the ground. Where the language of an act so clearly defines the line that there is nothing to be done but run a survey along it, there is no room for question, but the sections of the Code relied on by appellant furnish a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy for the establishment of the line, and that a court of equity cannot be called upon to do what the law in the first instance provided for having done. But this legal remedy can only be availed of where the language of an act defining a boundary is clear. Where it is not clear, and where the description of the boundary is of doubtful import, or where it requires the interpretation of a court to ascertain what is meant by the language of the statute when mentioning localities, natural objects, or sources of streams as matters of boundary, the sections of the Code have no application. To leave the construction or interpretation of doubtful language used in a statute to the determination of the surveyor general would be to confer upon that officer judicial functions which, under the Constitution, may not be done. The construction of doubtful language, and the interpretation of language used by the Legislature, are matters exclusively for the courts. When the courts have interpreted the language of the act, and declared what the boundaries in dispute are as matter of law, then only can surveyors or the surveyor general act, and they act then, in establishing the line on the ground, solely in a ministerial capacity, and where the court has interpreted, from the indefinite or doubtful language of a statute, the Legislature intended to fix it.

Now it will be observed, by reference to the language of the statute fixing the southern boundary of Sierra county, which we have heretofore quoted, that the location from which the point on the state line is to be fixed is due east from the "source of the South fork of Middle Yuba river." The source of a stream is defined to be "the spring or fountain head from which its supply of water proceeds; any collection of water within or upon the surface of the earth from which a stream originates." New Revised Ency. Dic. And as said by the trial court in discussing the present objection of appellant on demurrer to the complaint: "This definition, when applied to a torrential stream in the high Sierras, makes the said language, or the meaning of it, very doubtful. It is but common knowledge that such stream has many and varied sources, usually covering a large extent of watershed, and varying in length as it extends into said watershed. The Legislature did not mean that all such sources should govern in locating the point on the state line. Which one, if more than one, was meant in this case? Did it mean the summit of the ridge at the head of the main stream which collects the volumes of water from melting snows into the main channel? The meaning of the Legislature in these respects must be determined before a survey can be correctly made. The source of the stream as intended by the act must be definitely fixed as a starting point. Will it be contended that the surveyor general is authorized to do this? Under the language of the Supreme Court in People ex rel. Borrell v. Boggs, supra, we think not. It would be calling on him to declare what the law was. The court alone can do this, under the rule which the law provides for construing statutes. Sections 1858, 1859, Code Civ. Proc., or as the Supreme Court in the case of the County of Mariposa v. County of Madera, 142 Cal. 52, 75 Pac. 572, says: 'The only question to be considered is the proper construction of special statutes, and certain sections of the Political Code relating to the disputed boundary. We have, in other words, merely to determine the intention of the Legislature according to the established rules of statutory construction.' This is all this court is asked to do in the case at bar, for when the source of the South fork of the Middle fork of the Yuba river is fixed according to the intention of the Legislature, the marking of the line on the ground will be but the work of the surveyors." We think this is the correct view. The common boundary between the counties, as far as the question is involved here, is the South fork running from its source to its junction with the Middle Yuba, and a line projected from its source to the state line east. What the source of the South fork is, is not definitely fixed or determined by the act, and could only be determined by judicial inquiry to ascertain its location. It is only upon its ascertainment that the line therefrom to the state line could be run, or a surveyor be able to locate by survey the line called for. If it could be said that it was purely a ministerial act of the surveyor general to ascertain from the language used in the act this source and make his survey accordingly, it would be difficult to conceive of a case where the language of an act could be so uncertain or indefinite as to boundaries of a county, or with reference to any point from which boundaries were to be measured, so that a court of equity could be ever invested with jurisdiction to construe the language of an act and determine as matter of law what the boundaries intended to be fixed by it were.

These are the only matters requiring consideration.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

9 Cal. App. 344

RISDON v. STEYNER (TERRY, Intervener).
(Civ. 469.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 14, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1908; Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 13, 1909.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—LANDS OF STATE—SALE—RIGHTS OF ASSIGNEE.

An assignee of a purchaser of state land acquires all the interest of the original purchaser under his certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 399; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

2. JUDGMENT (§ 682*)—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS CONCLUDED.

Where, in a contest as to the priority of applications to purchase state lands, the purchaser whose certificate was prior in time transferred all his rights in the land by mesne conveyances to intervenor, his default did not affect intervenor's rights as his successor nor constitute an admission by intervenor of any fact alleged in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1203; Dec. Dig. § 682.*]

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—LANDS OF STATE—APPLICATION TO PURCHASE—PRIORITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In a contest between applicants to purchase state land instituted by the applicant who is subsequent in time, the burden of proof is on him to establish the invalidity of the prior application, especially where the person claiming thereunder is in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 394; Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1071*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS.

Where, in a contest as to priority of applications to purchase state lands, the court determined that intervenor owned the property by reason of the validity of the prior application under which he claimed, contestant was not prejudiced by an alleged erroneous finding that the reference by the Surveyor General was without jurisdiction because plaintiff's affidavit and application was not filed until more than a year had elapsed since defendant had paid the full price for the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1071.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 664*)—STATEMENT—PRESENTATION—TIME—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL.

Where there is a conflict in the evidence as to the time of presentation of a statement for appeal, it must be resolved on a motion to dismiss in favor of the appellant and the action of the trial court in settling the statement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2856; Dec. Dig. § 664.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Chas. M. Head, Judge.

Action by Ruth C. Risdon against George

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

W. Steyner; W. I. Terry, intervening. From a judgment for intervener, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she appeals, and intervener moves to dismiss appeal. Motion to dismiss denied, and judgment affirmed.

See, also, 97 Pac. 73.

W. A. Gett and Braynard & Kimball, for appellant. W. D. Tillotson (C. H. Dunn, of counsel), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On March 29, 1906, the Surveyor General of California as such and as ex-officio register of the state land office made an order referring to the superior court of Shasta county the question which had arisen in his office as to which of the persons, the plaintiff, Ruth C. Risdon, or the defendant, George W. Steyner, was entitled to purchase of the state of California the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 7, the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 18, and the N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of section 17, township 34 N., range 2 E., M. D. M. The said Ruth C. Risdon on March 24, 1906, had filed with the Surveyor General her application to purchase said land with a protest against the issuance of any further evidence of title to the said George W. Steyner, who had filed his application to purchase the same as state school lands on January 21, 1889. Within the 60 days from the making of said order, as prescribed by law, plaintiff instituted in the superior court of the said county of Shasta an action against the defendant to have it determined who was entitled to a patent to said land from the state. The said W. I. Terry, by permission of the court, filed an answer and complaint in intervention, setting up his claim as successor in interest by mesne conveyances to all the right, title, and interest of said Steyner in and to said property.

The particular ground upon which plaintiff sought to prevail over the former application of Steyner is disclosed by this allegation of her complaint: "That each and all of the statements contained in said affidavit and application of said defendant that he desired to purchase the land therein described for his own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever, and that he had made no contract or agreement to sell the same, was at the time when said affidavit and application was filed, as hereinbefore alleged, ever since has been, and now is, false and untrue, and defendant did not, at the time when said affidavit and application was filed as aforesaid, and never has, desired to purchase all or any part of said land in said affidavit and application described for his own use and benefit." The foregoing allegation is specifically denied by the intervener and separate grounds of defense are set up, which we need not consider in detail. Among other things, the court found that "on or about the 2d day of December, 1891, said defendant paid to the said Surveyor General for said state of California the full balance of the purchase price of said lands"; that his application was approved by said Surveyor General and a certificate of purchase was issued to said defendant which he sold and assigned, together with all his interest in said lands, to one W. K. Slack, and that the intervener has been invested by mesne conveyances with all of said interest; furthermore, "it is not true that each and all or any of the statements contained in said affidavit and application of said George W. Steyner * * * were at the time said affidavit and application were filed, or at any other time, false and untrue or false or untrue." The judgment was in favor of said intervener, and the appeal is from this judgment and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The proceedings, as far as the respective applications before the Surveyor General, the order of reference, and the trial of the contest by the superior court are concerned, appear to have been regular. There is no doubt that the intervener succeeded to all the interest of the said Steyner in and to the premises in controversy, and that he stands in the same relation to the cause as Steyner would stand if he had not parted with his interest. The default of Steyner was entered, but manifestly that cannot affect the claim or rights of his successor, nor be deemed an admission on the part of the latter of any fact alleged in the complaint. The pleading filed by the intervener is styled a "complaint in intervention," but in effect it is an answer denying plaintiff's allegations of fraud and pleading the statute of limitations and adverse possession, and praying that "said plaintiff be forever enjoined from asserting any claim to the premises adverse to the intervener, and that she be enjoined from purchasing or attempting to purchase the same from the state of California" and for general relief.

Several questions are discussed by counsel, but the only vital controversy relates to the burden of proof as to fraud. Although plaintiff alleged in her complaint that Steyner's application was filed many years prior to her own and that the recitals of his affidavit were false, she insists that it devolved upon Steyner or his successor in interest to show affirmatively that the statements contained in said affidavit and application were not false, but true. The contention is based upon the theory that each of the parties before the court is an actor and must prove the statements in his affidavit and application as in the first instance before the Surveyor General. While the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court uphold appellant in his contention, the correct rule is stated in Bieber v. Lambert, 152 Cal. 557, 93 Pac. 94. We quote from the syllabus as follows: "If the action is brought by the one who first filed a proper application, the statement of facts showing that the land was subject to sale, that he is a qualified purchaser, that he has made due application to purchase, that the defendant claims under a subsequent application, and that the order of reference has been made will sufficiently show his own right and the inferiority of the right of the defendant, and he need not allege other facts to show that the defendant was not entitled to purchase, or that his application is void by reason of false statements or otherwise, and in such a case, if the defendant offers no proof, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, for his application being first in time is prima facie first in right; and it is also held that, "where the action is brought by the one whose application is second in point of time, he must aver that there is a claim under an adverse application, and, if he alleges that it was filed prior to his own, and it is not defective on its face, he must overcome the presumption in its favor arising from such priority by averment and proof of some fact or facts, establishing its invalidity, otherwise judgment will go against him."

As we have seen, the plaintiff made the averment that the application of Steyner was filed prior to her own and the facts were alleged to show its invalidity, but there was no proof whatever offered of those facts, and, as the application of Steyner and the certificate of purchase issued to him and all the proceedings in relation thereto appear to be regular, the presumptions, as stated in the Bleher Case, supra, "that the law has been obeyed, that the first applicant is innocent of the crime of perjury, and that official duty has been properly performed come to the aid of the defendant." It may be, as intimated by the Supreme Court, that the rule would be otherwise if the subsequent applicant were in possession of the property, but no such contention is made here. On the contrary, we find in intervenor's pleading the allegation: "For a further and separate defense to said action intervenor alleges that for more than 10 years last past his grantors and predecessors in interest (except the state of California) have been and this intervenor now is possessed and in the possession" of said lands. This is not denied in what is denominated the "answer of amended complaint in intervention" filed by plaintiff, and it was undoubtedly intended to be treated as admitted. We have therefore the additional element of possession in favor of respondent to fortify the presumptions to which reference has been made. Hence it follows that the court was justified in holding "that the said intervenor, W. I. Terry, is the owner of the lands described in plaintiff's complaint, and the application to purchase the same and the certificate of purchase issued thereon, upon which the title of said W. I. Terry was based, were good and valid applications and certificates, and the said intervenor is and for a long time prior to the application to purchase said lands made by the said plaintiff was entitled to a patent from the state of California for all of the said described land upon surrendering said certificate of purchase."

The court further found: "That the order of said Surveyor General * * * referring such alleged contest to the superior court of the county of Shasta for trial and determination was without jurisdiction, and invalid." This finding was based upon the fact that at the time plaintiff filed her affidavit and application more than one year had elapsed since the defendant had paid to the state the full purchase price for said land. But, conceding this conclusion to be erroneous, the error is without prejudice, for the reason that the court heard the contest and decided that the intervenor was the owner of the property by reason of the validity of the prior application as already stated. The finding in relation to the contest became, therefore, and is immaterial, since without it the judgment finds ample support.

A motion has been made to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the statement was not presented in time. There is, however, a conflict in the evidence as to this, and the conflict must be resolved in favor of appellant and the action of the court below in settling said statement.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

RISDON v. PREWETT et al. (TERRY, Intervener). (Civ. 468.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 14, 1908. Rehearing Denied Dec. 12, 1908; Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 13, 1909.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Chas. M. Head, Judge.

Action by Herbert T. Risdon against N. C. Prewett and another; W. I. Terry, intervening. From a judgment for intervenor, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

See, also, 97 Pac. 73.

W. A. Gett and Braynard F. Kimball, for appellant. W. D. Tillotson (C. H. Dunn, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This case is in all essential respects like Risdon v. Steyner et al. (No. 469, this day decided) 99 Pac. 377, and for the reasons therein stated the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied and the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

9 Cal. App. 352

DEAN v. DUNN. (Civ. 483.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—LANDS OF STATE—
RIGHT TO PURCHASE—MARRIED WOMEN—APPLICATION.

Under Pol. Code, § 3496, providing that, if the applicant to purchase state land is a female, the affidavit must show that she is entitled to hold real estate in her own name, an affidavit alleging that the applicant was married and a native-born citizen of the United States, a citizen of the state, and of lawful age was sufficient to establish her personal capacity to purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

2. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—LANDS OF STATE—
RIGHT TO PURCHASE—CONTEST—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a protest against an application to purchase state land is filed and suit brought in support thereof by the person whose application is second in time and the first application is not defective on its face, the burden is on the contestant to allege and prove its invalidity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

3. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—STATE LANDS—
SALE—CERTIFICATE—PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

Under Pol. Code, § 3514, providing that a certificate of sale of state land is prima facie evidence of title in the holder, the burden is on a contestant to controvert or overcome the presumptions arising therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

4. DOMICILE (§ 10*)—MARRIED WOMEN—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that, at the time defendant applied to purchase certain state land in controversy, she was a resident of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Domicile, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION (§ 13*)—NATURE OF OCCUPANCY—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff constructed and maintained for a time a reservoir on the land in controversy to reclaim adjacent desert lands taken up by him. After he acquired such land, for many years he had not used the reservoir for irrigating purposes, but only to water stock, and the pipes leading from the reservoir had been for years unfit for use. The reservoir was not inclosed by a fence, and other stock raisers used it as well as plaintiff. Held, that there was no occupation of the land by plaintiff adverse to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Adverse Possession, Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

6. PUBLIC LANDS (§ 144*)—LANDS OF STATE—
PURCHASE—INDIVIDUAL BENEFIT.

Where a married woman purchased certain state land, her declaration that, in making the application, she desired to purchase for "our own benefit," meaning that she expected to permit her husband to graze his sheep on the land, did not show that she did not desire to purchase for her own use and benefit, and for that of no other person whomsoever.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Dec. Dig. § 144.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; F. A. Kelley, Judge.

Action by Thomas R. Dean against Anna

Elizabeth Dunn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Stewart and R. M. Rankin, for appellant. Pardee & Pardee, for respondent.

HART, J. On September 23, 1905, the defendant made an application in due form for the purchase of certain lieu land and thereafter the same was received and filed in the office of the Surveyor General, and subsequently, on the 30th day of April, 1906, was approved by that officer, and on July 6, 1906, the Surveyor General, as register of the state land office, issued to her a certificate of purchase, numbered 5257. On the 5th day of November, 1906, the plaintiff filed in the office of the Surveyor General his application to purchase the same land, and at the same time filed a verified protest against said application of defendant, together with a demand that the conflicting claims of plaintiff and defendant to purchase said land be referred to the proper court for adjudication. The plaintiff's application having thereupon been filed and numbered 5437, the Surveyor General, as ex officio register of the state land office, caused to be issued from his office an order of reference, by which the contest was referred to the superior court in and for Lassen county. Within 60 days after the order of reference (section 3417, Pol. Code), the contestant (plaintiff) filed his complaint in said superior court, and the defendant made answer thereto. The court found in favor of the defendant on all the material facts in the case and gave judgment accordingly. This appeal is by the plaintiff from said judgment upon a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiff, in his complaint, among other things, alleges: (1) That the statement contained in defendant's application to purchase the land in controversy that she desired to purchase the same from the state under the provisions of title 8 of the Political Code of this state was at the time made, and still is, false and untrue. (2) That her statement in said application that she desired to purchase said land for her own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever, was and is false and untrue. (3) That her declaration in said application that at the time said application was made she was a resident of the state of California was and is false and untrue. (4) That the defendant stated in her application that she was a married woman, but failed to state in said application and affidavit "that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name," as required by section 3496 of the Political Code. (5) "That plaintiff alleges the fact to be that the statement contained in said defendant's application to purchase said land, that there was no occupation of said land adverse to any that she had, then and there was and still is false and untrue." The foregoing averments of the complaint involve all the points urged against defendant's right to purchase said land, and it is here contended that the court's findings upon said points in favor of the defendant are not supported by the evidence.

The application of the defendant filed with the Surveyor General for the purchase of the land in dispute reads as follows: " * * * I, Anna Elizabeth Dunn, of Madeline, Lassen county, do hereby apply to purchase the land hereinafter described, and in support of my application I do solemnly swear that I am native born, a citizen of the United States, a resident of this state, of lawful age. That I desire to purchase from the state of California, under the provisions of title eight of the Political Code, the following described land in Lassen county, to wit: * * * containing 359.97 acres. That there is no occupation of said land adverse to any that I have. That I desire to purchase the same for my own use and benefit, and for the use or benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever, and that I have made no contract or agreement to sell the same. That said land is not suitable for cultivation; that I have not entered any portion of any lands mentioned in section three thousand four hundred and ninety-four of the Political Code (to wit, the unsold portion of the five hundred thousand acres granted to the state for school purposes, the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, and the lands selected in lieu thereof), which, together with that now sought to be purchased, exceeds 359.97 acres; and that said land is not timbered land." The said application was sworn to before a notary public. The plaintiff testified that in the year 1887 he built a dam 150 feet long, 26 feet high, and 20 feet wide on top, on a portion of the land in controversy, "for the purpose of holding water upon said land as a reservoir, and used the same ever since for stock and irrigation purposes; that he used said reservoir in the reclamation of desert lands about a quarter of a mile from said dam; that the water held by said dam covers about two-thirds of said 40 acres; that there has been water held in said reservoir every year since it was built." He declared that there was no other land, except that used for reservoir purposes, embraced in his application which was occupied by him in any way. The deposition of the defendant was then introduced in evidence by the plaintiff. She stated that, when she made her application to purchase the land, she was a resident of California, living in Clark's Valley, Lassen county; that in making the application she actually desired to purchase the land for "our benefit"; that she had no agreement to sell the same, nor any understanding "with any person whomsoever by which the title I might acquire would go to the benefit of any person except myself"; that at the time of the application she was married; that at that time she had no other home, but "regarded Clark's Valley as my home at that time"; that she was under no disability which prevented her from holding property in her own name "that I know of"; that she had never previously made any other application for school lands in California. On cross-examination she admitted living during her married life of six years at Roop, Nev., in the winter months, but declared that in the summer she made California her home. She testified that her husband was engaged in the stock business; that he grazed his stock in the summer in Clark's Valley; that she intended, when she filed on the land in dispute, to return to Nevada with her husband after he had finished attending to the grazing of his cattle in Clark's Valley, in November some time. She also testified that her husband was postmaster at Roop, Nev.; that Roop was not a town, but that a post office was located there to accommodate the "ranch hands" in the matter of their mail; that her husband was the manager of the ranch upon which the Roop post office was located. The witness explained that she meant by the statement that "I actually desired to purchase the land for our benefit," that she would probably, upon completing title, permit her husband to graze his sheep upon the land.

Thomas J. Cox, called by plaintiff, testified that he had lived in Clark's Valley for over 20 years; that the home of James Dunn, husband of defendant, was in the state of Nevada in 1905; that Mr. and Mrs. Dunn did not reside in Clark's Valley in the year 1905. William H. Earl, a witness for the defendant, and a surveyor and civil engineer by profession, testified that he had known Mrs. Dunn for about 10 years; that in the month of September, 1905, she was living at Clark's Valley, Cal. He further testified as follows: "I know the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, section 20, township 36 N., range 12 E. I heard Mr. Dean's testimony in regard to the size of the dam on that 40. His testimony was approximately correct. I was there in August, 1905, and again, I think, in September last year. There was very little water in the reservoir in 1905; only about two or three acres covered with water. I run contours to ascertain what the area of the reservoir would be if it were full. The area would be about 12 acres. I noticed the pipes through the embankment. There were no headgates to them. The pipes were covered with dirt at both ends. There were no other improvements on the land." The foregoing involves a fair review of the testimony presented by the record covering the principal points in the case.

The most serious point urged against the defendant's right to purchase the land in dispute involves the finding of the trial court that, at the time she made her application to purchase said land, she was a resident of the state of California. But we will first dispose of the other contentions of the appellant.

The defendant's application was not, as contended, fatally defective in that it omitted to "show she was entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name." She declared therein that she was "native born, a married woman, a citizen of the United States, a citizen of this state, of lawful age." The Political Code (section 3496) provides: "If the applicant is a female, the affidavit must show that she is entitled to purchase and hold real estate in her own name." We think the defendant's affidavit was sufficient to meet the requirement of that section. If the facts as therein stated were true, undoubtedly she was entitled at the time of the application to purchase and hold real estate in her own name. Section 3444 of the Political Code contains a similar provision relating to the purchase by a female of swamp and overflowed, salt marsh, and tide lands. In Price v. Beaver, 73 Cal. 625, 15 Pac. 356, the same point was urged against the respondent in that case, she having, with her application to purchase swamp and overflowed land, filed an affidavit almost identical in language to the one here. The Supreme Court rejected the point, saying: "There is nothing in this point. The Code, as we have seen, says that the affidavit must show a female is entitled to purchase, not simply state that fact. The defendant's affidavit fully complied with the law in this respect, and was sufficient."

The second point urged by the appellant virtually involves all the other vital findings of the court, and, therefore, necessarily the question of whether the defendant was a resident of California at the time of her application. Counsel for appellant seem to assume that it is the rule in this state that the burden lies with the defendant to prove the truthfulness of all the material averments of her affidavit, and that failure to do so would lose to her the right to purchase the land under her application. But our Supreme Court has quite recently made it very clear that such is not the correct rule; but that, "where the action is begun by the person whose application is second in point of time, the conditions are, or may be, reversed. In order to show that there is any contest to try, he must aver that there is a claim under an adverse application. If he alleges that this was filed prior to his own, and it is not defective on its face, he must overcome the presumption in its favor arising from such priority by averment and proof of some fact or facts establishing its invalidity. If his own proof shows a prior application by another party and the issuance of a certificate thereon by the Surveyor General and no defect or invalidity appears on the face of these papers, and no outside evidence is given to impeach them, such plaintiff must fail." Bieber v. Lambert et al., 152 Cal. 557, 93 Pac.

94. See, also, Risdon v. Steyner (decided on November 14, 1908, by this court) 99 Pac. 377. The case at bar presents the same conditions as existed in the case from which the foregoing excerpt is taken. The action here is brought by the person whose application was second in point of time, and he charges that the application of the defendant is founded on an affidavit whose material averments are false and untrue. "The presumptions that the law has been obeyed, that the first applicant is innocent of the crime of perjury, and that official duty has been properly performed come to the aid of the defendant." Bieber v. Lambert, supra. Besides, the certificate itself is in express terms made prima facie evidence of title in the holder (section 3514, Pol. Code), and the burden was upon the plaintiff to controvert or overcome the presumptions in favor of defendant by proof introduced for that purpose.

We think the plaintiff signally failed to overcome the presumptions favoring defendant's right to purchase the land in dispute, and that the court found sufficient support from the evidence to uphold the finding that the defendant was a resident of California at the time she filed her application to purchase the land in question. She positively testified that she was a resident of this state at the time, and the witness Earl, who had been in her employ, strongly corroborated her upon the point. The most significant and potent fact tending to establish her residence to have been in another state when she applied for the purchase of the land is in the admission that her husband was postmaster at Roop, in the state of Nevada, at that time. But an examination of the testimony will show, as we have already seen, that "Roop" was not a town or a village, but merely the headquarters of defendant's husband when, as manager of an extensive "ranch," he found it necessary to be present on that part of said "ranch" situated in the state of Nevada. The "ranch," it seems, was owned by a corporation, and a portion was situated in the state of Nevada and a portion in California. The post office was not, as previously shown, established so much for the benefit of the general public as for the purpose of accommodating the employés of said "ranch." In fact, that appears to have been the exclusive purpose of establishing a post office at Roop. It is not shown whether the defendant's husband was a voter in the state of Nevada, nor was any other fact made to appear other than that Dunn himself was postmaster at Roop, tending to contradict the defendant's positive and unqualified declaration that she was a resident of this state when she made and filed her application. The testimony of a witness named Cox, a cook by occupation, in substance amounted to no more than a declaration that he did not see Mrs. Dunn in Clark's Valley about the time of the filing of her application. It may be admitted that if the residence of the defendant's husband had been clearly and unmistakably shown to have been at Roop, Nev., when the application was made by her to purchase the land concerned here, it would have constituted sufficient proof to have established her residence in the state of Nevada. Section 103, Civ. Code. But the proof upon this point is not, as before observed, clear and convincing. He spent almost as much of his time in California as in Nevada. His business called him to both states at different seasons of the year, and we therefore think the plaintiff failed to impeach by the necessary proof the statement in defendant's affidavit that she was a resident of California at the time she filed her application to purchase this land.

The plaintiff undertook to show that he had been in the occupancy of a portion of the land in dispute for many years prior to defendant's application to purchase. The alleged occupancy consisted in the construction and maintenance for a time of a reservoir in which to store water primarily intended to be used for irrigating and thus reclaiming certain adjacent desert lands, "taken up" by plaintiff under the "Desert Land Act." Since running water on the desert land from the reservoir, after he "proved up" on said land, many years ago, he had not used it for irrigating purposes, but only for the purpose of furnishing water for his stock. He testified that the reservoir was not inclosed by a fence, and that other stock raisers equally with himself had used the water therefrom for their stock—in fact, the reservoir appears to have been used in common by all the stock raisers of the vicinity in which it was maintained. But the witness Earl described the condition of the reservoir and the pipes leading therefrom to be such for many years as to render it of no practical use. He said that there were no headgates to the pipes, and they were "covered with dirt at both ends." The court was justified in finding from the testimony of this witness that there was not and had not been occupation of the land adversely to defendant.

The appellant further contends that the testimony shows that the defendant did not desire to purchase the land for "her own use and benefit, and for the use and benefit of no other person or persons whomsoever." This contention is based upon the statement, before referred to, made by the defendant on her cross-examination, that "in making this application I actually desired to purchase the lands for our own benefit." The defendant in the same connection declared: "I had at the time no agreement to sell the same, and have had none since. I had no understanding with any person whomsoever by which the title I might acquire would go to the benefit of any person except myself." We have already seen that she explained that portion of her statement in which she used the expression "our benefit," and the explanation seems to have been satisfactory to the trial court.

We think that there is absolutely no room for doubting the sufficiency of the evidence to support all the material findings of the trial court. It was, as we have pointed out, incumbent upon the plaintiff, under the pleadings here, in order to sustain his complaint, to impeach the truth of the essential averments contained in the affidavit accompanying defendant's application to purchase this land. He failed to sustain the burden thus resting upon him.

The judgment, for the reasons set forth herein, is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

9 Cal. App. 338

PEOPLE v. CHARLES. (Cr. 104.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Nov. 13, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Jan. 12, 1909.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 788*)—INSTRUCTIONS—FAILURE TO INTRODUCE EVIDENCE.

Where accused did not testify nor introduce testimony directly denying or explaining the prosecution's testimony, it was prejudicial error to instruct that evidence is to be estimated by its own intrinsic weight, and also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict, and that hence, if less satisfactory evidence is offered when more satisfactory evidence was within the power of the party to produce, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust, especially in view of another instruction that the prosecution need not call as its own witnesses all persons shown to have knowledge of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1855; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 775*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ALIBI.

It was not error to refuse to instruct on the defense of alibi, where accused's proof did not tend to show that he could not have been at the place of the offense at the time shown by the prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1833; Dec. Dig. § 775.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

George W. Charles was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

T. M. McNamara and V. Rapp, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of robbery, which crime was shown to have been committed in El Centro, Imperial county, by the "holding up" of the keeper of a pool hall in his place of business, about 11:30 o'clock p. m. of the night of March 11, 1908. It is urged that the verdict of guilty and the judgment of the court resting thereon should be set aside and reversed because of the giving to the jury by the trial court of the following instruction: "Evidence is to be estimated, not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict. Therefore, if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory evidence was within the power of the party to produce, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust"—the defendant not having testified in his own behalf, or introduced any evidence in direct denial or explanation of the testimony of the prosecution.

The contention of the appellant is clearly sustained by the decision in People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407, where the same instruction was given and held to be prejudicially erroneous. In that case the jury were also instructed that the neglect or refusal of the defendant to be a witness in his own behalf could not in any manner prejudice him, or be used against him on the trial or proceeding; the court's instruction in that case being in this respect substantially the same as that of the trial court in this, which was that "no inference of guilt can be drawn against him [defendant] for a failure to testify in his own behalf." In both cases the vice of giving the instruction complained of was due to the fact that the defendant did not go upon the witness stand in his own behalf. In the opinion in the Cuff Case the attention of trial courts is called to the danger of giving instructions in criminal cases based upon subdivisions 4, 6, and 7 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which section by its terms limits such giving to "proper occasions." It is said: "In criminal cases the proper occasions are so few, and the improper occasions are so many, that it were best they should be given rarely, if at all."

While it is true that in respect to some instructions based upon certain of the subdivisions of this section, the Supreme Court has in later cases, declared them to be mere commonplace matters that jurors would be presumed to know about and act upon in the absence of such instruction, the court has gone no further than to say that the giving or refusal of such instructions will be held to be ground for reversal only where prejudicial to the defendant's case. In just such a case as this, however, that court has declared the instruction here under consideration to be prejudicially erroneous. We can therefore find no ground upon which to sustain the Attorney General's attempt at distinguishing the case of People v. Cuff from that at bar. Indeed, we are inclined to the view that, taking into consideration instruction 14, given by the trial court in this case, which is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that the prosecution is not required to call as its own witnesses all persons who were shown to have knowledge of the case"—the effect of the entire charge of the court was to specifically direct the erroneous instruction toward the defendant's case, thus rendering the error in the case at bar more prejudicial than it was in the Cuff Case.

The refusal of the court to give the instructions based upon a defense of an alibi was not error. Neither of the two witnesses called on behalf of the defendant pretended to testify to his whereabouts at the time of the commission of the offense. The theory of the prosecution and all its evidence tended to show the offense was committed about 11:30 p. m. One of the witnesses for defendant saw him last before this time at 10 or 15 minutes after 10 o'clock, and the other at half past 8 or 9; the latter seeing him again when he came to bed, but without knowledge of the time. The circumstances of the transaction show that, accepting the testimony of both these witnesses as true, the defendant might still have been at the place of the commission of the offense at the time shown by the people's case.

The other specifications of error are not well taken, and no good purpose can be served by considering them in detail.

The giving of the instruction first above mentioned was reversible error, and for this reason the judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 350

KENNY v. KENNEDY. (Civ. 527.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. NEGLIGENCE (§ 117*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—NATURE OF DEFENSE.

Contributory negligence must be affirmatively established by defendant, where it does not appear on the face of the complaint or cannot be inferred from plaintiff's evidence, and in such case it must be pleaded, since if there were no issue as to contributory negligence no finding thereon would be required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 195; Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 837*)—REVIEW—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ISSUE NOT MADE BY PLEADINGS.

Where no issue as to contributory negligence is presented by the pleadings, in determining the question on appeal, only the evidence presented by plaintiff in establishing his case may be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 837.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 134*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for negligently selling plaintiff gasoline, instead of kerosene, plaintiff's evidence held not to show that he was negligent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Dec. Dig. § 134.*]

4. NEW TRIAL (§ 108*)—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

Newly discovered evidence merely cumulative, to be ground for a new trial, must be such

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes as to render a different result probable upon the new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 226, 227; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 981*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—NEW TRIAL.

Whether affidavits of newly discovered cumulative evidence, presented on motion for a new trial, show such evidence as to render a different result probable upon a new trial, is for the trial court in the exercise of its discretion, the exercise of which will not be disturbed in the absence of a clear abuse.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3876; Dec. Dig. § 981.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by C. E. Kenny against E. I. Kennedy. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appealing. Affirmed.

Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant.
Powers & Holland, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action for damages. Findings and judgment against defendant, who appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

The findings of the court, all of which have support from the evidence, are, in effect: That plaintiff, through his wife, authorized in that behalf, applied to defendant, who was his family grocer, for a can of coal oil; that defendant in attempting to fill such order, carelessly and negligently delivered to plaintiff's wife gasoline instead of coal oil; that the wife of plaintiff, in ignorance of such fact, filled the lamps with the article purchased, and an explosion resulted, causing the destruction by fire of plaintiff's house and personal property.

No issue as to contributory negligence is presented by the pleadings, notwithstanding which fact defendant insists that the record discloses such contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiff as to preclude recovery. "It is the settled rule in this state that contributory negligence is a defense to be affirmatively established by the defendant, unless it is shown or can be inferred from the evidence given in support of the plaintiff's case." Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal. 254, 64 Pac. 255. "Contributory negligence is matter of defense, where it does not appear upon the face of the complaint, or by the evidence for the plaintiff." Cahill v. Stone et al. (Cal.) 96 Pac. 84. If therefore, under such circumstances, it is a matter of defense, it is incumbent upon the defendant by his answer to plead the same that he may avail himself of such defense, for, there being no issue as to contributory negligence, no finding in relation thereto would be required. Birsch v. Citizens' Electric Co., 36 Mont. 574, 93 Pac. 940; Smith v. Ogden and N. W. R.

Co., 33 Utah, 129, 93 Pac. 185. Under this rule, we may not upon this appeal, in determining the question of contributory negligence, consider any evidence other than that presented by plaintiff in establishing his case. A reference to plaintiff's evidence discloses that there is nothing therein tending to show contributory negligence. It is true that the wife of plaintiff testifies that on the night preceding the fire the lamps, which had been filled from the article purchased from defendant, acted badly and were extinguished on account thereof, and that on the day following she inquired of defendant as to the character of the oil he had furnished her upon which occasion defendant assured her that the oil was all right, but gave as an opinion that the burners of her lamps were defective. The wife of plaintiff then cleaned the burners, refilled the lamps, and at nightfall lighted them, when one of the lamps exploded. There is nothing in the evidence indicating that the opinion of the defendant as to the defect in the burners had any foundation in fact, or that the burners were in any wise defective, but, on the contrary, the evidence is most satisfactory that the article sold was gasoline, unfit for use in a lamp, dangerous, and on account of its peculiar character an explosion was inevitable.

We perceive no error in the action of the trial court denying the motion for a new trial based upon the affidavits of newly discovered evidence. By these affidavits defendant sought only to contradict certain witnesses of plaintiff who testified upon the trial. Applying to newly discovered evidence of this character the rule applicable where newly discovered evidence is merely cumulative, which is that the newly discovered evidence should be of such a character as to render a different result probable upon the new trial, and which fact is for determination by the trial court in the exercise of a sound discretion (Oberlander v. Fixen & Co., 129 Cal. 692, 62 Pac. 254), we see no reason why the action of the trial court in this instance should be disturbed. The record discloses that the cause was tried by the court without a jury. The trial court, then, upon this motion for a new trial had before it the affidavits, and in denying such motion determined that the statements contained in the affidavits were not of such character as to change the result or affect the judgment of the court. In determining the effect of affidavits of this character a discretion reposes in the trial court, and its action will not be disturbed unless an abuse of such discretion is made apparent. No such abuse of discretion is here shown.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes
99 P.—25

9 Cal. App. 301

PEOPLE v. HAYES. (Cr. 153.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 9, 1908.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—MANSLAUGHTER—MALICE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in a homicide case growing out of labor troubles and a conflict between union and nonunion men, showing that both parties to the conflict were armed with pistols, that both parties had previously armed themselves in anticipation of a possible conflict, that on the conflict arising both parties evinced a readiness to draw their pistols and promptly did so, a conflict as to who fired the first shot, but a certainty that defendant was wounded by a shot fired by deceased, an uncertainty as to who fired the shot that killed deceased, and the fact that, while defendant had deceased covered with his pistol all the time they were crossing the street, he only shot when deceased attempted to draw his pistol, presents a question of a killing without malice, requiring the submission of the issue of manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 655; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 368*)—EVIDENCE—CONDUCT OF THIRD PERSONS.

The state, on a prosecution for the killing of a nonunion man by a union man, may not show that persons, who were with the union men and defendant on the occasion, but who had not been examined as witnesses, had subsequently falsely denied being present.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 368.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§ 203*) — EVIDENCE — DYING DECLARATIONS—PREDICATE.

It was not error to refuse admission of the statement of deceased as a dying declaration that he fired the first shot at defendant; it being necessary to show that he made it under a sense of impending death, and that he had given up all hope of living, and the only evidence on that point being that on the way to the hospital deceased said, "I am done for," but that on arriving there the physician told him "his chances were pretty slim," implying that he did have some chance of living.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 430-437; Dec. Dig. § 203.*]

4. HOMICIDE (§ 161*) — EVIDENCE — SUBSEQUENT CIRCUMSTANCES.

It being competent for the state to show that any or all the crowd that followed deceased and his brother, in a trouble between union and nonunion men, and were present at their shooting, were armed with loaded pistols, it could for such purposes show that immediately after the shooting one of them was seen running from the place unloading a pistol; this supporting the inference that it was loaded when he was with the crowd following the brothers, and that the killing was done in pursuance of a conspiracy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 161.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 158*)—EVIDENCE—PREVIOUS STATEMENT.

Testimony that when on the day of, but some time before, the shooting, defendant was seen with a revolver, he said he was liable to use it before night, that the other crowd were carrying revolvers, and he was going to carry one too, was admissible; the circumstances strongly indicating that he referred to a crowd of nonunion men, on one of whom he did use the pistol before night.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 293-296; Dec. Dig. § 158.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 364*)—RES GESTÆ.

Testimony that immediately after the shooting of nonunion men the crowd of union men, in which defendant was, scattered and ran, is admissible as part of the res gestæ; such act being the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the main occurrence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 805-818; Dec. Dig. § 364.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

John Hayes was convicted of murder, and appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

J. F. Quinn and Wm. Kehoe, for appellant.
Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was charged by information with the crime of murder for the killing of one William S. Jenks on the 8th day of January, 1907, in Humboldt county. Upon his trial the jury returned a verdict finding him "guilty of murder in the second degree at the extreme mercy of the court." Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was by the court denied, and judgment was rendered that he be imprisoned for the period of 20 years. Defendant appealed from the judgment and order denying his motion.

The first and principal contention of appellant is that the court erred in refusing to give to the jury an instruction requested by defendant upon the subject of manslaughter. The court not only refused to give the requested instruction, but gave no instruction whatever upon the question of manslaughter.

The pertinent part of the instruction requested and refused is as follows: "But I charge you that murder, whether in the first or second degree, is the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought, and unless the malice aforethought is shown beyond a reasonable doubt the person doing such killing could not be found guilty of any higher crime than manslaughter, which is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and is of two kinds: (1) Voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; (2) involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner or without due caution or circumspection." It is not, and cannot be, contended that the requested instruction is not a correct statement of the law; but it is contended by respondent that there is no evidence in the record that tends to prove an unlawful killing without malice, and upon this ground justifies the refusal of the instruction. With this contention we find ourselves unable to agree.

The killing of William S. Jenks grew out of certain labor troubles in the city of Eureka. In the same affray his brother Albert Jenks was killed, and appellant shot through the body. On the 8th day of January, 1907, the steamer Gualala was being unloaded at the wharf at the foot of Whipple street in the city of Eureka by a gang of nonunion stevedores. This was offensive to the members of the Longshoremen's Union, who, to the number of 30 or 40, including defendant, congregated near the foot of Whipple street shortly before the men engaged in unloading the steamer would quit work. A number of the union men were armed with pistols, as were also some of the men engaged in unloading the steamer. Both William and Albert Jenks were armed with pistols, and they were about the last, if not the last, of the men engaged in unloading the steamer to quit work for the day. This they did at about 5 o'clock, and took their way up Whipple street, passing through the crowd of union men without molestation, as previously had the other nonunion men, save that one Davis had been asked if he was scabbing, and had been chased and stoned by some members of the crowd. The Jenks brothers soon overtook two fellow workmen, Caughey and Stein, and with them proceeded on their way, walking on the sidewalk on the north side of Whipple street, going easterly; Caughey being between William and Albert Jenks, and Stein in the rear. The crowd of union men soon followed the group of nonunion men. Much evidence was given which tended to show that in so doing they had a hostile purpose towards the departing nonunion men; but, on the other hand, evidence was given by defendant and witnesses called on his behalf tending to prove that they did so with no hostile or unlawful purpose, but with the intent to disperse to their various homes, following the suggestion of one of their number that they go home. When the crowd of union men reached a point opposite a row of cottages on Whipple street, Hayes, who was armed with a pistol, worn at a belt, in front of his person, stopped and got a wheel that he had previously left there. He mounted the wheel, and started on; the crowd of union men giving way for him. He overtook the nonunion men and passed around them; his wheel falling upon the sidewalk in front of the Jenks brothers and Caughey. There is evidence that tended to prove that he intentionally dropped his wheel, and immediately drew his pistol and covered William Jenks with it. On the other hand, defendant gave evidence that, as he passed the Jenks brothers, they jumped from the sidewalk, and William attempted to draw his gun, which was worn at a belt under his coat; that this so startled him that he lost his balance on the wheel, and immediately covered William Jenks with his gun, and commanded him not to draw his gun or he would shoot. At any rate, there is considerable evidence that as they left the sidewalk William Jenks attempted to draw his gun, and Albert Jenks did draw his gun. There is a conflict in the evidence as to who first attempted to draw. The evidence shows that the members of the crowd of union men closed up, and that one, called "Art Smith," covered one of the Jenks brothers. The opposing groups crossed the street obliquely. The street is 60 feet in width and without a sidewalk on the south side. No shooting occurred until the Jenks brothers had entirely crossed the street. There is much evidence to the effect that the two groups, as they crossed the street, faced each other, each in a menacing attitude toward the other, defendant and Art Smith covering one of the Jenks brothers, and William Jenks with his hand on his gun at his belt, and Albert Jenks with his gun in his hand. While crossing the street defendant and William Jenks were but five or six feet apart. Several witnesses heard defendant tell William Jenks not to draw his gun, or he would shoot, and William reply that he would draw his gun. When the Jenks brothers had entirely crossed the street, the firing commenced, with the result that Albert Jenks was killed on the spot, falling with his pistol in his hand, William Jenks was shot four times, from the effects of one of which shots he subsequently died, and defendant was shot through the chest by William Jenks. There is a sharp conflict as to who fired the first shot. Defendant testified that, his attention being for a moment distracted, William Jenks drew his gun and shot defendant through the chest, who returned the fire. Other witnesses testified in support of this contention. On the other hand, there was evidence given that the first shot was fired by Art Smith, and also evidence that the first shot was fired by defendant. Other persons from the union crowd also fired shots, but the evidence does not show what particular person fired the shot that killed Jenks. He was wounded four times, but three of the wounds were unimportant as to results, and only one of the wounds had anything to do with causing death. Various witnesses estimated the number of shots at from seven or eight to fifteen.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

From the foregoing statement of the evidence it is apparent that we have a case resulting in homicide, where both parties to the conflict were armed with guns, and where both parties had previously armed themselves in anticipation of a possible conflict; where, upon the conflict arising, both parties evinced a readiness to draw their guns and promptly did so; a conflict as to who made the first hostile demonstration, and a conflict as to who fired the first shot, but a certainty that defendant was wounded by a shot fired by deceased, while it is uncertain as to who fired the shot that killed deceased. The bullet that produced the fatal wound was shown to be much larger than the bullets that produced the other wounds, but which, if any, of the bullets corresponded with the caliber of the pistol used by defendant does not appear from the evidence. Upon this state of the evidence, we are clearly of the opinion that the court should have submitted to the jury the issue of manslaughter.

The case of Stevenson v. United States, 162 U. S. 313, 16 Sup. Ct. 839, 40 L. Ed. 980, is a case in its essential particulars similar to the case at bar. In the Stevenson Case the judgment was reversed solely for the reason that the trial court refused to submit to the jury the issue of manslaughter. The language of the court, speaking through Justice Peckham, is exceedingly appropriate to the matter before us. It was there said: "The evidence as to manslaughter need not be uncontradicted or in any way conclusive upon the question; so long as there is some evidence upon the subject, the proper weight to be given it is for the jury to determine. If there were any evidence which tended to show such a state of facts as might bring the crime within the grade of manslaughter, it then became a proper question for the jury to say whether the evidence were true, and whether it showed that the crime was manslaughter instead of murder. It is difficult to think of a case of killing by shooting, where both men were armed and both in readiness to shoot, and where both did shoot, that the question would not arise for the jury to answer whether the killing was murder or manslaughter, or a pure act of self-defense. The evidence might appear to the court to be simply overwhelming to show that the killing was in fact murder, and not manslaughter or an act performed in self-defense, and yet, so long as there was some evidence relevant to the issue of manslaughter, the credibility and force of such evidence must be for the jury, and cannot be matter of law for the decision of the court." In this case both men were armed and ready to shoot, and both did shoot. The trial court seems to have been of the opinion that the evidence showed either an unlawful killing with malice aforethought, or a killing in necessary self-defense. This was also the position of the trial court in the Stevenson Case, supra, and upon this subject it was said: "The ruling of the learned judge was to the effect that, in this case, the killing was either murder, or else it was done in the course of self-defense, and that under no view which could possibly be taken of the evidence would the jury be at liberty to find the defendant guilty of manslaughter. The court passed upon the strength, credibility, and tendency of the evidence, and decided as a matter of law what it seems to us would generally be regarded as a question of fact, viz., whether, under all the circumstances which the jury might, from the evidence, find existed in the case, the defendant was guilty of murder, or whether he killed the deceased, not in self-defense, but unlawfully and unjustly, although without malice. The presence or absence of malice would be the material consideration in the case, provided the jury should reject the theory of self-defense, and yet this question of fact is, under the evidence in the case, determined by the trial court as one of law and against the defendant." See, also, Gonzales v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 33, 29 S. W. 1091, 30 S. W. 224; Riptoe v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 42 S. W. 381; Gilcrease v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 619, 28 S. W. 531; State v. Dunn, 116 Iowa, 219, 89 N. W. 987; Wheeler v. Com., 120 Ky. 697, 87 S. W. 1106.

Between a killing in necessary self-defense and an unlawful killing with malice aforethought there is a wide margin. We apprehend that it seldom occurs that where the jury rejects the theory of self-defense in a case where the killing is the culmination of an encounter where force is threatened and used by both parties, they might not properly find that the killing was without malice. If the jury believed that defendant brought on the difficulty, and was the first to draw his gun, it does not necessarily follow that he intended to kill or shoot Jenks. Although the evidence clearly shows that he had Jenks covered during all the time they were crossing the street, and could at any time have killed him while so doing, he did not shoot or attempt to shoot, but, according to the testimony of Caughey, the principal witness for the people, only shot when Jenks attempted to draw his pistol. Under these circumstances, can any one say that the jury might not believe that he did not draw his gun with any intent to kill or with malice? The drawing of a deadly weapon in a rude, angry, and threatening manner, in the presence of two or more persons, not in necessary self-defense, is a misdemeanor, but is not a felony unless done with felonious intent. Pen. Code, § 417. Where a difficulty is intentionally brought on for the purpose of killing deceased, the fact of imminent danger to the accused constitutes no defense; but when the accused embarks in a quarrel with no felonious intent, or malice, or premeditated purpose of doing bodily harm or killing, and under reasonable belief of imminent danger he inflicts a fatal wound, it is not murder, but may be manslaughter. Wallace v. United States, 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. Ct. 859, 40 L. Ed. 1039. See, also, Wharton on Homicide, § 198; State v. Partlow, 90 Mo. 608, 4 S. W. 14, 59 Am. Rep. 31; Adams v. People, 47 Ill. 376.

Over the objection of defendant, the district attorney was allowed to ask Erick Larsen, a witness for the defense, several questions, manifestly intended to get before the jury the fact that three named persons, who in fact were with the crowd of union men and defendant, upon the occasion of the killing of Jenks, had untruthfully sworn that they were not present on said occasion. None of these persons had been examined as witnesses upon this trial, but the evidence clearly showed that they were present at the affray. It is perfectly plain from the record that the object of asking these questions was to get before the jury the fact that these persons, associated with defendant, had subsequently falsely denied being present. The questions should not have been asked by the district attorney, and the objections thereto should have been sustained.

The court excluded testimony of one John Davis that William S. Jenks, before his death, stated that he fired the first shot at John Hayes (defendant). This testimony was offered by defendant as a dying declaration. Before such testimony may be admitted, it must be shown that the person making it made it under a sense of impending death, and that he had given up all hope of living. The preliminary evidence is, of course, addressed to the court. The evidence in this case does not show that the court erred in rejecting the evidence as to what Jenks said. The physician who attended the deceased stated that on the way to the hospital Jenks said, "I am done for," but when they reached the hospital the physician told the wounded man that "his chances were pretty slim." This seems to have been the only information given the wounded man by the physician, and it implied that he did have some chance of living. The witness Davis, by whom it was attempted to prove the dying declaration, said, "I don't think he realized that he was going to die." The evidence falls far short of that held sufficient to admit testimony of a dying declaration in People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339, and we cannot say that the court erred in excluding the offered testimony.

A witness Fox testified that immediately after the shooting he saw Frank Sidelinger running from the scene of the shooting with a gun in his hand. He was then asked, "What, if anything, was he doing with it?" and, over the objection of defendant, was allowed to answer, "He was unloading it." This was not error. It was, of course, quite proper for the people to establish by any competent evidence that any or all of the crowd that followed the Jenks brothers and were present at their shooting were armed with loaded pistols. Such proof tended to establish an unlawful and hostile purpose on their part, and, in connection with other evidence tending to show that they acted in concert in following and bringing on an encounter with the Jenks brothers, tended to sustain the theory of the people that the Jenks brothers were killed in pursuance of an unlawful conspiracy. The evidence was not admissible as the act of a co-conspirator in furtherance of the common design, but was admissible as a fact that showed that Sidelinger was armed with a loaded pistol during the time that he was acting with defendant and the other members of the crowd that followed the Jenks brothers. The essential matter proved by this testimony is that the pistol was loaded. The incidental matter that Sidelinger was unloading it proved that it was loaded. This was the essential and pertinent fact which made the evidence admissible. The testimony that Sidelinger had a pistol when seen by the witness was admitted without objection, and properly so, because it supported the inference that he had the pistol in his possession when, a few minutes before, he was with the crowd that followed and shot at the Jenks brothers. The fact that he was unloading the pistol when seen by the witness proved that the pistol was then loaded, and this supported the inference that it was loaded when Sidelinger was with the crowd that followed and shot at the Jenks brothers. This was a material and pertinent fact.

A witness Hiram Johnson testified that on the afternoon of the day of the shooting he had seen a revolver in the hand of defendant. He was then asked, "State under what circumstances, and what was said between yourself and Mr. Hayes at that time?" and, over the objection of the defendant, answered: "I made the remark that that was a fine revolver. He said: 'Yes, by God, and I am liable to use it before night, too. * * * Those other sons of bitches are carrying revolvers, and I am going to carry one to.'" In this the court did not err. The circumstances in evidence strongly indicated that defendant referred to the nonunion men working on the "Gualala," upon one of whom he did in fact use the pistol before night of that day.

Over the objection of defendant, the court permitted several witnesses to testify that the crowd ran away immediately following the shooting. Substantially every one of these witnesses testified that, immediately after the shooting, the crowd in which defendant was scattered and ran. We think that this was permissible as part of the res gestæ. The testimony went no further than to show that immediately after the shooting the crowd fled from the immediate vicinity of the scene where the affray took place, leaving Albert Jenks dead upon the ground, William Jenks lying upon the ground fatally wounded, and defendant wounded, but able with the assistance of Art Smith to walk across the street to his bicycle. The act of the crowd in immediately dispersing was spontaneous and concurrent with the main event within the rule as laid down by the courts. The dispersing of the crowd was the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the main occurrence. Acts and declarations to be admissible need not precede or be precisely concurrent in point of time with the main fact. If they are the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the main fact, they are a part of the res gestæ. Heckle v. Southern Pacific Co., 123 Cal. 442, 56 Pac. 56; State v. Arnold, 47 S. C. 9, 24 S. E. 926, 58 Am. St. Rep. 867; Castillo v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 145, 19 S. W. 892, 37 Am. St. Rep. 794; State v. Kaiser, 124 Mo. 651, 28 S. W. 182; Mitchum v. State, 11 Ga. 615; 2 Ency. of Ev. 306, 292. In discussing how far declarations are admissible as res gestæ, it was said, in Heckle v. Southern Pacific Co., supra: "A declaration, to be admissible on that ground, must be an undesignated part, or incident, of the occurrence in question. It must be in a general sense contemporaneous with the main occurrence, although, in case of a sudden accident or attack, the declarations would not be inadmissible merely because the blow or collision immediately preceded it; it must be the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the main occurrence, and must exclude the notion of deliberation or calculation, or the design to manufacture evidence for future purposes." Most of the cases relate to declarations made at or immediately following the main fact; but there can be no difference in principle between declarations which, under this rule, are treated as verbal acts, and acts. In the case at bar it is acts of the participants in the affray that were proved. These acts were the natural and spontaneous outgrowth of the shooting, and occurred before the smoke of battle had cleared away. The flight proven was simply a sudden and natural dispersal of the crowd. A complete and intelligible account of the affray could scarcely be given without disclosing what became of the crowd. The case of People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 17 Am. Rep. 401, cited by appellant, bears little or no analogy to the case at bar. In the Stanley Case four persons were seen by a policeman to attempt a robbery. Subsequently, after they had left the scene of their crime, they were arrested. After their arrest one of the four (not the defendant) broke away from the officers having him in charge and attempted to escape. This attempt to escape was clearly not a part of the res gestæ, and it was so held. The spontaneous and immediate dispersal of a mob or crowd engaged in a shooting affray is, we think, well within the rule of res gestæ, and the court did not err in allowing proof thereof.

For the errors hereinbefore noted the judgment and order are reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 298

PEOPLE v. SIDELINGER. (Cr. 152.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 9, 1908.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 83*)—AIDERS AND ABETTORS—DEGREE OF CRIME.

If one in killing another only commits manslaughter, his aiders and abettors are only guilty of manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 109; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 424*)—EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS—RES GESTÆ.

What the person committing a homicide said, in answer to questions after the homicide as to why he shot the boys, that "they were scabs," was nothing said or done in the course of the conspiracy, or a part of the res gestæ, and so inadmissible against his aiders and abettors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1002-1010; Dec. Dig. § 424.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

Frank Sidelinger was convicted of murder, and appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

J. F. Quinn and Wm. Kehoe, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. Appeal from judgment of conviction of murder in the second degree and order denying motion for a new trial.

This is a companion case to the case of the People v. Hayes (this day decided), 99 Pac. 386, and several of the questions decided in the Hayes Case arise in this case. Sidelinger is charged with killing the same person that Hayes was charged with killing, apparently not upon the theory that Sidelinger fired the fatal shot, but upon the theory that he was present aiding and abetting the killing of William Jenks, or that he was a co-conspirator of Hayes and others, and the killing was the act of one of the co-conspirators. At any rate, there is no evidence in the record that connects this defendant with actually firing the fatal shot. The evidence concerning the killing, and the incidents leading up thereto, is practically the same as in the Hayes Case.

In this case, as in the Hayes Case, defendant requested the court to give an instruction upon the question of manslaughter entirely correct as a statement of law, but which the court refused to give, apparently upon the theory that under no aspect of the evidence could the jury find the defendant guilty of manslaughter. For the reasons given in the opinion this day filed in the Hayes Case, the court erred in so doing. The issue of manslaughter should have been submitted to the jury. If in fact Hayes actually killed Jenks, and in so doing only committed the crime of manslaughter, his aiders and abettors were only guilty of manslaughter. Wharton on Homicide, 57; Goff v. Prime, 26 Ind. 196; Polly v. Com. (Ky.) 24 S. W. 7; State v. Dunn, 116 Iowa, 219, 89 N. W. 987; Wheeler v. Com., 120 Ky. 697, 87 S. W. 1106.

The prosecution, as a part of its case in chief, proved by Mrs. Peterson that after the shooting she went over to Hayes. She was then allowed to testify, over the objection of defendant, that she "asked him if he shot the boys, and why he did shoot them, and he said 'they were scabs.'" What Hayes then said was in no sense something said or done in pursuance of the conspiracy, or a part of the res gestæ. The shooting was over, and the crowd had dispersed. The statement of Hayes was but a narrative concerning a past and completed act. What he then said about the matter could only be used as impeaching testimony after he had been a witness, and the proper foundation had been laid for proving statements inconsistent with his testimony. The action of the court upon this matter was clearly erroneous. People v. Smith, 151 Cal. 625, 91 Pac. 511; People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494, 20 Pac. 56; People v. English, 52 Cal. 212. For the same reason the court erred in allowing the witness Olson to testify to what John Jacobson said to the witness subsequent to the day of the shooting.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The action of the court in disallowing challenges to several jurors for actual bias, as well as in disallowing a challenge to the panel for bias of the officers that summoned the panel, has been urged upon our attention; but, as the judgment and order must be reversed for the errors already noted, we do not deem it necessary to pass upon the action of the court in this regard. The same conditions as to the jurors may not occur upon the retrial. For the purposes of a new trial it is sufficient for us to say that in deciding challenges to jurors the court should have in mind the rule laid down in People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99, decided since this case was tried, and where the law upon this subject is elaborately discussed.

For the errors herein noted, the judgment and order are reversed, and the action remanded to the trial court for a new trial.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 341

PEOPLE v. GORHAM. (Cr. 105.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Nov. 14, 1908.)

1. FORGERY (§ 12*)—"CHECK OR INSTRUMENT FOR PAYMENT OF MONEY"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Leaving blank the name of the payee of a check gives to any bona fide holder for value implied authority to fill the blank with his own name or that of a third person, and so, likewise, where all that was required to make a check out of a forged instrument delivered by defendant in payment was the insertion of the name of the payee, the delivery constituted the transferee defendant's agent with authority to fill in the blank with its own name; and a claim that the instrument was not a check or an instrument for the payment of money within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 476, when passed by defendant, is without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forgery, Cent. Dig. § 35; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 60*)—OMITTING NAME OF PAYEE—EFFECT AS TO CHECK.

Where the name of the payee is left blank in a check, the effect of such paper until the name of the payee is inserted pursuant to authority conferred on the receiver by its delivery for value is that it is payable to the bearer, and passes from hand to hand by mere delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 88; Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

3. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 341*)—OMITTING NAME OF PAYEE—EFFECT AS TO CHECK.

That an instrument does not designate any payee does not raise a presumption that it is in circulation without authority, and one who accepts it in that condition need not at his peril ascertain whether the person tendering it has authority to complete it or to authorize another to do so, but, on the contrary, bills and checks are often executed in full, with the exception of the name of the payee, which is left blank, that it may be afterwards filled up with the name of the actual holder who demands payment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 829; Dec. Dig. § 341.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Dorothy Gorham was convicted of forgery, and she appeals. Affirmed.

Noleman & Smyser, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. As disclosed by the record, defendant negotiated for the purchase of a piano from the Wiley B. Allen Company at an agreed price of $350. In payment therefor she gave to the salesman an instrument which purported to be signed by Mrs. S. M. Dimmick, whom she represented to be her sister, and for whom she was purchasing the piano. This check when handed to the salesman was in the following form:

"Los Angeles, Cal.,.....March 10,.....1908. No...9..
"The Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles. Pay to
.....or order $..400..
.....Four Hundred.....Dollars.
Mrs. S. M. Dimmick....."

As a reason for presenting the check for a sum in excess of the required amount and with the name of the payee left blank, she stated that her sister was ill and had given her the check, not knowing from whom nor at what price she would make the purchase, but limiting the price to not exceeding $400. Defendant was requested to fill in the blank space with the name of the payee, but declined to do so, saying it was customary to stamp that in. The salesman took the check to the office on the same floor, where the manager stamped the name of the Wiley B. Allen Company in the space left blank for the name of the payee. Upon inquiry made at the bank, during which time defendant was detained at the store, it was ascertained that the check was fraudulent, both as to the signature and absence of money deposited in the bank to account of Mrs. Dimmick. The manager then presented the check, with the name of the payee stamped therein, to defendant, who, holding one end of it while he retained the other, was asked if it was not possible that a mistake had been made, and she said that the check was good. She was then placed under arrest, and stated that she had found the check, and that her name was not Martin, as she had represented, but Gorham.

The piano was not delivered, nor was any money paid to defendant on said check. The check, as alleged in the information, and which defendant is charged with uttering, publishing, and passing, and that was offered in evidence in support of said allegation, had inserted therein as payee the name of the Wiley B. Allen Company. Defendant was convicted as charged, and appeals from the judgment and an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The ground upon which appellant bases her right to a reversal is the fact that the check at the time it was delivered to the Wiley B. Allen Company did not contain the name of the payee; hence, it is claimed the instrument was not a check or other document within the meaning of section 476 of the Penal Code, and that there was a fatal variance between the allegation in the information and proof offered in support thereof. It may be, as contended by appellant, that the instrument did not constitute a check until the name of the payee was inserted therein (Rex v. Richards, Russell & Ryan's [Eng.] Repts. p. 192; Rex v. Randall, Id. 195), though the contrary doctrine seems to prevail in the state of Indiana (Harding v. State, 54 Ind. 359). In any event, all that was required to make the instrument a check was the insertion therein of the name of the payee, and the filling in of such blank may be made by any one authorized so to do. When so filled, it relates back to the time of its delivery. Such authority may be conferred under an implied agency created by the maker's act in putting the paper into circulation. "Leaving such blank for the name of the payee gives to any bona fide holder for value an implied authority to fill the blank with his own name, or with that of a third person." Randolph on Commercial Paper, § 185; Rich v. Starbuck, 51 Ind. 87. By voluntarily delivering the instrument in question to the Wiley B. Allen Company in payment of the purchase price of the piano, defendant constituted the company her agent with authority to fill in the blank space with its own name, or that of any third person to whom said company as holder might transfer it. In legal effect, it was her act and made the check just what she designed it to be. The effect of such paper until the name of the payee is inserted pursuant to the authority conferred upon the receiver by its delivery for value is that it is payable to the bearer and passes from hand to hand by mere delivery. Under our view there is no merit in appellant's contention.

It is apparent from the foregoing views that the court did not err in instructing the jury as follows: "A check or order for the payment of money, however duly executed in other respects, but having the name of the payee omitted therefrom and delivered in that condition by the maker, carries with it the authorization of the maker to the intended payee to supply the name of such intended payee, or the name of any other person to whom the intended payee may deliver the check or order with the intent to pass title thereto."

We cannot agree with appellant that "the fact that the instrument does not designate any payee at once raises the presumption that it is in circulation without authority, and one who accepts it in that condition must at his peril ascertain whether or not the person tendering it has authority to complete it or to authorize another to do so." On the contrary, bills and checks are often executed in full, with the exception of the name of the payee, which is left blank in order that it may be afterwards filled up with the name of the actual holder, who demands payment. Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 145.

We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

9 Cal. App. 324
(Civ. 511.)

O'ROURKE v. FINCH et al.
(Court of Appeal, First District, California,
Nov. 12, 1908.)

1. ANIMALS (§ 74*)—INJURIES BY ANIMALS—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries through being bitten by a dog, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant was the owner of the dog and had knowledge of its vicious propensity to bite.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

2. ANIMALS (§ 74*)—INJURIES BY ANIMALS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries through being bitten by a dog, defendant claimed that he did not own the dog, evidence that defendant had given the dog a collar bearing his name and defendant's initials was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

3. ANIMALS (§ 74*)—INJURIES BY ANIMALS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries through being bitten by a dog, defendant testified that the dog was a trick dog, evidence as to the kind of tricks the dog could perform was inadmissible, since, while it might have shown the dog's intelligence, it would not excuse his act of biting.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

4. ANIMALS (§ 74*)—INJURIES BY ANIMALS—ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action for injuries through being bitten by a dog, one of defendants claimed that he did not own the dog, an instruction, that one who treats a dog as living at his house and undertakes to control his actions is the owner of the dog within the meaning of the law, was properly refused, since, if defendant owned the dog and kept him knowing his vicious nature, he could not escape liability on the theory that the dog lived with the other defendants and was sometimes with them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Dec. Dig. § 74.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by John Henry Joseph O'Rourke, a minor, by guardian ad litem, against T. J. Finch and others. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying a new trial, defendant Finch appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 96 Pac. 784.

Lynch & Drury, for appellant. W. H. Morrissey, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover $5,000 damages on account of personal injuries to plaintiff, a minor, by being severely bitten and wounded by a dog alleged to have been kept by defendants, and allowed by them negligently to run at large. The case was tried with a jury, and a verdict returned for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, upon which judgment was accordingly entered. Upon motion for a new trial by all the defendants the judge who tried the case and heard the evidence made an order for a new trial to be granted unless the plaintiff would remit from the amount of the judgment the sum of $250. This amount was remitted by plaintiff by consent in writing duly filed, whereupon the court made an order denying the motion for a new trial, and thereupon judgment was entered for plaintiff in the sum of $750. Defendant Finch prosecutes this appeal from the order denying a new trial. The other defendants have not appealed.

It is argued by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to show that he was, at the time the plaintiff was bitten by the dog, the owner or keeper of such dog, or that he had knowledge of its vicious propensity to bite. We have carefully examined the evidence, and are of the opinion that it is sufficient to sustain the verdict in both respects. In fact it was admitted by appellant that some time prior to the time this plaintiff was injured he knew of the dog having bitten one of Mrs. Kildea's children, and that he owned the dog at that time, and paid the doctor's bill for attending Mrs. Kildea's child. At the time the plaintiff was injured, the appellant lived with defendants Mr. and Mrs. Patrick, and the dog was kept at the same place. It had been bought and paid for by appellant. He had paid the license tax for keeping the dog. It had a collar on that he had bought, lettered and worded as follows: "Glen, from T. J. F." "Glen" was the name of the dog, and "T. J. F." were the initials of appellant's name. Appellant was seen daily upon his walks and rides in and about the neighborhood where he resided in company with the dog, and was very much attached to him. From all this the jury might well have believed that appellant was the owner of the dog at the time plaintiff was injured, and that the alleged gift of it to Mrs. Patrick was but a subterfuge in order to escape liability. The court did not err in allowing evidence as to the circumstances connected with the appellant giving the collar to the dog, and having the name placed on the collar. As appellant claimed that he did not own the dog at the time of the alleged injury, these facts were very potent circumstances. The jury might well consider them in connection with the other evidence in the case in determining as to whether or not the appellant was the real owner of the dog at the time plaintiff was bitten.

Appellant testified that the dog "is a trick dog." His counsel then sought to prove by him the nature and kind of tricks the dog could perform, but the court sustained objections to such questions. The ruling was clearly correct. The time of the court should not have been taken up with an investigation of the various tricks the dog had been taught, or in witnessing exhibitions of such tricks, as that would not have tended to justify his biting the child. While it might have shown the intelligence of the dog, it would not excuse or mitigate the act of biting the child; and we do not know of any rule that presumes that an intelligent dog will not bite a child as quickly as one lacking in intelligence.

There was no error in refusing the defendants' requested instruction to the effect that one who treats a dog as living at his house and undertakes to control his actions is the owner of the dog within the meaning of the law. While such an instruction might have been given in a case where one had a dog living at his house, and had full charge and control of him, and was claiming that he was not responsible as keeper for the acts of the dog, yet such facts would not exonerate the true owner if such owner also had control of the dog. If appellant was the owner of the dog, and kept him knowing his vicious nature, he cannot escape liability upon the theory that the dog lived with the other defendants, and was sometimes with them or with either of them. As to the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Patrick, they are not complaining of the refused instruction, and, besides, they have not appealed.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

9 Cal. App. 318

LAS ANIMAS & SAN JOAQUIN LAND CO.
v. FATJO et al. (Civ. 521.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Nov. 11, 1908.)

1. VENUE (§ 5*)—INJURY TO REALTY.
Code Civ. Proc. § 392, provides that actions for injuries to real property must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is located. Civ. Code, § 658, provides that real property consists of land, and that which is affixed to land. Section 660 provides that a thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is permanently resting on it, as in case of buildings. Held, that an action for the destruction by fire of buildings belonging to plaintiff, and located on his land, was an action for an injury to real property, and was triable in the county where the real property was situated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 9; Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

2. PROPERTY (§ 4*) — DISTINCTION BETWEEN REALTY AND PERSONALTY — PRESUMPTIONS.

In an action for the destruction by fire of a house and barn alleged to have been situated on plaintiff's land, it will be assumed, though not expressly alleged, that they were permanently resting on the soil.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Property, Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by the Las Animas & San Joaquin Land Company against L. Fatjo and others. From an order denying a motion for change of place of trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for appellants. Edward F. Treadwell (F. G. Osterlander, of counsel), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a change of the place of trial from Merced county to the city and county of San Francisco. The motion was made upon the ground that the said city and county is the place of residence of defendants. The order is sought to be upheld for the reason that the action is local in its nature, relating to an injury to real property situated in said Merced county. The question is to be determined by a consideration of the framework of the complaint, and of sections 392 and 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The former section, as far as material here, is as follows: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as provided in this Code: (1) For the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein or for the determination, in any form, of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property." The latter section provides that: "In all other cases, the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants or some of them reside at the commencement of the action." It is obvious, therefore, that the general rule is, as contended for by appellants, that the action must be tried in the county wherein resides the defendant, and the burden is upon him claiming otherwise to show that the case is within the exception. This the complaint clearly discloses, so it is affirmed by respondent and denied by appellants. The gravamen of the charge against defendants is contained in the fourth paragraph of the first count of the complaint as follows: "That on or about the 20th day of June, 1907, said defendants carelessly and negligently set out a fire on the property so owned by them * * * in the county of Merced, and said fire so negligently and carelessly set out by said defendants spread from the land so owned by defendants onto the land so owned by plaintiff, and then and there burned and destroyed a house and barn upon said land and owned by plaintiff, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $1,500." The complaint contains two other counts, but they vary simply in the method of alleging the negligence of defendants in relation to the fire. The purpose of this was to bring the case within different statutory provisions upon the subject, which we deem unnecessary to the discussion. It is clear, then, that the action is for damages caused by the destruction by fire of a house and barn belonging to plaintiff and located on his land.

The first inquiry is, Are the house and barn real property? The answer is found in the statutes. Section 658 of the Civil Code provides that: "Real or immovable property consists of: (1) Land. (2) That which is affixed to land. (3) That which is incidental or appurtenant to land. (4) That which is immovable by law"—and section 660 defines fixtures as follows: "A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls; or permanently resting upon it, as in the case of buildings; or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts or screws." The house and barn were buildings and, while not expressly alleged, we must assume, what is usual and a matter of common knowledge, that they were permanently resting upon the soil. In Commercial Bank v. Pritchard, 126 Cal. 605, 59 Pac. 132, it is said: "In this case there is nothing to show that the building and concrete foundation did not rest upon the land, and it will be presumed that it did, and hence under the definition given it is real estate."

Again, plaintiff alleged that it was the owner and in possession of a certain parcel of land, describing it, "together with a house and barn and other improvements thereon." It, therefore, at least inferentially averred that the buildings were a part of the land. We have a case, then, where the defendants are accused of having destroyed a part of plaintiff's land to its damage in the sum of $1,500. If the destruction of a part of real property, thereby damaging the owner, is not an injury to real property, then it is impossible to conceive of such a contingency. The cause of action arises from this injury. The purpose of the suit is to redress it, and it necessarily follows, if effect is to be given to the legislative will, that the trial must take place where the land is located; that is, in Merced county.

We are not without instructive suggestions on this subject from our Supreme Court. In L. K. R. W. D. Co. v. K. R. & F. C. Co., 60

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

Cal. 408. It is held, as stated in the syllabus: "The right of the plaintiff, as stated in the complaint, to have the water flow in the river to the head of its ditch is an incorporeal hereditament appurtenant to the ditch, and is coextensive with plaintiff's right to the ditch itself. The subject of the action is therefore situated in both counties, and the action might have been brought in either." The action was for the diversion of water from the said ditch. In City of Marysville v. N. B. G. M. Co., 66 Cal. 343, 5 Pac. 507, the action was brought to abate a nuisance which it was alleged was produced by defendants in causing the tailings and debris from their mining claims to be deposited on the lands of plaintiff. The court said: "Being an action 'for injuries to real property,' it is not within the class of cases which 'must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action.'" Drinkhouse v. Waterworks, 80 Cal. 308, 22 Pac. 252, was a suit "to enjoin the defendant from building a dam, which plaintiff alleges defendant has commenced and is now constructing, and asserts its intention of completing, and which, it is alleged, will, when completed, permanently flood a certain trace of land in San Mateo county in which plaintiff has a leasehold estate." It was held that the action was for an injury to real property, and triable in the county where the land was situated. It is said by the court, through Chief Justice Beatty, "That the sole object and purpose of the action is to prevent a threatened injury to real property is clear," and it is further held that there is no distinction in this respect between an action to prevent an injury to the realty and one for damages in consequence of an injury already consummated. The language is: "The injury is the same, whether threatened or completed, and the privilege accorded to the plaintiff to prevent the injury by injunction ought not to be held to give him the right to have the trial in a county where the cause would not have been triable if he had waited the completion of the injury before seeking redress." To the same effect is Last Chance, etc., Co. v. Emigrant Co., 129 Cal. 277, 61 Pac. 960.

But appellants contend that "an action to recover the value of the buildings burned and destroyed through defendants' negligence in handling the fire on their own land is not an action for trespass upon real property," and quite a number of cases are cited in support of the position, among which are Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Pacific Lumber Co., 1 Cal. App. 156, 81 Pac. 976, Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 305, 49 Pac. 189, Daneri v. So. Cal. Ry. Co., 122 Cal. 507, 55 Pac. 243, and Booker v. Aitken, 140 Cal. 472, 74 Pac. 11. In this connection it is urged that we must resort to the common law to ascertain the technical meaning of "trespass." It is true that in the Hicks Case, supra, it is said that: "While in this state all distinctions between common-law actions are abolished as relating to the procedure, yet it is plain that we are bound to consult the common law, and the classification of common-law actions, for the proper determination as to what the law-making power of this state had in mind when using the phrase 'trespass upon real property.'" But it is clear that the Hicks Case and the others cited have no application here, as the court was dealing with an entirely different section of the Code, and altogether different facts. It might be proper to resort to the common law to determine the meaning of the term "trespass," but it is hard to understand why we should go to such a source to find out what the Legislature meant, by "an injury to real property." It is unimportant whether this action is trespass or on the case, as known at the common law, since no question of the statute of limitations is involved. The act of the defendants in burning the property may not imply an actual physical invasion of plaintiff's land, but it is too clear for argument that injury to the land was caused by said act. Some other cases are cited by appellants to the effect that where fixtures are severed from the land, asported and converted or destroyed, the action for damages is not local, but personal. For instance, in McGonigle v. Atchison, 33 Kan. 726, 7 Pac. 550, the Supreme Court of Kansas held, as stated in the syllabus, that: "Where a mere wrongdoer enters upon land in the state of Missouri and severs sand therefrom, and transports it to Kansas, and there converts it to his own use, the sand remains the property of the owner of the land up to the time of the conversion, and he may afterwards recover from the wrongdoer the value of the sand in an action brought in Kansas, such action being transitory." But, as pointed out by respondent, that case and the others cited are entirely dissimilar to this because here the buildings were not severed or removed and afterwards converted, but the damage was done to the property while a part of the realty. Such damage could only be incurred on the land, and the action is therefore local.

All of appellants' points and authorities have been examined with care, but it is deemed unnecessary to pursue the discussion further.

The order is affirmed.

9 Cal. App. 327

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(9 Cal. A. 327)

BUTLER v. AGNEW et al. (Civ. 420.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California, Nov. 12 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 391*)—TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS.

Where the legality of a contract is involved in the judgment, a finding that a certain stipulation was a part of the contract is not immaterial in passing on its validity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 914; Dec. Dig. § 391.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 394*)—TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS.

The statutory requirement that findings of fact and conclusions of law shall be separately stated is merely directory, and therefore, if correct findings or conclusions of law and fact be made, they may be considered in their true character wherever set out.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 924-926; Dec. Dig. § 394.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 931*) — PRESUMPTION—FINDINGS BY COURT.

Conclusions frequently partake of the nature of both law and fact, and, if there be doubt as to which class a finding belongs, it should be resolved in favor of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3769; Dec. Dig. § 931.*]

4. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—ILLEGAL CONTRACT AS BASIS OF ACTION.

A contract against public policy, good morals, or the express mandate of the law cannot be made the basis of any action, legal or equitable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-700; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

5. BROKERS (§ 19*)—REAL ESTATE AGENT—RELATION TO PRINCIPAL.

The relations between an agent for the sale of land and his principal are of a fiduciary nature, and the agent's acts in the course of his employment are governed by the same rules as those of a trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Dec. Dig. § 19.*]

6. BROKERS (§ 31*)—REAL ESTATE AGENT—SALE TO HIMSELF—VALIDITY.

A purchase by a real estate agent of the property in his hands for sale, without the knowledge of his principal, is sufficient to avoid the transaction, no matter if there was no actual fraud, or no injury to the principal resulted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

7. BROKERS (§ 31*)—REAL ESTATE AGENT—CONTRACTS FOR INTEREST IN LAND SOLD—VALIDITY.

Where an agent for the sale of land agrees with another that the latter shall purchase it for their joint benefit and conceals such sale from his principal, the contract by the purchaser to account to the agent for the profits is violative of law, contrary to public policy, and unlawful, under Civ. Code, § 1667, declaring not lawful that which is contrary to law, public policy, or good morals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 24; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

8. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—INVALID CONTRACT AS BASIS OF ACTION.

The rule that a contract against public policy, good morals, or express mandate of law cannot be sued on, is based on sound policy, and has no consideration for the party against whom relief is sought, and takes no note of the benefit to him by the refusal to grant relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-700; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

9. CONTRACTS (§ 138*)—ILLEGAL TRANSACTION—DEMAND CONNECTED THEREWITH—ENFORCEMENT.

The test whether a demand connected with an illegal transaction may be enforced at law is: Does plaintiff require the aid of the illegal transaction to establish his case? And, if he cannot prove his case without showing that he has broken the law, the court will not assist him, whatever the justice of his claim against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 681-700; Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

10. CONTRACTS (§ 137*)—SALE BY REAL ESTATE AGENT—SEVERABLE CONTRACT.

Where a real estate agent sells land under an agreement with the purchaser to hold and sell the land for their joint benefit, the agent's right to a division of the profits can be established only by introducing evidence of the entire contract of sale, and hence the transaction is not severable so as to permit him to recover thereon against the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 701-712; Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by A. C. Butler against Mary C. and Elias N. Agnew. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. P. Adams and Chas. S. McKelvey, for appellant. D. M. Hammack and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. This is an appeal from a judgment. The action is for an accounting, and plaintiff urges a reversal of the judgment in favor of the defendant because it is not supported by the findings. He also contends that by the elimination from the findings of a probative fact which he claims does not aid in sustaining the judgment, and certain conclusions of law which improperly and erroneously appear in the findings of fact, this court would not only be justified in reversing the judgment entered, but warranted in directing a judgment on the findings in favor of plaintiff.

The trial court found: That plaintiff was the agent of the trustees of the Doran estate for the sale of a lot of land in the city of Los Angeles and was employed by them to procure a purchaser for the said lot of land in consideration of a commission to be paid to him. That while plaintiff was employed and acting as such agent, he induced and procured defendant to buy said property. That defendant purchased the same, paid the consideration for, and received the conveyance thereof in her own name for the benefit of herself and the plaintiff (and not solely for her own use), pursuant to an agreement in writing, dated December 23, 1903, which was in the words and figures following: "This agreement made and entered into between A. C. Butler and Mary C. Agnew both of the city of Los Angeles, state of California: Whereby the said Butler and Agnew buy jointly the Doran property 55x135 feet with improvements at the southwest corner of Olive street and Olive court, Los Angeles, California. The property to be first put in the name of Mary C. Agnew, who when the property is acquired from the Doran estate, said Mary C. Agnew is to deed to A. C. Butler a half interest in said property to be acquired by loans and sold within a year. Said purchasers Agnew and Butler to be jointly liable for debts of said property and share equally in profits from same." The court also found the following writing on the back of the contract to be a part thereof: "Concerning the within described property, whatever commission is paid me by the Doran estate I will divide equally with Mary C. Agnew. [Signed] A. C. Butler." That the defendant Mary C. Agnew raised money on her own credit and by mortgage on the Doran property in her own name to pay the purchase price to the trustees of the Doran estate. The interest of the plaintiff in the purchase was concealed from the said trustees, and they were ignorant of the making of the contract here sued on, and upon the consummation of the sale they paid to plaintiff the sum of $300, being full commission on the price received from Mrs. Agnew. Of this commission no part was ever paid or tendered by plaintiff to defendant Agnew, or to any one else on her behalf. The said Mary C. Agnew at once entered into the possession of the property and collected the rents, issues, and profits thereof from the time of the purchase until August 14, 1904, when she exchanged it for an orange orchard in the city of Riverside, known as the "Ray ranch." This ranch she subsequently disposed of and converted the proceeds thereof to her own use. Both the exchange of the Doran lot and the sale of the Ray ranch were made without plaintiff's consent.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

The probative fact sought to be eliminated from the findings is the promise of plaintiff to pay to defendant one-half of his commissions earned by the sale of the property, which was indorsed on the contract. It is admitted by appellant that this would be a proper finding if it were not that the judgment is predicated entirely upon the invalidity of the contract, and therefore, he contends, every other element of the case must be excluded from the findings. We are not prepared to say that this finding does not aid the court in arriving at the conclusion that the contract is against law, but there is another reason why the matter said to be merely probative is properly in the findings. The court finds that it was part of the contract, and, it being admitted that the question of the legality of the contract is involved in the judgment, it is certainly proper to find what constitutes the contract in order to pass upon its validity.

The requirement of the statute that findings of fact and conclusions of law shall be separately stated is merely directory. Spencer v. Duncan, 107 Cal. 426, 40 Pac. 549. Therefore, if correct findings, or conclusions of law and fact, be made, they may be considered in their true character wherever set out. It is not always easy to determine upon which side of the line prescribed by section 633, Code Civ. Proc., findings made upon issues raised by the pleadings should be placed. The conclusions reached frequently partake of the nature of both law and fact, and, if there be any doubt as to which class the finding belongs, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the judgment. Paine v. San Bernardino Co., 143 Cal. 656, 77 Pac. 659. This question has arisen in connection with the finding of ownership a number of times, and it has been held that such a finding is to be regarded as one of ultimate fact, or as a conclusion of law, according to the issues tried. Gardner v. San Gabriel Bank (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 900. A finding that there was "no lien" in response to an issue in the pleadings whether or not a judgment constituted a lien was declared to be one of fact in Dam v. Zink, 112 Cal. 93, 44 Pac. 331. The same rule was also applied to a finding that plaintiff "has no prescriptive right of way," in the case of Weidenmueller v. Stearns, etc., Co., 128 Cal. 626, 61 Pac. 374, and such a finding declared to be one of fact. In none of these cases was there any independent finding of the ultimate fact which was necessarily implied by the inference under consideration. If the mixed conclusion of law and fact had not been considered as a finding of fact, the judgment would have been unsupported, and thus it became necessary to construe the finding as one of fact or the judgment would have fallen for lack of findings to sustain it.

In the case at bar facts justifying the conclusions in question were found by the court without the aid of the conclusions themselves. From this condition a different question might arise in some cases, but we do not think it necessarily does so here. The legal inferences declared, in so far as they are such, are correct conclusions of law based upon sufficient findings of fact. Conceding them to be purely conclusions of law, they would, at most, only have to be transferred to that portion of the findings which are denominated the "conclusions of law." Those to which the rule, applicable in cases of doubt, should be applied, if there be any such, are entitled to stand as findings of fact. We think therefore that in the consideration of the question whether or not the findings sustain the judgment, and of the right of plaintiff to a judgment on the findings, the so-called conclusions of law may be deemed part of the case.

The rule that a contract which is against public policy, good morals, or the express mandate of the law cannot be made the basis of any action, legal or equitable, has been declared so often as not to need repetition or citation of authority. This is not questioned by appellant, and it also appears to be conceded that the relations between an agent for the sale of land and his principal are of a fiduciary nature, and that the acts of such agent in the course of his employment are governed by the same rules as those of a trustee; but appellant contends that the contract here is legal on its face, and that sufficient facts outside of the contract have not been alleged or found to show that the contract is illegal or contrary to public policy. He also claims that the contract is severable, and, while its validity in part may be questioned, its valid portion may be enforced, and he is entitled to recover under its provisions. The rule to be applied in such a case is based upon sound public policy, and has no consideration for the party against whom the relief is sought, and takes no note of the fact that he will be benefited by the refusal of the court to grant the relief. It is for the sake of the law itself that the machinery of the courts is not permitted to be used for the enforcement of such contracts, and the parties are left precisely where the breach of their illegal contract, or of either of them, would justify the court in retaining jurisdiction of such an action. Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 164, 88 Pac. 708, 710, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164. It matters not that there is no actual fraud in the transaction, or that no injury resulted to the principal. The rule is intended to prevent the possibility of wrong, and, assuming that plaintiff and Mrs. Agnew paid full value for the property, this is not a defense. The purchase by the agent, without the knowledge of the principal, is sufficient to avoid the transaction. Burke v. Bours, 92 Cal. 115, 28 Pac. 57. The agency of the plaintiff, his concealment of the sale from his principal, the sale by plaintiff, as agent, to himself—that is, to defendant for his benefit—are all clearly alleged and found. This shows the contract sought to be enforced to be violative of law, contrary to public policy, and unlawful, under section 1667 of the Civil Code.

The test whether a demand which is connected with an illegal transaction may be enforced at law is: Does the plaintiff require the aid of the illegal transaction to establish his case? If the plaintiff cannot prove his case without showing that he has broken the law, the court will not assist him, whatever the justice of his claim against the defendant. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 127, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31. The right of plaintiff to a division of the profits and proceeds, either of the Doran lot or the Ray ranch, can be established only by the introduction in evidence of the entire contract. The whole texture of it is so interwoven, each part with the other, that it is inseparable. To hold the transaction severable, as contended for by the appellant, would be to separate the shadow from the substance and apply the rule to the shadow, while the violator enjoyed the benefit of the substance of his illegal contract. This is not equity. The judgment is abundantly sustained by the findings.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

9 Cal. App. 333

In re HATCH. (Civ. 616.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 13, 1908.)

1. COURTS (§ 1*)—"JURISDICTION."

Jurisdiction is the power to hear, determine, and pronounce judgment on the issues before the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3876-3885; vol. 8, pp. 7697, 7698.]

2. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—GROUNDS—EXCESS OF JURISDICTION.

The superior court, being a court of record of superior jurisdiction, has the power in a proper case to hear and determine the question of whether the grand jury returning an indictment was a legally constituted body, and, where the superior court determined that a grand jury composed of men drawn by the clerk from the grand jury box from a list selected and ordered by the court, and summoned, impaneled, sworn, and charged with the duties of a grand jury by and under the direction of the court vested with the power to impanel a grand jury, was a valid grand jury, and that an indictment found by it was valid, the court determined a matter within its jurisdiction, and it might continue its jurisdiction over the indictment and accused, though it erred in its decision, and prohibition will not lie to restrain it, the error being reviewable on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. § 5; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 10*)—VALIDITY—AUTHORITY TO FIND.

An indictment returned by a body of men who without any sanction of law assumed to act as a grand jury is void, and does not vest jurisdiction in the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

In the matter of the application of Jackson Hatch for a writ of prohibition directed to the superior court of Santa Clara County and to one of the judges thereof to stay the trial of petitioner under an indictment. Writ denied.

Walter H. Linforth, for petitioner.

COOPER, P. J. Petitioner asks for a writ of prohibition, directed to the superior court of Santa Clara county, and to Hon. J. R. Welch, one of the judges thereof, to stay the proceedings and the trial of the petitioner upon an indictment charging him with the crime of embezzlement, committed in the manner and at the time and place stated in the said indictment.

The writ of prohibition will be issued only in cases where the court is exceeding or is about to exceed its jurisdiction, and there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Code Civ. Proc.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes §§ 1102, 1103; Cross v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. App. 342, 83 Pac. 815. Jurisdiction is the power to hear, determine, and pronounce judgment upon the issue before the court. It is not claimed that the court is not the proper court in which the offense should be tried nor is it denied that the court has the power to try the defendant for the crime of embezzlement as charged in the indictment. The petition alleges and states that after the court had made an order on the 31st day of January, 1908, designating the number of grand jurors for the ensuing year, the order was not made selecting and listing the grand jurors immediately, nor until the 29th day of February, 1908; that the order for drawing the grand jury did not designate the time at which the drawing would take place; that the jury was drawn under and by the method provided for drawing trial jurors, and not in the manner provided for drawing grand jurors; that the list was served by one Bray, who was not a deputy sheriff, because, it is said, Langford was not the sheriff of Santa Clara county, and that Bray was acting as deputy of Langford; that three jurors were improperly excused from the grand jury room; and that the district attorney was guilty of improper conduct in expressing to the grand jury his opinion as to the guilt of petitioner.

We are asked in this proceeding to investigate and pass upon the question as to whether or not the body of men who found the indictment constituted a valid, constitutional grand jury. It is sufficient to say that such body of men had been drawn by the clerk from the grand jury box from the list selected and ordered by the court, and that after they were drawn they were summoned, impaneled, sworn, and charged with the duties of a grand jury by and under the direction of the court vested with the power to impanel such grand jury. That court was and is a court of record of superior jurisdiction. It is its peculiar function to pass upon all questions that may be legally brought before it as to the regularity or validity of the grand jury that found the indictment in this case. It has the power in a proper case to hear and determine the question as to whether or not the grand jury is a legally constituted body. It has heard the question in this case by a motion to dismiss the indictment, and, having jurisdiction to hear such question, it had jurisdiction to determine it either way; and it cannot be said that, because the court determined that it was a valid grand jury, it is now proceeding in excess of its jurisdiction. If the court in such determination committed error, that is a matter that can be corrected on appeal; but the jurisdiction of the court continues. It continues for the purpose of deciding all questions, whether it decides them right or wrong. The questions sought to be raised and determined here relate to the method of procedure in impaneling the grand jury. We are asked to consider the sections of the Code, and the methods adopted by the court, and determine whether or not the court committed error in the method of impaneling the said grand jury. We are also asked in this proceeding to collaterally determine the question as to whether or not the sheriff, who was recognized as such by the superior court of the county of Santa Clara, and to whom the list of jurors was directed, was the legal sheriff of said county.

It appears plain from the above statement that, if the grand jury was not regularly impaneled and selected, still it would not be an invalid body so as to make an indictment found by it void. Of course, if a body of men, without the sanction of law—such as the members of a baseball team, the directors of a corporation, or any other body of men without the pretense of legal authority—should assume to act as grand jurors, and return an indictment, and the superior court should proceed to the trial of defendant under such indictment, then the question would be quite different. The indictment in such case would be held to be waste paper, and not to vest the court with jurisdiction.

In Levy v. Wilson, 69 Cal. 105, 10 Pac. 272, a writ of prohibition was asked for on the ground that the grand jury was not a legal grand jury because formed partly from a special venire and not from the names in the grand jury box. The court held that the trial court did not follow the correct practice in filling the panel, but denied the writ, and in the opinion said: "There was no excess of jurisdiction in the order made for the special venire. * * * As they were qualified to sit as grand jurors, and were recognized by the court and sworn as a grand jury, the indictment found by it against the petitioner is a good indictment."

In re Gannon, 69 Cal. 541, 11 Pac. 240, the invalidity of the grand jury was sought to be invoked in a contempt proceeding to punish a person for refusing to testify before it. It was claimed that the term of the grand jury had expired by law, and that such grand jury was continuing to act when, under the statute, it had ceased to exist. The court said that, if it were to be so assumed, such fact would not "affect its authority to act. As an organized grand jury it would be competent to act under color of authority. Having been appointed to office and having taken the oath of office, the individual members are officers of the court, not only de jure, but de facto, and their acts are valid so far as public rights are concerned, although the title under which they perform those acts may be questionable. It is therefore sufficient to maintain the authority of a grand jury that it has acted under color of lawful authority. An indictment found by a de facto grand jury is as regular as one found by a de jure grand jury."

This case was followed and approved in People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 Pac. 617, in which case the court said: "The fact that the grand jury was organized in November, 1893, and found the indictment against the defendant in January, 1904, does not render it invalid. * * * The action of the grand jury may be considered valid until discharged by the court or by operation of law; and it was said the expiration of a year did not effect such discharge by operation of law."

The subject is very fully and ably discussed in People v. Petrea, 92 N. Y. 128; and it was there held that an indictment found by a jury of good and lawful men, selected and drawn under color of law, and recognized by the court, and sworn as a grand jury, is a good indictment within the seise of the Constitution, although the law under which the selection was made is void. The court there said: "The grand jury, although not selected in pursuance of a valid law, were selected under color of law and semblance of legal authority. The defendant in fact enjoyed all the protection which he would have had if the jurors had been selected and drawn pursuant to the general statute. Nothing could be more unsubstantial that the alleged right asserted by the defendant under the circumstances of the case. He was entitled to have an indictment found by a grand jury before being put upon his trial. An indictment was found by a body summoned and sworn as a grand jury, before a competent court, composed of good and lawful men. This we think filled the constitutional guaranty. The jury which found the indictment was a de facto jury, selected and organized under the forms of law. The defect in its constitution, owing to the invalidity of the law of 1881, affected no substantial right of the defendant."

In Eastham v. Holt, 43 W. Va. 599, 27 S. E. 883, 31 S. E. 259, it was held that prohibition would not lie when the grand jury was impaneled by a court having jurisdiction, although irregularities existed as to the impanelment of such jury. See further, Thompson & Merriman on Juries, § 140; 1 Wharton's Crim. Law, § 472; U. S. v. Ambrose (C. C.) 3 Fed. 287; People v. District Court, 29 Colo. 87, 66 Pac. 1068.

Petitioner relies upon Bruner v. Superior Court, 92 Cal. 239, 28 Pac. 341. That case appears to have been based upon the fact that the court below had no power to appoint the elisor who summoned the jury. The opinion was by a divided court, three justices, including the chief justice, dissenting. The case does not appear to have been followed in any other case to which our attention has been called; and the later case of People v. Leonard, supra, was signed by the justice who wrote the prevailing opinion in the Bruner Case.

Counsel also relies upon Terrill v. Superior Court, 127 Cal. xviii, 60 Pac. 38. In that case a demurrer had been sustained to an indictment found by a grand jury, and the court made an order resubmitting the matter to the same grand jury which had found the indictment to which the demurrer had been sustained. The case was based upon section 1008, Pen. Code, which provides that if a demurrer is allowed it is a bar to another prosecution, unless the court "directs the case to be submitted to another grand jury, or directs a new information to be filed." The matter was not resubmitted to another grand jury, and under the plain provisions of the section the learned judge who wrote the opinion held that the order sustaining the demurrer was a bar to another prosecution by the same grand jury. It is plainly seen by an examination of the case that the judge who wrote the opinion entertained the same views as we have expressed, because it is said in the opinion: "This is not a case where a grand jury, irregularly impaneled, acting under the semblance of right and lawful authority, but in the procedure affording every advantage to the accused he would have enjoyed had the proceeding been regular, has presented an accusation to a court having jurisdiction to try him (People v. Petrea, 92 N. Y. 128); nor is it an irregular assemblage of men legally qualified to act, and who do act, under the control of the proper court. Here the grand jury had no authority to act at all in the matter. The jurors were not qualified to act, and that fact was a matter of record." The decision is placed upon the correct principle that the body of men that found the indictment, under the provisions of the statute, had no power to act. That is not the case at bar.

We therefore conclude that the court is not exceeding its jurisdiction, and the writ is denied.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 417

BRALY v. FRESNO CITY RY. CO.

(Civ. 514.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Nov. 25, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Jan. 21, 1909.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 381*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—EVIDENCE—ASSAULT BY CONDUCTOR.

In an action against a street car company for an assault committed on plaintiff, who had refused to pay fare, evidence held to sustain a verdict for plaintiff, on the theory that he fell or was pushed from the car while in motion as the result of a difficulty with the conductor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1449; Dec. Dig. § 381.*]

2. CARRIERS (§ 365*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—USE OF FORCE.

A person boarding a train or street car must pay the required fare or suffer ejection by the conductor, by the use of such force only as is reasonably necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1451; Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 365*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—USE OF FORCE—COLLECTION OF FARE.

Where plaintiff boarded a street car and refused to pay fare, the conductor had no authority to collect the fare by force or other unlawful means, nor to eject plaintiff by using more force than was reasonably necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1450, 1451; Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 365*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—ASSAULT BY CONDUCTOR—RESISTANCE.

Where plaintiff, after refusing to pay fare on a street car, was assaulted by the conductor, he was justified in defending himself against such assault.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1452; Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

5. CARRIERS (§ 347*)—INJURIES TO PASSENGERS—ASSAULT BY CONDUCTOR—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a street railway company for an assault committed on plaintiff by the conductor of a car on which plaintiff was riding, evidence held to require submission of plaintiff's contributory negligence to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1402; Dec. Dig. § 347.*]

6. NEGLIGENCE (§ 122*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proving contributory negligence rests on the defendant, unless the undisputed facts shown by plaintiff's own evidence clearly shows that plaintiff has not exercised due care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 221, 229, 230; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

7. CARRIERS (§ 338*)—ASSAULT BY CONDUCTOR—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

That plaintiff did not exercise the best judgment in resisting an assault by the conductor of a street car on which plaintiff was riding did not, of itself, constitute contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1352; Dec. Dig. § 338.*]

8. TRIAL (§ 260*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS.

It is not error to refuse requests to charge covered by instructions given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 651; Dec. Dig. § 260.*]

9. CARRIERS (§ 384*)—EJECTION OF PASSENGER—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence did not show that defendant's street car conductor attempted to eject or remove plaintiff from the car when he assaulted plaintiff, but, on the contrary, that the conductor during the altercation was attempting to restrain plaintiff from leaving or stepping from the car, and no signal or proper steps had been taken by the conductor to stop the car when plaintiff fell or was thrown therefrom, the court properly refused to charge that a passenger who fails to ask for or obtain any written transfer, or other evidence of his right to ride in a street car, which he enters after leaving one in which he has paid fare, may be lawfully ejected, if he refuses to pay fare therein; the conductor not being obliged to take the passenger's statement as evidence of his right to ride.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1498; Dec. Dig. § 384.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 234*)—INSTRUCTIONS—STATEMENT OF EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff testified that, before he boarded a street car from which he transferred to that on which he was assaulted by the conductor, he asked the motorman if the car was a

"Blackstone avenue car," which cars traversed S. street without change, and was answered in the affirmative, an instruction that, if plaintiff, before taking the car, inquired of one of defendant's agents if the original car would take him along S. street, and was informed that it would, and in reliance thereon plaintiff took the car as a passenger of defendant, intending to stop on S. street at a point near his then residence, etc., was not objectionable because it did not correctly quote plaintiff's testimony as to his question to the motorman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 536; Dec. Dig. § 234.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by J. M. Braly against the Fresno City Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Everts & Ewing, Frank H. Short, and F. E. Cook, for appellant. L. L. Cory and M. K. Harris, for respondent.

HART, J. Action for personal injuries. The cause was tried by jury, and verdict for $5,000 returned in favor of the plaintiff. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the plaintiff for the damages so assessed by the jury. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying defendant a new trial.

The injuries complained of, and for which damages were awarded, were received by the plaintiff as the result of a fall from appellant's car in the city of Fresno, said fall having been caused, it is alleged, through the culpable negligence of the defendant, committed through its agent. The appellant owns and operates a street railway system in the city of Fresno. One of its lines runs from the passenger depot of the Southern Pacific Company, in said city, over and along J street to the conjunction of J and Stanislaus streets. At this point the track divides into two branches, one branch traversing north along J street and the other east along Stanislaus street. Certain of the cars—called the "North Park cars"—leaving the depot run out J street, and others go out as far as the intersection of J and Stanislaus streets, thence east out the latter street. The last-mentioned are called and known as the "Blackstone avenue cars." It is thus to be observed that a resident of Stanislaus street, by taking a Blackstone avenue car at the depot, would be carried out Stanislaus street without changing cars; but if such resident should take a North Park car, it would be necessary for him to transfer to the Blackstone car at the junction of J and Stanislaus streets, and receive a ticket or transfer for that purpose from the car upon which he started from the depot.

The facts, as we glean them from the testimony of the plaintiff, show that at about 11 o'clock on the night of July 5, 1904, said plaintiff, then about 80 years of age, returning home from San Francisco, reached the city of Fresno by way of the Southern Pacific railroad, on what is known as the "Owl" train. At that time he resided on Stanislaus street in said city of Fresno. On alighting from the train he saw one of the cars of the defendant standing near the depot, and, accosting the motorman, inquired whether said car was a Blackstone avenue car, to which question the motorman made an affirmative answer, and he thereupon took a seat on said car. The plaintiff, so he testified, was under the belief, from what the motorman had said, that he would not be compelled to change cars in order to reach his home, and remained under that impression until said car had reached the intersection of J and Stanislaus streets, when, from the direction in which the car was proceeding, he learned for the first time that he was on a North Park car, and that it would therefore be necessary for him to transfer to another or the Blackstone car. Plaintiff testified that, immediately upon learning that he must change to the Blackstone car, he looked for the conductor for the purpose of securing a "transfer," but could not see him, and, the Blackstone car being about ready to start, he at once boarded it, taking an outside front seat on the right-hand side near the motorman. He further declared that, as soon as he took his seat on the Stanislaus car, he informed the motorman of the fact that he had come up from the Southern Pacific depot on the North Park car, and had failed to secure a transfer because he was unable to find the conductor on that car, and requested the motorman to let him off at L street. The motorman replied that he would have to see the conductor "about that." What occurred thereafter may best be told by the plaintiff himself, from whose testimony we, therefore, quote: "The car started immediately after I got on it, and it was soon after I spoke to the motorman, and he told me to see the conductor. I kept my eye back there to see when the conductor would come up. The conductor at the time was on the rear part of the car. He had not come up in front, but about the time we crossed K street, that was a block from the junction where we started, the conductor came out and asked me for my fare, and then I told him that I had come up on the car from the depot and had missed getting a transfer when I got off. I told him I had looked about when I got off, and didn't see the conductor on the car that I came up on. I told him up to that time I supposed I was on the Blackstone car, and would not have to have a transfer, but when I found I needed a transfer, I couldn't see the conductor any more to get one, and so I got on the car without a transfer. When I told him I wanted to get off at L street, to let me off at L street, he said I would have to pay another nickel. He said it in a very rough, brusque, abrupt sort of manner, like he was trying to make himself as disagreeable as possible. It riled me a little, and I told him I would not. L street was the next street. Along when we were about halfway from K to L, and I told him I would not pay another nickel, he seized my arm, or my wrist. I was looking towards the rear of the car where he was, and he grabbed me by this arm in a very rough sort of way. My arm was out towards where he was, and he took a firm, hard hold of my wrist, and I told him to let go, and made an effort to pull my hand away from him, and I found it was very difficult to do that. In fact, I didn't succeed in doing it, he held on to it hard and fast. After making one vigorous effort to get my hand away, I raised up on my feet and turned my face over towards him, my back to the outside of the car. I had a small hand bag in my other hand, just a small traveling bag, and then the last I remember I was trying to wrench my hand away from him, and don't know anything more until I tried to get off the ground. When I came to myself on the ground I attempted to get up on my feet. * * * Up to that time the car hadn't stopped at all. It was going at full speed, so it seemed to me, and up to that time I hadn't made any effort to get off at all. I had no idea of making an effort to get off until the car stopped anyway. I had no overcoat, just that little satchel. When the conductor demanded a nickel of me, I told him to let me off at L street, and he was then within half a block of L street. Q. Now about what part of the street did you land, Mr. Braly? A. My satchel and hat were lying pretty near to the east side of L street, it was within a very short distance of the east side of L street. When I came to myself, the best I remember I was three or four steps farther towards the middle of the street, towards the west side of the street, but I had been on my feet. It seemed to me I had struggled to my feet after the difficulty, and had made three or four steps towards the middle of the street. At least that is what I thought when I got up. I couldn't remember distinctly, but that is what it seemed to me I had been doing. Anyway I know I was some three or four steps from where my hat and satchel were. Up to that time there had been no signal given to the motorman to stop the car at L street; nothing that I know of at all. I was right there at the motorman, and the car seemed to me to be keeping right up at full speed, so long as I remembered."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes 99 P.—26

On cross-examination the plaintiff further testified: "I have been noticeably and considerably hard of hearing for a great many years, 20 or more, I guess. * * * For 20 years past I have had to be spoken to very much as you are speaking to me now, in a distinct tone of voice. It is not so much the loudness of a man's voice as the distinctness and the carrying tone of his voice.

I was trying all the time to wrench my hand away from the conductor. I know there was just that much of a scuffle. I know I tried repeatedly to get my hand loose from him, four or five times that I tried to wrench my hand away from him. He seemed to be trying to detain me. I couldn't see anything else he was trying to hold me for except to collect that nickel. At any rate, I didn't want him holding me. He had no right to hold my arm, and I didn't argue with him about letting go, but I wanted him to let my arm go. * * * I wasn't making an effort to get off, was not making any preparations to get off. I had told the motorman to stop, and I was all ready to get off if he stopped the car. * * * The car was going full speed, and I didn't propose to get off while it was going that way; didn't expect to; didn't want to. I was ready to get off if he had let my arm alone. That was the only preparation I had to make to get off. * * * After he got hold of my arm I tried to wrench it away from him, and he didn't let go. He was a little stronger than I was. Then I raised from my seat and got to wrenching my arm away from him, but he held on there very tight, and the next thing I knew after that I was getting up off the street, or was trying to. How I went off the car I can't tell you, but it was in the struggle with him. He had a firm, hard grip on my arm. * * * I was quite close to the conductor during the time I had that conversation with him, and I think I heard everything he said to me. * * * In trying to wrench myself loose from him I went overboard, and just exactly how I don't know."

The evidence introduced on behalf of plaintiff disclosing the important circumstances under which he sustained the injuries from which this action has arisen consists entirely of the testimony of the respondent himself, and the foregoing represents a fair résumé of the facts as they were detailed at the trial by him.

As to the nature and extent of the injuries received by the plaintiff, Dr. Hayden, who was immediately called in, testified: "I found him at his residence in bed. He had quite an abrasion, contusion on the left side of the forehead, and on examination I found the left shoulder broken, and he was considerably, somewhat dazed, if I remember right, and suffering a great deal of pain with his broken shoulder." After describing, in technical terms, the character of the injury to the shoulder, the doctor resumed: "I have examined Mr. Braly since, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the injuries, and their permanency. There never will be an entire recovery in my judgment, because with that kind of injury it is almost impossible to get a complete apposition of the parts and retain them there. * * * When it comes to raising the arm, like this, by the use of the large deltoid, this large muscular plane that comes over the joint has shrunk very largely, and he is unable to raise his arm this way, but he can swing the arm back and forth this way. There is a permanent injury to that arm and its use in some of its motions, and he will never obtain the full and entire use of his arm again, in my judgment. * * * During the time I was attending him he suffered considerably, and his injuries were very painful."

Mrs. Braly, wife of the plaintiff, testified that he suffered so much pain from his injured shoulder for about a year that he was unable to obtain during that time, "a comfortable night's sleep."

The testimony offered by the defense differs materially from that given by the plaintiff concerning the circumstances leading to the injuries sustained by the latter. The conductor and the motorman testified that the plaintiff, after having been asked for his fare, refused to pay the same, and shortly thereafter arose from his seat, and placed one foot on one of the steps of the car while it was in motion as if he intended stepping off. The conductor said that he admonished the plaintiff not to undertake to get off the car until it was stopped, and, being apprehensive that plaintiff would not heed the warning thus given, or that he might fall from the car, he placed his hand on plaintiff's arm and clutched the clothing, so as to prevent him from either falling or trying to step off. The conductor denied that he caught hold of plaintiff's wrist in a violent manner, or at all, or that he placed his hand upon him until, as before stated, plaintiff placed his foot on the step. In fact the testimony of the conductor was, in substance, that no violent scuffle between them occurred, and that plaintiff's precipitation to the ground was due to his own carelessness. The motorman testified on cross-examination that the car was going at the usual speed until he reached L street, when, thinking plaintiff intended trying to get off, he put on the brakes so as to "slow down"; but that the conductor had given him no signal to stop. He further testified that he heard the conductor ask Braly, "Don't you think you ought to pay your fare?" that thereupon the plaintiff arose from his seat, at the same time saying that the conductor was trying to rob him, and that he would not be "buncoed" that way. "I did not see the conductor put his hand on Mr. Braly," continued the motorman, "until he got on the first step of the car. Then he reached out with his fingers and thumb. That did not have any effect on Mr. Braly to stop him or hold him. He went right on. In my position as motorman running that car, my face would be turned in the opposite direction from where these people were, and my duties there required my constant watching and attention. * * * Mr. Braly was about three feet behind me, and when he was talking to the conductor he had his back towards me. When he raised to get off the car, the conductor took hold of him somewhere." Other witnesses, who were passengers on the car, testified that they heard or saw no violent trouble between the conductor and plaintiff prior to the accident. Two witnesses besides the conductor and motorman testified that they heard some one say "not to get off till the car stopped." All the passengers, except one, that were called as witnesses for the defense were either on the inside of the car or on the outside seats on the rear end of the car. But the witness Loper was riding on the "left-hand front end, open part, of the car" at the time, and he testified that, "as we approached L street, and just before the car stopped, I heard some one behind me say 'Don't get off until the car stops.'" Further he testified: "Previous to or at the time I heard those words 'don't get off till the car stops' I did not hear any scuffling or particular noise, excitement of that kind."

The foregoing is, in substance, the testimony received on behalf of the defendant.

Counsel for the appellant, while recognizing the rule in this state, established by the Constitution that the appellate courts are restricted in their appellate jurisdiction to the review and consideration of questions of law alone, urge, as among other reasons, which they contend must compel a reversal of the judgment and order, that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict returned by the jury. In support of this position it is argued with much earnestness and learning, that the story as related by the plaintiff is, upon its face, intrinsically improbable, and that it is so obviously so that we are required to declare that his case, resting as it does almost entirely upon his own testimony, must fall, because it is thus clearly manifest, and therefore must be said, that the evidence, as a matter of law, is totally insufficient to justify the verdict upon which the judgment is founded. We have, in view of this argument, examined the testimony of the plaintiff in connection and comparison with the other testimony presented by the record with unusual and critical care, and are not thus led to an assent to the learned counsel's criticism thereof. Cases may arise (and no doubt have arisen) in which the testimony directed to the support of the fact in dispute may bear upon its face the indubitable earmarks of falsehood; as, for instance, the facts thus brought out might themselves, upon their face, disclose that it was physically impossible that they, as stated, could have existed or occurred at all. But this is not such a case.

The argument is that, as none of the witnesses—passengers on the car at the time—other than the plaintiff himself saw or heard the trouble between the conductor and the former as it was described by the plaintiff, and, as it appears improbable that the apparently extended colloquy which the plaintiff testified took place between himself and the conductor could have so taken place in the short distance traversed by the car, going at the usual speed, from the time the trouble began until plaintiff fell to the ground, therefore the story upon its face is so impressed with the characteristics of improbability that it is inherently unbelievable. It is, of course, impossible for this court to explain why the other passengers on the car would not have been attracted to and observed the trouble between the plaintiff and the conductor, if it was as violent and demonstrative as it was described by plaintiff to be, for he testified that the conductor roughly caught hold of his wrist, and that a struggle or scuffle, due to his efforts to extricate himself from the grasp of the conductor, ensued, and that many loud and acrimonious words passed between them during the altercation. But, as has often been declared by the appellate courts, such questions are matters which must be addressed entirely to the jury for solution—matters exclusively within the province of the triers of the facts to determine. The many tests afforded by the law which a jury may employ in determining the weight to which the testimony of witnesses may be entitled are essentially beyond the power of appellate courts to invoke. Among the most important of these tests is the manner of a witness in relating his story, for his manner may, of itself, be sufficient, in the judgment of a jury, to justify the rejection in toto of an otherwise apparently truthful narrative. Or take, for example, the case of the plaintiff here. His manner or style of testifying might have involved unnecessary prolixity or circumlocution (as is often the fact for various reasons, in witnesses unaccustomed to giving evidence in courts), so that from his testimony, as reproduced on paper, or even as given in court, it might appear that much more occurred in the way of conversation or colloquy between himself and the conductor than could possibly have taken place in the time within which the same must necessarily have occurred. We do not know, and, in the very nature of things we cannot know, the manner in which the plaintiff told his story. The jurors could of course observe his manner, and it was their duty, which presumptively they performed, to consider the same in weighing his testimony. A witness' memory may appear to the jurors, by the manner in which he testifies, to be faulty, and yet such fact would not and could not be made to appear so to a reviewing court, because his manner, when testifying, cannot be displayed by the record on appeal. These propositions are commonplaces in the law governing the determination of the weight to be given evidence in courts of justice, but their restatement here in connection with the point we are discussing is only for the purpose of again illustrating, if illustration of so obvious a proposition be necessary, how barren of just and efficacious results in the administration of justice would be the practice of appellate courts, if such practice were tolerated, of passing upon questions of fact, presented "secondhand," so to speak, or where the facts were not directly from the lips of the witnesses in their presence. The case here is one in which there arises a substantial conflict in the evidence, and, while it would appear incredible that the passengers that testified did not hear and see the altercation resulting in plaintiff's injuries as the latter described it, if it happened that way, the verdict is a finding that the jurors reconciled all discrepancies and variances and seeming improbabilities arising in the evidence, whatever they were, to their satisfaction, and to this finding this court must submit. It is a significant fact, it may be suggested in this connection, that it was nearly two years from the time the injuries were received by plaintiff to the time of the trial, and it is not at all improbable that the manner in which some of the witnesses gave their testimony convinced the jury that their recollection of the facts as they occurred was somewhat vague, dubious, and uncertain. It is only natural that disinterested witnesses would not retain in their minds for so long a period all the details of a transaction such as the one from which this action originated. In addition to the foregoing observations, involving, as perhaps they do, speculation as to how the jury could, from the evidence, have reasonably reasoned out its verdict, it is to be noticed that there are two circumstances, admitted by the defendant's main witnesses, which would appear to be corroborative to some extent of plaintiff's version of the difficulty. These are that the conductor did lay his hands on the plaintiff during the altercation, although they said not violently, and that from the beginning of the trouble to the time the plaintiff fell from the car, no signal was given the motorman by the conductor to stop the car. It is also a significant admission, in some degree corroborative of plaintiff's story, that the last named said to the conductor that he (plaintiff) did not propose to be "buncoed." The plaintiff, although a very old man, was nevertheless an active man, physically, and from the testimony appears to have been in full possession of his intellectual faculties. He was, up to the time of the accident, engaged as a representative of a banking institution, acting in the capacity of land surveyor, the duties of which were to examine and appraise the value of lands on which the bank had been requested to make loans.

The facts, as found by the jury, show that the conductor violently grasped the plaintiff by the wrist, and held fast thereto until, in some manner not made clear, the latter fell to the ground. The car was going at full speed, and the plaintiff, as he had a right under the law to do, undertook to free himself from the grip of the conductor. No signal was given by the conductor to stop the car, and in the struggle in some way not, as observed, clearly accounted for by the record, the plaintiff was thrown to the ground while the car was yet in motion. That there was no intention on the part of the conductor to stop the car is made to appear reasonably certain by the testimony of both the motorman and the conductor, for they both declared that no signal had been given to stop the car. And it may well be suggested, as a singular circumstance at least, of which the jury probably took the same view, that if, as the conductor testified, the plaintiff was in the act of stepping off the car while it was still in rapid motion, the former did not signal the motorman to stop the car. But we have already given a fair synopsis of the facts as they were proved at the trial, and found by the jury, and it is unnecessary to further recapitulate them. It is enough to say that the jury was fully warranted in concluding and finding that the difficulty on the car occurred as the plaintiff described it; that the conductor attempted, by unwarranted means and violence, to compel the plaintiff to pay his fare and that in the "scuffle" following the attack upon the plaintiff by the conductor the former by some means either fell or was thrown to the ground. It may be added that no effort was made, except, of course, such as was attempted by means of the unaccepted testimony of the conductor, motorman, and other witnesses for the defense purporting to give the circumstances of the trouble, to impeach the testimony of the plaintiff, and the jury having been persuaded, after full consideration of the whole case, of the truthfulness of his version of the transaction leading to his injury, and the facts as testified to by him having disclosed that his injury was received through the negligent act of the defendant or its agent, acting, when committing such act, within the scope of his authority as such, and through no fault of plaintiff himself, then, necessarily, no reason is made apparent by the record, so far as the evidence is concerned, upon which a disturbance by this court of the finding of the jury and, consequently, the judgment, could be justified.

Counsel for appellant have presented and reviewed many cases from this and other jurisdictions expounding the principles applicable to cases of the character of the one here. The principles thus exploited are well settled and elementary. No one has ever denied, or attempted to deny, that a person boarding a train or street car must pay the required fare, or suffer ejection therefrom; that upon a refusal to pay such fare the passenger may be removed from the train or car by the conductor, by the use of such force only as is reasonably necessary. All the cases cited by counsel go to this extent only, and, with the exception of three or four of the large number of cases thus brought to our attention, the injury alleged consisted entirely in the act of expulsion, and were not cases in which physical injuries were claimed to have been inflicted through the negligence of the defendants. But it is said that "it is held by the authorities that to make a defendant liable it is necessary that the relation of carrier and passenger exist at the time of the assault, or at the time of the commission of the acts by the defendant"—citing Reilly v. N. Y. City Ry. Co., 46 Misc. Rep. 72, 91 N. Y. Supp. 319, and Palmer v. Winston-Salem R. & E. Co., 131 N. C. 250, 42 S. E. 604. As an abstract legal proposition, no one can question the soundness of the statement thus made; but it does not apply to this case. As we understand the argument of counsel, the contention is that, as the plaintiff had refused to pay his fare, he cannot be treated in law as a passenger, and hence the relation of passenger and carrier did not exist between him and the defendant at the time the injuries were received. No case to which our attention has been directed has carried the doctrine to that extent, and we think no such case can be found. In the case of Reilly v. N. Y. City Ry. Co., supra, the passenger had voluntarily left the car at a station, after having trouble with the conductor on the car. The passenger awaited the conductor on his return trip. The conductor left his car, and stepped into the office of the company to which the car belonged, and there the passenger renewed the quarrel, and the conductor assaulted him. Obviously the company could not be held liable for the assault, because the relation of passenger and carrier had ceased, and it was so held. In Palmer v. Winston-Salem Ry. & Electric Co., supra, the passenger had reached his destination and dismounted from the car. He had engaged, while on the car, in a quarrel with the motorman, and, after depositing his bundles on the sidewalk, returned to the car, renewed the altercation with the motorman, and then turned and left the car, whereupon the motorman followed him up, and, two or three steps from the car delivered a blow on the back of plaintiff's head with the lever which was used in controlling the car, knocking him down. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover from the company for the assault, inasmuch as the passage had terminated for the passenger, and that consequently the relation of passenger and carrier between the plaintiff and the defendant had ceased.

In the case at bar, while having refused to pay his fare, the plaintiff thus became a trespasser, and was therefore subject to be removed from the car, he was, nevertheless, a passenger in so far as the nature of the treatment due him from the defendant and its agents was concerned. The conductor had a perfect right to eject him, but he had no right to assault or otherwise maltreat him merely because he was primarily in the wrong by the refusal to pay the required fare. In other words, there was no authority in the conductor to collect the fare by force or other unlawful means, nor to remove the plaintiff by means of any more force than might be reasonably necessary to accomplish that fact. In this connection, the language of the late learned Judge Sanderson, speaking for our Supreme Court, in Needham v. S. F. & S. J. R. Co., 37 Cal. 419, the action being for damages for injuries to a horse inflicted through the alleged negligence of the defendant, is pertinent; "The Golden Rule is a corner stone of the law, as well as of morals, and in the department of the former finds its expression in the maxim 'Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lædas.' No more in law than in morals can one wrong be justified or excused by another. A wrongdoer is not an outlaw, against whom every man may lift his hand. Neither his life, limbs, nor property are held at the mercy of his adversary. On the contrary, the latter is bound to conduct himself with reasonable care and prudence, notwithstanding the fault of the former; and, if by so doing he can avoid injuring the person or property of the former, he is liable if he does not, if, by reason thereof, injury ensues." The proposition will not be controverted that, if the conductor caught hold of the plaintiff in the manner described by the latter, and continued thus to hold him until the plaintiff either fell or was thrown to the ground, the act of the conductor involved an assault for which the defendant could be held liable; and if, as a result of such assault, and through no fault of his own, the plaintiff fell or was thrown to the ground from the car, while the same was in motion, receiving the injury for which he here asks damages, then the defendant is liable for damages for the injury so received. And it will not be disputed that, if the trouble originated and occurred as described by the plaintiff, the latter was justified in defending himself against the assault. We see nothing in plaintiff's testimony as it appears here from which the jury would have necessarily been justified in finding that he was guilty of contributory negligence, or, in other words, that any act of the plaintiff was the proximate cause of the injury received by him. Just how it happened that he fell from the car he did not know, and, as the jury evidently disbelieved and discarded the defendant's evidence, it must have concluded that, in his efforts to release himself from the clutch of the conductor, the plaintiff lost his balance and fell from the car—by no means an improbable theory under plaintiff's testimony. And, as we have seen, it must have been upon the testimony of the plaintiff alone that the jury founded its verdict, for the testimony offered by the defendant, if believed, would have forced a verdict for the defendant.

This is a case, therefore, where the question of contributory negligence was one peculiarly for the jury to determine. Indeed the question of contributory negligence is nearly always a matter for the jury, and the burden of proving it rests upon the defendant, unless the undisputed facts, shown by the plaintiff's own evidence clearly disclose that the complaining party has not exercised such care as men of prudence usually exercise in positions of like exposure and danger, in which case it becomes a question of law for the court. Glascocock v. C. P. R. R. Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518; Franklin v. S. C. M. R. Co., 85 Cal. 63, 24 Pac. 723; Green v. P. L. Co., 130 Cal. 435, 62 Pac. 747; Hodges v. S. P. Co., 3 Cal. App. 310, 86 Pac. 620; Dinnigan v. Peterson, 3 Cal. App. 764, 87 Pac. 218; Williams v. S. F. & N. W. R. R. Co., 6 Cal. App. 715, 93 Pac. 122; Herbert v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651; Carr v. Eell River, etc., R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 368, 33 Pac. 213, 21 L. R. A. 354. Even if it be true that it subsequently developed that plaintiff did not exercise the best judgment in the manner of resisting the assault of the conductor under the circumstances shown by the record, yet that fact of itself cannot, and does not, constitute negligence on his part. "A passenger," says the Supreme Court in Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 421, 11 Pac. 752 (59 Am. Rep. 428), "ought not to be deemed guilty of contributory negligence when he takes such risk as under the same circumstances a prudent man would take, citing Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 282; and, when the circumstances are such as would deprive a person of ordinary prudence of his self-possession (italics here ours), it is not to be expected that he will have all his mental faculties perfectly at his command." See Robinson v. W. P. R. R. Co., 48 Cal. 421, Green v. Pacific Lumber Co., 130 Cal. 435, 62 Pac. 747, and Dinnigan v. Peterson, supra. In cases where a party is suddenly put in a position of peril by the negligent act of another, "without sufficient time to consider all the circumstances, he is excusable for omitting some precautions, or making an unwise choice, under this disturbing influence, although, if his mind had been clear, he ought to have done otherwise. This is especially true if the peril is caused by the defendant's fault, and of such case it is said: 'Even if, in bewilderment, he runs directly into the very danger which he fears, he is not in fault. The confusion of mind, caused by such negligence, is part of the injury inflicted by the negligent person.'" Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 490, 66 Pac. 734, citing and quoting Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 89. The plaintiff here, as seen, was a very old man, of intelligence, occupying a responsible position, and laboring under the belief—a mistaken one, it is true—that, having paid his fare to the first conductor, he was entitled to be taken to his home without producing a transfer check by explaining to the conductor on the car to which he transferred the circumstances attending his omission to secure such check. He was, according to his story, which was accepted by the jury, pounced upon by the conductor in a violent and brutal manner, and roughly commanded to pay his fare. Is it to be wondered that in his indignation at such treatment he would become perturbed and confused? If, therefore, he acted injudiciously under the circumstances, upon whom should the responsibility of such want of discretion on his part be required to rest? The law answers that it must fall upon him by whose negligence such indiscreet conduct was caused. In dismissing this question of alleged contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff we may assume, for the purposes of the argument, that he did not exercise the best judgment in his manner of resisting the assault of the conductor under the circumstances indicated, and, so assuming, may inquire, Is there anything in the evidence produced by the plaintiff, in support of the allegations of his complaint, disclosing such negligence by him as to justify the taking of the question of contributory negligence from the jury? If there is, it has not been pointed out, nor have we been able to find it.

The appellant complains that the court erred to his prejudice in refusing to read to the jury instructions Nos. 1, 2, and 3, requested by him, and in giving instruction No. 18 at the request of plaintiff. We think the law of the case was fully and fairly stated by the court in its charge to the jury. The principle declared in the rejected instruction, numbered 1, requested by defendant, was clearly covered by and declared in instruction No. 9, given by the court on the defendant's motion. Instruction No. 2 was properly rejected. The principle enunciated therein, was covered by the given instructions, particularly by instruction No. 10. But the rejected instruction contained a statement not authorized by the evidence. There was not, as we have seen, any evidence that the "conductor in charge of the car operated by defendant on which plaintiff was riding when he was injured, signaled the motorman to stop such car."

Instruction No. 3 was also properly refused. It reads: "A passenger who fails to ask or obtain any written transfer or other evidence of his right to ride in a street car which he enters after leaving one in which he has paid fare, may be lawfully, rightfully, and properly ejected if he refuses to pay fare therein, and the conductor is not obliged to take the passenger's statement as evidence of his right to ride." This instruction contains manifestly a correct statement of the law, and the rule as thus declared was, in effect, given in certain instructions read to the jury by the court. But the instruction is not altogether pertinent to the facts as established by the evidence, and for that reason alone the court was justified in refusing to submit it to the jury. The evidence does not show that the conductor attempted to eject or remove the plaintiff from the car. To the contrary, the testimony of both the conductor and the motorman was to the effect that the former was, during the altercation, attempting to restrain the plaintiff from leaving or stepping from the car. Again, the evidence is, we may suggest at the expense of repetition, that no signal or other proper steps were taken by the conductor to stop the car so that he could "lawfully and rightfully" eject the plaintiff.

We are unable to perceive any tenable ground for the criticism to which instruction No. 18, given to the jury at the request of the plaintiff, is subjected by counsel for appellant. The instruction involves, we think, a fair statement of the theory of the plaintiff's case as developed by the proofs. But counsel particularly objects to the following portion, of said instruction: " * * * That the plaintiff * * * before taking the car, inquired of one of the agents of the defendant, to wit, the motorman of said car, if that car would take him along Stanislaus street, and was informed that it would; that in reliance upon said statement and information the plaintiff took said car as a passenger of the defendant, intending to stop at Stanislaus street at a point near his then residence." Counsel declare that there is no evidence that plaintiff inquired of the motorman of said car "if that car would take him along Stanislaus street, and was informed that it would." Strictly and literally speaking, counsel are right; but the jury could not have been misled by the instruction, in view of the evidence upon the point as to which the criticism is ventured. Plaintiff testified that he asked the motorman if "that car was a Blackstone avenue car," to which the motorman gave an affirmative reply. The evidence does show that the "Blackstone avenue car" traversed over Stanislaus street, and that said car would have taken him along that street.

We see no just reason for disturbing either the judgment or order, and they are therefore affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

[9 Cal. App. 376]

HENDRY v. IRVINE. (Civ. 533.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 23, 1908.)

1. SALES (§ 365*)—CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—FINDINGS.

A finding that a seller, contracting to construct and deliver an engine, performed his contract, is not erroneous, though he delayed the delivery thereof, where the buyer accepted it, unless the buyer was damaged by the delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 365.*]

2. SALES (§ 418*)—CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—DELAY IN PERFORMANCE—DAMAGES.

Where a seller, contracting to construct and deliver an engine for irrigating work, delayed the delivery thereof, but it appeared that the engine, which was delivered before a pump subsequently contracted for was delivered, was useless without the pump and the seller built the pump according to a model furnished by the buyer, the delay in the delivery of the engine, on which alone plaintiff relied, did not cause any damage to the buyer, especially when the pump furnished was incapable of doing the work for which it was designed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

3. SALES (§ 418*)—CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—DAMAGES.

Where the engine furnished by the seller conformed to the contract, any expenses incurred or damages suffered by the buyer in making the engine efficient were not chargeable against the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Dec. Dig. § 418.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1152*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE ON APPEAL—AFFIRMANCE—JUDGMENT.

A judgment for plaintiff was rendered, and a motion for new trial was denied in the lifetime of defendant. He took an appeal from the judgment, and, after his death, his administrator appealed from the order denying a new trial, and was substituted in the place of the judgment debtor. Held, that the court, on affirming the judgment, would not modify it so as to direct that it be paid in due course of administration, since such modification might embarrass proceedings against the sureties on the appeal bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 1152.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by A. M. Hendry against William Irvine, in which, after defendant's death, Louis A. Irvine, administrator, was substituted as defendant. From a judgment for plaintiff and from the refusal of a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George W. Towle, for appellant. Mullany, Grant & Cushing and Cushing, Grant & Cushing, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. On April 23, 1900, Charles Rapp and others, doing business under the firm name and style of Union Machine Company, entered into a contract with William Irvine, whereby they agreed to construct for him a double-cylinder gasoline engine, and two metal tanks, to be completed and delivered at San Francisco on or before June 4, 1900. According to the terms of the contract, Irvine paid $1,000 on account of the purchase price of the engine when the contract was entered into, and the balance of $550 was to be paid when the engine was set up on Irvine's premises and had been in successful uninterrupted operation for the period of 30 consecutive days thereafter, or for so much of the 30 days as Irvine should desire to operate it. The engine was delivered and set up, Irvine refused to pay the balance of the purchase price, and the claim of the Union Machine Company therefor was subsequently assigned to A. M. Hendry, who commenced this suit for its recovery. A second cause of action is set up in the complaint for goods sold and delivered and services rendered, amounting to the sum of $258.45. Defendant Irvine in his answer denied that such an engine as had been contracted for was ever furnished; and alleged that the engine delivered could not be made to run continuously or uninterruptedly for 30 days, or for any substantial length of time; that the engine and tanks were not delivered within the stipulated time; and that the pump connections referred to in the second cause of action were not furnished for him, nor on his order, but had been furnished to and for the order of a third party. As a counterclaim, Irvine alleged damages for expenses incurred on account of alleged defects in the construction of the engine, and he also alleged that, by reason of the delay in the delivery of the engine, he was unable to irrigate his alfalfa crops, which died for want of water. The action was tried without a jury, and judgment went in favor of plaintiff. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. Thereafter William Irvine died, and Louis A. Irvine, the administrator of his estate, was substituted as defendant herein. An appeal was taken by William Irvine from the judgment, and by Louis A. Irvine, his administrator, from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

We do not feel required to restate the evidence, or even to summarize the many pages of testimony appearing in the transcript. We shall content ourselves with saying that, while the evidence is conflicting, it is sufficient to support the findings of the trial court. There is ample evidence in the record to show that the engine was capable of doing exactly the character of work, and was of the design and horse power, called for by the contract, and we therefore conclude that there is no merit in the contention of the appellant that the Union Machine Company failed to fulfill its contract as to the engine.

There is also evidence to support the finding of the court of due performance by the Union Machine Company of the conditions of its contract. Appellant contends that, as the engine was not delivered until 30 days after the time specified in the contract, this finding is error. The delay in the delivery of the engine (it having been accepted by Irvine) did not make the finding erroneous, unless Irvine was damaged by the delay. Here a slight digression is necessary. William Irvine desired to purchase a pump which had been invented by one Morton, who agreed with Irvine that the latter could arrange with some machinist to construct it for him without paying Morton any royalty therefor. An oral agreement was made by Irvine and the Union Machine Company by the terms of which the machine company was to build the pump according to the Morton design. The appellant did not plead damages caused by any delay in furnishing the pump. The only damage pleaded is on account of the alleged defects in the engine. As the engine was useless for irrigating purposes without the pump, and as the engine (as shown by the evidence) was delivered before the pump, the delay in furnishing the engine was immaterial, and that delay did not cause the loss complained of. But, in any event, as the pump—which was built according to a model furnished by appellant, and for the success of which the machine company was not responsible—was, when installed, incapable of doing the work for which it was designed, it was the pump, and not the alleged delay in furnishing the engine, which caused the alleged damage.

Appellant insists that the court erred in refusing to allow him to show the expenses to which he was put in his efforts to operate the engine on crude oil, also the expenses incurred by him in making the engine efficient, etc. The court having found, upon sufficient evidence, that the engine conformed to the contract, any expenses incurred, or damages suffered by appellant, concerning the engine, would not be a charge against the respondent. The court committed no error in excluding the offered testimony.

It is needless to pursue the discussion further. All the matters urged by appellant for a reversal of the judgment and order depend upon the proposition advanced by him that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings; but a careful examination of the record shows, as we have already said, that the findings are amply supported by the evidence.

This brings us to the last point in the case. The judgment was against William Irvine in his lifetime. Since then, and since the entry of the order denying him a new trial, he died, and his administrator has been substituted in his place. Appellant suggests that, if the judgment be affirmed, it should be changed so as to direct that it be paid "in due course of administration." The judgment, when affirmed, will be paid, as far as the estate is concerned, in due course of administration, but as the judgment when affirmed will become final as of the date of entry, and as the suggested change if made might embarrass the respondent in proceeding against the sureties on the appeal bond, it would be improper for this court to make the modification suggested.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J; HALL, J.

IRVINE v. RAPP et al. (Civ. 462.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Nov. 23, 1908.)

ACTION (§ 53*)—SPLITTING CAUSE OF ACTION.
Where a buyer, when sued for the price due by an assignee of the seller, cannot set up as a counterclaim his claim for damages for breach of contract of sale because his claim is in excess of the amount claimed by the assignee and the seller is not a party to the suit, he may bring an independent action against the seller for such damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Louis A. Irvine, administrator of the estate of William Irvine, deceased, substituted as plaintiff in place of William Irvine, against Charles Rapp and others. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George W. Towle, for appellant. Mullany, Grant & Cushing and Cushing, Grant & Cushing, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The plaintiff in this case is the defendant in the action entitled A. M. Hendry v. Louis A. Irvine, etc. (No. 533, this day decided) 99 Pac. 408, and is brought to recover the same claim which in said action numbered 533 had been set up by said Irvine as a counterclaim—the bringing of a separate action being made necessary by the fact that the claim for damages of William Irvine (defendant's intestate in said action numbered 533) was in excess of the amount claimed by plaintiff therein (who was the assignee of the Union Machine Company) and by the fact that the machine company was not a party to that suit. The two cases were tried together upon the same evidence, and in this case the court rendered judgment against plaintiff and in favor of defendants for costs. Plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. The points urged for a reversal of the order are the same as those considered in said case numbered 533; and for the reasons there given we think the action of the court in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was correct.

The order is therefore affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 382

TAYLOR v. MANSON et al. (Civ. 564.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Nov. 24, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, Jan. 22, 1909.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—INJURIES FROM DEFECTIVE STREET—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action against the board of public works of a city for injuries from a defective sidewalk, plaintiff must prove that his injuries were proximately caused by a dangerous defect in the sidewalk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 757*)—TORTS—DEFECTS IN STREETS—LIABILITY AT COMMON LAW.

At common law no action lies for injuries caused by a city's failure to repair a defective highway.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 757.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—LIABILITY OF OFFICERS.

The board of public works, being public officers with prescribed duties, must perform their duties with due care; and, where the duty is plain, and is negligently performed, or not performed at all, the officer is liable to a private individual for injuries sustained by his negligence, but if the act is discretionary, or the officer has not the means to perform it, he is not liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1565; Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 173*)—OFFICERS—LIABILITIES ON BOND.

The sureties on the official bonds of members of the board of public works will only be liable for their negligent acts when the members themselves would be liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 399, 400; Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—INJURIES FROM DEFECTS IN STREETS—LIABILITY OF OFFICERS.

Under San Francisco City Charter, art. 1, § 5, making the officers through whose negligence defects in streets remain unrepaired liable to the party injured for damages sustained, the board of public works would not be liable for failure to repair defective sidewalks, where they had no means with which to repair them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1565; Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—INJURIES FROM DEFECTS IN STREETS—LACK OF FUNDS.

If a municipal officer has no funds, or inadequate funds, and no means of obtaining additional funds, he is not negligent in not doing work which requires the expenditure of funds, and may exercise a discretion in expending what repair funds he has, and is not liable for errors in judgment for applying the funds to repairs less urgently needed than others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—INJURIES FROM DEFECTS IN STREETS—LACK OF FUNDS.

San Francisco City Charter, c. 1, art. 3, § 1, requiring the city boards, on or before the first Monday of April, to send to the commissioners an estimate of the amount of expenditures required in their boards, is only directory as to the time when the estimate shall be given to the commissioners, and the board will not be negligent for not making it on that date, where no injury resulted from its failure to do so, or the commissioners had time to consider the estimate notwithstanding the delay; and, where the board of supervisors refused an application made in June, for appropriations for repairing defective sidewalks, because the abutting owners should make such repairs, the board of public works were not negligent in not making their application in April, as provided by the charter, it being evident that the application would have been refused even if then made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 890*)—FISCAL MANAGEMENT—APPROPRIATIONS—REQUISITES—SUFFICIENCY OF STATEMENT.

Under San Francisco City Charter, c. 1, art. 3, § 1, requiring the city boards to give the supervisors a written estimate of the amount of expenditures required, specifying in detail the objects thereof, the board of public works need not specify each defective sidewalk to be repaired, in requesting appropriations for that purpose; a general estimate for repairs to defective sidewalks being sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1872; Dec. Dig. § 890.*]

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—DEFECTS IN STREETS—DUTY TO REPAIR.

San Francisco City Charter, c. 2, art. 6, § 16, requiring the board of public works to compel the owners of lots fronting on a defective sidewalk to repair the part of the sidewalk in front of the property, applies only to sidewalks on which the lots directly front, so that a triangular piece of sidewalk at the intersection of sidewalks of intersecting streets would not face on the corner lot, and the owner could not be compelled to repair that part of the sidewalk, and hence the board was not negligent in failing to compel the corner owner to repair the walk at the corner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—DEFECTS IN STREETS—LACK OF FUNDS—PROCEEDS OF FINES.

Under San Francisco City Charter, c. 2, art. 6, § 18, authorizing the board of supervisors to prescribe penalties for neglect to repair sidewalks, and permitting any fines to be applied to payment of the expense of such repairs, where the board of supervisors did not provide that the fines should go into a special fund for that purpose, such fines would go into the general fund, and hence would not be available for sidewalk repairs so as to affect liability to one injured by a defective sidewalk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—DEFECTS IN STREETS—LACK OF FUNDS FOR REPAIRS.

Where the board of supervisors had never provided that the fines, authorized San Francisco City Charter, c. 2, art. 6, § 18, for neglect to repair defective sidewalks should go into a special fund for that purpose, the board of public works was not negligent in not procuring the board of supervisors to make such provision so as to procure funds to repair defective sidewalks, and hence would not be liable to a person injured from the defect, because of its failure to procure funds from that source to repair the defect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

12. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—DEFECTIVE SIDEWALKS—CARE REQUIRED.

The city is not an insurer against accidents from defective streets, and the commissioners of public works are not bound to have sidewalks maintained so as to be absolutely safe for use by all persons under all conditions, and are not liable for injuries caused by defective sidewalks, unless the sidewalk was so out of repair as to endanger persons of ordinary health and strength in using it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

13. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—DEFECTIVE STREETS—NATURE OF DEFECT.

In an action against members of the board of public works for injuries from falling on a sidewalk, claimed to be defective because of a depression of three or four inches where the cemented portion of the sidewalk joined the dirt walk, an instruction should have been given that the board would not be liable for every defect, and were not liable if the sidewalk was in a reasonably safe condition for those exercising due care.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

14. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 744*)—TORTS—DEFECTIVE STREETS—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

In an action against members of the board of public works for injuries sustained because of a depression where the cement sidewalk stopped, where there was evidence tending to show that the injury was caused by falling off the curb into the street, a requested instruction should have been given that, if plaintiff was not injured by any defect in the sidewalk, defendants were not liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 744.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Charles D. Taylor against Marsden Manson and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appealed. Reversed.

Stratton & Kaufman, Lloyd S. Ackerman, Finch & Melsted, and Devoto & Richardson, for appellants. Ray P. Saffold, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought against the defendants Manson, Schmitz, Woodward and Casey, members of and constituting the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco, and against the other defendants as sureties upon their official bonds, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff by falling off a sidewalk in the city and county of San Francisco, alleged to have been in a defective condition and dangerous to the traveling public. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, upon which judgment was entered, and this appeal is from the judgment and an order denying the motion of the defendants for a new trial.

It appears from the record that between 8 and 9 o'clock on the evening of April 27, 1904, the plaintiff, then about 71 years of age, accompanied by his son T. K. Taylor, while traveling on the sidewalk on the south side of Fourteenth street going west toward Minna street, fell and sustained a severe fracture of the right hip, and was in consequence for a long time confined in a hospital under the care of physicians. The position can be better understood by reference to the following diagram:

(X) Shows place where injury occurred and place where sidewalk is alleged to have been defective.

The sidewalk on Fourteenth street was of artificial stone or concrete, and ended on the property line where Minna street intersects Fourteenth street, so that in the triangular space in which the letter "X" appears there had been no sidewalk laid, but the curb ran in a segment of an approximate circle around this triangular portion upon which no sidewalk had been laid. The area of the sidewalk marked with the letter "X" had never been paved, nor a sidewalk of any kind laid thereon, but consisted of the sandy soil of which the earth was formed in the vicinity. The sidewalk on Minna street had been paved with cement, and the pavement ended on the property line where Fourteenth street intersects Minna street. The curbstone had been placed in a circle from the northwest corner of the paved sidewalk on Fourteenth street to the northwest corner of the paved sidewalk on Minna street. The evidence entirely falls to show the width of the sidewalk on either Fourteenth or Minna streets, or the area in any manner of the place marked "X" on the diagram, or the elevation of the curb above the floor level of the street. The testimony of plaintiff's witnesses as to the depth or depression of the uncemented portion of the sidewalk below the edges of the pavement and the curb varied, and the surface of such triangular portion was variously stated as from $1\frac{1}{4}$ to 4 or 5 inches below the sidewalk. The son of plaintiff, whose testimony may probably be considered to be as favorable to plaintiff as the facts would justify, testified: "I should say the depression in the sidewalk was about 4 inches. It was a level place, and there hadn't been any pavement put in there; just a sandy bottom, a level hole the width of the sidewalk." Other witnesses testified that water would stand in this depression or sandy part of the sidewalk during rainy weather, and that there was a board in or across it that had partly sunk in the sand. It had been in this condition for many years, and there is no evidence that any one was ever injured there before. It was incumbent on plaintiff to prove that the fall and the injury he received were proximately caused by a dangerous defect in the sidewalk. As to whether the plaintiff fell by stumbling when he reached the end of the cement sidewalk on Fourteenth street, or when he stepped off the curb into the street, is not at all clear from the testimony. Plaintiff's son, who was the only person present besides plaintiff at the time of the accident, testified that plaintiff stepped into the pavement or hole and stumbled and fell; but he also testified in other parts of his testimony that plaintiff "fell over into Fourteenth street; that was, over the curb. He stepped off the sidewalk. * * * He stepped off the edge of the sidewalk into the hole. He fell on the curbing and right over into the street. When I picked him up he was lying right in the street. It was very dark. I didn't see whether he struck the curb or went right over it. I don't know what he did strike. It was done so quickly I could not see." The plaintiff testified: "Just as I got to the corner I stepped off, and felt myself going, and I went down, and in trying to recover myself I pitched out toward the street and struck on my right side, and as near as I can remember, there were cobblestones. I stepped into the hole. I stepped off at Fourteenth street down as Minna street crosses. As Minna street crosses I stepped right off the corner. * * * I cannot say whether the hole was inside or outside the curb, because I did not see it."

Plaintiff relied upon proof of the injury as above stated, and proof of the official position of defendants as members of the board of public works, and the due execution of the official bonds by the other defendants, without any attempt to prove affirmatively any act of negligence by defendants or either of them. He alleged in his complaint that the sidewalk was "in a dangerous and defective condition, unfit and unsuited for the passage of pedestrians thereon"; that the defendants, as such members of the board of public works, knew of such dangerous and defective condition, and thereafter "wholly refused and failed to repair or reconstruct said sidewalk." Without discussing the question as to whether or not the evidence is sufficient to show that the injury was caused by the alleged defect in the sidewalk we will proceed to a consideration of the question as to the legal liability of the defendants. At common law no action would lie for an injury caused by a failure to repair a highway (Whitaker's Smith on Negligence, 108 and cases cited; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence [5th Ed.] § 337). In many of the United States municipal corporations and counties are liable in such case, while in others road overseers, superintendents of streets, or boards of public works are liable for negligence in failing to keep the roads or streets in repair, as the case may be. It is under the latter class that the present action is brought. As the members of the board are public officers, with their duties prescribed by law, and as the other defendants are sureties on their official bonds, they can only be held for nonfeasance as to some act or duty required of the board by reason of their office, or for the negligent performance of some act or duty where the act or duty is plain. It is only where the duty is plain and certain, and such duty is negligently performed, or not performed at all, that the officer is held liable to a private individual. If the act is a matter of discretion, or the officer has not the means or ability to perform it, he is not liable, nor are his sureties on his official bond. Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 213, 58 Pac. 707, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 340, and cases cited; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713; Elliott on Roads and Streets, 506. The reason for the rule is plain. An officer is a public servant. His remuneration is often small. His implied agreement is to faithfully perform the duties required of him by law. He must perform such duties, not negligently, but with due diligence. He is not required to furnish his own funds to perform acts which are to be performed at the public expense. The charter of the city and county of San Francisco provides (section 5, art. 1) that no recourse shall be had against the city for damage or loss by reason of any defective condition of any sidewalk or public street or sewer, "but in any such case the person or persons on whom the law may have imposed the obligation to repair such defect in the sidewalk, street, public highway or in the sewer, and also the officer or officers through whose official negligence such defect remains unrepaired, shall be jointly and severally liable to the party injured for the damages sustained." It is certainly not plain that the above-quoted section applies to the present case, where the alleged cause of the injury was not a defect in the sidewalk, but the fact that no sidewalk had ever been built closing the corners of the sidewalks to Fourteenth and Minna streets. But for the purposes of this case, and not intimating that such is the law, it may be conceded that the fact that no sidewalk had been built was a defect in the sidewalk, and yet the defendants cannot be held liable under the law. It was shown by uncontradicted testimony that the defendants constituting the board of public works had no funds with which to repair any of the sidewalks at any of the times named in the complaint. It is not even claimed by the respondent's attorneys that they had such funds. It is well settled by all the authorities that the duty to make repairs does not exist where there are no funds with which to make them, and no legal means by which the officer can procure such funds. It is said in Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (5th Ed. § 340): "If such an officer has no funds, or inadequate funds, and no means of obtaining any more, he cannot be said to be guilty of negligence in not doing the work which requires the expenditure of money. He owes no duty to any one to undertake work than the funds in his hands will pay for; and he may exercise a discretion as to what repairs he will undertake to make with such funds as he has. He is not responsible for an error of judgment in applying deficient funds to repairs less urgently needed than others, nor for such mistakes as selecting unsuitable timber for repairing a bridge." The rule is stated in Smith v. Wright, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 621, as follows: "By their means I understand that funds in their possession not those which they might obtain at a future period. They cannot, and should not, be required to advance their individual moneys for public purposes. Their duties which the law compels them to perform are onerous enough without that. If our public officers would only faithfully apply what they actually receive, people would have no cause to complain." It is not necessary to quote further from the authorities, as they all sustain the proposition as stated in the quotation from Shearman & Redfield on Negligence. See Barker v. Loomis, 6 Hill, 463; Garlinghouse v. Jacobs, 29 N. Y. 297; Hines v. City of Lockport, 50 N. Y. 236; Monk v. Town of New Utrecht, 104 N. Y. 553, 11 N. E. 268.

Respondent claims that the board of public works were guilty of negligence because they did not properly seek an appropriation from the board of supervisors of funds with which to repair defective sidewalks. It is admitted, and the evidence shows, that the board did ask for and seek an appropriation, but it is claimed that the application was required to be made on or before the first Monday in April, whereas in fact it was not made until the latter part of May or the 1st of June; and further that the application should have specified the particular sidewalks that needed repairs. In our opinion there is no merit in either contention. The provision of the charter (article 3, c. 1, § 1) is as follows: "On or before the first Monday of April of each year the heads of departments, boards and commissions of the city and county shall send to the supervisors an estimate in writing of the amount of expenditure, specifying in detail the objects thereof, required in their respective departments, offices, boards and commissions, including a statement of the salaries of their subordinates." The provision as to time in the above-quoted section is only directory; and in cases where no injury was done, or where the supervisors had due time to consider the application, it will not be held that a board or a head of a department was guilty of negligence because the application was not made on or before a certain day. The only funds that could be available for the repair of sidewalks for the year 1904 up to the time the plaintiff was injured in April were those which might have been allowed in the budget of 1903. Defendant Schmitz was not appointed to the board of public works until the 8th day of April, 1903, and defendant Woodward was not appointed until January, 1904. It is evident that they could not have made an estimate and request for an appropriation prior to the first Monday of April, 1903. The testimony shows that in the latter part of May, or early in June, 1903, before the budget had been prepared by the supervisors for the fiscal year 1903-04, the members of the board of public works appeared before the finance committee of the board of supervisors, and asked for an appropriation for the repair of defective sidewalks. The board of supervisors refused, as they always had refused, to make any appropriation for the repair of defective sidewalks, holding that such expense was a charge against, and should be paid by, the abutting property owners. The board of supervisors having considered the matter, and refused the appropriation upon the ground that the expense should not be a charge against the city, shows that the time at which the application was made could not have made any difference, and that such application would have been refused if made at the time designated in the charter.

The appropriation sought for the repair of defective sidewalks was sufficient as to the requirement that it should "specify in detail the objects thereof." The charter does not contemplate that each and every defective sidewalk of the several hundred miles of sidewalks in the city and county of San Francisco should have been specified. If such were the case, it is evident that for any defect that might have become such after the request was made there would be no funds with which to repair it until an appropriation could be asked for the following year.

It is further claimed that the board was guilty of negligence in not strictly complying with the law in the endeavor to compel abutting property owners to make the needed repairs to the sidewalk. The language of the charter (section 16, c. 2, art. 6) is that when a public sidewalk or street is so out of repair as to endanger persons passing thereon, "the board of public works shall require the owners or occupants of lots or portions of lots fronting on said portion of said street, avenue, alley, lane, court or place, or fronting on such portion of said sidewalk so out of repair as aforesaid, by a notice in writing, to be delivered to them or their agents, to repair forthwith said portion of said street, avenue, lane, alley, court or place to the center line thereof, or said portion of said sidewalk, in front of the property of which he is the owner or tenant or occupant." It is difficult to conceive in this case how any private person could be the owner of a lot, or portion of a lot, fronting on the particular piece of sidewalk in question. The front of a lot by the very terms means that part of the same which faces upon a street. This triangular piece of land was a part of the public street, to wit, a part of Fourteenth street. The owner of the corner lot, bounded on the north by Fourteenth street and on the west by Minna street, owned no frontage on the triangle. Such lot fronted or faced the sidewalk on the north and the sidewalk on the west, and the lot had in all probability been assessed or made to pay the cost of such sidewalks. In City Street Improvement Company v. Laird, 138 Cal. 27, 70 Pac. 916, the court, considering the question of whether or not property can front on a crossing formed by the intersection of two streets, said: "In order that the protest may be available it is also necessary that the written objection should be made by the owners of a majority of the frontage of the property fronting on said proposed work or improvement. It is apparent that these provisions of the statute can have no application in the present case, for the reason that the proposed improvement is not for one block or more, and for the further reason that there can be no property fronting on the proposed work. A crossing is the intersection of two streets, and from the nature of the term can have no property fronting upon it." In Martin v. Wagner, 120 Cal. 623, 53 Pac. 167, while the court held that a triangular piece of land is liable for an assessment for the repairing of a street on which it corners, because it had a frontage on an intersecting street, it said: "Here, as the land only cornered on Eldorado street, there could be and was no assessment for frontage on that street; but the assessment for the frontage on Freemont street was clearly authorized." While the charter makes provision for assessments for street corners, for the expense of work done where a main street terminates in another main street, where an alley crosses a main street, where an alley terminates in another street, lane, or alley, and for other conditions, we have examined in vain to find any provision as to an assessment, upon a person who is not an abutting owner, to build a sidewalk upon a triangle such as we have in this case, and counsel have pointed to no such provision.

The evidence shows that the board served and posted notices, advertised for bids, in every case where a defective sidewalk was reported to them. It is not pretended that the members of the board were ever personally notified of the alleged defect. No evidence was offered as to any act of negligence on the part of either of them. We cannot hold that the board was negligent in not having the person or persons neglecting or refusing to make the repairs arrested, and thus collecting penalties for a repair fund. As before shown, there was no person owning abutting property who could be compelled to make the repairs, nor has our attention been called to any ordinance or provision of the charter that makes it the official duty of the board of public works to prosecute persons for violating the law, or to have persons arrested and prosecuted. The charter provides (chapter 2, art. 6, § 18) that the board of supervisors may prescribe penalties for the neglect to make repairs, and that such penalties may be applied in the case of fines to the payment of the expense of any such repairs. It does not appear that the board of supervisors, by ordinance or otherwise, have ever prescribed that the fines or penalties shall go into a special fund for the repair of streets. In the absence of such ordinance a fine, when collected, would have to be paid into the general fund. The board of public works had no power to enact such ordinance, and it certainly was not guilty of negligence because it did not procure the board of supervisors to pass such an ordinance.

The defendants requested, and the court refused to give the following instructions:

"I charge you that the duty imposed on the defendants commissioners of public works was to repair only such sidewalks as were so out of repair as to endanger persons passing thereon, and that defendants are not liable for every defective sidewalk, but only for such as are so out of repair as to endanger persons passing thereon."

"I instruct you that, if you find from the evidence that the sidewalk where the plaintiff has testified that he was injured was not so out of repair as to endanger persons in ordinary health and of ordinary strength, and with the ordinary control of their muscles and faculties while passing thereon, you must find for the defendants."

"I instruct you that it is not, and was not, at any time the duty of any of the defendants in this action to see to it that any sidewalks should be so constructed and maintained as to be absolutely safe for the passage of all persons under all conditions, and that if the sidewalk at the point where plaintiff testified he was hurt was in a reasonably safe condition, you must find for defendants."

The above instructions stated the law correctly, and were peculiarly applicable to the evidence in this case, and the refusal to give them was error. Counsel for respondent has not pointed out any other instruction, or instructions giving them, or the substance of them, and we have been unable to find in the record any instruction covering them. In our opinion they were very important. As to whether the evidence as matter of law was sufficient to show that the sidewalk was in a dangerous and defective condition, we are not called upon to decide, in view of the refusal of the court to give the above instructions, or the substance of them, to the jury. In a case where the only defect in a sidewalk was the depression of some 3 or 4 inches of the surface of the earth between the cement sidewalk and the westerly end of the sidewalk, the jury certainly were entitled to be fully instructed as to the fact that, if the sidewalk was in a reasonably safe condition for those exercising due care, the defendants were not liable. It is a matter of common knowledge that no sidewalk is perfect, and that certain irregularities and inequalities in the surface of such sidewalks exist, not only in the city and county of San Francisco, but in all cities. In many instances a wooden or concrete pavement will terminate, and the sidewalk then consist of the surface of the street, and there will be a step of a few inches depression from the artificial sidewalk to the earth. In many cases there is, even in paved sidewalks, a drop of a few inches in the surface. In fact the drop from the curb or outer edge of almost every sidewalk is from 3 to 4 inches, or several inches, and it is not usual for the surface to be on a level with the surface of the street. While a municipality is required to exercise vigilance in keeping its streets and sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, it is by no means an insurer against accidents, nor can it be expected to keep the surface of its sidewalks free from all irregularities.

In Beltz v. City of Yonkers, 148 N. Y. 67, 42 N. E. 401, the evidence was held insufficient to show a dangerous defect in a sidewalk where broken stone had been removed, leaving an uncovered depression in the sidewalk of 2½ inches in depth by 7½ inches in width, which had been there for several years. It was there said: "There are very few, if any, streets or highways that are or can be kept so absolutely safe and perfect as to preclude the possibility of accidents, and whether in any case the municipality has done its duty must be determined by the situation; what men knew about it before, and not after, an accident. When the defect is of such a character that reasonable and prudent men may reasonably differ as to whether an accident could or should have been reasonably anticipated from its existence or not, then the case is generally one for the jury; but when, as in this case, the defect is so slight that no careful or prudent man could reasonably anticipate any danger from its existence, but still an accident happens which could have been guarded against by the exercise of extraordinary care and foresight, the question of the defendant's responsibility is one of law." To the same effect are the following: Lane v. Town of Hancock, 142 N. Y. 511, 37 N. E. 473; Waller v. Town of Hebron, 5 App. Div. 577, 39 N. Y. Supp. 381; Grant v. Town of Enfield, 11 App. Div. 358, 42 N. Y. Supp. 107; Town of Gosport v. Evans, 112 Ind. 133, 13 N. E. 256, 2 Am. St. Rep. 104; Burns v. Bradford City, 137 Pa. 361, 20 Atl. 997, 11 L. R. A. 726; Kornetzski v. Detroit City, 94 Mich. 343, 53 N. W. 1106; Cushing v. Boston, 124 Mass. 434; Witham v. Portland, 72 Me. 439.

The court also refused the following instruction asked by defendants: "I instruct you that, if you find from the evidence that plaintiff was not injured by reason of any sidewalk being out of repair, you are to find for the defendants." This instruction should have been given. As before stated, the jury might very logically have concluded that the injury to plaintiff was caused by his falling off the curbing of the sidewalk into the street.

What we have said is not in conflict with what is necessarily decided in Heath v. Manson et al., 147 Cal. 694, 82 Pac. 331. In that case the injury was caused by plaintiff stepping into a hole in a planked sidewalk, from which a plank had been removed. It appears to have been undisputed that the board of public works had not sought an appropriation for the repair of streets, and that there were abutting property owners. It was admitted that the board had not served proper notices upon such owners. What is there said as to compelling the property owners to make the repairs, or as to getting money by having them arrested and fined, was not necessary to the decision of the case on the main points.

The judgment and order are reversed.

I concur: KERRIGAN, J.

I concur in the judgment: HALL, J.

9 Cal. App. 380

KEITH v. RECORDER'S COURT OF CITY OF SANTA ANA et al. (Civ. 541.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 23, 1908.)

1. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY BY APPEAL.

As a general rule, prohibition will not lie against a court acting without jurisdiction; the remedy by appeal being adequate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

2. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY BY APPEAL—PRIOR DETERMINATION.

That an appeal would lie only to a court which had once decided the matter adversely to petitioner would not render the remedy by appeal inadequate, so as to warrant prohibition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 26*) — CONVICTION WITHOUT LEGAL WARRANT.

Habeas corpus will lie to relieve one convicted without legal warrant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 21; Dec. Dig. § 26.*]

4. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 95*)—SCOPE OF INQUIRY—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT IN CRIMINAL CASE.

In criminal proceedings instituted before an inferior court, the sufficiency of the complaint may be considered upon application for habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 87; Dec. Dig. § 95.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Prohibition by J. J. Keith against the Recorder's Court of the City of Santa Ana and another. From an order and judgment denying a peremptory writ, and discharging an alternative writ theretofore issued, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Clyde Bishop and F. O. Daniel, for appellant. W. F. Heathman and Victor Montgomery, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by petitioner from an order and judgment denying a peremptory writ of prohibition, and discharging an alternative writ theretofore issued.

The petition for the writ of prohibition alleges that upon a complaint filed petitioner was arrested for the violation of an ordinance of the city of Santa Ana, and respondent court, after denying petitioner's motion to dismiss, and overruling a demurrer to the complaint, had set the cause down for trial. It is alleged that the complaint under which the arrest was made did not set forth facts constituting a public, or any, offense, and was defective in many other specified particulars; that the prosecution was barred by the provisions of section 801 of the Penal Code for which reasons the court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause. Conceding that the complaint upon which the criminal proceedings against petitioner were based was defective in all of the respects claimed, and on account thereof, or for any other reason, the jurisdiction of the recorder's court was wanting, and by reason whereof a conviction thereunder could not be sustained, nevertheless, under the rule laid down in Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 Pac. 765, the remedy by appeal from an adverse judgment is a plain, speedy, and adequate one in the ordinary course of law, by reason of which prohibition will not lie. There are no features presented in this record which should take the case out of the general rule, as was the case in Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 467, 82 Pac. 70. The mere fact that the appeal would lie only to the superior court of Orange county, which court had once determined the questions presented adversely to petitioner, presents no reason for taking the case out of the rule. If, as claimed, that court erred when the case was before it on application for this writ, we may not assume that, upon an appeal from the judgment, and after more mature consideration, it will continue in such error. In addition the writ of habeas corpus is always available to one convicted without legal warrant; and, in criminal proceedings instituted before an inferior court, the sufficiency of the complaint can be considered upon an application for such writ. Ex parte Greenall (Cal.) 96 Pac. 804.

We see no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

155 Cal. 46

PAYNE et al. v. NEUVAL et al. (L. A. 2,172.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1908.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1909.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 83*)—CONTRACTS —NATURE.

A contract recited that, in consideration of $1 and of a royalty, grantor granted to decedent all the bituminous rock and other minerals he might choose to mine, quarry, and take from certain land; that in case the land failed to produce minerals in paying quantities or of good quality, decedent might, upon 30 days' notice in writing, relinquish his rights, and that decedent should pay royalty on 300 tons annually, whether taken or not. After the contract was executed, decedent quarried and took away 27 tons of rock, after which he removed his machinery, and never conducted further operations up to his death, 15 years later, though he paid royalty for 2 years. Held, that the contract was not a grant of land nor a lease, but a grant of a right in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament, and that all the rights of decedent's heirs were extinguished by the abandonment of the privileges.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 214; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

2. CONTRACTS (§ 169*) — CONSTRUCTION — EXPLANATION BY CIRCUMSTANCES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1647, providing that a contract may be explained by reference to the

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes circumstances in which it was made, and the matter to which it relates, a contract having some of the features of a grant and some of a lease may be so explained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 752; Dec. Dig. § 169.*]

3. CONTRACTS (§ 155*) — CONSTRUCTION AGAINST PARTY DRAFTING CONTRACT.

Uncertainties in a contract are to be interpreted more strongly against the party who prepared the agreement, and caused the uncertainties to be present.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 736; Dec. Dig. § 155.*]

4. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 83*)—CONTRACTS — ABANDONMENT OF RIGHTS — NOTICE — WAIVER.

Under a contract allowing decedent to mine specified minerals, and allowing him to relinquish his rights thereunder upon 30 days' written notice, the landowner could waive such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 214; Dec. Dig. § 83.*]

5. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION (§ 90*)—CONTRACTS OF DECEDENT—ENFORCEMENT—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Under a contract allowing decedent to mine minerals, and requiring him to pay a specified royalty annually whether minerals were taken or not, his heirs could not enforce the contract without tendering payment of accrued royalties, where he abandoned operations for several years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, Cent. Dig. § 351; Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 174*)—ADVERSE CONTRACTS—VALIDITY NOT RECOGNIZED.

Plaintiffs, by accepting a deduction in the price of property purchased by them, because of the existence of a recorded contract granting mining privileges, did not recognize the validity of the contract, since they may have demanded a deduction in anticipation of the expense of litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 358; Dec. Dig. § 174.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title to land against a contract allowing defendants' decedent to mine minerals, it was not prejudicial error to receive testimony concerning a conversation between the grantor and decedent's superintendent respecting an abandonment of the privileges, where there was abundant other evidence of an abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4161; Dec. Dig. § 1051.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1050*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title to land against a contract granting mining privileges to decedent, it was not prejudicial error to allow plaintiffs to ask grantor what right decedent told him he desired to secure, where he answered, "I suppose getting out rock to lay down the sidewalks and streets," nor to allow a question as to what interest decedent said he wanted, where grantor answered, "He did not tell me he wanted any interest. He pay me so much a ton working out the rock, bituminous rock, what he called it asphaltum," nor to allow a question as to what decedent told grantor he wanted, when he came with the instrument, where grantor answered, "He wanted to open a mine and get out bituminous rock."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4153; Dec. Dig. § 1050.*]

9. CONTRACTS (§ 175*)—CONSTRUCTION — AMBIGUITY—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title to land against an ambiguous contract granting mining privileges to decedent, grantor could testify that decedent told him that he wanted a lease, when he presented the instrument for execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 766; Dec. Dig. § 175.*]

10. QUIETING TITLE (§ 44*)—MINES AND MINERALS—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title to land against a contract allowing decedent to mine minerals, evidence showing that oil was not discovered in the vicinity of the land until after the contract was executed was admissible, under allegations that when the contract was signed, the only known minerals were on the surface, and that by reason of the subsequent discovery of oil in the neighborhood plaintiffs' land became more valuable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 90; Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by N. M. Payne and others against Victorine Nivard Neuval and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, Theo. J. Roche, and Thos. A. Norton, for appellants. C. P. Kaetzel and Wm. Shipsey (Frank P. Deering, of counsel), for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying the motion of defendants for a new trial. The action was one to quiet title, and around a certain document set forth in the complaint cluster all of the problems presented by this appeal. The instrument in question was executed by the grantors of plaintiffs in favor of defendants' decedent. It is in substantially the following language: "In consideration of one dollar to me paid by F. Nivard Neuval, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and the further sum of twenty cents per ton, I, the undersigned, grant to said F. Nivard Neuval all the bituminous rock, petroleum, asphaltum and other mineral which he may choose to mine, quarry and take from my land in San Luis Obispo county, state of California. [Here follows a description of the property.] Together with the right of free ingress and egress and also the right to erect and maintain on said land stables, shed, house, side track and other structures necessary to the business of mining and transferring such mineral to market. In case said land fails to produce such mineral in paying quantities or of good quality said F. Nivard Neuval may upon thirty days' notice given to me in writing, abandon and relinquish to me all right hereby conferred and granted, and whereas I have a portion of my land cultivated and have planted vine and an orchard such portion now improved will be free from any mining and quarrying. F. N. Neuval agrees to take at least three hundred tons a year or to pay the royalty on that amount whether taken or not." This instrument was duly acknowledged and recorded on April 12, 1890. Immediately thereafter F. Nivard Neuval entered upon Bickmore's land, quarried and took away 27 tons of bituminous rock, after which he removed his machinery, both from that and from an adjoining tract of land, and never pursued any further mining or other operations in that vicinity. However, he paid the royalty mentioned in the agreement up to April, 1892. After that no more royalty was paid by or for Mr. Neuval. It was admitted by the parties that on the 17th day of October, 1905, Neuval died testate, being at the time of his death a resident of the city and county of San Francisco; also that by decree of distribution, given, made, and entered in the superior court of said city and county, all of the property belonging to said deceased at the time of his death was distributed to the appellants. Appellants' counsel contend that the instrument in question constituted a grant of all minerals, including petroleum and asphaltum, contained in the premises involved in this action; that no adverse possession has been shown; that if we regard the instrument as one which created an easement, title by adverse possession could not be acquired; and that, assuming an abandonment, plaintiffs waived it by demanding and obtaining a deduction in the purchase price of the property after learning of the existence of the agreement.

Great stress is placed by counsel for appellant upon the word "grant" used in the agreement here considered. With great force and ingenuity they argue that, although no words of inheritance or succession are used, none are necessary (section 1072, Civ. Code), and that, as "a transfer invests in the transferee all the actual title to the thing transferred which the transferor then has, unless a different intention is expressed, or is necessarily implied" (section 1083, Civ. Code), therefore the use of the word "grant" with no immediately connected qualifications transferred to the predecessor of appellants the title in fee to all the minerals located upon the property in question. But an examination of the instrument reveals the fact that it possesses other characteristics not usually accompanying absolute grants of minerals and mines. There is a provision for abandonment by Neuval of the property and of the mineral wealth therein contained, upon the giving of notice in writing. There is also a provision for the payment of royalty for the amount of mineral removed. It will thus be seen that the instrument in question has some of the characteristics of a lease. It has been held that the word "royalty" is

"perhaps the most appropriate word where rental is based upon the quantity of coal or other mineral that is or may be taken from the mine." Raynolds v. Hanna (C. C.) 55 Fed. 800. In the same case the agreement considered was declared to be a lease, although it did contain the word "grant." It will also be noted that the words relied upon as constituting a grant do not convey the minerals in situ, but only such as Neuval "may choose to mine, quarry and take from" the land. Perhaps it will not be necessary to classify with technical accuracy the agreement before us. We may employ the language used by the Supreme Court of Indiana in Heller v. Dailey, 28 Ind. App. 555, 63 N. E. 493: "We do not regard the contract in suit as a grant of land, or as a lease properly so called, but do regard it as a grant of a right in the nature of an incorporeal hereditament * * * under whatever technical common-law term it may most properly be classed." Having some of the features of a grant and some of a lease, this is a contract which "may be explained by a reference to the circumstances under which it was made, and the matter to which it relates." Section 1647, Civ. Code. It was completely drawn up and was taken, thus prepared, by Neuval to Bickmore, an illiterate person, who signed by his mark. Bickmore testified that Neuval stated he wanted a lease. Bickmore supposed he was executing a lease. The existing uncertainties are to be interpreted most strongly against Neuval, who prepared the agreement and caused the uncertainties to be present. Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 355, 40 Pac. 534; Yoch v. Home Mutual Ins. Co., 111 Cal. 508, 44 Pac. 189, 34 L. R. A. 857; Welch v. British American, etc., Co., 148 Cal. 227, 82 Pac. 964, 113 Am. St. Rep. 223. Considering the instrument in its entirety, the circumstances under which it was drafted and executed, and the conduct of the parties to the agreement, it cannot be reasonably contended that Neuval and his heirs were to have the right to preserve dominion over these deposits perpetually, and, after failure to work the mines or pay the royalty for 13 years, were to have the right to assert an adverse claim to the minerals upon Bickmore's land. Certainly their conduct exhibits great lack of diligence. The following language used by this court in Acme Oil & Mining Co. v. Williams, 140 Cal. 681-684, 74 Pac. 296, 297, is pertinent: "The sole consideration usually moving the lessor in extending oil leases is, and the only consideration for the particular lease involved here was, the royalties the lessor would receive from proper and continuous pumping of oil, after it had been developed in paying quantities. These leases are only valuable on development, and are then only valuable to both parties to the extent that the product may be secured and disposed of; and, when the only consideration for the lease is the share which the lessor will obtain of what is produced, there is always an implied covenant that diligence will be used toward such production." See, also, Petroleum Co. v. Coal & Coke Mfg. Co., 89 Tenn. 391, 18 S. W. 65. In McIntosh v. Robb, 4 Cal. App. 486, 88 Pac. 517, where the District Court of Appeal was considering a mining contract, the following language is used: "In contracts of this character there is an implied covenant for diligent search and operation, and under such a contract the lessee is bound to proceed with his mining operations with reasonable diligence." All of Neuval's acts, after his brief mining activity, indicated his failure at that time to find bituminous rock or other mineral in valuable quantities. That his intention was to abandon the project can scarcely be doubted. True he did not give notice in writing, but Bickmore could waive such notice, and would not a court properly find that he had waived it if, after 13 years of inactivity in the matter, he should sue the Neuval heirs for the annual royalty mentioned in the agreement? In Calhoun v. Neely, 201 Pa. 97, 50 Atl. 967, the court said, speaking of a lease for 15 years: "An unexplained cessation of operations for the period involved * * * [9 years] gives rise to a fair presumption of abandonment, and, standing alone and admitted, would justify the court in declaring an abandonment as matter of law." The conclusion is inevitable that all rights of the Neuval heirs were extinguished by abandonment of the privileges which existed under the contract. In view of this determination, it is necessary to comment but briefly upon respondents' point that the appellants failed to do equity because they did not tender payment of the royalty before asking for the enforcement of the contract. We think the point well taken. It has been held in this state that a mortgagor cannot maintain an action in ejectment against a mortgagee in possession, nor quiet title to the mortgaged premises, without paying the debt, even though it was outlawed. Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 443, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314; Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 458, 27 Pac. 763. The principle announced in those cases would apply with equal force here. There is no merit in the point that the plaintiffs, by accepting a deduction in the purchase price of the property because of the existence of the recorded contract, recognized the validity of the claim of appellants. For aught that appears here the purchasers of this land may have demanded a reduction in the price asked by Mr. Bickmore because they anticipated the expense of litigation—a fear not altogether without foundation. In the case of McConnell v. Pierce, 210 Ill. 627, 71 N. E. 622, cited by appellants' counsel in this behalf, the deed under which plaintiff claimed title was made "subject to the F. H. Haley lease." In this case there was no such provision in the deeds under which plaintiffs' claim of title is asserted.

We see no material error in the admission, over appellants' objection, of testimony regarding the conversation between Bickmore and Sisco, Neuval's superintendent, with reference to the abandonment. Without that conversation there was abundant evidence of abandonment, and we do not see how the result could have been changed by Sisco's testimony. The following questions, addressed to Bickmore, were permitted in spite of objection: (1) "What right did Mr. Neuval tell you he desired to secure by this instrument in these premises? (2) What interest in the minerals mentioned in there did he tell you he wanted? (3) When Neuval came there with that instrument, what did he tell you he wanted? (4) What kind of an instrument did he tell you he wanted when he came there?" To the first question the reply was, "Oh, I supposed getting out rock to lay down the sidewalks and streets." To the second he answered, "He didn't tell me he wanted any interest. He pay me so much a ton working out the rock, bituminous rock, what he called it asphaltum." To the third the witness replied, "He wanted to open up a mine and get out bituminous rock." And he tersely answered the fourth question with the single word "Lease." It will readily be seen that the answers to the first three questions were neither responsive nor injurious to defendant. No motion was made to strike them out on the ground of their irresponsible quality. In answer to the last question the witness did pertinently reply "Lease," and, as we have heretofore intimated, this was proper testimony in explanation of the ambiguous instrument. As was written by Mr. Justice Van Fleet, in Balfour v. Fresno C. & I. Co., 109 Cal. 225, 41 Pac. 877: "This is not allowing parol evidence for the purpose of altering the contract, or of putting a different sense and construction upon its language from that which it would naturally bear, but for the purpose of showing the circumstances under which the language was used, and applying it according to the intention of the parties."

Objection is also made to the evidence showing that oil was not discovered in the vicinity of the land until after the execution of the instrument. Such evidence was clearly in response to paragraphs 7 and 8 of the complaint, in which it is averred that on April 12, 1890, when the agreement was signed, the only known minerals were on the surface, and that by reason of the subsequent discovery of oil in the neighborhood plaintiffs' land became more valuable. While, perhaps, these allegations were not essential to the pleading, and might have been omitted, they were not attacked by special demurrer. These two paragraphs, taken with paragraph 6, in which the failure to pay royalty and the abandonment are set forth, tend to support, when proven, plaintiffs' assertion that the claim of appellants is without equity.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(155 Cal. 53)

CURTIN v. INGLE. (S. F. 5,080.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1908.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF (§ 48*)—SETTLEMENT—TIME—NOTICE—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 659, subd. 2, provides that if proposed amendments to a statement on appeal are served and not adopted, the proposed statement and amendments shall, within 10 days be presented to the judge on 5 days' notice, or be delivered to the clerk for the judge; that the same proceedings shall then be taken for the settlement of the statement as are required by section 650, which declares that the clerk must immediately deliver them to the judge, who must designate the time when he will settle the bill, and the clerk must immediately notify the parties. Held, that the requirement of 5 days' notice does not apply where the proposed statement and amendments are delivered to the clerk for the judge, the purpose of the provision being then effected by the requirement that the judge shall then designate a time for settlement, notice of which shall be given by the clerk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exceptions, Bill of, Cent. Dig. § 77; Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—DISMISSAL—SETTLEMENT—LACHES—REMEDIES.

Supreme Court rule 2 (78 Pac. vii) requires appellant in a civil action to serve and file the printed transcript on appeal within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, provided that, when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a statement, the time for filing and serving the transcript shall not begin to run until the settled statement has been filed. Held that, where appellant has a proceeding pending for the settlement of a statement on appeal, and is guilty of laches, the better practice is a motion to dismiss the settlement proceedings below, or by objection to the settlement for laches, and appeal if the objections are overruled, and not an application to dismiss the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3126; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 611*)—SUPREME COURT—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL—JURISDICTION.

The Supreme Court has power to dismiss an appeal on an application therefor, where there has been a failure to proceed with proper diligence to procure settlement of the statement amounting to a neglect equivalent to a failure to file the transcript within the time required by Supreme Court rule 2 (78 Pac. vii).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3126; Dec. Dig. § 611.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by D. A. Curtin against J. W. Ingle. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss. Denied.

See, also, 98 Pac. 868.

William M. Cannon and S. W. Molkenbuhr, for appellant. Wal. J. Tuska, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Respondent moves to dismiss the appeal in this action. On May 28, 1907, appellant served a notice of intention to move for a new trial in the above cause, the motion to be made on the minutes of the court and in due time. On October 14, 1907, the motion was heard and denied, and on December 12, 1907, appellant appealed from the order denying the motion. On December 17, 1907, appellant served on respondent his proposed statement on appeal, to which respondent, without waiving certain objections to the proposed statement, proposed amendments thereto, and served them on appellant on December 19, 1907. On January 6, 1908, appellant delivered the proposed statement, objections, and proposed amendments to the clerk of the superior court for delivery to the judge thereof who tried the cause, and the clerk thereupon delivered them to said judge. After their receipt by the judge no order was made by him fixing a time for the settlement of the statement prior to the filing of this motion to dismiss the appeal, nor was anything done prior thereto by the appellant with a view of causing a settlement of the statement to be made. After the making of this motion to dismiss the appellant applied to the judge to fix a date for the settlement of the statement, which he did, and which settlement is still pending.

It is insisted by the respondent that the appeal should be dismissed for two reasons: First. Because appellant failed to comply with the provisions of section 659, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc., in the delivery of the proposed statement and amendments to the clerk for the judge; that therefore the latter acquired no jurisdiction whatever to settle the statement; that no settlement can be had which will be of any legal effect in support of the appeal of appellant, and hence it should be dismissed. Secondly. That the failure of appellant to file his printed transcript on appeal within 40 days after taking the appeal, or to do anything to procure the settlement of the statement on appeal within six months from January 6, 1908, is fatal to his appeal, is to be deemed an abandonment of it, and entitles respondent to a dismissal thereof.

The first proposition advanced by respondent is based upon what he insists is the proper construction to be given to section 659, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc., with reference to notice to be given the adverse party on presentation of the proposed statement and amendments for settlement. That section provides that when proposed amendments are served on the moving party, "if not adopted, the proposed statement and amendments shall within ten days thereafter be presented by the moving party to the judge upon five days' notice to the adverse party, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge." It then provides that the same proceedings shall be taken by the parties and clerk and judge for the settlement of the statement as are required by section 650, Code Civ. Proc., for the settlement of bills of exceptions. Section 650 provides that "when received by the clerk he must immediately deliver them to the judge * * * and when received from the clerk, the judge must designate the time when he will settle the bill and the clerk must immediately notify the parties of such designation." The claim of appellant is that the necessary and logical interpretation of this provision with reference to the five days' notice is that it applies equally whether the proposed statement and amendments are presented directly to the judge for settlement, or are delivered to the clerk for the judge; and, as the showing on this motion is that no notice of delivery to the clerk for the judge was given respondent by appellant, the judge acquired no jurisdiction to settle the statement, and that no effectual settlement of it, available to appellant for any purpose, can be made. Counsel for respondent has cited us to no authority in support of his interpretation of the section as to the giving of notice. On the other hand, this court many years ago construed the section expressly to the contrary. In Mellor v. Crouch, 76 Cal. 594, 596, 18 Pac. 685, this court was asked to interpret the section as respondent now urges it should be construed, but it was held in that case that the language used in the section was so plain as not to be susceptible to any such an interpretation. In that case, referring to sections 659, 650, as we have quoted them above, the court said: "The obvious purpose of these provisions is that the parties may have notice of the time when the statement will be settled. When the statement and amendments are presented directly to the judge, there is no provision for any notice of the time of settlement to be thereafter given by either the judge or clerk; and in such case, therefore, the five days' notice mentioned in section 659 must be given by the party himself. But when the papers are delivered to to the clerk for the judge, the purpose of the Code is effected through the requirement that then the judge must designate a time for the settlement, and the clerk must give notice of it. The provision about the five days' notice in section 659 qualifies, we think, only the preceding clause of the sentence, and is not applicable to the case when the statement and amendments are delivered to the clerk for the judge." The cases of Henry v. Merguire, 106 Cal. 142, 39 Pac. 599, and Witter v. Andrews, 122 Cal. 1, 54 Pac. 276, cited by respondent, decide nothing to the contrary. Both these cases involved the sufficiency of notice where the statement was presented directly to the judge upon notice served upon the adverse party. Where so presented the statute expressly requires notice. When the statement and amendments are, however, delivered to the clerk for the judge, as held in Mellor v. Crouch, notice of such delivery is not required. So that, as far as the first point urged by the respondent is concerned, it is without merit.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

As to the second point urged by him that the appeal should be dismissed on account of the failure of the appellant to take any steps to procure the settlement of his proposed statement within six months after the delivery of the proposed statement and amendments to the judge: Rule 2 of this court (78 Pac. vii) requires that the appellant in a civil action shall serve and file the printed transcript on appeal within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, "provided, that when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions or a statement which may be used in support of such appeal, the time for filing and serving the transcript shall not begin to run until the settled and authenticated statement or bill of exceptions has been filed." It is urged by the respondent that this extension of time within which to file a transcript, after a settled or authenticated bill has been filed, is only available when the party has diligently proceeded with the settlement of such statement or bill, and where a party fails to use such diligence, this court should, upon a showing to that effect, dismiss the appeal. But whether a party has been guilty of laches in that respect or not is primarily a matter for the trial court before whom the proceedings for the settlement of the statement on appeal is pending, and this court should not be called upon originally to determine, on a motion to dismiss an appeal, whether an appellant has been derelict in securing with due expedition such settlement. If, as contended for by respondent, the appellant has been guilty of such laches in proceeding with the settlement as would justify this court in saying that it amounts practically to an abandonment of his appeal, the same point can be urged in the trial court. When the settlement of the statement comes up for hearing there, the respondent may move the court to dismiss the proceedings for a settlement on account of the failure of appellant to proceed with reasonable diligence in procuring a settlement, or may object to the settlement on account of his failure to have done so. If his motion is denied, or his objections are overruled, he can have them incorporated into the record on appeal, and have the action of the court reviewed here. Henry v. Merguire, 106 Cal. 142, 146, 39 Pac. 599; Ryer v. Rio Land & Imp. Co., 147 Cal. 462, 464, 82 Pac. 62. And we think this is the course that should be pursued.

Almost all of the cases cited by respondent in support of the motion to dismiss for laches are cases where the action of the trial court in settling statements, over objection of the respondents against such settlement on account of laches, was before this court on appeals directly involving the correctness of the rulings of the superior court in that respect, or were cases where appeals were dismissed for failure to present statements for settlement within the time allowed by law. While it must be conceded that this court has the power to dismiss, on application therefor, an appeal where there has been a failure to proceed with proper diligence to procure settlement of the statement—a neglect which is equivalent to a failure to file the transcript within the time limited by the rule—it is deemed the better practice to require a respondent to avail himself of that objection in the lower court when the proceeding for the settlement of the statement is pending, and where the disposition of it primarily belongs. In Moultrie v. Tarpio, 147 Cal. 376, 378, 81 Pac. 1112, 1113, referring to the purpose and object of rule 2 of this court above quoted, it is said: "The rule of this court quoted above contemplates a proceeding for a settlement that is alive, at least to the extent that it is being in some degree pressed by the applicant. Ordinarily this court would not undertake to determine, on a motion to dismiss an appeal, whether or not a party had so failed to comply with the requirements of the law in regard to the settlement of a bill of exceptions that his pending proceeding for such settlement must ultimately fail, but would leave that question to be determined by the trial judge, subject to review on appeal." Likewise in Dernham v. Bagley, 151 Cal. 216, 90 Pac. 543, it is said: "We are satisfied, however, that the words 'when there is a proceeding pending for the settlement of a bill of exceptions' etc., in the rule above referred to, must be held to include any proceeding looking to the settlement of such a bill actually inaugurated by a party, and pending undisposed of and not abandoned, regardless of all questions as to whether the proceeding can ultimately avail and the bill be legally settled. Those questions are primarily for the trial court to determine, subject to review by this court. * * * It will readily be seen that this must be the proper rule of practice to be followed wherever a proceeding for the settlement of a bill of exceptions has actually been inaugurated by a party, and is pending undisposed of in the trial court, and the moving party is actively engaged thereunder in attempting to procure the settlement of his bill. It is well settled that the adverse party, desiring to avail himself of such an objection, must interpose it in the trial court, or before the judge settling the bill, and that if no objection is there made, the bill may be settled, and thereafter used on the appeal. Ryer v. Rio Land & Imp. Co., 147 Cal. 462, 464, 82 Pac. 62; Henry v. Merguire, 106 Cal. 142, 146, 39 Pac. 599."

Nor as regards the application of this rule is it of any moment whether the motion for a new trial is made on the minutes of the court and disposed of before the statement on appeal is settled, or, as is usually done, the statement settled in advance of the hearing of the motion. In the latter case the failure of the party moving for a new trial to proceed diligently to settle his statement can be urged by his adversary and accepted by the court as a ground for dismissing or denying his motion for a new trial. In the former that ground cannot be availed of because the motion for a new trial is disposed of before the statement is settled. But this does not leave a respondent to a motion for a new trial on the minutes remediless. He can still avail himself of the motion in the trial court to dismiss the proceedings for the settlement of a statement on the ground of laches, or object to the settlement on that ground. If his motion is denied, or his objection overruled, he can have the ruling of the court in doing so reviewed here on appeal, and we think this the proper practice to pursue.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

7 Cal. Unrep. 358

SOMERS v. McMORDIE et al. (L. A. 2,151.) (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 7, 1909.)

BOUNDARIES (§ 3*)—GOVERNMENT PLAT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

There is no provision in Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2395, 2396, 2397 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, pp. 1471-1473) relating to the rules to be followed where corners have been lost, or in the circular of instructions approved by the Secretary of the Interior October 16, 1896 (23 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 361), relating to lost or obliterated corners, for a proportionate measurement based on the deficiency in acreage of adjoining parcels of land, and, where there is no question as to the establishment of a lost corner, the exact boundaries as shown on the government plat must prevail, and they will control a further description by quantity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. § 41; Dec. Dig. § 3*]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by William F. Somers against J. G. McMordie and others. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Remanded, with instructions to grant the motion.

H. W. Duncan and Wm. T. Blakely, for appellant. Shankland & Chandler, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Suit was commenced by William F. Somers to quiet his title to the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 27, township 3 S., range 14 W., San Bernardino meridian, containing, according to the allegations of the complaint, 40 acres. Mrs. McMordie, the respondent here, answered, admitting the title of Somers to all of said

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes land, except a small portion thereof, and asked to have her title quieted as against Somers to lot 1, section 27, township 3 S., range 14 W., San Bernardino meridian, which was described also in her pleadings by metes and bounds. Before trial plaintiff dismissed as to the fictitious defendants.

There is a statement of stipulated facts wherein, among other things, it is agreed by these litigants that both parties derive title to their respective lands through patents issued by the state of California under indemnity lists duly approved and certified by the secretary of the interior; that the government plat of the survey of said lands shows Somers' land as containing 40 acres and the McMordie lot as having an area of 21.38 acres; that there is a shortage of 4.44 acres in the two tracts; that this deficiency was imposed in the judgment upon the parties hereto according to their several proportions of the whole acreage embraced in the boundaries of the two tracts, the plaintiff Somers being given by this method 36.91 acres and the defendant McMordie 20.03 acres; and that the sole question on the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is whether or not the court erred in apportioning said land as set forth in the judgment and decree. It is also agreed that the measurements of the exterior lines of the two tracts are as indicated upon a certain plat attached to the stipulation. Appellant asserts that the cause was decided by the learned judge of the superior court in an effort to comply with section 2395, U. S. Rev. St. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1471), and the rule of "proportionate measurement" as used in the circular of instructions in relation to lost or obliterated corners, approved by the Secretary of the Interior October 16, 1896 (23 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 361), and respondent's brief contains an assertion that the court was governed by sections 2395, 2396, 2397, U. S. Rev. St. (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1471-1473), and the circular of the Secretary of the Interior mentioned above. These sections have reference to the rules to be followed where the corners have been lost and in originally locating corners and lines. The term "proportionate measurement" as used in the circular, is for the guidance of surveyors who follow the field notes in the Surveyor General's office in relocating lines and corners and refers to a measurement "having the same ratio to that recorded in the original field notes as the length of chain used in the new measurement has to the length of chain used in the original survey, assuming the original and new measurements have been correctly made." There is no provision, either in the cited sections or in the circular, for a "proportionate measurement" based upon the deficiency in acreage of adjoining parcels of land. It has been held that a deficiency in the contents of the section must as between a quarter-quarter section and a residuary fraction fall entirely upon the latter, and cannot be apportioned between them. Wharton v. Littlefield, 30 Ala. 245. But, whether we conform to that doctrine or not, we find no warrant for the application of the principle here sought to be invoked, that the deficiency in acreage must be apportioned between the lands of Somers and McMordie. Here, there is no question as to the establishment of a lost corner. The section corner is shown on the plat, as is also the south line of plaintiff's property. The exact boundaries must prevail as shown on the government plat, and they will control a further description by quantity. Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46.

The cause is remanded, with instructions that appellant's motion be granted.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(155 Cal. 140)

GRACIOSA OIL CO. v. SANTA BARBARA COUNTY. (L. A. 2,070.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1909.)

1. TAXATION (§ 80*) — ASSESSMENT — LAND HELD UNDER LEASE.

As a general rule, land held under an ordinary lease for years, giving the right to hold the land for usufructuary purposes only, in the absence of contrary statutory provisions, is to be assessed as a whole, the assessment including both the value of the estate for years and of the remainder or reversion; the owner of the fee being deemed the owner of the whole estate for purposes of taxation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 168; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

2. PROPERTY (§ 7*)—REAL PROPERTY—HORIZONTAL DIVISION OF LAND.

For purposes of separate ownership, land may be divided horizontally, as well as superficially and vertically.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Property, Dec Dig. § 7.*]

3. MINES AND MINERALS (§ 73*)—CONVEYANCES—CONSTRUCTION OF OIL LEASE.

By lease landowners granted a lessee the exclusive right to enter on the premises, to bore wells, mine, or to do whatever might be necessary and proper for the development and extraction of petroleum, etc., with the privilege of conveying over the land any of such substances produced therefrom and of maintaining on the premises structures necessary for the objects of the lease, to hold the premises and privileges with the appurtenances for the enumerated purposes for 20 years unless terminated for failure to comply with the terms of the lease, the lessee to have the right to abandon the lease at any time that it deemed it unprofitable to hold or operate, and, if oil were found the lessee to pay the lessor a royalty of one-tenth part of that produced. Held, that the contract vested no present title in the lessee to a stratum of the land in place, but left the title to the oil in the landowner until it was brought to the surface, vesting in the lessee an estate for years so far as necessary for the purpose of taking oil therefrom, carrying with it the right to extract the oil and remove it from the premises, which constitutes for the term prescribed a servitude on the land under the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 801, subd. 5, and a chattel real at common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Dec. Dig. § 73.*]

4. TAXATION (§ 537*)—RECOVERY OF TAX PAID—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Pol. Code, § 3804, providing that taxes erroneously or illegally collected shall be refunded, which gives a right of recovery only when the assessment is absolutely void, mere irregularities in procedure, which do not invalidate the assessment, do not absolve the taxpayer from his obligation to pay the taxes, nor give him any right to recover taxes already paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 996; Dec. Dig. § 537.*]

5. TAXATION (§ 63*) — ASSESSMENT — OIL LEASEHOLDS—"REAL ESTATE."

Rights of a company under a lease to take from its place a stratum of oil or oil-bearing sand, and convert it to its own use, with the right to possession of the surface of the ground so far as necessary to enable it to bore for and extract the oil, constitute a claim to the possession of land, and hence are "real estate" within Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 2, cl. 1, providing that the term "real estate," as used in connection with taxation, shall include a claim to the possession of land, so that they can be assessed separately from the ownership of the other parts of the land when held separately.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 147; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 5937, 5939-5951; vol. 8, pp. 7778, 7779.]

6. TAXATION (§ 63*) — ASSESSMENT — RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES APPERTAINING TO MINERALS—OIL LEASEHOLDS—"REAL ESTATE."

The oil stratum also constituting "minerals in and under the land," the rights of the lessee are "rights and privileges appertaining" to such minerals, and hence "real estate" within Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 2, cl. 2, providing that the term "real estate," as used in connection with taxation, shall include all rights and privileges appertaining to mines, minerals, etc., in and under the land, all timber belonging to individuals or corporations growing or being on the lands of the United States, and all rights and privileges appertaining thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 147; Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

7. TAXATION (§ 576*) — COLLECTION — STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

